EU-C - Arbitration

PROVING YOUR ARBITRATION CASE

by BOAZ SIEGEL

School for Workers

January, 1961

CONTRACT ADMINISTRATION
Arbitration

1. What is arbitration?

Stated very simply, arbitration is a process whereby persons party to a dispute agree to submit their differences to a third party, and agree to abide by the decision of the "third party." For example, a husband and wife might have a dispute over how many nights a week the husband should go bowling. Instead of going to the divorce courts, they may agree in advance to lay all of the facts in front of their minister, for example, and have him make a ruling which they agree in advance they will abide by.

In the beginning, labor arbitration was almost as simple and informal. When a union and an employer could not agree on how a particular clause in a contract should be interpreted, they would seek out some fair-minded person in the community, and ask him to decide for them. The process is still basically the same today, except that most arbitration proceedings are considerably more formal (and legalistic) than the type described above. Arbitration, then, is an extension of the collective bargaining process. But instead of arguing with each other, the union and the company try to develop arguments to convince an arbitrator - a person outside of the collective bargaining relationship - that he should decide in their favor. It is an "appeal to reason" - reason being that the contract should be interpreted in our favor.

There are different types of arbitration.

a) "Open end" arbitration, voluntary or compulsory. This is the type of arbitration whereby the arbitrator is empowered to determine what the agreement between the parties should contain...for example...

how much of a wage increase is the union entitled to this year? This type of arbitration is rare in the United States. It is employed, generally, only in those industries where the union, voluntarily or because of law, is denied the right to strike.

b) Contract interpretation. This type of arbitration applies to the interpretation, by a neutral person, of the meaning of an already-existing collective bargaining agreement. Because such arbitration consists of determining the rights of a party to an agreement, it is referred to in arbitration terminology as a "rights dispute." This type of arbitration is usually voluntarily, and use of it stems from the language contained in the agreement itself. For example:

> "A claim made in good faith that either the Company or the Union has violated some provision of this contract or failed to perform some obligation assumed under this contract is an arbitrable grievance within the meaning of the contract. Any such grievance which is not disposed of in Step 3 of the Grievance Procedure as provided in Article VII of this contract may be submitted to final and binding arbitration by either the Company or the Union, provided such appeal to arbitration is made by giving written notice to the other party within thirty (30) calendar days after the final meeting under Step 3 is held."
>
> (Cutler-Hammer, Inc. and International Association of Machinists)
>
> "If a decision in the third step of the grievance procedure is not acceptable, the grievance may be referred to arbitration by mutual consent of the Company and the Union involved. Grievances to be referred to arbitration must be appealed within fifteen (15) days of the date on which a decision was rendered in the third step of the grievance procedure."
>
> (David Bradley Mfg. Works and International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Ship Builders, Blacksmiths, Forgers and Helpers)

Sometimes a permanent arbitrator (or"umpire") is selected by the parties to an agreement to hear all dispute cases arising out of a particular labor contract. More commonly, an arbitrator is selected for each case on an individual or "ad hoc" basis. In almost all contracts which include arbitration as the final step in the grievance procedure, the parties agree that the decision of the arbitrator will be final and binding. This means the union can't go on strike if it disagrees with the arbitrator's decision; it also means, in general, that the parties will not go to court in order to overturn a particular arbitration decision.

2. Advantages of having an arbitration clause in your agreement.

a) When combined with a definite time limit, an arbitration provision means that the company cannot delay giving the union an answer to a particular grievance beyond a certain point. After a certain number of days, the union can insist upon arbitrating the dispute, and getting a final answer.

b) The union does not have to strike in order to settle important grievances. Frequent strikes can wear down membership and the treasury; after a number of strikes over grievances have occurred, it may be difficult to obtain a strike vote in a crucial situation. Arbitration is simpler, and generally much less expensive than going on strike.

c) It is much easier to convince the membership that it is necessary to arbitrate a particular grievance than it is to get them to agree that they should strike in order to get it settled.

d) Arbitration involves far fewer legal problems than a strike does. Even when you have the right to strike under the contract, you have to be very careful that the proper notice has been given to the company and to the appropriate state and federal government agencies.

3. Problems which arise in connection with arbitration.

a) The union can lose an arbitration case, even when it has the facts to back up its case, and it presents its side of the story in good fashion; sometimes the reverse is true. But the risk of losing must be recognized.

b) Arbitration has become very expensive. Besides the arbitrator's fees and travel allowances, there are often additional expenses (transcripts, lawyers' fees, lost time, etc.)

c) Arbitration has become formal and legalistic. This means a great deal of time and attention must be devoted to the preparation of an arbitration case. Briefs must be filed, witnesses called, affidavits prepared, etc.

d) Very often a great deal of time elapses between the time the union decides to arbitrate a case and the final decision is rendered by the arbitrator.

For some additional information relating to the problems associated with arbitration, see page 4A.

4. Alternatives to arbitration.

a) The strike. We have already discussed some of the problems associated with striking over unresolved grievances. But some unions feel that there are some grievances which are so important they cannot trust a third party to render a decision. Sometimes the precedent set by the decision is just as important as what the arbitrator decides in a particular case. An alternative approach is to have a choice as to the final disposition of a grievance - arbitration or the right to strike. Sometimes particular areas of the agreement cannot be arbitrated. For example:

> "The functions of the Board of Arbitration shall be of a judicial rather than a legislative nature and such Board shall not have the power to add to, disregard or modify any of the terms and conditions of this Contract, nor shall such Board pass upon issues involving increases or decreases of occupations, group, or general wage rates, nor upon any issue involving the right of the Company to exercise the functions of management as set forth in Article VII, 'Functions of Management,' herein."
>
> International Harvester Company and United Steel Workers

Let's take another case which arose at a plant in a small, off-the-beaten-track-town. The contract called for a three-man arbitration board--one selected by the union, another by the company and the third man agreed upon by the first two or appointed after an interval of time by the American Arbitration Association. The grievance involved eligibility of senior employees for the first crack at available overtime. The company's lawyer and the union's lawyer were both in large cities many miles away from the plant site. The grievance reached the stage of arbitration in February 1957. It took the lawyers only a week to agree on the arbitrator, but the arbitrator had a busy schedule and the hearing wasn't held until, let's say, March 20.

The arbitrator lived about 400 miles from the plant. The lawyers were even farther away. Each lawyer acted as his client's member of the Arbitration Board and presented his client's case. The hearing lasted a single day.

About a month after the hearing was over, the arbitrator wrote both counsels and said he'd like to have a meeting of the arbitration board to discuss the decision. The three men assembled again, traveling long distances to a common meeting ground. The arbitrator distributed his proposed findings of fact - a prolix rehash of the record - and asked each counsel to concede the accuracy of the factual statement. This was not difficult since the statement included, without evaluation and with very little effort at condensation or selection, almost every fact and conflicting fact placed in the record. But another day was shot.

Then the arbitrator said he would return to his office and prepare a digest of the opposing parties' contentions as set forth in their briefs and distribute the digest to counsel for comments. Both counsels assured the arbitrator that this additional, intermediate step between hearing and final award was unnecessary and that each was quite content by now just to get the decision. The arbitrator said no, that in a case of this importance where his decision was likely to be published, he wanted to be very careful that his findings of fact and interpretations of the parties' respective positions were accurate. Since, naturally, neither counsel wanted to offend the arbitrator, they reluctantly agreed.

The arbitrator labored mightily and not long before Christmas - nine months after the grievance reached arbitration - he brought forth his mouse: a 40-page decision summed up in one sentence at the last saying the union was right.

Of course, along with this mammoth work of art came the bill: 15 days at $100 a day, plus $260 travel expense.

The union paid $880 for the dubious privilege of obtaining $192 in back overtime pay for sixteen members - about $12 a piece. In addition, of course, it had to pay its own lawyer, and its half of the transcript cost.

In a recent review of three years of arbitrations, one union found that the average cost to the union of a formal arbitration was $1,500, more than half of which went to pay for the arbitrator and transcript.

One partial solution may be to get back to the one-year contract principle.

b) Grievance settlement during contract negotiations. This approach is practical only where the contract is of short duration - for a year or eighteen months. If the contract is for a longer period of time, such as two or three years, it is very difficult to hold off on the settlement of grievances until the contract is about to expire. On the other hand, where you have a short-term contract, or the grievances with which you are concerned have taken place close to the expiration date of the collective bargaining agreement, this approach is more meaningful. What it boils down to is this: instead of taking unresolved grievances of great importance to arbitration, the union makes disposition of these grievances part of its bargaining demands - at a time when it has the right to strike in order to support its demands. In effect it says to management:

> "unless we settle these grievances, we cannot reach a contract settlement."

During contract negotiations the union also has the opportunity to change contract language to take care of situations not clearly covered by the agreement but which are the subject of numerous grievances on the part of its membership. For example, there may be a dispute over the computation of holiday pay, where the contract is vague. This can be resolved by negotiating clear, concise language to cover this situation.

5. When to go to arbitration.

Every union faces this problem on many occasions. Arbitration is no longer simple or cheap; therefore, most unions will use the arbitration procedure in their collective bargaining agreement rather sparingly. Even if arbitration were cheap and simple, the union would approach arbitration gingerly. If every dispute were decided by an outsider, the whole process of collective bargaining - where the company and the union get together and hammer out an agreement - would become a sham, since each party, and especially the weaker party, would continuously resort to arbitration as a substitute for its own strength or initiative.

Before going to arbitration, the union should ask itself several questions:

a) Is the dispute arbitrable? Most contracts specify the scope of the arbitration procedure and the arbitrator's decision. In most cases, this means that arbitration is limited to an interpretation of the existing agreement; the arbitrator cannot add to or take anything out of the contract. [In almost all instances, discharge and disciplinary cases are arbitrable.]

Sometimes specific subjects are excluded from arbitration by the agreement. For example:

> "The following matters shall not be subject to arbitration:
>
> (a) Matters not specifically covered by the agreement.
>
> (b) General wage rates established and made a part of this Agreement. However, either a job rate or a job base rate, whichever is applicable, for a new job classification being established in accordance with Section 8.7, Article 8 herein, is subject to arbitration.
>
> (c) Incentive time limits."

(Beloit Iron Works and International Association of Machinists)

What K clauses apply

The provisions of the agreement itself are limiting factors in the determination of whether a grievance is arbitrable. For example, a seniority grievance would, in all likelihood, be governed by the following contract provisions:

i. The recognition clause.

ii. The grievance procedure

iii. The arbitration clause.

iv. Management perogatives.

v. The seniority clause.

Possibly in a Seniority Case

The union should study all of these clauses, and any others which relate to the particular subject matter of the grievance, before it decides to go to arbitration.

b) Does the membership approve? This does not mean that the union leadership must have express authorization to arbitrate a particular grievance, although some unions do leave the decision up to its membership. But in many cases, the grievance committee or executive board must decide by itself whether a particular grievance should be arbitrated. Sometimes the grievance committee will have to buck popular sentiment, if it feels that a particular case is so important that it must go to arbitration, or that a case is not important enough to arbitrate.

c) Is there a good chance of winning? Only death and taxes are certain. You may lose the best possible kind of case, or win one where the cards are stacked against you. You defeat the purpose of arbitration if you would only arbitrate the cases you are certain to win.....and there are probably no such cases. Possibly the important question to ask yourself is: "Do we believe we are right?" There is probably little to be gained from arbitrating a case which is lost before you begin, where, for example, the language of the contract clearly supports the company's position.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION: Listed below are a number of grievance situations which may arise. In each instance, the case has been processed to the step in the grievance procedure preceding arbitration. For each situation, indicate whether you would recommend the union to take the case to arbitration. Be specific. Indicate whether the matter is arbitrable, and what arguments you would use to support your position:

1. Jim Taylor and Sam Jones bid on the same job opening. Jones has eight years and four months of departmental seniority; Taylor has eight years of departmental seniority. The contract reads:

> "In all cases of promotion, continuous departmental seniority shall be the governing factor where skill, physical fitness and ability to perform the work in a satisfactory manner are relatively equal."

Taylor is awarded the job, and Jones files a grievance. The company contends that Taylor is more proficient, and should be promoted in accordance with the contract. Five months ago Jones, who has a good work record, was active in a movement to de-certify the local union as bargaining agent. The move was decisively beaten.

2. Arnold Brown works on the 7 to 3 shift. On Wednesday he punched out at the regular time, and was just leaving the main gate, headed for the parking lot, when his foreman caught up with him and asked him to work several hours of overtime on a special order which had to be prepared. He worked until 5 p.m., and received 3 hours pay. The contract reads:

> "Employees called in to work on other than their regular shift will be given a minimum of four hours work at the rate of time and one-half or pay equivalent thereto. This provision shall not apply where employees are held over from their regular shifts."

Brown claims he was called back to work, and is therefore entitled to the call-in allowance. The company maintains that Brown never actually left the company premises, and that he was therefore "held over from his regular shift," and not entitled to the call-in allowance.

3. Tom Weaver is departmental steward on the night shift. The men in his department have been complaining that the company is violating the agreement by not allowing them to take the 10-minute relief provided for in the agreement. A grievance has been filed, but has not been settled. There have been a lot of rush orders lately, and the company is anxious to fill these as rapidly as possible. On Tuesday night, 10 men walk off the job; Weaver is asked by the foreman to tell them to return to their jobs. He refuses, saying, "That is a job for the president of the local to do, not me. Besides, I don't blame them for walking off.....you've had this coming." On Wednesday morning Weaver (who did not walk off) is suspended for two weeks. The company claims that Weaver was disciplined for not telling the men to return to work.

6. Selecting the arbitrator. A variety of methods are used to select an arbitrator. Some of these are listed below:

a) Use of a permanent "umpire." This is sometimes done in large companies, where arbitration cases arise fairly often. An example is General Motors Corporation and the United Auto Workers.

b) Selection by an agency such as the American Arbitration Association or the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Each time an arbitration case arises, the party initiating arbitration requests the AAA, for example, to furnish an arbitrator. This is more or less random selection.

c) Each side furnishes a member of an arbitration "panel", and the two panel members select a third "neutral" member, who is actually the arbitrator, since it is unlikely that the company-appointed panel member will vote for the union, or vice-versa. When the company and union-appointed panel members cannot agree on a third person, several methods are used to make the selection. For example:

> "The Arbitration Committee shall be composed of one member selected by the Union, one member selected by the Company, the third member selected from a panel received from the Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service which will be asked to submit five (5) names and they will be alternately stricken until one name remains.
>
> Aro, Inc., and Air Engineering Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO

> "The Board of Arbitration herein referred to shall consist of three members, one of whom shall be selected by the Union, one by the Company, and the third by the two so chosen. In the event the two appointed members are unable to agree upon selection of the third member within fifteen calendar days after the aggrieved party has appointed its member, the United States Conciliation Service shall thereupon be requested to designate the third member."
>
> International Harvester Company and United Steel Workers

Things to Consider When Selecting an Arbitrator

When in the process of selecting an arbitrator, or deciding whether a particular person is suitable from the union's point of view, there may be a temptation to ask: "Is he pro-union?" Or, "Has he ruled in favor of the union in past cases?" Since arbitrators are interested in staying in business, it should be recognized that if it becomes apparent that he consistently favors one side or the other, the side discriminated against will not want to use him, and the word will quickly spread that so and so "is a company man" or "a good man for labor."

Also, his "won-lost" average - how many times has he ruled in favor of the union or in favor of the company - is not much of a guide. If the last 10 cases he arbitrated were all strongly weighted in favor of the company, we would expect him to rule accordingly. If his rulings have been consistent with the evidence presented to him, we should have no way of determining in advance what his ruling in the next case will be. But with regard to the selection of the arbitrator, there are several important factors for the union to consider:

a) Has he handled any cases similar to the one you are about to arbitrate? If so, it might be a good idea to read his decision - and see what line of reasoning he followed in order to reach his decision. Each edition of the Labor Arbitration Reports has a list of arbitrators associated with the American Arbitration Association, and indicates where his previous rulings can be found. The things to look for in the cases he has arbitrated are:

i. Were his decisions reasonable?

ii. Were his decisions firmly based on the evidence presented to him (including contract language and past practice), or is there some indication of his personal bias creeping into his decision?

iii. Were the arguments he presented in support of his decision logical and understandable, and did they follow from the evidence and facts?

iv. Did he reach a decision within a reasonable period of time, without engaging in unnecessary delay?

Some international unions maintain arbitration files - by subject or name of the arbitrator. It may be possible to get some background information pertaining to an arbitrator you are considering from your international headquarters. In any event, it may be a good idea to check with other unions in your area regarding a particular arbitrator. This is not a fool-proof selection method, but you may be able to get an answer to the most important question of all: "Is he fair-minded?"

b) What does he charge? This is not a minor consideration. Some arbitrators tend to charge unreasonably high fees. Once you have been presented with an enormous bill, and your contract says that the union will share the total cost of arbitration with the company, it may be too late to complain. The time to find out about cost is in advance of arbitration. Specifically, find out:

i. What is the arbitrator's daily fee?

ii. How many days will he take to reach a decision? Sometimes it is cheaper to have an arbitrator who charges $150 a day - but who reaches a decision in one day - than a $50 a day man who drags out the operation for 10 or 15 days. Try to get a definite advance committment. Unfortunately, there are some arbitrators who have a tendency to stall and delay - either because "they are built that way" - or because they are purposely trying to inflate their bill. Possibly the best arrangement would be to get a fixed price, with a committment from the arbitrator that he will render a decision within a certain number of days.

iii. What other expenses will there be? Most arbitrators charge some sort of per diem plus their travel expenses to and from the hearing. Find out in advance what these expense charges will be. Some arbitrators insist upon a verbatim transcript of the hearing. This is expensive. Find out in advance what the charge will be - per page, and per copy. If you are required to file pre-hearing and post-hearing briefs, you may need the services of an attorney. This is an additional expense.

Under most circumstances, present-day arbitration is expensive, and the local union with limited resources has to consider each possible arbitration case very carefully.....weighing the potential cost against the danger of conceding the grievance to management at a prior step in the grievance procedure. It is not a matter to be treated lightly.

7. Preparation for Arbitration. Listed below are the steps which the union should follow with regard to the preparation of an arbitration case. Depending upon the type of case involved, who the arbitrator is, etc., not every single one of the procedures may have to be followed.

a. The pre-hearing brief. Some arbitrators request the parties to an arbitration case to submit a brief in advance of the hearing. If this is required, the brief should be short, clearly and simply worded, factual, and to the point. It should include:

i. A statement of the issue.

ii. The background of the issue.

iii. The pertinent facts - what happened (union point of view); the machine, job and place involved; when it happened; relation to past practices; contract clauses involved; and what rights the union has, based on the contract, past practice and general standards of fairness.

b. The submission agreement. This means how the issue is presented to the arbitrator. There are a variety of ways to do this:

i. By means of the grievance slip

ii. The union's letter requesting arbitration

iii. Oral statements of the parties defining the issue

iv. A written submission form stating the issue and signed by both the company and the union. For example:

"The Union states that John Hartung is entitled to classification as Head Shipping Clerk under the contract between the parties. The employer states that John Hartung is properly classified as a Tool Crib Attendant under the terms of the contract between the parties."

The submission agreement should contain:

--Identification of the aggrieved party or group, that is - whose rights have been violated under the contract

--Relation to authority - for example, reference to the collective bargaining agreement and to the particular section which the union feels has been violated

--The condition which the union seeks to remedy ("Tom Hendricks was discharged on January 15, 1961")

--The remedy sought ("Mr. Hendricks should be reinstated, with back pay and allowances, with no loss of seniority")

c. What the union should do in advance of the arbitration hearing.

i. Re-examine the basic facts of the grievance. The union should know these "cold." If similar grievances have arisen, know what settlement was reached (see section on record keeping).

ii. Get all of the facts, not just those favorable to the union's position. Make sure the grievant isn't holding back any information which might have a bearing on the case. Don't be put into the position where you can be surprised by the sudden introduction of new material.

iii. Check on any background information which may provide helpful perspective for the arbitrator (records of negotiations, production data, etc.)

intent

iv. Arrange for witnesses:

Selection: Get the best possible witnesses. Don't have a string of witnesses, all of whom say the same thing. One good witness, who can present his testimony clearly and effectively, is better than 3 or 4 who are not able to do this.

Preparation of witnesses:

--You should know in advance what testimony your witnesses are going to offer. Interview them in advance, and acquaint them with the questions which they will be asked....but don't rehearse the witnesses, or make them memorize statements.

--Make sure that your witnesses are not withholding information which may be detrimental to the case.

--Make sure your witnesses know what the preceding will be like, for example, that they will be questioned by management representatives. Try out a few of these questions, but don't try to give your witnesses ready-made answers.

--Caution your witnesses to stick to the facts, and tell only truth, and to make sure they understand every question put to them before answering. Also, tell them to be reasonably brief and to avoid answering questions they are really not able to answer. Finally, they should be advised not to lose their temper or take personal affront at any question put to them.

v. Review your reasoning. How does the union interpret the facts and what their significance is. Decide in advance what you will emphasize during the hearing, and how you can present it most effectively to persuade the arbitrator to accept the union's view.

vi. Prepare an outline of the evidence you will offer and the points you want to make during the hearing. Make a written check-list of all the significant aspects of the case, to make sure none are overlooked or forgotten during the hearing.

vii. Anticipate management's arguments. Be prepared to answer them. It will help, for example, to know of cases similar to the one being arbitrated, where the arbitrator ruled against the union, and be prepared to show how those cases were different from the present one.

viii. Check with other officers or representatives of your union, or of other unions, to get their viewpoints and ideas. For example, you might do a "dry run" with another union officer, and get his reaction to the method in which you intend to present your case.

SUBMISSION AGREEMENT

Name of grievant _____ Department _____

Date grievance originated _____ Date of this Submission _____

Department Steward _____ Foreman _____

Description of grievance _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

Remedy sought by union _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

Company answer at last step of grievance procedure _____

_____

_____

_____

	For the union:	For the company:
Signed	_____ (name)	_____ (name)
	_____ (title)	_____ (title)

OUTLINE OF PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN MOCK ARBITRATION CASE.

1. Selection of case. We will assume that case has been processed through all of the steps of the grievance procedure, and that the company's answer at each step has been unsatisfactory. The union has notified the company that it intends to arbitrate. The case is that of _____.

2. Contract. We shall use as the basis for this case the agreement between the Beloit Iron Works and Local 68, International Association of Machinists.

3. The participants in this case will be:

For the union:	For the company:
_____ (international rep.)	_____ (industrial relation super.)
_____ (local union president)	_____ (vice president, personnel)
_____ (chief steward)	_____ (attorney)

The arbitrator will be _____

Each side can call anybody it wants as a witness. However, neither side should call more than 3 witnesses.

4. Procedure.

a) Before the next class, the union representatives and the company representatives shall get together, and complete a submission agreement. This will be given to the arbitrator in advance of the hearing.

b) Either side may, if it wishes, submit a pre-hearing brief. This should be short, not more than one or two pages. If either side decides to submit a pre-hearing brief, it should be given to the arbitrator by Tuesday of the week in which the class is held.

c) The actual hearing will take place during the class session. The opening statement will be made by the union; the company will then present its position. The arbitrator will then allow each side to call witnesses. Each witness can be cross-examined by the other side, at the completion of his testimony.

d) If time allows, we shall discuss the case presentation of both parties. Otherwise, this discussion will be held the following week.

e) The arbitrator will render his decision at the next class session. If possible, he will prepare enough copies for distribution to class members. After he has given his decision, a full discussion will follow, regarding presentation of the case and the arbitrators ruling.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION:

Regarding the case presentation.

1. In support of its position, did the union cite the appropriate sections of the collective bargaining agreement? If not, what different sections should have been cited?

2. How effective were the union's witnesses? Were they asked the right questions? Were their answers helpful to the union's position?

3. Did the union cross-examine the company's witnesses effectively? Do you think that the company witnesses' testimony was weakened, from the arbitrator's viewpoint, as a result of this cross-examination?

4. Do you think the union's case was presented in a logical, orderly fashion? What additional arguments should the union have raised? Are there any parts of the union's presentation that should have been omitted?

Regarding the arbitrator's decision.

1. Based on the testimony given and evidence offered, was the arbitrator's decision correct?

2. What do you think were the most important factors influencing his decision? Was the testomony of any particular witness especially important?

3. Did the arbitrator indicate that he understood the position of both parties, and what the collective bargaining agreement said?

4. By his questioning of witnesses, and in his decision, did the arbitrator indicate that he wanted to reach a decision based on the merits of the case, and not on what his own viewpoint might be?

Arbitration records.

We have already discussed in some detail the other record-keeping which goes along with administering the agreement. A final word is in order, regarding arbitration records. The local union should, of course, maintain a record of every single arbitration in which it is involved. This record should include:

Read

1. A copy of the final decision rendered by the arbitrator. This is almost always given to the union by the arbitrator, and additional copies should be made available to the union (i.e., for submission to the international union, for the grievant, the steward involved, etc.)
2. The record should include a list of the witnesses who appeared for the union, for the company, and indicate who presented the case for each side. If verbatim transcripts of the proceedings are made, this should be made part of the arbitration record.
3. The union may also want to make some notes about the arbitrator, to be included in the record for future reference. These notes might include anything that might be of value in future arbitration cases to the local union or to other unions, or the international union. For example, you might indicate whether he acted impartially, i.e., was he overly friendly to either side? Did he understand the problem he was asked to resolve. Would you recommend him as arbitrator to another local union, or to your own local union in another arbitration case - even if he ruled against you in this particular case.

AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION
477 MADISON AVE. • NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

GP-5M-7-62 29

[1962]

Code of Ethics and Procedural Standards for Labor-Management Arbitration

Prepared by the AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION
and the
NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS and Approved for Arbitrations by the
FEDERAL MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION SERVICE

Republished by the American Arbitration Association
and the
National Academy of Arbitrators
July, 1962

INDEX

PART I. CODE OF ETHICS FOR ARBITRATORS

1. Character of the Office 1
2. The Tri-Partite Board 1
3. Qualification for Office 1
4. Essential Conduct 2
5. Duty of the Parties 2
6. Acceptance, Refusal or Withdrawal from Office 2
7. Oath of Office 2
8. Privacy of the Arbitration 3
9. Advertising and Solicitation 3

PART II. PROCEDURAL STANDARDS FOR ARBITRATORS

1. Compensation and Expenses of the Arbitrator 3
2. Hearing Arrangements 4
3. Oath of Office 4
4. The Hearing 4
5. The Award 5
6. Privacy of Proceeding and Award 6

PART III. CONDUCT AND BEHAVIOR OF PARTIES

1. General 6
2. Scope 6
3. Selection of Arbitrator 7
4. The Tri-Partite Board 7
5. Essential Conduct 7
6. The Hearing 8
7. Privacy of the Arbitration 8
8. Arbitrators' Executive Meetings 8
9. The Award 9
10. Settlements 9
11. Compensation of the Arbitrator 9

FOREWORD TO THE 1951 EDITION

In 1949-50 the American Arbitration Association submitted its Code of Ethics for Arbitrators for re-examination and criticism to more than one hundred arbitrators and representatives of labor and management.

A variety of views were expressed and many suggestions were received. A special drafting committee was then organized which held a series of meetings for the consideration of these views and suggestions.

At about the same time, the National Academy of Arbitrators instructed its Committee on Ethics to inquire into the same subject. The committees met together and were joined by representatives of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Drafts and redrafts were prepared, debated, and circulated among members of the American Arbitration Association Committee and the members of the National Academy of Arbitrators for approval. The result was this Code of Ethics and Procedural Standards for Labor-Management Arbitration, which is a complete revision of the earlier Code. It will be noted that the new Code is not applicable to commercial arbitrations; this field has been completely divorced from labor-management arbitration. It will also be noted that standards of ethics for parties as well as for arbitrators have been included. It was considered that the ethical and orderly conduct of labor-management arbitrations necessarily requires the observance by the parties of certain obligations and duties in order to make the essential standards of arbitrators more effective. In view of the plain desire of management and labor representatives to have their differences conclusively resolved through the arbitration process, it is highly desirable that arbitration be self-disciplining, thus promoting respect for this process and narrowing the situations in which resort is had to courts to set aside, modify, or enforce awards.

This field has grown very rapidly and it is entirely understandable that varying concepts may be held with regard to the nature of the process and of the character of the arbitrator's functions. It is the purpose of the drafters to have a code of ethics primarily designed to meet situations in which the parties, having failed to resolve their differences through direct negotiations, either with or without the assistance of mediators, have elected to submit their dispute for settlement through arbitration. The dispute may be over the interpretation or application of an existing agreement, or over terms and conditions of the agreement to be in effect in the future.

In any event, it is not intended to deny or narrow in any way the right of the parties to have whatever type of proceedings they desire. The arbitrator is serving them, and the proceeding is theirs.

It is not intended to have this Code regulate many kindred types of proceedings in which third parties play a part. Thus, this Code would not be applicable to fact-finding proceedings, with or without recommendations, to mediation or conciliation efforts, or to proceedings which are combinations of mediation, fact-finding, and perhaps eventually of decision-making.

The preparation of this Code has not been a simple matter. Strong and divergent views had to be reconciled in the successive drafts. The success with which this has been accomplished is evident from the unanimous approval given to the final form by the members of the National Academy of Arbitrators, the representatives of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, and the large group constituting the Committee of the American Arbitration Association.

Most appropriately, the funds for the publication of this booklet have been made available by the Bernheimer Arbitration Education Fund, as a tribute to the late Charles L. Bernheimer, who was one of the early advocates of the use of arbitration in labor-management disputes.

LLOYD K. GARRISON, Chairman
Committee on Revision of the American Arbitration Association
Code of Ethics for Arbitrators

DAVID L. COLE, Chairman (1950)
Committee on Ethics
National Academy of Arbitrators

PART I

CODE OF ETHICS FOR ARBITRATORS

1. Character of the Office

The function of an arbitrator is to decide disputes. He should, therefore, adhere to such general standards of adjudicatory bodies as require a full, impartial and orderly consideration of evidence and argument, in accordance with applicable arbitration law and the rules or general understandings or practices of the parties.

The parties in dispute, in referring a matter to arbitration, have indicated their desire not to resort to litigation or to economic conflict. They have delegated to the arbitrator power to settle their differences. It follows that the assumption of the office of arbitrator places upon the incumbent solemn duties and responsibilities. Every person who acts in this capacity should uphold the traditional honor, dignity, integrity and prestige of the office.

2. The Tri-Partite Board

Where tri-partite boards serve in labor arbitrations, it is the duty of the parties' nominees to make every reasonable effort to promote fair and objective conduct of the proceedings, to aid the arbitration board in its deliberations and to bring about a just and harmonious disposition of the controversy. It is recognized, however, that the parties frequently expect their appointees to serve also as representatives of their respective points of view. In such cases, the rules of ethics in this Code, insofar as they relate to the obligations of strict impartiality, are to be taken as applying only to the third or neutral arbitrator.

Such representatives, however, unless the parties agree otherwise, should refrain from conveying to the parties who appointed them, the discussions which take place in executive session and any information concerning the deliberations of the board. No information concerning the decision should be given in advance of its delivery simultaneously to both parties.

3. Qualification for Office

Any person whom the parties or the appointing agency choose to regard as qualified to determine their dispute is entitled to act as their arbitrator. It is, however, incumbent upon the arbitrator at the time of his selection to disclose to the parties any circumstances, associations or relationships that might reasonably raise any doubt as to his impartiality or his technical qualification for the particular case.

4. Essential Conduct

a) The arbitrator should be conscientious, considerate and patient in the discharge of his functions. There should be no doubt as to his complete impartiality. He should be fearless of public clamor and indifferent to private, political or partisan influences.

b) The arbitrator should not undertake or incur obligations to either party which may interfere with his impartial determination of the issue submitted to him.

5. Duty to the Parties

The arbitrator's duty is to determine the matters in dispute, which may involve differences over the interpretation of existing provisions or terms and conditions of a new contract. In either event, the arbitrator shall be governed by the wishes of the parties, which may be expressed in their agreement, arbitration submission or in any other form of understanding. He should not undertake to induce a settlement of the dispute against the wishes of either party. If, however, an atmosphere is created or the issues are so simplified or reduced as to lead to a voluntary settlement by the parties, a function of his office has been fulfilled.

6. Acceptance, Refusal or Withdrawal from Office

The arbitrator, being appointed by voluntary act of the parties, may accept or decline the appointment. When he accepts he should continue in office until the matter submitted to him is finally determined. When there are circumstances which, in his judgment, compel his withdrawal, the parties are entitled to prompt notice and explanation.

7. Oath of Office

When an oath of office is taken it should serve as the arbitrator's guide. When an oath is not required or is waived by the parties, the arbitrator should nevertheless observe the standards which the oath imposes.

8. Privacy of the Arbitration

a) An arbitrator should not, without the approval of the parties, disclose to third persons any evidence, argument or discussions pertaining to the arbitration.

b) There should be no disclosure of the terms of an award by any arbitrator until after it is delivered simultaneously to all of the parties and publication or public disclosure should be only with the parties' consent.

Discussions within an arbitration board should be held in confidence. Dissenting opinions may be filed, however, but they should be based on the arbitrators' views on the evidence and controlling principles, and not on the discussions which took place in the executive sessions of the board.

9. Advertising and Solicitation

Advertising by an arbitrator and soliciting of cases is improper and not in accordance with the dignity of the office. No arbitrator should suggest to any party that future cases be referred to him.

PART II

PROCEDURAL STANDARDS FOR ARBITRATORS

The standards set forth in the following sections are intended only as general guides to arbitrators and to parties in arbitration proceedings. It is not intended that they will be literally adhered to in every particular, nor are they intended to supplant contrary practices which in particular cases have been established or accepted by the parties. These standards are meant to be equally applicable to partisan and neutral members of arbitration boards.

These standards of procedure are not to be deemed mandatory precepts or controlling rules which will furnish a basis for attacking awards or enlarging the grounds prescribed by law for the impeachment of awards.

1. Compensation and Expenses of the Arbitrator

a) Arbitrators serving in labor-management disputes generally receive compensation. The position of an arbitrator, whether compensated or not, is an honorary one and is accepted as an opportunity for public service.

b) Compensation for arbitrators' services should be reasonable and consistent with the nature of the case and the circumstances of the parties. A fee previously fixed by the parties, or by schedule, should not be altered during the proceeding or after the award is delivered.

c) It is commonly understood that necessary expenses, including travel, communications and maintenance, may be incurred by the arbitrator and that such expenses are reimbursable. The arbitrator should be prepared to render a statement of his expenses if the parties desire it.

2. Hearing Arrangements

a) The arbitrator should consult the convenience of the parties in fixing the time and place for the hearing but should not allow one party to delay unduly the fixing of a date for the hearing. Written and timely notice of the date, time and place of the hearing should be given.

b) Whenever the law permits, the arbitrator in his discretion may issue subpoenas.

3. Oath of Office

The following is the general form of oath which the law of certain states requires the arbitrator to take:

> ..... being duly sworn deposes and says that he will faithfully and fairly hear and examine the matters in controversy between the above named Parties, and that he will make a just award according to the best of his understanding.

4. The Hearing

a) The arbitrator should be prompt in his attendance at the hearing and should so conduct the proceeding as to reflect the importance and seriousness of the issue before him. The orderly conduct of the proceeding is under his jurisdiction and control, subject to such rules of procedure as the parties may prescribe. He should proceed promptly with the hearing and determination of the dispute. He should countenance no unnecessary delays in the examination of witnesses or in the presentation of evidence. Where the law requires it, witnesses must be sworn unless the parties duly waive this requirement.

b) The arbitrator may participate in the examination of parties or witnesses in order to clarify the issues and bring to light all relevant facts necessary to a fair and informed decision of the issues submitted to him. However, he should bear in mind that undue interference or emphasis upon his own knowledge or view may tend to prevent the proper presentation of the case by a party. Examinations should be fair and courteous and directed toward encouraging a full presentation of the case. The arbitrator should avoid assuming a controversial attitude toward witnesses, parties or other arbitrators. He should avoid expressing a premature opinion.

c) The informality of the hearings should not be allowed to affect decorum and the orderly presentation of proof. The arbitrator should seek to prevent any argument or conduct at the hearings which would tend to cause bitterness or acrimony.

d) Unless the parties approve, the arbitrator should not, in the absence of or without notice to one party, hold interviews with, or consider arguments or communications from the other party. If any such communications be received, their contents should be disclosed to all parties and an opportunity afforded to comment thereon.

e) The arbitaror should allow a fair hearing, with full opportunity to the parties to offer all evidence which they deem reasonably material. He may, however, exclude evidence which is clearly immaterial. He may receive and consider affidavits, giving them such weight as the circumstances warrant, but in so doing, he should afford the other side an opportunity to cross-examine the persons making the affidavits or to take their depositions or otherwise interrogate them.

f) The arbitrator is expected to exercise his own best judgment. He is not required except by specific agreement of the parties to follow precedent. He should not, however, prevent the parties from presenting the decisions of other arbitrators in support of their positions. When the parties have selected a continuing arbitrator, it is generally recognized that he may establish or follow precedents for the same parties.

5. The Award

a) The arbitrator should render his award promptly and must render his award within the time prescribed, if any. The award should be definite, certain and final, and should dispose of all matters submitted. It should reserve no future duties to the arbitrator except by agreement of the parties.

b) The award should be stated separately from the opinion, if an opinion is rendered.

c) It is discretionary with the arbitrator, upon the request of all parties, to give the terms of their voluntary settlement the status of an award.

d) The award should be personally signed by the arbitrator and delivered simultaneously to all parties. The arbitrator should exercise extreme care to see that the contractual or legal requirements for making and delivering the award are met.

e) It is discretionary with the arbitrator to state reasons for his decision or to accompany the award with an opinion. Opinions should not contain gratuitous advice or comments not related or necessary to the determination of the issues. If either party requests the arbitrator to prepare an opinion, such request should be followed.

f) After the award has been rendered, the arbitrator should not issue any clarification or interpretation thereof, or comments thereon, except at the request of both parties, unless the agreement provides therefor.

6. Privacy of Proceeding and Award

The arbitrator should not publish or publicly comment on the proceedings or the award against the wishes of the parties.

PART III

CONDUCT AND BEHAVIOR OF PARTIES

1. General

Arbitration is predicated on the voluntary agreement of the parties to submit a dispute to a disinterested third party for final determination. It implies not only the willingness to arbitrate but the willingness to attend a hearing, submit evidence, submit to cross-examination and to abide by the decision of the arbitrator.

2. Scope

The power of the arbitrator depends upon the agreement of the parties. Accordingly, the contract or the submission agreement should define his powers. In initiating an arbitration—whether under a clause in a collective bargaining agreement or under a submission agreement or a stipulation—it is the duty of the parties to set forth the nature of the controversy, the claim asserted and the remedy sought. The initiating party has the duty of setting forth its claim and the defending party the right to outline its position.

3. Selection of Arbitrator

The parties should select the arbitrator, in accordance with their agreement, to determine the controversy existing between them and his designation should be based on his integrity, knowledge and judgment. A party should not seek to obtain the appointment of an arbitrator in the belief that he will favor that party and thereby give him an advantage over his adversary.

In keeping with the desire for complete impartiality, parties should reject as arbitrators persons who solicit cases.

4. The Tri-Partite Board

When parties select members of tri-partite boards, it is recognized that generally each will select a representative rather than an impartial arbitrator, but in making such appointment parties should select persons who will join with the impartial arbitrator in a full and fair discussion and consideration of the merits of the question to be determined.

5. Essential Conduct

Parties should approach arbitration in a spirit of cooperation with the arbitrator and should seek to aid him in the performance of his duties.

Having selected an arbitrator, the parties are under a duty not to subject him to improper pressures or influences which may tend to prejudice his judgment. They should neither give nor offer favors of any kind to the arbitrator. As a general rule they should not communicate with him privately; and if it becomes necessary to communicate with him, it should be done in writing and a copy thereof should be simultaneously delivered to the other party.

Parties should respect the office of the arbitrator and recognize his essential right to control the conduct of the arbitration and should abide by whatever rulings he may make.

When an arbitrator elects to withdraw from a proceeding and gives the parties his reasons, they should respect his right to do so in the interest of good arbitration.

6. The Hearing

Parties should not unduly delay the fixing of a date for the hearing nor the completion of the hearing. They should be prepared to proceed expeditiously with their evidence and their witnesses, have their exhibits ready and cooperate with the arbitrator in furnishing whatever additional information he may deem necessary.

They should be prompt in attendance at the hearing.

Parties should be fair and courteous in their examination of witnesses and in their presentation of facts. Concealment of necessary facts or the use of exaggeration is not conducive to a good or sound determination of the differences between the parties. Acrimonious, bitter or ill-mannered conduct is harmful to the cause of good arbitration.

When hearings are concluded, parties should not attempt to communicate any additional information to the arbitrator. If new evidence becomes available, written application for the re-opening of the proceeding with the reasons therefor should be made to the arbitrator and a copy transmitted simultaneously to the other party.

When it has been agreed that briefs will be submitted, they should be filed promptly on the date arranged and no new matter should be included in the briefs. Briefs should be a summarization of the evidence presented at the hearing, together with the arguments of the parties and their comments on the evidence.

7. Privacy of the Arbitration

The parties should consider whether the subject matter of the arbitration is of such public interest as to warrant publicity concerning the proceeding and publication of the award and opinion, if any; and should advise the arbitrator accordingly on the record or in writing.

8. Arbitrators' Executive Meetings

Meetings of the arbitrators and discussions in executive sessions by members of boards of arbitration are private and confidential and parties should not seek to obtain information concerning such meetings either from the third arbitrator or from their nominees. Parties should likewise refrain from attempting to secure in advance from the arbitrator or their nominees information concerning the award but should wait until the award is received in the regular course by both parties.

9. The Award

Parties, having agreed to arbitration, should accept and abide by the award.

After an award has been rendered, neither party should unilaterally request a clarification or interpretation of the award from the arbitrator. If one is necessary, it should be requested jointly by both parties.

10. Settlements

If the parties reach a settlement of their dispute but desire nevertheless to have an award made, they should give the arbitrator a full explanation of the reasons therefor in order that he may judge whether he desires to make or join in such an award.

11. Compensation of the Arbitrator

Parties should agree in advance of the hearing with the arbitrator on his compensation or the basis upon which it will be determined, but such arrangements should be made only in the presence of both parties. If the parties do not agree with one another as to the compensation, they should discuss the matter in the absence of the arbitrator in order that there be no intimation or suggestion that one party is willing to pay more compensation than the other and thereby raise the possibility of a question thereafter as to partiality on the part of the arbitrator.

Having agreed on the compensation for an arbitrator's services or to the reimbursement of his necessary expenses, parties should remit promptly and under no circumstances should such payment be withheld because of displeasure over the award.

CONSULTANTS ON THE REVISION OF THE CODE OF ETHICS OF THE AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION

LLOYD K. GARRISON, Chairman

ROBERT ABELOW
JOHN R. ABERSOLD
GABRIEL N. ALEXANDER
GEORGE W. ALGER
SAMUEL E. ANGOFF
FRED ARMSTRONG, JR.
SOLOMON BARKIN
WILLIAM L. BATT
LELAND BEARD
LYNN W. BEMAN
JOHN C. BEST
FREDERICK K. BEUTEL
ALGERNON D. BLACK
WILLIAM W. BODINE
GEORGE E. BOWLES
J. NOBLE BRADEN
PHILLIPS BRADLEY
DOUGLAS V. BROWN
REBECCA BROWNSTEIN
ROBERT R. BRUCE
FREDERICK H. BULLEN
JOHN P. BURKE
RICHARD CABELL
KENNETH S. CARLSTON
PETER A. CARMICHAEL
PAUL CARRINGTON
CYRUS S. CHING
ROBERT WALSTON CHUBB
TOM C. CLARK
FRANCIS O. CLARKSON
L. A. CLEVELAND
ALFRED A. COLBY
DAVID L. COLE
LEWIS M. CONN
EDWARD CONNOR
EARL CONSTANTINE
HERMAN COOPER
JOHN C. COOPER
JOHN DALE, JR.
ARCHIE O. DAWSON
VIRBIL B. DAY
ANTHONY DEANDRADE
WALTER J. DERENBERG
FRANK T. DEVYVER
MARTIN DOMKE
GEORGES F. DORIOT
HENRY S. DRINKER
JOHN EASTMAN, JR.
FRED J. EDEN
EDWARD S. EVANS
JAMES E. FAGAN
NATHAN P. FEINSINGER
JOSEPH F. FINNEGAN
FRED C. FISCHER
WILLIAM RAY FORRESTER
OSMOND K. FRAENKEL
JESSE FREIDIN
ROBERT I. GANNON
HERMAN A. GRAY
WILLIAM GREEN
LEE S. GREENE
DON E. GIFFIN
VALENTINE GUENTHER
ALLAN HARVEY
PAUL R. HAYS
JOHN N. HAZARD
LELAND HAZARD
JAMES J. HEALY
GUY C. HECKER
JOSEPH W. HENDERSON
CHRISTOPHER W. HOEY
J. H. HOFFMAN
F. C. HOKEMA
WILLIAM S. HOPKINS
AARON HORVITZ
WILLARD E. HOTCHKISS
L. A. IRELAND
JOHN G. JACKSON
SIDNEY D. L. JACKSON
HENRY JAFFE
SAMUEL H. JAFFEE
T. A. JOHNSTONE
JULES J. JUSTIN
KENNETH J. KELLEY
FRANCES KELLOR
FRED I. KENT
CLARK KERR
ARTHUR K. KUHN
MEYER KURZ
RHODA LAKS
S. WHITNEY LANDON
JOHN DAY LARKIN
C. W. LEAPHART
ROBERT C. LEE
ROBERT E. LEE
WILLIAM M. LEISERSON
RICHARD A. LESTER
CHARLES W. LYTLE
DAVID J. McDONALD
JOHN T. McGOVERN
WILLIAM H. McPHERSON
DOUGLAS B. MAGGS
EDWARD C. MAGUIRE
WILLIAM MAPEL
WALTER T. MARGETTS, JR.
HENRY MAYER
LEO KENNETH MAYER
WALTER GORDON MERRITT
ARTHUR S. MEYER
A. HOWARD MYERS
THOMAS A. MORGAN
CHARLES P. MORIARTY
C. T. MURCHISON
JOSEPH S. MURPHY
H. H. NORDLINGER
THOMAS L. NORTON
REGINALD PARKER
THOMAS L. PARSONNET
C. L. PATTERSON
ROBERT P. PATTERSON
HERBERT PAYNE
DONOVAN O. PETERS
M. F. PETERSON
PAUL L. PHILLIPS
WARREN LEE PIERSON
HARRY H. PLATT
LIONEL S. POPKIN
LELAND POWERS
LEROY A. RADER
EMIL RIEVE
HERBERT W. ROGERS
MORRIS S. ROSENTHAL
CHARLES B. RUGG
JOSEPH SALERNO
CARL R. SCHEDLER
PETER SEITZ
RALPH T. SEWARD
BORIS SHERBOK
DONALD J. SHERBONDY
HARRY SHULMAN
GEORGE H. SIBLEY
WILLIAM E. SIMKIN
IRVING STALMASTER
LAWRENCE STESSIN
JOHN R. STOCKHAM
GEORGE E. STRONG
WESLEY A. STURGES
PAUL L. STYLES
CHARLES P. TAFT
GEORGE W. TAYLOR
LUDWIG TELLER
JOHN P. TROXELL
MILTON S. TYRE
H. FABIAN UNDERHILL

W. J. UREN
SAUL WALLEN
MARTIN WALSH
JOHN K. WATSON
H. F. WILLHITE
EDWIN E. WITTE
DAVID A. WOLFF
SIDNEY A. WOLFF
MATTHEW WOLL
MARK WOODS
DALE YODER
DALLAS M. YOUNG
BURTON A. ZORN

COMMITTEE ON ETHICS OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS

1949

NATHAN P. FEINSINGER, Chairman

BYRON R. ABERNATHY
REV. LEO C. BROWN, S.J.
SIDNEY L. CAHN
ALFRED A. COLBY
GEORGE ALLEN DASH, JR.
ALEX ELSON
LLOYD K. GARRISON
HERMAN A. GRAY
JOHN A. LAPP
JOHN D. LARKIN
WHITLEY P. McCOY
CHARLES A. MYERS
H. HERMAN RAUCH
ALBERT A. ROSENSHINE
CHARLES P. TAFT
GEORGE W. TAYLOR
HENRY J. TILFORD
SAUL WALLEN
PAUL W. WALTER
SIDNEY A. WOLFF

1950

DAVID L. COLE, Chairman

GABRIEL N. ALEXANDER
SIDNEY L. CAHN
ALEX ELSON
NATHAN P. FEINSINGER
PHILIP G. MARSHALL
CARL R. SCHEDLER
RALPH T. SEWARD
GEORGE W. TAYLOR

Industrial and Labor Relations Review
Volume 17, No. 1, October 1963

Arbitration

LOYALTY AND SECURITY CASES IN ARBITRATION

BRUNO STEIN

SINCE the end of World War II, grievance arbitration has been a major force in shaping the common law of the union organized shop. Arbitration awards help to delineate areas of acceptable industrial behavior, as well as management rules, collective bargaining, and the existing mores of the industrial world. What constitutes behavior acceptable to an employer has never been a matter confined to the shop itself. Transgressions committed outside the plant frequently become subjects of arbitrable disciplinary proceedings. The practice of publishing arbitration awards and opinions helps to diffuse the private law of one shop into a more general industrial common law. Notwithstanding the rule against stare decisis, published awards constitute a kind of case law.

The purpose of this study is to discover what arbitration case law, if any, developed from worker activity centering in the radical left. "Loyalty" cases, as these are sometimes called, present difficult problems to arbitrators, mainly because of the civil rights element they contain. In one sense they are a special case of the general problem of determining what behavior, not directly connected with work, shall be deemed objectionable and therefore "just cause" for discipline. In a larger sense, the cases reflect the industrial community's effort to evolve new rules of behavior adaptable to the larger problems of living in a cold war situation.

Arbitration awards published between 1945 and 1961 are the source of the basic data.[1] Reliance on published awards has certain serious drawbacks since these constitute a statistically poor sample of all awards. Nevertheless, the published awards probably reflect, however imprecisely, the attitudes of arbitrators, and have a special significance in that they influence the shaping of the industrial common law. The awards studied below

Dividing the cases into three categories, involving Communist activity, refusals to testify, and security risk cases, this study examines arbitration awards published between 1945 and 1961 which dealt with these problems. Regarding the first category, the author finds a shift in arbitrators' attitudes, probably reflecting more general attitude changes in the United States. In cases involving refusals to testify, the awards indicate an ambivalence also characteristic of public reaction to this problem. Of the reported cases resulting from the government's industrial security program, the great majority of them ended adversely to the employees involved.

Bruno Stein is associate professor of economics and assistant director of the Institute of Labor Relations at New York University. This study was completed with financial aid from the Arts and Science Research Fund of New York University.—EDITOR

[1]Bureau of National Affairs, Labor Arbitration Awards (Washington: BNA, Inc.), 1945–1961, cited as LA; Prentice-Hall, American Labor Arbitration Awards (Englewood Cliffs: Prentice-Hall, Inc.), 1945–1961, cited as ALAA. Most of the awards were taken from the BNA volumes. The Prentice-Hall service was used as a supplement. The BNA, according to one of its officials, published virtually all cases it received on this subject. There is, however, no way to estimate what proportion of all cases these represent.

frequently referred to other published opinions.

Three categories were established for the purpose of analysis. Into Category I went cases resulting from overt allegedly Communist activity. The term is used to include actions that might be termed "fellow travelling," since proof that the accused person was a party member was not always forthcoming. All cases but one were discharge cases, and both in-plant and off-plant actions were involved.

Category II cases stem from refusal by workers to testify regarding past or present membership in the Communist party or alleged Communist front groups. In most cases the privilege of the Fifth Amendment or its state equivalent was used. In many cases present membership was denied, and the privilege used to avoid testifying about past affiliations. It may be recalled that much controversy was engendered in the 1950's by the question: does resort to the privilege against self-incrimination necessarily imply guilt, and if so, guilt of what? Within the industrial community, arbitrators had to determine whether refusal to testify was an offense punishable by discharge.

The operation of the government's industrial security program in defense facilities led to the Category III cases. The administration of the program led not only to arbitrable discharges, but also raised questions of seniority and back pay where clearance was first denied and later granted.[2] Over time, an increasing number of collective agreements have come to specify the procedure to be followed, thus reducing the need for arbitration and giving arbitrators firmer bases for decisions in subsequent cases.

Table 1. Reported Cases, 1945–1961.*

Type of Case	Number of Cases	Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained
Category I	10	4	6
Category II	17	8	9
Category III	8	6	2
Total	35	18	17

*The first published cases appeared in 1947.

THE INCIDENCE OF THE CASES

An examination of the incidence of the cases reveals an interesting pattern. None of the traditional crafts are represented. This may be because such unions might have been unwilling to process grievances of this nature, because left-wing activity was less frequent among their membership, and because employers were less apt to take action. A wide range of hypotheses is possible. Since our data consists of grievances that went all the way to arbitration, its nature prevents any testing of such hypotheses.

Four national unions account for 57 percent of all cases and 70 percent of all grievants. This concentration is caused by the "refusal to testify" cases. The United Auto Workers and United Steelworkers, staunchly anti-Communist, were apparently willing to press such cases. One would have assumed other unions born in the 1930's to be well represented. The study casts no light on this. The United Electrical Workers were, of course, a special target (the IUE case deals with former UE activists), but one would have expected the same of the International Longshore and Warehouse Workers and the Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers. The incidence of defense contracts may have had something to do with this, but a more precise evaluation is outside the scope of this study.

[2]Not all security risks are so classified because of communism. Suspected relatives, unstable personalities, etc. may be the cause of denial of clearance under the Federal Security Program. For examples, see Adam Yarmolinsky, Case Studies in Personnel Security (Washington: BNA, 1955).

The Newspaper Guild stands out with five cases involving six dismissed employees. One of the Typographical Union cases is also a newspaper case. During the late 1940's and early 1950's the communications media were extremely sensitive regarding the employment of suspected present and former communists and sympathizers. Because of the nature of the hiring procedure for creative talent, a blacklist served in lieu of discharges.[3] Cases were not likely to come to arbitration.[4] One can safely infer that the newspaper cases were part of the general pattern that prevailed in the entertainment and news industries.

PRIVATE AND PUBLIC POLICY

Before examining the cases themselves, a brief summary will be made of attitudes in private industry, the National Labor Relations Board, and the courts. Arbitration proceeds within an existing framework of private and public policies that serve as guidelines to the parties and to arbitrators.

A good many loyalty discharges were made by employers during the period in question, but it is impossible to estimate their number. In the absence of a union, [3]See John Cogley, Report on Blacklisting, 2 vols. (New York: Fund for the Republic, 1956).

[4]The writer knows of one unreported case in the television industry, and there were probably others. A thorough survey of unreported cases in all industries would have been desirable, but was prevented, both by lack of funds and by a disinclination on the part of many people to cooperate. At least one arbitrator in another unreported case offered to show his award to the writer on the condition that he would not be identified.

Table 2. Type of Case by Number of Unions and Number of Grievants.

Union	Category I		Category II		Category III		Total Number of
	No. of Cases	No. of Grievants	No. of Cases	No. of Grievants	No. of Cases	No. of Grievants	Cases	Grievants
United Auto Workers	2	2	2	2	2	2	6	6
American Newspaper Guild	0	0	5	6	0	0	5	6
United Steelworkers	1	1	4	6	0	0	5	7
United Electrical Workers	1	1	3	5	0	0	4	6
International Association of Machinists	0	0	1	1	1	1	2	2
International Typographical Union	2	2	0	0	0	0	2	2
Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers	1	1	0	0	0	0	1	1
United Cafeteria Workers	0	0	0	0	2	2	2	2
United Office and Professional Workers	2	2	0	0	0	0	2	2
American Communications Assn.	0	0	1	1	0	0	1	1
Communications Workers of America	0	0	0	0	1	1	1	1
International Union of Electrical Workers	0	0	1	3	0	0	1	3
United Rubber Workers	1	1	0	0	0	0	1	1
Engineers Assn. of Arma	0	0	0	0	1	1	1	1
Plant Guard Workers	0	0	0	0	1	1	1	1
Total	10	10	17	24	8	8	35	42

Source: Bureau of National Affairs, Labor Arbitration Reports; and Prentice Hall, American Labor Arbitration Awards.

dismissed workers have little or no recourse. In many cases where a collective bargaining relationship existed, the union condoned such discharges so that no arbitration cases emerged. Again, the number of such instances cannot be estimated. Attempts by discharged workers to compel arbitration were generally unsuccessful.[5] It is likely that some "loyalty" discharges took place under the guise of other claimed offenses. The discharged employee sometimes preferred this, as a loyalty discharge would make him virtually unemployable. In other instances, careful checks on rule infractions or efficiency probably provided the basis for discharge, and conceivably, the employee might never know the real reason for the severance.[6]

An important employer research organization put it this way:

Where the union is cooperative or where there is no union, companies report that the best thing to do is to fire men of questionable loyalty. Communist affiliation is rarely used as the premise since this may be difficult, if not impossible to prove legally. Instead, an infraction of a company rule, submission of a false employment application, or failure to perform work satisfactorily are generally bases of dismissal. Some companies report, however, that "Commies can be awfully good and conscientious workers when the heat is on."

Security personnel maintain, however, that in the long run, with vigilance and careful "bookkeeping" of the actions, comings and goings, absences, vacation leaves and any violations of these and of other company rules, management will be able to get rid of some of its security risks.[7]

Discharges of active unionists are potentially subject to National Labor Relations Board jurisdiction, if there is reason to believe that the underlying motive of the employer is to be rid of the militant union leader. In the 1930's and 1940's the NLRB tended to be suspicious of private loyalty measures, but its policies thereafter gave employers considerable leeway in loyalty discharges.[8] Actually, the Board itself got few such cases. The General Counsel stopped virtually all of them by refusing to issue complaints on the ground that the National Labor Relations Act did not protect in these matters even though union activity was involved.[9]

The courts gave relatively little guidance to arbitrators in questions of private employment. In the Cutter Laboratories case, the lower California courts' refusal to vacate an arbitration award reinstating a Communist was reversed by the California Supreme Court. That court ruled that the employment of Communists was contrary to the public policy of the state.[10] The United States Supreme Court denied certiorari.[11] The New York

[5]As in Ostrofsky v. United Steelworkers, Local 2609, 171 F. Supp. 782 (D.C. Md. 1959), affirmed mem. 273 F. 2d 614 (4th Cir. 1960), cert. denied, 363 U.S. 849 (1960).

[6]Comment, "Loyalty and Private Employment: The Right of Employers to Discharge Suspected Subversives," 62 Yale Law Review 954, 983 (1953).

[7]National Industrial Conference Board, Industrial Security: Combating Subversion and Sabotage, Studies in Business Policy No. 60 (New York: NICB, 1952), p. 63.

[8]Henry Mayer, "Labor's Responsibility to National Security and its Due," Emanuel Stein (ed.), Proceedings of New York University Seventh Annual Conference on Labor (Albany: Matthew Bender & Co., 1954), pp. 506–511.

[9]Administrative Decisions of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board. Case No. 63 (1951), 27 LRRM 1443; Case No. 72 (1951), 27 LRRM 1510; Case No. 410 (1952), 31 LRRM 1067; Case No. 797 (1953), 32 LRRM 1619; Case No. 661 (1953), 32 LRRM 1231; Case No. 961 (1954), 33 LRRM 1526; Case No. F-143 (1957), 40 LRRM 1361; Case No. F-361 (1958), 42 LRRM 1281.

[10]Cutter Laboratories v. Bio-Lab Union Local 25, 16 LA 208, affirmed, Black v. Cutter Laboratories, 266 P. 2d 92 (1951), reversed, 43 Cal. 2d 788, 278 P. 2d 905 (1955).

[11]Black v. Cutter Laboratories, 351 U.S. 292 (1956).

courts, however, were not willing to apply the Cutter doctrine, at least insofar as refusal to testify was concerned. Thus, although a lower New York court specifically cited Cutter in one case, the Appellate Division preferred not to apply a supervening public policy to override collective bargaining rules, and the state's highest court affirmed without opinion.[12] The federal courts were equally unclear. In United Electrical Workers v. General Electric a discharged worker and his union sought declaratory relief, injunction, and damages. The employee had been dismissed following his refusal to testify before a Senate Committee. The dismissal was based on the company's policy in regard to security risks and suspected subversives. The union argued that such matters were subject to negotiation. The district court held that the discharge was for obvious cause and dismissed the complaint on the merits. On appeal, the circuit court dismissed the case for lack of jurisdiction because the NLRB had exclusive primary jurisdiction and because the claim involved less than the district court's minimum jurisdictional amount.[13] In short, no clear legal doctrine emerged.

CATEGORY I: ALLEGED COMMUNIST ACTIVITY

The earliest cases deal with workers whose activities or affiliations made them subject to disciplinary measures by employers. Of the ten awards on record, nine were discharge cases and one involved back pay. Political activity was the crux of the matter in six of the cases; two arose during a period of labor strife. One case arose where a worker, accused at a congressional hearing, denied the charges against him—this was the back-pay case—and one involved a printer's error that had ideological overtones. All of the cases came to arbitration during the six-year period of 1947 to 1950 inclusive.

An analysis of the opinions rendered reveals that the principal reasons for upholding grievances were: (1) communism is legal; (2) the employer was trying to rid himself of a militant union leader; (3) the specific activity in question—such as pamphlet distribution or misrepresentation on an employment application—was not just cause for discharge under the circumstances in question. Major reasons for denying the grievance were (1) dissension among the work force because of the presence of a Communist; (2) injury to the employer's reputation and ability to obtain business.

The first two cases concern themselves with pamphlet distribution,[14] a form of activity that was more frequent in the late forties than now. Both of these cases were decided by different arbitrators on the same day and give an insight into some of the problems that were to develop. The grievant in Spokane-Idaho was discharged for distributing Communist literature in violation of a plant rule against the distribution of any kind of literature. He was openly a member of the Communist party. Arbitrator Cheney held that the real reason behind the discharge was the employee's communism, as the rule violation would, by itself, have led to a milder penalty. Since being a Communist was legal, however obnoxious, Cheney reinstated the man with back pay. "Our government," he said, "apparently still realizes that labor or the right to labor is a valuable property right, which should not be denied or withdrawn from laboring people because their political or economic philosophies do not accord with those of a majority of our citizens."[15]

[12]Carey v. Westinghouse Electric Corp. 14 Misc. 2d 239, 178 N.Y.S. 2d, 846 (Sup. Ct. 1958), modified, 6 A.D. 2d 582, 180 N.Y.S. 2d 203 (1st Dept. 1958), aff'd mem. 6 N.Y. 2d 934 (1959).

[13]127 F. Supp. 934 (D.D.C. 1954), aff'd in part and rev'd. in part, 231 F. 2d 259 (D.C. Cir. 1956), cert. denied, 352 U.S. 872 (1956).

[14]Spokane-Idaho Mining Co. and International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, Local 18, 9 LA 749 (1947); and Curtiss-Wright Corp. and United Auto Workers, Local 927, 9 LA 77 (1947).

While communism was as yet being dealt with as a political movement whose distastefulness did not deprive the worker of his rights under the labor agreement, the issue of communism as a security matter arose, albeit indirectly, in the Curtiss-Wright case. Here the grievant was discharged for distributing a Communist party pamphlet in alleged violation of a no-solicitation or distribution-while-at-work rule. Since the act took place at lunch time, Arbitrator Frank R. Uible reinstated the grievant. The company's motive was economic as well as ideological. Its contract with the Navy Department required it to report the names of all employees engaged in subversive activity, and to discharge any "undesirable employee." After having discharged the grievant, Curtiss-Wright asked the Navy whether it should reinstate him; the Navy said no. In his opinion, the arbitrator noted that the Communist party was not outlawed. Under its labor agreement, the company had no right to discharge except for "just cause." If the Navy again sought the grievant's discharge, on the ground that the employee was "undesirable," this could be treated as a separate matter. The implication was clear that such a discharge could be upheld as being for just cause.

Three other cases under the category of Communist activity involved workers who held leading positions in their local unions. Discharges of such persons always raise the possibility of bad faith, although bad faith is not, of course, necessarily behind an employer's discharge of a union leader. In the first of the three cases below, a local union president was involved. In the other two cases, local union leaders were dismissed during labor disputes.

In Jackson Industries[16] the grievant was attacked by the Birmingham (Ala.) Post as being a leading member of the Communist party under an alias. He did not deny the charge and was thereupon expelled from the CIO Industrial Union Council of Birmingham. The employer dismissed him on the ground that his presence created unrest in the plant and specified that communism was not an issue. As evidence of unrest, the employer introduced two petitions from workers in the plant, one asking for the employee's dismissal, the other asking that the dismissal be upheld. They were signed respectively by forty-nine and fifty-four workers.[17]

Arbitrator Whitley P. McCoy ruled that the company had a right to be protected from unrest among its work force. If the charge of communism was true, loss of the job was the natural consequence of the grievant's actions. If the charge was false, the grievant's remedy lay in the courts, where charges of libel could be made. In effect, this opinion was the reverse of the one in Spokane-Idaho, where Cheney had held that the right to the job was not subject to abrogation because of the worker's obnoxious opinions. McCoy was aware of this, for he noted that this case differed from

[15] 9 LA at 752.

[16] Jackson Industries and United Steelworkers, Local 2815, 9 LA 753 (1948).

[17] At the union meeting to determine whether the grievance should be prosecuted only forty-five of two hundred members showed up. The vote was twenty-five to twenty in favor of prosecuting the grievance. 9 LA at 754.

Spokane-Idaho. The controlling element in Jackson Industries, McCoy said, was the dissension in the plant that resulted from the grievant's continued presence there.[18]

The complexities that the problem began to assume are illustrated in Foote Brothers[19] and Cutter Laboratories cases.[20] In both cases, left-wing unions were involved, militant union leaders were discharged, and hostile labor-management relationships existed. Such circumstances raise questions of good faith, causing the arbitrator to consider whether the underlying motives for the dismissal correspond to the stated charges. One possible clue might be the length of time elapsing between the company's knowledge of the worker's alleged guilt and its decision to dismiss him. As will be seen, this time element played an important role in both cases.

The grievant in Foote Brothers was hired in October 1948 to perform factory work. By the time he was discharged, July 1949, he had become a shop steward, recording secretary of the local union, and generally influential in urging the strike that occurred just before his dismissal. Basically, there were two charges against him: (1) falsification of his employment application, and (2) communism. He was guilty of the former, and there was evidence to support the latter charge.

The company's evidence was obtained in a peculiar manner. It appears that the firm engaged the services of a private detective to check on the grievant's background when he became important in the union. At one time, the detective obtained information by posing as an F.B.I. agent. The firm discovered that the employee (1) had a college education and had been active in left-wing organizations while a student, (2) had worked for the United Electrical Workers as an organizer and had been jailed in connection with union activities, and (3) had falsely listed certain employment experience.

In upholding the union's grievance, Arbitrator John Day Larkin questioned the company's motive. He saw significance in the one month lag between the time the company learned of the grievant's misrepresentations and the date of the discharge. In not acting upon its knowledge promptly, the company was found to have waived its right to discharge the grievant. The motive for dismissal, Larkin ruled, was the company's fear and distrust of left-wing union leadership. That the grievant may have been a Communist was irrelevant since "even a Communist is entitled to earn a living as long as he is acting within the law."[21]

An equally complex set of circumstances faced the Board of Arbitration that decided the important Cutter Laboratories case. The dismissed employee, a former president of the local union, was employed as a clerk-typist for three years prior to her discharge. During this period she rose rapidly in the union and was known to be a very aggressive leader. She was charged with falsifying her application for work and with being a Communist, therefore not trustworthy in a vaccine manufacturing establishment.

Evidence presented at the hearing established that she was an active member of the Communist party. She had, [18]The grievant was a Negro, but the published opinion does not indicate whether racial conflict was involved.

[19]Foote Brothers Gear and Machine Corp. and United Electrical Workers, Local 1114, 13 LA 848 (1959).

[20]Cutter Laboratories and United Office and Professional Workers of America Bio-Lab Union, Local 225, 15 LA 431 (1950).

[21]13 LA at 864.

furthermore, falsified her application for employment in not listing her college and law degrees and her experience as a lawyer in both private and government practice. It was established that the previous employment listed by her was false and that she had induced her references to lie for her.

Nevertheless, Arbitrators Hubert Wyckoff and Paul Heide reinstated her with back pay.[22] The Board of Arbitration questioned the company's motive. The grievant had joined the firm in 1946. By 1947, before she rose to importance in the union, the company apparently knew a good deal about her past. The actual discharge took place in the midst of heated negotiations over a new contract. The Board ruled that the company had waived its right to act by waiting until 1949. It implied that the discharge was prompted by union activity.

Cutter Laboratories illustrates the change in attitude toward the Communist party that occurred in the late 1940's. The arbitrators saw the matter simply as a situation in which the company found a handy reason for ridding itself of a troublesome union leader. Because of what appeared to be bad faith by the company, they upheld the grievance even though, leaving the Communist issue aside, the grievant was clearly guilty of misrepresenting herself to the company when she applied for a job. To the California Supreme Court the issue was communism as an unlawful conspiracy and just cause for a discharge. Since employment of Communists was contrary to the public policy of the state, the only possible defense was a denial of communism.[23]

The last cases pertaining to Communist activity occurred in 1952. A discharge for "neglect of duty" was upheld by Theodore J. Kheel where an employee had toured Russia and Poland and had provided the newspapers of those countries with propaganda opportunities. The employer feared loss of business from government sources, and the arbitrator agreed that the employee had a duty to refrain from activities reasonably foreseeable as injurious to the company's business.[24]

In a case at Chrysler, an employee cited in a House UnAmerican Activities Committee hearing was sent home with the agreement of the union because of unrest in the plant. The grievant signed a statement denying the charges and returned to work. He was again sent home because of further unrest, but was subsequently allowed to resume work. His grievance requesting back pay was upheld on the ground that the company's penalty should have been levied against those who threatened trouble, not against an employee who was willing to work.[25]

During the period 1947–1952, the legal status of Communists underwent change. In 1947, while Cheney referred to the lawfulness of being a Communist, the party was still on the ballot in several states. The Smith Act convictions,[26] the Internal Security Act,[27] and the Communist Control Act[28] redefined the Communist party's status under law and threw [22]J. Paul St. Sure dissented.

[23]See n. 7, supra.

[24]Printers League Section and N.Y. Typographical Union, Local 6, 5 ALAA ¶69136 (1952).

[25]Chrysler Corp. and United Auto Workers, Local 7, 19 LA 408 (1952). To complete the record of Category I cases, a social worker who was dismissed for recommending left-wing literature to her clients was reinstated because the arbitrator ruled that she was merely a "misguided liberal". National Council of Jewish Women and Local 19, United Office and Professional Workers, 2 ALAA ¶67772 (1947).

[26]For example, Dennis v. United States, 341 U.S. 494 (1951).

[27]64 Stat. 987 (1950), 50 USC ¶2385 (1958).

[28]68 Stat. 775 (1950), 50 USC ¶841 (1958).

increasing doubt on the lawfulness of knowingly being a Communist. Furthermore, popular feeling about Communists and their sympathizers underwent a concurrent change. When communism came to be looked upon (or recognized) as a conspiracy to aid an inimical foreign power, an employee charged with being a Communist was not likely to get much sympathy from his union or from an arbitrator. The last two cases may, therefore, be significant. Whereas in 1947 an avowed Communist agitator was restored to his job, by 1952 a printer who gave interviews to Russian and Polish newspapers while on vacation there was found to have been properly discharged. The auto worker whose pay was restored had denied the allegations against him. Had he admitted them, it is unlikely that he would have kept his job.

Table 3. Category I Cases by Year of Award.

Year	Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained	Total
1947	0	2	2
1948	1	1	2
1949	0	2	2
1951	1	0	1
1952	2	1	3
Total	4	6	10

CATEGORY II: REFUSAL TO TESTIFY

Some seventeen published cases fall into this category, of which fifteen involved refusals by employees to testify before congressional or state legislative committees as to present or, in some cases, previous Communist associations and activities. In one case the refusal took place before a Grand Jury, and this was the only instance where a conviction for contempt was involved in the arbitration.[29] One case involved a refusal to rebut charges made at a congressional hearing.[30] In at least six of the cases, union leaders or militants were involved.

In practice, the grounds for discharge varied, and in a few cases employers said that the "refusal to testify," per se, was not at issue. In dealing with "refusal" cases, arbitrators were faced with the problem of reexamining further the meaning of "just cause" in labor agreements that were not drawn up with this problem in mind. The "refusal" cases resemble the Communist activity cases in that they involved outside activities of employees. It is probable that some of these disputes would have arisen had employers learned of such outside activities in other ways than exposure at legislative hearings.

The bulk of the awards fall into the period 1952–1958. It will be remembered that anti-Communist feelings ran high in these years and that there was considerable public debate over the propriety of claiming the Fifth Amendment privilege, and over what could be inferred from it. Arbitrators could find little help in the realm of public policy in regard to the employment rights of those who "took" the Fifth Amendment.

It is difficult to assess the motives of employers in discharging such workers. Since a number of union leaders[31] were involved, one can suspect that a desire to rid themselves of left-wing union leadership may have moved some employers. More likely, some employers did not want suspected Communists in their plants because (1) they might jeopardize future government contracts, (2) the employer did not wish to provide employment for persons he thought were disloyal to the nation and to himself, and (3) because the employer feared the opprobrium that the presence of these persons attached to his firm. In regard to the first of these, congressional committees put pressure on employers to discharge persons who refused to testify.[32] A number of employers, it should be noted, offered to reinstate employees who were willing to testify or to "clear" themselves in some acceptable fashion.

[29]Consolidated Western Steel and United Steelworkers, Local 2058, 13 LA 721 (1949).

[30]N. 33 and 34, infra.

[31]In seven out of the seventeen cases examined.

There were four principal reasons given by arbitrators in denying the grievances under this category: (1) economic position of the firm; (2) dissension among the work force; (3) loss of faith in the employee; and (4) security risk (not connected with the government's industrial security program). In upholding grievances, arbitrators relied almost exclusively on the concept that a claim of the self-incrimination privilege was constitutionally guaranteed and that it did not imply any sort of guilt. In the paragraphs below some of the cases will be examined pursuant to this analysis.

In the Los Angeles Daily News[33] case, two editorial writers were charged with communism at a House UnAmerican Activities Committee hearing. Neither took any steps to deny the charges.[34] As a result, one was discharged and the other, who had been laid off for other reasons, was taken off the rehire list. Arbitrator Paul A. Dodd denied their grievances, stating that the company was entitled to protection from adverse criticism and attack that threatened to diminish its circulation and weaken its chances for economic survival. In addition, Dodd referred to the death of American soldiers in Korea and stated that in the struggle between two ideologies communism represents conquest, espionage, and deceit, while the American way of life stands for peace, private enterprise, and freedom.[35] The implication was that the ideological reason was as controlling as the economic one.

Danger to the firms' ability to obtain government contracts was cited by arbitrators in upholding discharges in Burt Manufacturing[36] and Westinghouse Airbrake.[37] The grievant in Burt Manufacturing was charged with being a "poor security risk," although the federal security program was not involved. He had once run for public office on the Communist party ticket and had served as secretary of the local Communist party in 1943. A former president of the local union, he had resigned his union office when the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavit requirement went into effect. His discharge came after his refusal to answer 109 questions of the Ohio UnAmerican Activities Commission.[38]

Westinghouse Airbrake was more complex. The two grievants were long-term employees with thirty-five and thirty years of service, respectively. Both were union leaders and one, president of the local, had signed a Taft-Hartley affi-

[32]As is Bethlehem Steel Co. and United Steelworkers, 24 LA 852 at 853 (1949).

[33]Los Angeles Daily News and American Newspaper Guild, L.A. Newspaper Guild. 19 LA 39 (1952).

[34]Technically, no refusal to testify before a committee was involved here, but the circumstances of the case make it virtually identical with the "refusal" cases. The company offered to drop charges against one grievant if he swore that the charges were false. The grievant refused the offer.

[35]19 LA at 39.

[36]Burt Manufacturing Co. and United Steelworkers, 21 LA 532 (1953).

[37]Westinghouse Airbrake Co. and United Electrical Workers, Local 610, 27 LA 265 (1956).

[38]Arbitrator Morrison also upheld the discharge on the grounds that internal discipline was affected by workers' objection to the grievant's presence. 21 LA at 534.

davit. The company conceded that both were good employees and that its relations with them in their role as labor leaders had been satisfactory. At a hearing of a Senate Committee the men were identified as having been Communists. The men testified that they were not Communists now, but claimed the Fifth Amendment privilege on matters pertaining to the past. The company gave them ninety days to "clear" themselves, and thereafter discharged them.

The company's principal argument was economic. Although neither grievant required a security clearance, the company feared the loss of potential defense business. Testimony was given that the Senate Committee had exerted pressure to have the men discharged, and that the Air Force had held up a contract award.[39] Arbitrator Harry Abrahams upheld the company under these circumstances and added that under the Communist Control Act[40] the burden of proof of non-Communism in a defense plant is on the employee.

As in the Communist activity cases,[41] employers cited as reasons for discharge the dissension among their employees that stemmed from the presence of a suspected Communist among them. Arbitrators were prone to demand some proof of this and of the damage it caused the firm, perhaps because refusal to testify was not viewed as conclusive evidence of guilt. In Burt Manufacturing, dissension was one of several reasons for upholding the discharge. When, however, the employer argued in Republic Steel[42] that, among other things, the grievant's presence provoked unrest, Arbitrator Harry H. Platt rejected this ground, saying that a group of employees cannot bring about a discharge and that the company had done nothing to allay the unrest. In RCA Communications[43] Arbitrator Sam Harris found that no disruption in employee morale had, in fact, occurred.

In a number of "refusal" cases, the employers charged that the grievant was a security risk and as such ought to be discharged. The accusation presumably had particular relevance when the grievant had been identified as a present or former Communist in the proceedings at which he refused to testify. Arbitrators tended to be wary of a security-risk charge as a basis for discharge, where the refusal to testify was the critical issue. In Republic Steel[44] the arbitrator ruled that there was no proof that the employee was a security risk, that he was not on a job requiring clearance, and that even if he were on a sensitive job he need not be fired but merely moved to non-sensitive work, if available. In short, this issue was found to be irrelevant.

Security was also raised as an issue in Pratt and Whitney Co.[45] An employee was identified in congressional hearings as a former Communist, swore that he was not now a Communist, and refused to testify in regard to his past. The company then asked him to "clear" himself. Arbitrator John T. Dunlop ruled specifically that no security element was in-

[39]27 LA at 270.

[40]Communist Control Act of 1954, 68 Stat. 775 (1954), 50 U.S.C. ¶841 (1958).

[41]For example, Jackson Industries, n. 13, supra.

[42]Republic Steel Corporation and United Steelworkers, Local 1089, 28 LA 810 (1957). Also see Chrysler Corporation and United Auto Workers, Local 3, 18 LA 836 (1952).

[43]RCA Communications, Inc. and American Communications Assn., Local 10, 29 LA 567 (1957). Grievants here claimed First Amendment privileges.

[44]N. 42, supra. Grievant was identified as a former Communist at the House UnAmerican Activities Committee hearings.

[45]Pratt and Whitney Co. and United Automobile Workers, Unity Lodge, Local 405, 28 LA 668 (1957).

volved in the grievant's work, and no opportunity existed for the grievant to clear himself. In an obiter dictum, the arbitrator stated that refusal to testify is not necessarily ground for discharge, although the privilege is not so broad as to protect all persons who resorted to it. Similarly, Arbitrator Harris warned that no inference could be drawn by the company from a refusal to testify that an individual was a threat to the security of a company's facilities or to the nation.[46]

A different viewpoint was expressed by Arbitrator Charles S. Desmond in the Bethlehem Steel case.[47] Three men were discharged after refusal to testify at Senate Committee hearings. The company offered to reinstate them if they "cleared" themselves by offering to testify.[48] At arbitration hearings, two of the men stated that they were not currently Communists. The third stated that he had never been a Communist or a sympathizer, but had belonged to the International Workers Order (a fraternal insurance organization alleged to be a Communist front). The work was not classified as sensitive. The arbitrator upheld the company on the basis that the men were security risks. In his decision he stated that he was impressed by the union's policy of ousting Communist officers, and also pointed out that the Pennsylvania Unemployment Insurance Commission held that discharges for refusal to testify were for due cause. On the other hand, Desmond ruled that the company's other ground, conduct detrimental to the business interests of the company, was invalid even though the Senate Committee had recommended that government contracts be withheld unless the men were discharged.

Loss of faith in the employee as "just cause" for dismissal was upheld several times in awards involving journalists. In the New York Times case,[49] Arbitrator Edward P. Corsi upheld the discharge of a copy reader on the ground given by the employer—that he had lost confidence in the grievant's ability to deal objectively with foreign news. Grievant had admitted to the company, after being subpoenaed, that he had twice been a Communist party member before his employment began. The Times, at arbitration hearings, stated that if the man had worked on the sports desk instead of the foreign desk, he would not have been discharged. The New York Mirror case[50] is more complex. The grievant had refused to testify before a Senate Committee in regard to past membership in the Communist party, but had denied current membership. The company charged that his public testimony was good and sufficient reason for dismissal and made no other allegations. Arbitrator Burton B. Turkus held that a rewrite man's job was "sensitive," since newspapers play a vital role in the cold war. "The undeniable fact is that the grievant is in a position where he has the opportunity and capacity to do incalculable harm if he is so inclined."[51]

Many arbitrators stressed the protected nature of a refusal to testify on the basis of the Fifth Amendment. Resort

[46]RCA Communications, n. 43, supra. Grievants had been denied security clearance and worked in non-sensitive positions. In both of the above cases the grievants had, on occasion, testified that they were not then Communists.

[47]Bethlehem Steel Co. and United Steelworkers, 24 LA 852 (1955).

[48]A fourth man accepted the offer and was reinstated.

[49]New York Times and American Newspaper Guild, Local 3, 26 LA 609 (1956). Also see Hearst Publishing Co., San Francisco Examiner Div., and American Newspaper Guild, Local 52, 30 LA 642 (1958).

[50]New York Mirror and American Newspaper Guild, 27 LA 548 (1956).

[51]Ibid., at 551.

to the Fifth Amendment is a person's privilege.[52] No inference of guilt may be drawn from it.[53] It is not an industrial offense, and not a violation of law.[54]

Arbitrators who upheld grievances because no inference of guilt could be drawn from the invocation of the Fifth Amendment found some strong guidelines from the federal courts. U. S. ex rel Belfrage v. Shaughnessy[55] was cited several times. There the court said that "whatever the underlying motivation, an invocation of the Fifth Amendment is no ground at all for an inference of guilt or of criminal proclivities."[56] In Spector v. United States,[57] also cited several times, the court held that "the privilege [against self-incrimination] is for the innocent as well as the guilty."[58] The right to refuse to testify was upheld even in cases where the grievance was denied on other grounds.[59]

An attempt to provide an analysis for particular cases was made by Professor John Dunlop, arbitrator in the Pratt and Whitney case referred to above. He suggested that six points be weighed in each case: (1) the degree of defense criticality of the plant; (2) the degree of defense criticality of the grievant's work operation; (3) the degree of current affiliation or attachment to the objectionable organization; (4) the degree of past attachment or involvement with the objectionable organization; (5) the degree of commitment regarding future relationships to such organizations; and (6) the employee's work record.[60]

A closer look at this analysis reveals some difficulties. It can be argued that points (1) and (2) are properly within the realm of the government's security program, unless the collective agreement contains specific provisions pertaining to other types of security determination. The other four points, furthermore, might require the type of trial hearing that cannot be held under arbitration auspices. Witnesses, for example, might be unobtainable. Nevertheless, arbitrators have probably taken these points into consideration, albeit in an informal fashion.

Perhaps the most interesting of the "refusal" cases was Westinghouse Electric in which the employer first claimed that refusal to testify was ipso facto ground for dismissal—and not arbitrable—and then, when forced by the courts to arbitrate, gave as basis for dismissal most of the reasons cited in various similar arbitrations. Arbitrator James Hill reinstated the employees with back pay because (1) resort to the Fifth Amendment [52]United Press Assn. and American Newspaper Guild, 22 LA 679 (1954). Arbitrator George A. Spiegelberg ruled in favor of the employee but stated that just cause existed in that the employee's behavior might prejudice the employer's business. However, the employer had failed to make this charge in the letter to the union explaining the reason for the discharge. An action by the union to compel enforcement of the award was dismissed on the ground that the arbitrator had exceeded his jurisdiction in going beyond the question of just cause. Farson v. United Press, 154 N.Y. 2d 741 (1956).

[53]Worthington Corp. and United Electrical Workers, Local 259, 24 LA 1 (1955).

[54]Republic Steel, n. 42, supra, where Arbitrator Platt noted that there may be practical reasons why a person would refuse to testify. Westinghouse Electric Corp. and International Union of Electrical Workers, Locals 315 and 1581, 35 LA 315 (1960).

[55]212 F. 2d 128 (2d Cir. 1954).

[56]212 F. 2d at 130.

[57]193 F. 2d 1002 (9th Cir. 1952).

[58]193 F. 2d at 1006. Also see Grunewald v. United States, where the Supreme Court said that "one of the basic functions of the privilege is to protect innocent men." 353 U.S. 391 at 421 (1957).

[59]As in Consolidated Western Steel, supra, where Arbitrator Spencer Pollard sustained the discharge because, among other things, the employee served a jail sentence for contempt of court because of refusal to testify and this constituted unauthorized absence from the job.

[60]28 LA at 672.

is not in itself a sufficient ground for discharge and no inference of guilt can be made from it; (2) there was little evidence of serious effect on employee morale; (3) security regulations did not require their discharge since they did no classified work; (4) the congressional hearings revealed nothing not known previously to the employer, the F.B.I., or the Navy Department; and (5) the claim of falsification of employment applications was not a sufficient basis for discharge.[61]

In summary, where grievances were denied a variety of reasons was given. Those frequently mentioned were economic injury to the firm, particularly from inability to obtain government contracts, security risk, and loss of faith in the employee. Where grievances were upheld, the no-inference doctrine was given in virtually all cases. Absence of proof that employee morale was seriously affected and absence of a security element were also frequently mentioned by arbitrators.

CATEGORY III: SECURITY RISKS

The U.S. government's security program for employees of defense contractors has led to arbitrations in regard to the method of its application in particular instances. Although the question of whether or not an employee is a security risk is usually beyond the arbitrator's power of determination, the question of what to do with him is not. The government does not require the discharge of a security risk. It merely specifies that he may not work in any part of a plant where he has access to classified matter. If a plant can be divided into sensitive and non-sensitive areas so that persons without clearances are physically barred from the former, a security risk may, at least in theory, work in the latter part.[62]

Eight cases of this category are reported in the BNA Labor Arbitration Reports. Six deal with discharges or layoffs resulting from the operation of the industrial security program. Two involve employees of private contractors on federal property whose badges or passes were revoked by the government. Of the eight grievances, only two were upheld and both under rather special circumstances.

The power to determine whether non-sensitive work is available, so that an uncleared employee need not be discharged, has been held to be a matter of management prerogative. In Bell Aircraft[63] back pay was requested for a worker discharged when clearance was denied and reinstated after appeal. The union claimed that the company had violated the discharge procedure, could have found alternative employment for the grievant, and had initiated the government's action because the employee was active in the union. Arbitrator Shister denied the grievance, ruling that the ordinary discharge procedure did not apply to non-disciplinary cases, and that the company had a sound basis for deciding that no unclassified work was available to the grievant. The labor agreement provided that the company could take reasonable action in the event that a clearance was denied. As for the third point, the arbitrator ruled that the union had not proved its case. The U.S. Air Force officers involved refused the union's request to testify. The possibility of bad faith by the company was thus left unexplored.

[61]Westinghouse Electric Co. and International Union of Electrical Workers, Locals 315 and 1581, 35 LA 315 (1960). The matter was held to be arbitrable. Carey v. Westinghouse Electric Corp., 14 Misc. 2d 239, 178 N.Y. 2d 846 (Sup. Ct. 1958), modified, 6 A.D. 2d 582, 180 N.Y. 2d 208 (1st Dept. 1959), aff'd mem. 6 N.Y. 2d 934 (1959).

[62]U.S. Department of Defense, Industrial Security Manual for Safeguarding Classified Information (Washington: U.S. G.P.O., 1956), Section I. However, it is illegal for a member of a Communist-action organization, as defined by the Subversive Activities Control Board, to engage in employment in a Defense Facility, as defined by the Secretary of Defense, Internal Security Act, 64 Stat. 992 (1950), 50 U.S.C. ¶784 (1958).

[63]Bell Aircraft and United Auto Workers, Local 501, 16 LA 234 (1951).

Virtually the same circumstances were found in Liquid Carbonic Corp. and United Automobile Workers, Local 757.[64] An employee was suspended when his clearance was denied. The company contended that it could not segregate unclassified from classified work. A charge of bad faith was also levelled. The grievant had been a militant member of the United Electrical Workers. While the company implied that the union was not vigorous in prosecuting the case, the union charged that management deliberately initiated the clearance procedure because of the grievant's union activity. Arbitrator Baab's decision to deny the grievance hinged on the management rights clause in the contract.

Even where unclassified work is available—work that the worker was doing at the time of his discharge—management may have the right to judge that the presence of a security risk may jeopardize the firm's ability to secure future government contracts. This finding was made by Arbitrator Whelan in Wisconsin Telephone Co. and Communications Workers of America.[65] It may be noted that the grievant in this case was president of the local union and was one of eighty-three PBX installers. In anticipation of more government contracts, the firm requested clearances for fifteen to twenty of these installers. The arbitrator's opinion did not go into the possibility of discrimination for union activity.

In some instances, companies not only selected names for security clearance, but also did the clearing themselves. This led to arbitration in Arma Corporation and Engineers Assn. of Arma (Ind.).[66] The labor agreement permitted the company to give an unpaid leave of absence to any employee whose clearance was denied. Using power granted to it under the government's security program, Arma denied clearance to an employee without a hearing. Arbitrator Shake ruled that this constituted a violation of the agreement, in that the agreement did not intend one party to have such power. If the man's clearance had been handled by the government, he would have been entitled to a hearing.

Inevitably, seniority problems arose in connection with the possibility of transfer. The issue was mentioned in Liquid Carbonic,[67] when the arbitrator referred to the firm's inability to bump a senior employee in order to provide work for an uncleared worker. In Rudolph Wurlitzer and Plant Guard Workers[68] a guard, who was suspended pending security check, sought a non-sensitive position. The only non-sensitive position that the guard could fill was held by an employee with greater seniority. Since the labor agreement did not permit a junior employee to bump a senior one, and since the union had refused to waive the seniority clause so that the two men could trade jobs, the arbitrator ruled in favor of the company.

What to do when a security clearance was denied, but several years later granted, was the problem in Lockheed

[64] 22 LA 709 (1954).
[65] 26 LA 792 (1956).
[66] 22 LA 325 (1954).
[67] N. 64, supra.
[68] 18 LA 648 (1952).

Aircraft.[69] An inspector, denied clearance in July 1953, was downgraded to a non-sensitive job when, after four months, clearance procedures were still not completed. In July 1954 the clearance was denied. Four years later the employee asked that his case be reopened, and in due time (six months) clearance was granted. The employee then asked for reinstatement to his old job classification with seniority, pay equal to that received when he held the job, and application by the employer to the government for restoration of lost pay. A contract provision to this effect existed to take care of situations in which clearance was erroneously denied. Arbitrator C. A. Warns denied the grievance because no retroactive determination of a prior error was made by the clearing agency.

Federal security actions tend to supersede the discharge provisions of collective agreements when the company is a contractor on federal property. In one case, where a Pentagon cafeteria worker's discharge was sought by the government, the worker was reinstated by the arbitrator. Arbitrator Seibel appeared convinced that a miscarriage of justice had occurred, but his action to reinstate hinged on the fact that the cafeteria was open to the public. His ruling that the firm's contract with the Defense Department does not take precedence over its collective bargaining agreement did not serve to set a precedent, as will be seen below.[70]

A cook in the Naval Gun Factory cafeteria was dropped from the payroll when her badge was revoked by the Navy Department. No hearing was afforded in the case. The union filed a grievance against the employer, a concessionaire, charging that the company must bargain with it, not with a third party; that is, the government. In the union's opinion, the cook had been improperly discharged. The company contended that it had not discharged the grievant in the ordinary sense of the word and had no control over the actions of the Naval Gun Factory. Arbitrator Nathan Cayton ruled for the employer, stating that the grievant's case was against the government rather than against the company.[71]

The employer's responsibility for initiating the security clearance procedure apparently may lend itself to use against active unionists with possible left-wing backgrounds. It may be significant that the charge of discrimination was raised in three of the cases. Since the National Labor Relations Board does not interfere in security cases, the only arbitrable determination left, once a clearance has been revoked, is whether non-classified work is available. The doctrine that such a determination is a managerial prerogative closes another door, but does not close it firmly. Leaving aside the issue of discrimination, the propriety of a discharge where non-classified work may be available is arbitrable,[72] and collective bargaining agreements in industries that do defense work tend to make some provisions for this.[73]

[69]Lockheed Aircraft Corporation and International Association of Machinists, District Lodge 33, 35 LA 364 (1960).

[70]National Food Corporation and United Cafeteria and Restaurant Workers, Local 471, 24 LA 567 (1955).

[71]M & M Restaurants, Inc. and Cafeteria and Restaurant Workers Local 473, 29 LA 202 (1957). The grievant lost a subsequent suit against the Secretary of Defense, Cafeteria Workers, Local 473 v. McElroy, 367 U.S. 886 (1961).

[72]As in Fitzgerald v. Sperry Gyroscope Co. ———N.Y.S. 2d———, 22 LA 186 (Sup. Ct. 1954), aff'd mem., 283 App. Div. 1036, 131 N.Y.S. 2d. 873 (1st Dept. 1954).

[73]An example is the agreement between Cornell Laboratories and International Association of Machinists, reported in Bureau of National

CONCLUDING COMMENTS

The Communist activity cases illustrate a change in attitude toward communism and allied activities that was well-nigh general throughout the nation. Arbitrators, who are probably as sensitive toward such changes as other people, accepted the new outlook. A few cases demonstrate this point. Spokane-Idaho[74] and Curtiss-Wright[75] reflect a belief that communism and pro-communism are obnoxious but lawful forms of political activity. In the Foote Brothers[76] and Cutter Laboratories[77] arbitrations, employers were barred from using such activities as a basis for ridding themselves of militant union leaders. The California judiciary's finding that communism was a cause for discharge that overrode all other defenses, despite the protection of political activity in the California Labor Code,[78] may have been influential in shaping arbitrators' attitudes. In any event, it was symptomatic of the times. By 1951–1952, during the Korean War, the discharge of a typesetter for a (left-wing) typographical "error" was upheld in the face of a contract provision barring discharges for typographical errors. The error may have been willful and the employee had an allegedly Communist background.[79] In Firestone, provocative statements about the relative merits of the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. made in conversation at work were held to be just cause for discharge.[80]

It may be noted that in the earlier of the two periods, denial of the grievance was the exception, whereas in the later period the reverse was true. Thus, in Jackson Industries[81] the CIO Industrial Union Council's swift action in dropping the grievant from membership may well have influenced the arbitrator. The unrebutted revelation that the grievant was a figure of national importance in the Communist party also may have contributed to the decision. In the later period the only grievance upheld did not involve a discharge—merely some back pay—and the grievant had signed a denial of the charges made against him at a legislative hearing.[82]

In contrast to Communist activity, refusal-to-testify cases show an ambivalence among arbitrators paralleling the confusion in the public's mind. The attitude that a resort to the privilege against self-incrimination is legitimate pervades the cases. Most of the instances of upheld grievances rest on this basis. Where grievances were denied, economic impact on the firm from possible loss of customers and loss of confidence in the employee were the principal reasons. In-

Affairs, Collective Bargaining Negotiations and Contracts, 65:15 (1959).

"Abuse of right to remove employees for security reasons: The Union recognizes that the Company has certain obligations in its contracts with the Government pertaining to military security, and agrees that nothing contained in this contract is intended to place the company in violation of its security agreement with the Government. Therefore, in the event the U.S. Navy or any other Government Agency concerned with the military security regulations of the Cornell Aeronautical Laboratory, Inc. advises the company that any employee is restricted from work on or access to classified information or material, the Union will not contest any action that Company must take to comply with its contractual obligation to the Government. Any claim that the Company has applied the provisions of this clause unfairly or improperly shall be subject to the grievance procedure and arbitration provisions of the contract."

[74]N. 14, supra.

[75]Ibid.

[76]N. 19, supra.

[77]N. 10, supra.

[78]California Labor Code ¶1102.

[79]Publishers Association and International Typographical Union, Local 6, 19 LA 40 (1952).

[80]Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. and United Rubber Workers, Local 100, 4 ALAA ¶68778 (1951).

[81]N. 16, supra.

[82]N. 25, supra.

deed, employers frequently claimed that the refusal to testify was not in and of itself the basis for their action. If the newspaper arbitrations are separated as being special cases, the number of reported awards upholding grievances far exceed the denials. In seventeen reported arbitrations, grievances were sustained in nine awards and denied in eight. Without the five newspaper cases, the score reads eight upheld and four denied.

Table 4. Category II Cases by Year of Award.

Year	Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained	Total
1949	1	0	1
1952	1	1	2
1953	1	0	1
1954	0	2	2
1955	1	1	2
1956	3	2	5
1957	0	2	2
1958	1	0	1
1960	0	1	1
Total	8	9	17

Considering the size of the government's industrial security program, the number of arbitrations on the subject is remarkably small. Eight reported cases were located in all, and it may be significant that the grievances were denied in six of them. Although it is widely assumed that federal security regulations supersede the collective agreement,[83] and although the determination of security risk is generally beyond the scope of arbitration, the great potential for arbitrating tangential issues has never been realized. The right of the employer to determine whether unclassified work could be provided did arise, as did some seniority problems. By and large, arbitrators tended to resist the notion that a person not subject to the security program should be discharged as a security risk.

Table 5. Category III Cases by Year of Award.

Year	Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained	Total
1951	1	0	1
1952	1	0	1
1953	0	0	0
1954	1	1	2
1955	0	1	1
1956	1	0	1
1957	1	0	1
1958	0	0	0
1959	0	0	0
1960	1	0	1
Total	6	2	8

Such industrial case law as has emerged from arbitrations gives employers fairly wide latitude in dealing with "loyalty" cases. Emerging within a framework of private and public policy that shifted at about the time of the Korean War, this law is narrowly based. Four national unions account for over half of the cases. All of them are industrial unions. Only one has ever been charged with being Communist-dominated. The narrowness of this base may give rise to speculation about the value of these cases as precedent, should public feeling turn against other political or ideological activities and opinions.

[83] "As a matter of public policy, unions and employers must recognize that this 'Security Agreement' [signed by every contractor for services or supplies with defense agencies] must be superimposed upon the collective bargaining agreement, which, in turn, must be viewed as being modified to the extent that this contract with the government prescribes the employer's discretion in the employment or continued employment of employees on classified information...." Benjamin C. Roberts, "The Arbitration of Alleged Security Risks," in Jean T. McKelvey, ed., Arbitration Today (Washington: BNA Inc., 1955), p. 66.

FACT-FINDING IN LABOR DISPUTES: THE STATES' EXPERIENCE

HERBERT R. NORTHRUP

A PERSISTENT proposal to avoid costly strikes would have unions and management submit their disputes to impartial "fact-finding" by responsible third parties; if the disputants do not agree, the fact-finding may become compulsory, or be converted into an "investigation." In either case, the idea is that when the facts are known, agreement will be induced on the basis of the facts made apparent to unions and management, or if either or both remain obtuse to the facts, by public opinion forcing them to see the light.

Fact-finding has had its most complete exposure under the Railway Labor Act. Most observers agree that it has not worked in either the railroad or airline industry as the theory dictates.[1] In the first place, the facts are rarely in doubt—the interpretation thereof, however, is usually not only in doubt, but also in controversy, and not subject to objective determination (What is a fair wage? What pertinence is a contract provision in another industry?). In the second place, public opinion has not risen to enforce fact-finding recommendations. Rather, they have been ignored with impunity. And finally, instead of strengthening, or supplementing collective bargaining, fact-finding has tended to supplant it in the railway and airline industries. The parties no longer prepare to bargain; rather, they prepare for a fact-finding proceeding. Bargaining, if it occurs, is more likely after the fact finders report. Then if no agreement is reached, the fact-finding procedure is not available—it has been used up as part of the tactics of the parties.

Is this experience indigenous to the Railway Labor Act, or the railway or airline industries, or is it inevitable under fact-finding procedure? The question is significant because fact-finding remains a popular political remedy. Greater use of it in so-called emergency strikes has been suggested recently by

Fact-finding, as one of the traditional tools of government to adjust labor disputes, is evaluated in this study on the basis of a survey and analysis of the experience of the states. It is concluded that the device, if sparingly employed, may be useful to its purpose but can easily become a hindrance to effective collective bargaining if invoked indiscriminately and with too much frequency.

Herbert R. Northrup is professor of industry at the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, University of Pennsylvania. This study was financed by the Committee on Faculty Projects of the Wharton School with funds provided by the Ford Foundation. Dr. Richard L. Rowan assisted in the data gathering for parts of this article.—EDITOR

[1]See, e.g., H. R. Northrup and G. F. Bloom, Government and Labor (Homewood: Richard D. Irwin, 1963), Chap. 12; David Levinson, "The Railway Labor Act—The Record of a Decade," Labor Law Journal, Vol. 3, January 1952, pp. 13–29; J. J. Kaufman, "Emergency Boards under the Railway Labor Act," Labor Law Journal, Vol. 9, December 1958, pp. 910–920, 949; and Herbert R. Northrup, "The Railway Labor Act and Railway Labor Disputes in Wartime," American Economic Review, Vol. 36, June 1946, pp. 324–343.

[post 1963]

PROBLEM FOR ARBITRATION

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
SCHOOL FOR WORKERS

Henry Z. Pin
Arbitration

INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

AN ARBITRAL ANSWER TO A JUDICIAL DILEMMA: THE CAREY DECISION AND TRILATERAL ARBITRATION OF JURISDICTIONAL DISPUTES

by

EDGAR A. JONES, JR.

Reprint No. 142

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES 24, CALIFORNIA
1964

Essay 7. Vita

Arbitration

PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTING AND ARBITRATION DISPUTES

1947 - 1964

by

George Hagglund

The University of Wisconsin

PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTING AND ARBITRATION DISPUTES

1947 - 1964

INTRODUCTION

American employers, in a never-ending search for employees better fitted for jobs in their companies, have employed a wide variety of selection methods and procedures to assist them. While some of their methods of selection have satisfactorily withstood the tests of time and critical analysis, others, like graphology and phrenology, have come to be generally discredited[1,2]. In recent years employers have taken in increasing numbers to the use of psychological tests, whose true worth as a selection device is still being assessed. This paper will attempt to show the reactions of one segment of American society to the increased use of psychological tests in industry.

Size of place?

factors?

The typical employer of yesteryear, through his agent the department foreman, most often hired employees after he had a chance to observe their performance on a few tasks of the job, or after a few days of actual work. If they did not measure up to the foreman's expectations, they were bounced out the door. After a time, particularly in the larger companies, the foreman's duties of hiring were assumed by the personnel man, who did not have the same opportunities for evaluating worker performance that the department foreman did. He substituted "tests" of one kind or another that were in effect an extension of the old performance evaluation of the foreman.

During the decade following World War II, employers began taking considerable interest in aptitude and personality tests then attracting attention following their usage in the United States Armed Forces during the war. Employers, anxiously trying to fill their jobs in a changed world characterised by large cities teeming with countless thousands of unknown workers, saw in psychological tests a means by which they could glimpse the good and bad attributes of workers before they were on the payroll. The emergence and growth of powerful labor unions, with their insistence upon rational promotion, layoff and hiring procedures, increased the difficulties of laying off or discharging inferior workers. Both of the preceding considerations encourage employers to seek selection tools that would assist them in evaluating the human factor in industrial production[3].

4

The demand for improved employee selection methods placed considerable pressure upon social scientists to develop tests of work aptitude and employee personality. The industrial psychologists responded by developing general aptitude tests that could be used in a variety of industries or by transferring to the industrial setting tests developed and used in the clinical or educational spheres. A lucrative commerce in psychological tests came into being, with companies formed for the purpose of exploiting the new market for tests. Employers began to develop trade and aptitude tests for use on their own employees for purposes of filling their particular jobs.

Almost universally, the objectives of employers was to select employees for purposes of maximizing production and increasing worker efficiency. Their intent was to use the tests to secure for themselves the cream of the local labor market.

Following the increasing use of psychological tests in industry, labor unions began noting their existence. In a few instances, they publicly complained about what they considered to be misuses or abuses of the principles of psychological testing. They demanded, on other occasions, that employers explain the purposes of the tests or that "proof" be given them that tests actually did what they were intended to do. More often, however, unions were interested only in determining what the employers' intentions were, trusting the seniority clauses of their labor agreements to protect employees' rights to promotions and related matters. A few labor officials such as Solomon Barkin[4] and Otis Brubaker[5] expressed misgivings about the manner in which companies were using psychological tests. Their major reservations had to do with what appeared to them to be a systematic undermining of the principle of promotion according to length of service, which labor organizations were heavily committed to. In other instances they accused employers of trying to gain unilateral control of hiring, promotion and layoff procedures, hitherto a matter for joint determination through the process of collective bargaining. Generally speaking, however, organized labor took little interest, or foresaw little success, in trying to retard the trend toward use of psychological tests[6].

As time went on, labor organizations did find themselves involved in disputes including matters related to use of psychological tests. This paper will report on some of these disputes, and how the parties reacted to them.

PURPOSE OF PAPER

A part of the industrial relations literature will be examined to see what are the kinds of disputes involving labor and management that have to do with psychological testing. The paper will try to report on the nature and extent of participation of social scientists in labor-management disputes as well as the attitudes of labor, management and arbitrators toward the social sciences and their offspring, psychological testing.

A special effort will be made to report on company efforts to determine the validity of tests used within their own confines - for both commercially developed and tests constructed by the companies themselves. Two types of validation studies would be practiceable for a company to do: the first would involve testing a group of employees working for a company already and then correlate the predictions made on the basis of test results against ratings of employee performance (hopefully the same performance characteristics tested) made by others in the company; the second type of validation study would involve testing a group of employees, putting the test results and predictions aside without letting them influence selection decisions, allowing the workers to perform for a number of months or years, and then going back later to see if the predictions made earlier were borne out by actual employee performance.

An attempt will be made to draw some general conclusions about the manner in which psychological tests are used in industry, the effect they have had upon the objectives of workers and employers, and to determine the significance of testing in industry as it affects the social scientists that developed them. While major emphasis will be concerned with the use of psychological tests in industry, the paper will also report on the context in which the tests were found.

METHODOLOGY

The primary source of data on which the report is based was the Bureau of National Affairs' Labor Arbitration Reports, Volumes nine through 41, covering the years 1947 through 1963. A secondary source of information was a number of verbatim transcripts of arbitration hearings, along with associated briefs, reports and exhibits submitted at six arbitration hearings. The additional information permitted more intensive examination of the experience in three companies. Findings concerning validity and reliability of tests, and concerning participation of testing "experts" is based in considerable part upon the additional information. A special effort was made to secure transcripts and material where the BNA arbitration reports indicated that the union had challenged the relevance or applicability of psychological tests.

Cases in which psychological tests were directly or indirectly involved were identified by checking digests of BNA arbitration awards and by using the topic finder at the rear of each volume of Labor Ar itration Reports. No claim is made, or intended, that the disputes reported comprise all that involve testing - it is believed, however, that those reported are fairly representative of the whole.

FINDINGS

The Disputes - Most of the disputes (90%) centered around promotions to jobs within the bargaining unit. All of those involved use of some kind of test of ability, mostly formal, but a few were informal. Of a total 41 disputes, only four involved matters other than promotions: two decisions concerned the right to "bump" to lower jobs following reduction of force; one disputes was over a company attempt to validate a psychological test on bargaining unit employees; and the last was focused on a company's right to use tests in promotions of bargaining unit employees[6a]. While it is possible that unions were equally concerned about the uses of psychological tests in the hiring process, it is likely that the standard management rights clauses were believed to preclude them from protesting through the grievance procedures.

Surprisingly few of the BNA arbitration reports appeared to involve tests of ability - only 41 cases out of several thousand were reported for years 1947 through 1963. This number amounts to less than one percent of the total number of reported cases for a 25-year period. The results of the disputes and kind of tests used are depicted as follows:

TABLE I

Outcome of arbitration disputes involving some type of ability test - period 1947 - 1963

TEST USED	ARBITRATOR S DECISION Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained
Written aptitude test	12	5
Job related test, written	9	3
Oral examination, job related	2	1
Personality test	3
Merit rating	1	1
Supervisory appraisal	1
Test battery (more than one of preceding)	10	5

Table I indicates little significant difference between type of test used and the outcome of the arbitration. Unions appeared to fare about the same for all types of tests. While the number of disputes if too small to determine the significance of type of tests, the job related tests and personality tests appear to favor management more than union.

The Unions - Not unexpectedly it was the industrial unions that were most often involved in disputes involving testing. The following table depicts unions involved, and outcome of the disputes:

TABLE II

Union involved and outcome of arbitration dispute including testing - 1947 through 1963

UNION	ARBITRATOR'S DECISION Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained
United Steelworkers of America	8	4
International Association of Machinists	3	2
United Auto Workers	1	2
International Union of Operating Engineers	3
International Chemical Workers Union	2
Independent Unions	2
Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers Union	2
Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Union	2
International Union of Electrical Workers	2
International Brotherhood of Electrical Wkrs	1
Communication Workers of America		1
United Mine Workers - District 50	1
United Rubber Workers Union		1
Aluminum Workers International Union	1
Bridge . . . Iron Workers Union		1
Carpenters & Joiners - Midwestern Millmen	1
Brewery Workers Union		1
TOTALS	29	12

grouping of 2 - awk.

The arbitration record is not one to inspire optimism in unions, nor does it appear that any particular union has concerned itself to a great degree with promotion disputes including problems with psychological testing.

emphasis

The Companies - Larger corporations tended to find themselves in disputes with unions - the companies were found in a wide variety of industries, with manufacturing predominant. Companies in the following industries were reported: miscellaneous manufacturing, nine cases; steel fabrication, seven disputes; minerals & chemicals, six; public utilities, five (four of the disputes involved a single company); basic steel, four cases; electrical manufacturing, mining, pulp & paper, two each; petroleum, aluminum and food products, one each. As noted, single companies were occasionally involved in more than one of the reported disputes. Companies, regardless of industry or union with which they dealt, tended to be favored by arbitrators' decisions. ?

The Arbitrators - The Bureau of National Affairs publishes short vitae summaries on arbitrators whose decisions are reported. The summaries indicated that most arbitrators were engaged in or out of the legal profession. ? Of the 35 arbitrators included in the study, 25 were attorneys or had legal backgrounds. Of the remaining ten arbitrators, five were economists, one was a sociologist, one in education, one listed his professional background as industrial relations, and no information was available for the remaining two men. Eight of the men with legal backgrounds also had academic ties, while six of the non-lawyers were connected to academic institutions.

The backgrounds of the arbitrators indicates that most of them were not trained in the complexities of psychological testing. One arbitrator, for example, buttressed his argument for the use of psychological tests by citing the adage "you can't teach an old dog new tricks." This arbitrator claimed that he "had considerable experience in test development and use, both in army training and at the graduate school level."[8] good example but not of "background"

don't jump too far in conclusion

Since arbitrators were expected in several of the cases to make determinations concerning the relevance, applicability and reliability of psychological tests used by employers, their apparent lack of technical understanding with the field of testing was without doubt a handicap.

Promotion

The Arguments - Psychological tests were the central issue in few of the reported cases, and the arguments of the parties showed considerable variety from one dispute to the next. A common argument used by unions contended that ability should be determined by an on-the-job trial[9], or by ability to perform the duties of the job and physical fitness.[10] In a number of disputes the union contended (usually unsucessfully) that seniority was supposed to be the primary consideration in promotions, given the existing contract language[11]. Unions contended in a number of cases that psychological testing was an unbargained innovation put into effect without prior discussion with, or agreement of, the affected union[12]. This argument, like most others, did not appear particularly persuasive to the arbitrators, judging from their decisions. Another contention employed by unions alleged that the contract tended to bar, or limit, the use of psychological tests[13]. Unions argued in several other cases that tests were an improper means of determining employee ability under the existing agreement[14]. A number of unions contended that tests used were unjust, unfair, or inequitable[15]. Other arguments employed by unions included contentions that use of tests by companies was arbitrary, discriminatory or a bad faith action[16]; that test requirements were unrealistic, unreasonable or illegitimate[17]; that tests used were invalid[18] or unreliable[19]; that the agreement provided other criteria for promotions[20]; that past practices in promotions should be adhered to during the life of the agreement[21]; and finally, an almost desperate argument that previous arbitration awards were inapplicable to the present dispute[22].

For companies, the favored argument was the contention that seniority was a minor or lesser consideration to be taken into account in promotions, given the terms of the agreement then in force[23]. While the preceding argument was most frequently used by employers, it was also the argument most frequently associated with an award that sustained the aggrieved party. Two other arguments that appeared with considerable frequency were first, that determination of ability was a fundamental management right and that this action could be made by whatever means chosen by the company[24]; and second, that the contract either allows or does not prohibit management's use of psychological tests[25]. Another argument applied in a number of disputes contended that the company acted in good faith or, that it did not act arbitrarily, capriciously or in a discriminatory manner[26]. Other management arguments contended that employees who refused to take a test used as part of the criteria for promotions disqualified themselves for consideration (although in one case the employee had been told earlier that test results were for validation purposes only and would not affect his position with the company)[27]; that trial periods were intended for qualified employees only[28]; that determination of ability by merit rating was a long standing practice never before disputed by the union[30]; and finally, that testing was a valid requirement for promotions[31].

Tables III and IV indicate the effectiveness of the arguments used by the parties - Unions appeared to get more favorable awards where they argued that sufficient ability to perform the work was the "proper" criterion or where they argued that employees were entitled to an on-the-

TABLE III

Major Union arguments used in arbitration disputes and arbitrator's decision - 1947 through 1963

* UNION ARGUMENT	ARBITRATOR'S DECISION Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained
Ability to perform work is enough, or on-the-job trial is required	10	4
Tests unbargained, unilaterally installed; union permission not given	10	3
Seniority intended to be major promotion criterion	4	1
Contract bans or limits company use of tests	5
Use of tests by company is unjust, unfair or inequitable	4	1
Tests are an improper means for determining employee ability	3
Testing is an arbitrary, discriminatory, or a bad faith action	2	1
Test requirements unrealistic, unreasonable or illegitimate	2	1
Physical fitness is the determinant of ability	1	1
Tests are invalid or unreliable	2
Alternative criteria for promotions provided by agreement	2
Past practices should be continued		1
Previous arbitration decisions do not apply in present dispute	1

* Note: Since more than one argument was used in individual disputes, the preceding do not total 41

TABLE IV

Major Company arguments used in arbitration disputes and arbitrator's decision - 1947 through 1963

* COMPANY ARGUMENT	ARBITRATOR'S DECISION Grievance Denied	Grievance Sustained
Seniority not primary consideration when promoting	6	7
Determination of ability is a management function or right	9	1
Contract allows, or does not prohibit use of tests by company	9
Company acted in good faith or did not act arbitrarily, capriciously or in discriminatory manner	4	2
Employee gave up right to promotion by refusing to be tested	1	1
Employee violated plant rules by refusing to take test; discharge justified	1
Employer has right to remove worker from job before end of trial period	1	1
Trial period intended for qualified employees only		1
Promotion of senior man places "undue burden" upon company		1
Merit rating a company practice of long standing never challenged by union before	1
Arbitrator not empowered to decide upon issue at dispute		1
Earlier arbitration award decided management's right to test for promotions	1
Tests are a valid requirement for promotion	1

* Note: Since more than one argument was used in individual disputes, the preceding do not total 41

job trial. Management appeared to be most persuasive in cases where they argued that determination of ability was a fundamental management right or where they said that the contract did not prohibit or tend to limit management's use of psychological tests.

Validity - Unions challenged the validity of tests in few of the disputes included - more often they challenged the "right" of employers to use them. Where tests were challenged on technical grounds, unions were severely handicapped by their deficient understanding of the principles, application and limitations of psychological testing.

The union succeeded in one case in pointing out that the test used by management involved a small, inconsequential segment of job duties that could be quickly learned, and for that reason was invalid[32]. In another case the arbitrator decided that the tests were valid on the basis of company testimony and "because no controverting evidence was presented by the union."[33]

An electrical utility involved in several disputes over the matter of testing submitted considerable testimony and exhibits intended to support their claims for validity of psychological tests used by the personnel department. The company used the following information to support the validity of their tests:[34,35,36,37]

1. Normative data taken from published studies of occupations and employee groups in various manufacturing industries and government agencies. The data were presented to show the arbitrator that cutoff scores used were reasonable[38].

2. Validities (coefficients of correlation) showing relationship between occupational success or final training course test score to scores of various aptitude and intelligence tests. The studies cited had been done on different occupations, and had utilized different tests than those involved in the arbitrations[39].

3. Textbook claims by various psychologists concerning the effectiveness of standardized tests widely used in schools, industry, and the clinical setting[40].

4. Twelve "problem employee" cases culled from personnel records to show the relationship between elevated T-scores on any scale of the Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory and adjustment problems on the job. The problem employees were identified a posteriori; no visible, organized attempt was made by company to predict future employee behavior early in work career and later compare predicted performance with actual later behavior[41].

5. The manner in which items for the in-plant trade tests were collected and cutting scores were established was described, and validity of test was claimed because the test items were job related[42]. No other attempt was made to establish validities for the trade tests.

6. A case in which a man was killed in a power plant accident was described. The personnel manager demonstrated, again a posteriori, an alleged relationship between test performance and the cause of the accident. He also stated that the exact details and cause of the accident were unknown, but that he and others thought it was a case of "employee failure."[43]

7. A psychologist from a local management consulting firm was retained to spend one day examining the company's testing procedures and then testify at the arbitration hearing. The consulting psychologist avoided testifying about the validity of tests as applied to the disputed jobs. He described the general acceptance of tests in use by others in the profession and was detailed in his praise of the technical proficiency of the personnel department's administration and scoring of test results. He made no comment about the company's trade tests except to say they appeared to be well constructed and administered[43a]. The consulting psychologist was ostensibly brought in to testify about the validity and reliability of psychological tests used by the company.

Judgmental compared to 1-6

The preceding account is significant in that it shows the high propensity of management to accept the use of tests with far too little evidence showing that they actually do identify and predict future human behavior. The preceding indicates that little concrete evidence was presented for the validity of any test used by the company.

Another company testified concerning the validity of their tests[44]. The verbatim record of the hearing revealed that the validity study referred to was a pre-test of a group of employees to determine if they possessed "supervisory ability." The test used for this purpose was a mechanical comprehension test developed by a management consulting firm, and a clerical ability test constructed by the same consulting firm. The tests were administered to employees of one department who were believed "qualified in the area of supervision..." The company decided, on the basis of test results, that the tests were valid. Neither of the tests used by the company have any published validities, although it was claimed at the hearing that they have been in use for years. A later request for further information yielded nothing also[45].

A personality test was found to be involved in disputes in the previously described electric utility series only. The company, in addition to the twelve problem employee cases already reported, testified at some length about the internal "validity scales" built into the MMPI[60] (the lie scale), and arranged to have the consulting psychologist testify about the generally accepted validities of the test. No quantitative validity coefficients were presented, nor did the company try to describe possible variations in personality required by different jobs in the company, although at least one published study indicates that particular jobs or departments may ideally call for distinct personality characteristics[61]. The personnel department stated that any employee scoring above 70 on any T-scale of the MMPI was regarded as potentially maladjusted. A diligent search of the psychological abstracts and other literature of the social sciences failed to uncover any empirical evidence supporting the company's claim that the MMPI could be used to identify potentially maladjusted employees not suited to particular jobs in industry.

There appears to be a tendency on the part of employers and union officials to accept the prestige and presumed expertise of test developers as a substitute for systematic validation studies carried on within the company or plant itself. One case, for example, involved a driver's test developed by the "Father of Driver Education" that was widely believed to identify accident-prone individuals. In the company the test results were used as a basis for by-passing a senior employee in favor of a younger man recently hired. Diligent investigation revealed no evidence that the test had ever been validated[61a]. In the arbitration itself, no question was raised by any of the parties about whether the test could identify the accident-prone driver[61]. The arbitrator, like others in the case, assumed the test was valid and denied an employee a promotion to the job of driving an over-the-road truck.

Arbitrators in a number of cases indicated concern about whether the aptitude or other tests actually identified the most able employee, and hinted that unions could have been more concerned about the validity and reliability of tests. One arbitrator voiced concern over the possibility that an employee could score poorly on a test and yet be an excellent performer on the job, and he also questioned the "efficiency of the tester."[46] Another arbitrator noted that the employer has the "burden of proving that (the test) determined ability correctly . . "[47] Still another arbitrator commented that "the employer must show, in a case of this kind, that the determination of relative ability has been made correctly . . "[48] Arbitrator Harold Davey, on the other hand, ruled that the burden of showing how the company may have erred lay with the union, and in the case before him the union "did not offer anything against the validity of the written test or the manner of its use or its scoring."[49] An arbitrator ruled against a company in a case because he felt that the tests, as administered, were invalid[50,51]. Arbitrator Dworkin, ruling against the union in a dispute, invited the union to challenge the validity of a test as it was applied "to the particular situation."[52] Another arbitrator, denying the grievance on other grounds, stated that "there was no evidence at all that the company had pre-tested (the test) to prove its reliability or validity for the jobs in question."[53] An arbitrator in one of the oft-referred-to electric utility decisions stated that "management has a duty to disclose the method and show the validity of tests that are used. . ."[54] Another arbitrator hearing a dispute with the same company pointed out that " . . . the validity of the test itself can be questioned."[55] When the union did so in a later case, however, the arbitrator ruled that the validity of tests had been determined in an earlier decision, and he would not reverse that ruling.

In summary, the arbitration record indicated that companies were not particularly worried about whether tests were valid or whether they actually did identify the best employees. If standardized, commercially prepared tests were available and appeared to meet their need, they were used without further question. In cases where validation studies had ostensibly been carried out by companies, the record indicated that the studies would be unlikely to earn the approval of psychologists in the American Psychological Association. There was a definite tendency for employers to test large groups of employees in a wide variety of occupations, lump the results, and make the conclusion that the test was valid for all, or any single, job or jobs in their plant. While such a study may have validity for gate hirings of totally unknown individuals, the same validity study should certainly not be used as a basis for making distinctions concerning promotions between two jobs, both of which were included in the original validation study, and with a performance criterion developed that was originally identical for both jobs! Some of the test validities cited by the companies as "proof" of validity were selected without regard for similarity of test used, occupations involved, or performance criteria employed.

Likewise, labor officials appear to be only marginally concerned or aware of the technical aspects of psychological testing. In the few instances where the relevance, applicability and reliability of tests were challenged, unions (and their attorneys) did not appear to have a sufficiently broad enough grasp of the complexities of psychological tests to exploit the areas suggested by arbitrators and discussed earlier, so their efforts were often wasted.

Arbitrators, while occasionally expressing concern about the validity of tests as used in disputed cases, seldom let their concern influence their decisions. Since arbitrators were in the vast majority of cases lawyers and in the few remaining cases economists, it is reasonable to assume that their acquaintence with the principles of psychological testing was of a low order. This conclusion appears to be reinforced by some of the remarks made concerning tests in the decisions.

Reliability - Test-retest reliability of selection devices used by companies was seldom challenged by unions in the disputes studied. The electric utility series revealed, as did several other cases, that management based many promotion decisions, at least in part, upon test results that had been collected years prior to the dispute. Since the tests appeared to be most often administered at time of employee hire, and promotions came as much as ten or fifteen years later, then a great deal depends upon whether a test score, or personality profile, may be assumed to be unchanging. The assumption appears to be even more critical for the use of personality tests. The personnel manager of the electric utility testified that MMPI profiles for employees had been secured "ten or twelve years" prior to the arbitration disputes[56].

Studies done by other psychologists indicate, however, that personality profiles as measured by the MMPI may change markedly in a much shorter period of time. For example, an individual diagnosed as "disturbed" by the MMPI was retested four months later, and the personality profile then then appeared to be "normal" (all T-scores substantially below 70)[57]. Another individual was diagnosed as "normal", then as "abnormal" and finally as "very normal", all within a four-year period[58]. Since both of the preceding individuals had been sufficiently disturbed to require institutionalization, then it seems unsafe to assume that a ten-year-old MMPI profile reliably depicts an employee's personality configuration. A fundamental assumption of the clinical psychologists is that a "disturbed" individual will respond positively to treatment (thus, that a personality is subject to change over time).

Another arbitrator rendered a decision sustaining an employee's claim for a promotion after the union was able to introduce intelligence and mechanical aptitude test scores showing that the employee's test performance had risen during a four-and-a-half year period to levels above the cutting scores set by the company for the job[59].

Companies, unions and arbitrators seldom concerned themselves with test reliability, judging from the arbitration record. Unions seldom raised the issue, and companies, in the absence of union challenge, had little motivation to submit evidence for test reliability. Arbitrators, not being psychologists, took little note of the matter of test-retest reliability.

Cutting scores - The arbitration record indicated numerous instances where management had set cutting scores, that is, test minima that tended to separate "good" employees from "bad" risks. As far as could be ascertained from the evidence, there was seldom an empirically valid basis for cutting scores used by companies. The electrical utility set their cutting scores for various tests after calculating the arithmetic mean for various occupational groups within their company (often groups of supervisors). In the arbitration hearing these cutting scores were defended by comparing them with the arithmetic mean scores of groups of employees tested at other companies and reported in the psychological literature. The utility set cutting scores near, or slightly below, the arithmetic means for employee groups studied, which would have the net effect of excluding many employees from consideration for employment on the jobs for which the cutting scores were intended. On one test the utility set a cutting score based upon the test results of a group of employees enrolled in a training program for power plant jobs. Then, the same test was used as part of a battery that by-passed employees with more seniority who had successfully completed the same training program (the company successfully contended the requirements of a new job were "higher" than the qualifications developed in the training program, which the company wanted to bypass[73]). The same company's training director appraised the success of trainees in the program and then helped develop the test items used in the trade test - a practice commonly deplored by psychologists because of the contaminating effect[62]. Since the same person sets the criteria for both performance and test, it is not unexpected that a positive relationship would exist between training performance and aptitude test score. The electric utility determined the cutting score for the mechanical aptitude cutting score by calculating the mean for a group of former job incumbents (all of whom had moved on to higher jobs with management) and setting a cutting score that would have eliminated the lowest-scoring of the group. The cutting score for an intelligence test was set at 110 after calculating the mean for a group of 204 employees "on a variety of bargaining unit jobs" at 118.8. No other justification was made for that particular cutting score. The company used the same cutting scores for the scales of the MMPI that were commonly employed in the clinical setting; 70, the cutting score used to tentatively identify "disturbed" individuals. The utility's electrical knowledge minimum was set at 75 percent correct after pre-testing on a group of "non-bargaining" unit supervisors[62a].

Defending a test minimum in an arbitration hearing is at best difficult for the company. To an employee and the union, a tiny difference between his test score and a "passing" one can appear very miniscule indeed. Companies typically avoided a quarrel over test minimums by stating that test results were "only part" of the considerations taken into account by management when promoting individuals[63]. Unions, generally not well prepared, did not have a line of questions sufficiently precise to bring out the arbitrary nature of test minima, or to get across the proportionate importance of the criteria determining promotions.

"Experts" - A method by which tests, test batteries, or testing programs could be discredited by unions, or justified by employers, might be to bring forth an expert to testify in their behalf. The "expert", that is, a person presumably familiar with the theory, construction, application and analysis of aptitude and personality tests, was conspicuously absent from most arbitration hearings. One psychologist, whose role has been previously described, was brought in to testify in behalf of management. The same company was also the only one that appeared to employ a psychologist in their personnel department(and he was the employment manager). The outside expert in this case was brought in to put the professional stamp of approval on psychological tests used and the manner in which they were administered and analyzed.

He (the consulting psychologist) carefully skirted the questions of test validity and reliability, although his ostensible purpose in being at the hearing was to testify on these matters.

In the majority of cases, disputes involved generally trained attorneys, management and union personnel whose interest in and understanding of psychological testing was either scanty or peripheral. Not a single union offered expert testimony or witnesses in the arbitration disputes studied.

Jobs, performance criteria, tests - Since the study was based on published arbitration decisions, most jobs fell into the categories of skilled and semi-skilled, with a few office and plant clericals involved. A sizeable proportion of jobs (about one-fourth) were in the skilled trades, a very few were office and plant clerical, a few were in the unskilled category, and the majority were semi-skilled machine operation or technical jobs.

Where skilled trades were involved, the tests used were most often written tests of job knowledge[63]. In one instance an oral trade test was utilized[64]. In two disputes a mechanical aptitude test was involved[65]. In three instances the dispute involved intelligence tests[66]. In only two cases involving the skilled trades was a test battery used[67].

In disputes centering around promotion to a semi-skilled job, disputes most often appeared to involve standardized, commercially marketed trade or aptitude test[68]. Only five disputes included standardized intelligence tests[69]. There were four disputes in which batteries made up of three or more tests were utilized[70].

There appeared to be little difference in tests used for skilled and semi-skilled jobs, except that trade tests were used slightly more often for skilled jobs and commercially developed trade tests more often on semi-skilled jobs (this category includes aptitude tests). Intelligence tests were not conspicuous in many cases, nor were personality tests often utilized, according the to arbitration record at least. Generally speaking, the tests were intended to measure performance in fairly narrow areas of aptitude or job performance.

The arbitration record indicated that few employers had set specific performance criteria that the tests were intended to predict relative to. Out of a sample of 27 disputes, five companies gave no indication of the performance criteria, three indicated "ability to perform work", five were looking for ability in arithmetic or math, five were seeking the ability to perform technical aspects of jobs, five wanted mechanical skill and manual dexterity, and two employers were looking for the most able employees relative to ability to read and interpret drawings. Few companies were specific in the type of performance they were seeking. One employer sought the employee most apt relative to "skill, adaptability, aptitude, adjustment to new techniques, general efficiency and general background[74]". Another looked for "ingenuity, memory, analytical ability, concentration, methods, judgment, emotional stability, electrical knowledge."[75] For two cases, the arbitrator was forced to make a determination of the performance criteria used by the company, since none were indicated by testimony[76].

Seniority versus ability - Unions commonly requested the arbitrator to render a decision giving greater weight to the seniority factor than had been given by the company. Companies, conversely, pressed for more latitude in which to determine ability in promotions. For companies, psychological tests were but a means to improve the accuracy with which the most able employees could be identified for promotion. No attempt was made by either party to demonstrate the relationships, if any, between length of service and profiency on the job, although the unions were in many cases asserting that such relationships existed.

The contracts provided a variety of determinationsaof the relative importance of seniority and other promotion criteria. The following table depicts those found most frequently, and the arbitration decision:

TABLE V

Types of contract clauses governing promotions, and decision of arbitrators

CONTRACT CLAUSE	DECISION Grievance Sustained	Grievance Denied
Seniority plus an on-the-job trial	1	2
Seniority for some jobs, skill and ability for part of jobs	1
Seniority and other considerations held relatively equal	3	3
Seniority prevails where skill and ability relatively equal	3	9
Seniority has lesser or no weight for promotion purposes	1	4

The table indicates that, for the majority of companies, seniority was not solely determinative in promotions. Thus psychological tests were introduced, usually to make an estimation of ability. The contract clauses most often found stipulated that seniority would govern, "if ability of applicants was approximately equal." Objective test scores then became a method for determining and illustrating similarities (but more often differences) between employees on the factors of skill or ability. The arbitrators were most often called upon to determine whether this determination was a proper one, according to the contract then in force.

CONCLUSIONS

A fundamental and seldom challenged premise underlying the field of psychological testing states that there are common, critical behavior patterns underlying diverse jobs in industry, and that these behavior patterns can be measured and predicted through use of psychological tests. The disputes indicated that employers were usually seeking broad behavior patterns generally assumed to underly most industrial occupations. Like God, Motherhood and Country, few would challenge the value attributed them by society. However, different employers used the same tests to ascertain presence, absence or quantity of different behavior patterns. Thus one employer used a mechanical aptitude test to identify more effective assemblers, while another used the same test to determine what he called "supervisory ability."

Management in almost all disputes reserved to itself the right to determine what behavior patterns comprised "ability" in particular jobs. Unions did not dispute the accuracy of company pattern-selection in many cases, and seldom challenged their right to make this decision on a unilateral basis.

Companies tended to be successful most often where they argued that the judgment of ability was a fundamental management right. Unions did best where they argued that an on-the-job trial provided the most effective method for determining employee ability. Companies received a favorable decision in about seven out of every ten arbitration decisions.

Contract clauses most often stated that senior employees would be promoted where skill and ability was at least equal to that of junior applicants for the job. Since psychological tests used commonly yielded a numeric score, companies often used the scores to show differences in employee ability. The difference shown were often imaginary, since scores were for all practical purposes identical.

Companies studied did not appear to employ personnel technicians especially qualified for psychological testing, as a rule. The evidence appeared to indicate that most personnel men had little or no understanding of purposes and limitations of psychological tests which they used. Or, conversely, the arbitration hearing was a poor place to enunciate such a belief.

Employers appeared to be little concerned with whether or not a test identified the most effective promotional material - they were interested in achieving flexibility of management and increased latitude for decision making. Test results were offered as objective "proof" of an employee's ability when the company desired to depart from the principle of seniority in particular promotions. Thus companies demonstrated to the world that their decisions were sound and reasonable, since it was buttressed by scientific "fact."

This is argumentative part — is it backed in the body of paper

If psychological tests were used by employers to give themselves flexibility and increased latitude for management decision, the record indicated that unions were handicapped by prior compromises of the principle of seniority in promotion. Unions were unable or unwilling to make a general challenge of the company's use of psychological tests to determine ability, since they would be forced by success to come up with a better substitute, where none was readily available. Instead unions appeared to be challenging company use of tests on a case-by-case basis, or trying to secure a favorable decision on other grounds. Their efforts were often poorly organized and generally ineffective.

Unions seldom challenged validity and reliability of tests used. The comments of arbitrators and the evidence presented indicated that the issues could have been profitably raised more often by unions.

Where validity or reliability evidence was submitted by employers, it was generally of little value. Test-retest reliability was challenged (successfully) by only one union. Follow-up and other validity efforts, when done, were structured so poorly or handled so inexpertly that they proved nothing. Much of the evidence presented at arbitration hearings had obviously been gathered after the hearing date had been set. Where outside evidence for validity were presented, they were often general testimonials concerning acceptance of tests, or citations of studies where difference tests, jobs or performance criteria were employed. Validities based on test performance of plant-wide employee groups relative to general indices of job success were used in arbitration hearings to justify promotion between jobs, both of which had been included without distinction in the original plant study! Or, a test that had been validated for the original purpose of improving the general intelligence of all employees in the plant was later used to identify persons considered for promotion to higher jobs, although they had already "passed" the test requirement at time of hire. Normative data were presented to "prove" validity of tests. Low correlations were presented in a manner implying the same predictability as high positive coefficients of correlation. An outside consulting psychologist testified (as a company advocate) in a manner implying test validity and reliability - but actually dodged both questions, since he obviously recognized the flimsy nature of company evidence. "Home-made" tests were arbitrarily assumed to be valid because they asked job-related questions. In summary, the state of the psychologist's arts in industry leaves much to be desired.

Test cutting scores were set with little or no objective bases. In several instances the arithmetic mean for broad occupational groupings was calculated and a minimum established that would eliminate from a half to a third of the original group, even though some of the people scoring below the minimum had served successfully on the job already, and had been promoted to higher ranks of management! Generally, employers were hard-pressed to justify in any objective manner the test minima involved in disputes. They usually dodged the question by stating that test results were "only part" of the considerations upon which promotion decisions were based. Unions seldom challenged test minima employed by companies.

Social scientists appear to have done little to demonstrate to employers how to apply tests meaningfully in industry. While they often caution users of psychological tests to apply them "properly", they do not indicate what propriety is. The commercial psychological testing firms' objective is the sale and application of psychological tests, and their interests are not well served by excessive caution on the part of employers. A reputable psychologist, for example, might develop a tests that identifies an effective potential electronic relay assembler. A commercial firm may subsequently decide to publish the test, and, in order to sell the test in a market broad enough for profit, may state that the test is useful for selecting employees for a "variety of electrical manufacturing jobs." An employer may then purchase the test, use it for his electrical jobs with what he regards as good results, and then begin using the same test in connection with promotions to supervisory jobs. By this time, of course, the test has moved far beyond the original intent of its developer and the results indicated by his original validity study. Unions, not being aware of the original purpose of a particular test, are in a poor position to dispute the matter with an equally ignorant employer.

Conclusion or new subsection good points! How generally understood?

The arbitration record indicates that arbitrators (and social scientists) are willing to accept the employer's objectives of plant efficiency and maximization of profit as a primary objective of psychological tests. They appear to accept without question the employer's right to determine the behavior patterns "essential" to the world of work, even when it appears that the motives involved in particular cases have nothing to do with the preceding objectives. Social scientists have accepted employers' performance criteria for testing programs without bothering to see whether they are those most critical on the jobs disputed. It is significant to note that, while employers claimed to use tests to "improve efficiency", they seldom bothered to find out whether the tests actually did. The evidence indicates that psychological tests are used as often to enhance the position of management relative to worker and union as to identify the most effective employee. Much needs to be done to improve the use of psychological tests in industry.

THE END

FOOTNOTES

1. Kirkpatrick, Forrest. "Psychological Racketeers." Personnel Journal, Volume XX, 8 (Feb. 1942) pages 283-286.

2. Sorenson, Wayne and Carlson, Robert E. "Handwriting Analysis as a Personnel Tool." IPX Highlights (The University of Minnesota) Volume 3, Spring 1963, page 9.

3. Ghiselli and Brown. Personnel and Industrial Psychology (Second Edition), New York, McGraw-Hill, 1955. page 5.

4. Barkin, Solomon. "A Trade Unionist Appraises Management Personnel Philosophy." Harvard Business Review, XXVIII, 5 (Sept. 1950) page 62.

5. Baritz, Loren, The Servants of Power, Middletown, Connecticut, Wesleyan University Press, 1960, pages 157-159.

6. Baritz, Ibid, page 159

6a Yuba City Heat Transfer Corp. and International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers. 2/23/62 38 LA 471

7. Ghiselli & Brown, op cit, page 5

8. Stauffer Chemical Co. and United Mine Workers, District 50. 9/29/54 23 LA 322

9. Acme Steel Company and United Steelworkers of America 12/10/47 9 LA 432

10. Kaiser Aluminum Company and Aluminum Workers International Union, 12/21/59 33 LA 951

11. Mead Containers, Inc. and Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers Union, 10/20/60 35 LA 349

12. Kuhlman Electric Co. and United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers, 7/14/56 26 LA 885

13. Stackpole Carbon Co. and International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, 11/22/61 38 LA 704

14. Bethlehem Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 12/13/57 29 LA 710.

15. Alan Wood Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 9.26/60 36 LA 240

16. Caradco, Inc. and United Carpenters and Joiners, Midwestern Millmens' District Council, 7/29/60 35 LA 169

17. Monsanto Research Corp., Mound Laboratories and Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, 8/30/62 39 LA 735

18. Fansteel Metallurgical Corp. and International Association of Machinists, 11/16/60 36 LA 570

19. International Nickel Company and United Steelworkers of America, 9/28/60 36 LA 343

20. Wisconsin Electric Power Company and International Union of Operating Engineers, 8/19/59 33 LA 713

21. Acme-Newport Steel Company and United Steelworkers of America, 1/15/59 31 LA 1002

22. Wisconsin Electric Power Company and International Union of Operating Engineers, 1/17/62 37 LA 1079

23. National Seal Co. and United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum and Plastic Workers, 8/3/57 29 LA 29

24. Wallingford Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 11/27/57 29 LA 597

25. Fansteel Metallurgical Corp. op cit

26. John Deere Co., Des Moines Works and International Association of Machinists, 5/14/62 38 LA 549

27. St. Regis Paper Co. and Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, 1/19/63 40 LA 562

28. General Controls Co. and International Association of Machinists, 7/2/59 33 LA 213

30. Acme Steel Co. op cit

31. Hammerlund Manufacturing Co. and International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, _____ 19 LA 653

32. General Controls Co. op cit

33. Fansteel Metallurgical Co. op cit

34. Wisconsin Electric Power Co. and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 5/5/59 Arbitrator Kovenock. Unpublished decision loaned to author by Union.

35. Wisconsin Electric Power Co. op cit, 33 LA 713

36. Wisconsin-Michigan Power Co. and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 2/26/60. Arbitrator August Eckhardt. Unpublished decision, transcript and exhibits furnished author by the arbitrator with the permission of the Union.

37. Wisconsin Electric Power Company and International Union of Operating Engineers, 6/21/61 36 LA 1401. Transcript of hearing furnished author by Arbitrator Pierce Davis, with permission of the Union.

38. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., ibid (Transcript) pages 180-200. Testimony of company's employment manager.

39. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., ibid (Transcript) pages 180-200. The following validity evidence was cited by the company:

a. United States Employment Service, Department of Labor and Pennsylvania State Employment Service. "Validity Information Exchange, No. 10-58." Personnel Psychology, Volume 10, 1957. page 519

Test used: GATB B-1001 Number tested: 54 men. Job: Powerhouse Engineer I. Performance criteria: Course grade in Trade Theory and final grades in trades practice. Tetrachoric correlation = .79

b. Personnel Research Branch, The Adjutant General's Office, Department of the Army. "Validity Information Exchange - No. 11-2." Personnel Psychology, Volume 11, 1958. pages 99-101.

Test used: Army Classification Battery. Number tested: 610 men enrolled in school, 133 men on job. Job: Machinist. Performance criteria: Final course grade (school sample), supervisor and associate ratings of job success. Correlations as follows:

	School	On the Job
APTITUDE
General Maintenance	.71	.28
Combat B	.66	.29
SINGLE ACB TEST
Reading & vocabulary	.45	-.02
Arithmetic reasoning	.60	.18
Pattern Anal.	.60	.28
Mechanical aptitude	.57	.24	(cited by company alone)
Army clerical speed	.39	.18
Army radio code	.29	.00
Shop mechanics	.64	.23
Automotive info.	.49	.30
Electrical info.	.49	.13	(not cited by company)
Radio info.	.37	.26

Footnotes - page four

c. Personnel Research Bureau, The Adjutant General's Office, Department of the Army. "Validity Information Exchange - No. 11-16." Personnel Psychology, Volume 11, 1958. pages 251-253.

Test used: ACB. Number tested: 965 men enrolled in school, 136 men on job. Performance criteria: Final course grade (school sample), and supervisor and associate ratings of job success (on-job sample). Correlations as follows: Job: Powerman (portable power equipment)

	School	On-the-job
APTITUDE
Electronics	.74	.32	(not cited by company)
General Maintenance	.86	.40
SINGLE ACB TEST
Reading & Vocabulary	.71	.32
Arithmetic reasoning	.75	.37
Pattern Anal.	.71	.34
Mechanical aptitude	.75	.30	(cited by company alone)
Army clerical speed	.61	.38
Army radio code	.38	.28
Shop mechanics	.78	.36
Automotive info.	.76	.43
Electrical info.	.66	.30	(not cited by company)
Radio info.	.34	.16

d. Ghiselli, Edwin E. The Measurement of Vocational Aptitude. Volume 8, 2. University of California Press, 1955. page 192.

Test used: not given. Number tested: less than 100. Job: "Power Station Operators, Skilled Workers." Performance criterion: Proficiency. Correlation: .81 with intelligence. (Note: Ghiselli's methodology has been widely criticized. especially his averaging correlations from different studies utilizing different tests and performance criteria)

e. Walker, Francis C. (Sangamo Electric Co., Springfield, Ill.) "Normative Data Information Exchange - No. 10." Personnel Psychology, Volume 9, 1956. page 276.

Study reports average test scores for 505 salaried and unsalaried employees. Test used: Bennett Mechanical Comprehension test

f. Bruce, Martin M. (Dunlap & Associates) "Validity & Normative Data Information Exchange.- No. 37." Personnel Psychology, Vol. 9, 1956. pages 552-553.

Study reports average test scores on Bennett for 547 applicants for machine operator jobs in an electrical manufacturing company.

g. Bruce, Martin M. (Dunlap & Associates) "Normative Data Information Exchange, No. 18" Personnel Psychology, Volume 9, 1956. page 394

Study reports average test scores for group of 113 tobacco factory foremen, using Bennett.

h. McCorty, John J. "Normative Data Information Exchange, No. 10-31." Personnel Psychology, Volume 10, 1957. page 365

Study reports average test score for group of 116 applicants for position of sales trainee, using Bennett.

i. Glennon, J.R., Smith, Wallace J. and Albright, Lewis E. (Standard Oil of Indiana) "Normative Data Information Exchange, No. 11-35." Personnel Psychology, Volume 11, 1958. page 601

Study reports average test score for group of 390 petroleum products consumer salesmen, using Bennett.

40. Wisconsin Electric Power Company., ibid (Transcript), pages 180-200 Testimony of company's employment manager.

Ghiselli, Edwin E. The Measurement of Occupational Attitude, op cit, pages 101-106, 117-131.

Arborne, Murray. Fourth Mental Measurements Yearbook

Super, Donald E. Dynamics of Vocational Adjustment, page 260

41. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., ibid (Transcript) page 228.

42. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., ibid (Transcript) page 228.

43. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., ibid (Transcript) page 404.

43a Wisconsin Electric Power Co., ibid (Transcript) page 276-290.

44. Caradco, Inc. op cit.

45. Caradco, Inc. in letter to Robert Warosh, Executive Secretary of Midwestern Millmens' District Council dated June 4, 1962.

46. Acme-Newport Steel Company, op cit.

47. Allied Chemical & Dye Corp., Semet-Solvay Div. and Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, 10/30/57. 29 LA 394.

48. International Nickel Co. op cit.

49. John Deere - Des Moines Works, op cit.

50. Latrobe Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 2/15/60 34 LA 37

Footnotes - page six

51. Latrobe Steel Co., ibid page 38.

52. National Seal Co., op cit.

53. Nicholson File Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 5/14/59. 34 LA 46.

54. Wisconsin Electric Power Co. op cit, 33 LA 713.

55. Wisconsin-Michigan Power Co. and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 2/26/60. Unpublished arbitration decision, and exhibits submitted at the hearing - loaned to author by arbitrator August Eckhardt with the permission of the Union.

56. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 33 LA 713.

57. Dahlstrom and Welsh, An MMPI Handbook. The University of Minnesota Press, Minneapolis, 1960. page 224.

58. Dahlstrom and Welsh, ibid. page 230.

59. Bergstrom Paper Co. and Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers Union, 4/12/61. Unpublished arbitration decision and related material loaned to author by the Union.

60. Wisconsin Electric Power Co. op cit, 36 LA 1401 (Transcript).

61. Verniaud, Willie Maud "Occupational Differences in the MMPI." Journal of Applied Psychology, Volume 30, 1946. pages 604-613.

62. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 36 LA 1401 (Transcript, p. 166)

62a Proposal of Wisconsin Electric Power Co. to the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in 1959. "Proposed Plan for Appraising Aptitudes, Abilities & Qualifications of Employees Under the Jurisdiction of I.B.E.W. Local 494 for the Purpose of Promotion." Unpublished document loaned to the author by the Union.

63. Caradco, Inc. op cit.

Standard Oil Company of Indiana and Central States Petroleum Union, 10/2/48 11 LA 810.

Southern California Edison Co. and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 7/26/50 15 LA 162.

Nicholson File Co. op cit.

M.A. Hanna Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 10/26/55 25 LA 480

Kuhlman Electric Co. and United Auto, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers, 7/14/56 26 LA 885.

Alan Wood Steel Co, op cit.

John Deere, Inc., Des Moines Works, op cit.

64. Castle Dome Copper Co. and Metal Miners & Processers Union, 11/26/53 19 LA 828.

65. M.A. Hanna Co., op cit.

Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 33 LA 713.

66. Perry-Fay Co. and International Association of Machinists, 5/14/48 10 LA 429.

Kuhlman Electric Co., op cit.

Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 33 LA 713

67. Perry-Fay Co., op cit.

Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 33 LA 713

68. International Minerals & Chemicals and International Chemical Workers Union, 11/22/54 22 LA 446.

Stauffer Chemical Co., op cit.

National Seal Co., op cit.

Wallingford Steel Co., op cit.

Bethlehem Steel Co., op cit.

Acme-Newport Steel Co., op cit.

General Controls Co., op cit.

Kaiser Aluminum Co., op cit.

Latrobe Steel Co., op cit.

Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 37 LA 1079.

Fansteel Metallurgical Corp., op cit.

Alan Wood Steel Co., op cit.

Stackpole Carbon Co., op cit.

Union Carbide Co. and Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, 9/17/62 39 LA 538.

Central Soya Co. and Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers, 11/2/63 41 LA 1027.

69. American Can Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 5/14/48, 10 LA 613.

International Minerals & Chemicals Corp., op cit.

Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 37 LA 1079.

If applicant comes in given form, fills out, sees personnel mgr - if there is any math problem

General knowledge } a Sears test developed temperment test } over past 12 years like to work with hands
Similar aptitude

Possible to get 126
but its timed at 20 mins
35 - will be considered
50 - probable average not everyone fills out - yes, if some potential - if specific opening -

Nothing Subjective in test

(No Notation as to race on form -
But Pers Mgr. said spelled out Negro Seemed attitude prospect's record (active later & asked Pomeroy he would object? -

Told Ind Com March 16, 1964 - No applicants
But CORE stimulated 11 -
Treated rudely

69. (cont'd) Stackpole Carbon Co., op cit.

Central Soya Co., op cit.

70. Wallingford Steel Co., op cit.

Acme-Newport Steel Co., op cit.

Latrobe Steel Co., op cit.

Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 37 LA 1079.

71. Alan Wood Steel Co., op cit.

72. See footnote #39 for descriptions and citations of validity information submitted to the arbitrator by Company.

73. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 33 LA 713.

74. Acme-Newport Steel Co., op cit.

75. Wisconsin Electric Power Co., op cit, 33 LA 713.

76. Caradco, Inc., op cit.

Acme-Newport Steel Co., op cit.

77. Dayton Steel Foundry Co. and United Steelworkers of America, 2/8/62, 38 LA 63.

"Check-lists and Score Sheet for Exercises fo Driving Skill (for vehicles about six feet in width." By: Amost E. Neyhart, Administrative Head, Institute of Public Safety, the Pennsylvania State University.

"Driving Skill Exercises for use with Passenger Cars and Commercial Vehicles." By: Amos E. Neyhart, Director, Institute of Public Safety, the Pennsylvania State University.

Sears

1st of Jan. visit from 2 Cons – discussed failure before Xmas –
Seemed satisfied with explanations
Best demand 5 on floor by 3/15
Had hired Negro in Service Station prior to demonstration
Have had – drapery dept –
2 others a little vague – could be at no time do they refuse to give an application 15–20 / per day

2 – Complaints
one investigated by EOC

Activity may have produced

Standard Test –

	Score
One recently hired	– 62
not hired	– 15
Service Station	– 46

Test not final determination minimum Standard of knowledge
& ability for Retail Store –

Dearth of applications, no

4 Negroes now hired

11 employees hired since Jan 1st – full time
6 ext res
2 Selling (Spots – yard)
1 Service (full time)
└ 4 are Negroes – not permanent nor full time

15–20 applicants / day – 3–4 T go – use blank part time

20% of Sales force has some College – 2 of 4 Negroes –

Oct 1965

The Case Against Compulsory Arbitration

by Kenneth Fiester

"Almost no serious student of labor relations in the United States, whether he be connected with management, labor or the world of research and scholarship, advocates legislation providing for compulsory arbitration of labor disputes."

These words were written in 1959 by Dr. Robert R. France, professor of economics at the University of Rochester. They were true then and they are equally true now. Yet the notion that compulsory arbitration should replace the right to strike keeps bobbing up from time to time and is presently in evidence again.

There are probably three explanations, two current and one chronic, for the latest revival.

One is the arbitration agreement imposed on the railroad workers by act of Congress—the first such peacetime compulsion in the nation's history—which will remain in force until next March.

The second is that the intercollegiate academic group which sponsors a nationwide high school debate program has suggested the following proposition for the 1965-66 school year:

> "Resolved: That the federal government should adopt a program of compulsory arbitration in labor-management disputes in basic industries."

In light of Dr. France's categorical dismissal of it, the topic may seem to be an unrealistic one for serious young students—a sterile forensic exercise rather than a serious exploration of a genuine issue. But this is not necessarily so.

Compulsory arbitration survives as an issue because it has immense surface plausibility, to young people especially. Through their young eyes, a labor dispute is waged between two disembodied forces over matters which should be subject to disinterested analysis and judgment. If only both parties would submit to such a process (they feel), "wasteful" strikes would be obviated and universal justice assured.

This sounds like a great idea. It has only one weakness—it doesn't work.

Before exploring why it doesn't work, let's clear away the underbrush that trips up many novices who stride confidently into this particular forest.

First, there is still a vast amount of misunderstanding among non-union people as to the number and impact of strikes. Of the 150,000 labor-management contracts in the United States, 98 percent run their course without a work stoppage of any kind. Time lost by strikes during the 1960s has averaged below one-half of 1 percent—less than .002—of the total time worked during a year. And even this is an overstatement. In one long strike of Steelworkers, for instance, it was estimated that at least half the strike-time would have been lost anyway in the form of layoffs, because the cyclical nature of steel production provides few year-round jobs.

Second, both the loss in output and the "hardship" imposed upon the public through strikes are similarly exaggerated. In the basic manufacturing industry—and that's what the debate topic covers—the loss in production, like the loss of time, is characteristically recouped by abnormal output before and after a strike. Since very few industries operate close to maximum capacity throughout the year, a work stoppage has more effect on schedule than on ultimate volume.

KENNETH FIESTER is Secretary-Treasurer of the International Labor Press Association.

As for public "hardship," this, too, is largely illusory. It may be inconvenient to wait an extra month for a new car, or to go without a daily newspaper for awhile. It may be irritating for a taxi rider to take the subway or a subway rider to take the bus. And it may be downright infuriating to be told by a sales clerk that a wanted item is temporarily unavailable—"the strike, you know." But inconvenience, irritation and fury are not hardship. In labor-management relations, as in so many other phases of American life, they are the occasional price of a free society.

To be sure, there are times and places where a strike is in fact an offense against the public interest and must be avoided by compulsion, if necessary. A munitions plant in wartime, firemen or policemen at any time, are obvious examples. It should be noted that wartime renunciation of strikes—by the action of the labor movement itself—goes far beyond munitions. At the start of World War II, virtually every AFL and CIO union voluntarily adopted a no-strike policy on the grounds that nearly every occupation is involved in modern war. Violations of the pledge were almost too few to be measured. As a matter of fact, more time was "lost" for "E" award ceremonies than for walkouts.

Then there are so-called "national emergency" strikes which—if so proclaimed by the President—can be enjoined by the courts for 80 days. These do not involve arbitration but, as the railroad case demonstrated, Congress always has the power to decree a forced settlement of a specific dispute.

The proposition as stated in the debate topic is not directly concerned with these special cases. They are mentioned here for two reasons. One is to reiterate the labor movement's longstanding acknowledgement that the right to strike is not absolute, under all circumstances. The other is to indicate the outer limits of the area in which compulsory arbitration may become the ultimate instrument of settlement—though even in this area, as will be seen, it has proved less than satisfactory.

Those who lack first-hand experience with collective bargaining find it hard to understand why compulsory arbitration of contract terms is generally unacceptable to all concerned, while another kind of arbitration—the adjudication of grievances that arise during the term of the contract itself—is a matter of common practice.

Actually, of course, the two are very different. Arbitration as a final resort in disputes under an existing contract deals with specific facts within a limited area. The meaning of a contract clause and how it should properly be applied in a certain instance; the hourly rate that should be established for a job that has been greatly changed by new machinery (always within the context of the general wage structure established by the contract); the judgment of management in matters of promotion, layoff or discipline—these are subject to fair assessment by an informed but disinterested outsider. For the most part, they involve demonstrable facts and always they can be weighed within the framework of mutual agreement expressed in the contract.

The contract itself is another matter. The contract is the framework of agreement. It must be constructed by the parties themselves in order to be effective, either in the workplace or in the economy as a whole.

This point is sharpened by a consideration of the case against compulsory arbitration. For example:

- It doesn't stop strikes. One western-style nation, Australia, has had a structure of compulsory arbitration for more than half a century. Another, France, instituted such a system in the few years prior to World War II. But in democratic societies, workers cannot be compelled to accept terms of employment that are repugnant to them, except by destroying freedom itself. So there are strikes in Australia, as there were strikes in France, in defiance of the wrath and might of the arbitration tribunals.

Here again, the uninitiated may wonder how this could be possible. It is possible because free workers who feel truly aggrieved have no hesitation in rejecting an economic edict of government in a time of peace. And it is possible because they are free citizens as well as free workers. The forcible application of an unpopular arbitration verdict can be perilous for the government in power. Thus the theory that compulsory arbitration would produce industrial "order" is applicable only if freedom is sacrificed to the same cause.

- Where basic terms of employment are involved, there is really no such person as a wholly-informed, wholly-qualified, wholly-disinterested outsider to decide the issues. Thirty years ago, there were some who felt that a wage dispute, for instance, could be resolved by a simple arithmetical balance between the "needs" of the workers and what the company, or the industry, could "afford to pay." Since then there has been ample proof that the nation is infinitely better off if workers are paid more than enough to meet some outside concept of their "needs" and that, if this is done, what management can "afford" reaches new and vastly broader dimensions.

But there is not just a labor angle involved here. If compulsory arbitration acted only as a brake on wages, more employers undoubtedly would support it. However, employers also rebel against leaving basic conditions of employment to outside determination. They feel, quite properly, that they have a better chance to reason out an acceptable settlement with union negotiators who are intimately familiar with all the subtleties of the existing relationship. And they prefer a bargain, to which both sides agree and which both sides are pledged to observe, rather than a judicial decision for which neither party feels responsible.

Beyond this, if one economic factor—conditions of employment—is to be determined by outside decision, the same process could reasonably be applied, on the identical pretext of the public interest, to prices and profits. If the earnings of workers are to be fixed at some level below what the workers themselves would freely accept, why shouldn't the earnings of stockholders (or even managers) be subject to similar restraint? And why isn't there an even greater public interest in the price at which goods are sold?

Those who own and manage American enterprises are well aware that compulsion is contagious. Some of them may cast a wistful glance toward the beguiling siren of compulsory arbitration but then, like sensible husbandmen, they consider what they might lose by succumbing to temptation.

• Compulsory arbitration stifles innovation. The very nature of arbitration is the arbitrary reconciliation of conflicting positions, based largely on precedent. A previously untried idea has little or no chance of acceptance; yet the whole course of progress for workers in America has been largely led by previously unheard-of ideas, clothed with reality through free

The Meaning of Free Collective Bargaining

The following statement is excerpted from a report to the late President John F. Kennedy from his Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy, a group which included leading industrialists, outstanding trade unionists and representatives of the general public familiar with problems of industrial relations.

I. Progress of Collective Bargaining

By free collective bargaining, we mean the opportunity for labor and management to work out their own problems and to arrive at voluntary agreement concerning them. All members of this Committee are convinced that free collective bargaining should constitute the primary procedure by which the essential terms and conditions of employment shall be determined. Indeed, this is today, as it has been for at least a quarter century, our declared national labor policy.

When obstinate industrial disputes have occurred, involving strikes in important industries, there has been an inclination to question the efficacy of collective bargaining. Its record emerges, nevertheless, as one of outstanding progress within a single generation. As a nation, we have acknowledged the right and desirability of workers to organize, to speak through representatives of their own choosing and to negotiate with management over rates of pay, working conditions, job protection and a variety of other forms of employe benefits.

Since 1947, the amount of working time lost because of strikes has averaged less than one-third of 1 percent. The record for the past eight-year period has been better than this. The total number of work stoppages continues to decline and the average length of strikes on the whole is decreasing.

Strikes over grievances have been substantially eradicated by providing through collective bargaining for the use of voluntary, binding arbitration.

II. The Essential Freedom-of-Choice Elements in Collective Bargaining Must Be Preserved

The continuing recognition of the right of employers and unions to reject a proffered agreement, even at the expense of interrupting operations, has constituted an essential feature of free collective bargaining.

Recognizing this, we count it important to minimize interruptions of operations without destroying or impairing the essential economic motive force of free collective bargaining.

We note the importance of recognizing that the representatives of the parties have a duty to be responsive to the desires of their respective constituencies.

We are opposed to any governmental imposition in peacetime of substantive terms and conditions on the parties.

We reject the idea that there should be any legal requirement that disputes be resolved through compulsory arbitration. If the parties choose to submit their differences to arbitration, in which the award is final and binding, that is, of course, proper and compatible with the concept of free collective bargaining.

—"Collective Bargaining—A Report by the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy," May 1, 1962.

collective bargaining (and sometimes strikes).

This also works both ways. Especially in the complex technology of today, an employer may need far-reaching changes in contract provisions in order to achieve the flexibility the enterprise requires. An arbitrator, treading cautiously in the ruts of precedent, is unlikely to break into a new path.

An outstanding example of a freely-bargained agreement which could hardly have been reached in any other way is the Kaiser Steel Company's contract with the Steelworkers, which created an unprecedented mechanism for protecting jobs against automation and sharing its benefits.

- Awareness by the parties that compulsory arbitration will be imposed if they fail to agree serves to inhibit genuine bargaining in the preliminary stages. Each side is laying a basis for the arbitration to come, rather than seeking prior agreement. This has been true in some so-called "emergency" or "national interest" disputes; there is no reason to expect a difference if compulsion were extended. Professor Jacob J. Kaufman of the University of Pennsylvania, a recognized expert on railway labor problems, asserts that the repeated declarations by public figures, from the President of the United States down, that a national railroad strike was "intolerable," virtually guaranteed against a negotiated settlement of the 1963 dispute.

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz has stated the general case with even greater force:

"A statutory requirement that labor disputes be submitted to arbitration has a narcotic effect on private bargainers . . . they (will) turn to it as an easy—and habit-forming—release from the obligation of hard responsible bargaining . . . It would become, if required by statute, a substitute for bargaining."

In short, compulsory arbitration, as a matter of law or fixed government policy, means the destruction of free collective bargaining. The two simply cannot co-exist.

This would be a social and economic tragedy for America, even if compulsory arbitration did indeed ensure industrial peace.

It would be a tragedy because progress in the United States has not been ordained from the seats of wealth and power. More often than not, it has sprung from the aspirations of the less fortunate, whose demands as free citizens have moved the owners of industry to do what turned out to be best for themselves.

Long before trade unions had economists and lawyers and educators and public relations people, there were intelligent, far-sighted leaders in the ranks of labor who realized that private enterprise would continue to work only if it were protected against self-destruction through its own selfishness.

Free collective bargaining is an instrument—man's indispensable instrument—towards that end.

No one claims that unions are always right or that they should get everything they seek. But unions, through free collective bargaining, backed by the prudently-exercised right to strike, have indeed raised the sights of employers and have been instrumental in building the richest and most rewarding society in the history of the world.

They were able to do this because they were able to invent, to innovate, to break new ground—a freedom that compelled compromise would obliterate.

But most fundamental of all, the case against compulsory arbitration is the case against compulsion itself. It is one thing to compel obedience to laws (or to contracts) arrived at by a majority of the people covered by them, or their elected representatives, and which are subject to periodic change through democratic processes. It is quite another to force workers and employers to yield their most basic economic liberties to a tribunal answerable to no one.

This is why the overwhelming preponderance of employers, public officials, scholars and others who are sensitive to the nature of a free society reject a plan that would sacrifice liberty in an illusory pursuit of "order."

Reprinted from October 1965
AFL-CIO AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST

WSJ 4/1/66
Arbitration

Reading for Business

* * *

Aspects of Arbitration

Arbitration of labor grievances has a relatively short history, but it is now the all-but-universal method of resolving disputes that arise out of the operation of union contracts, and thus of keeping day-to-day labor peace in the factory. It also is evolving rapidly into a much more complex procedure than it was initially. R. W. Fleming, president of the National Academy of Arbitrators, examines some of the new problems that are arising, and some possible ways of meeting them, in a new book The Labor Arbitration Process (University of Illinois Press. 223 pages. $5.) —a title that is much too sweeping, since he does not in the least attempt to give a comprehensive description of how grievance arbitration works.

Many of Mr. Fleming's pages will be of interest primarily to the specialist. It is difficult to imagine anyone else being fascinated by his precise description of how a survey on the average costs of an arbitration case was set up. But the book can be understood by a layman, and anyone with an interest in the field—a company official, say, whose work may be affected by arbitration rulings though he is not directly responsible for industrial relations—will learn much that may be valuable.

* * *

Probably few non-specialists, for instance, appreciate the increasing involvement of arbitration with the law. Formerly it was a private arrangement between unions and managements, but since 1957 a series of court decisions have given it a new legal status—establishing that courts can enforce an arbitrator's decision, confirming the arbitrator's authority to rule on cases that also could be taken to the National Labor Relations Board, and even establishing that, despite the Norris-LaGuardia Act, a court can issue an injunction against a strike an arbitrator orders a union to end.

A second series of court decisions, which have resulted so far in considerable confusion, has begun to lay down rules under which an individual worker can get an arbitration hearing on a grievance his union does not want to take up on his behalf. Mr. Fleming explores these new dimensions of arbitration succinctly and thoroughly.

Mr. Fleming is worried by criticisms that the cost of arbitration is getting out of hand, and that the process is becoming too formal. He offers several suggestions for improvement. Among them: That the parties train their own specialists in presenting cases, rather than hiring outside lawyers; that they content themselves with an immediate oral decision from the arbitrator, rather than demanding a later written decision; and that they be willing to engage younger arbitrators who would charge lower fees, rather than continuing to demand one of the small number of long-time professionals.

Most of all he pleads for better preparation of arbitration cases by the parties, and offers some startling examples of poor preparation. In one case, in which a worker protested that he was improperly classified, the company's lawyer conferred with the man's supervisor for the first time only the night before the hearing—and found to his astonishment that the supervisor himself thought the worker probably belonged in the classification the union was demanding for him.

* * *

It is when he moves beyond narrowly company's lawyer conferred with the man's supervisor for the first time only the night before the hearing—and found to his astonishment that the supervisor himself thought the worker probably belonged in the classification the union was demanding for him.

* * *

It is when he moves beyond narrowly technical matters that Mr. Fleming gets most interesting—but, unfortunately, he contents himself with merely mentioning some topics that cry for a fuller discussion. He mentions, for instance, that the merits of a grievance may have little to do with whether it is taken to arbitration. Many a union will suddenly take a load of grievances to arbitration just before it goes into contract negotiations; obviously it is using the arbitration machinery to put pressure on the company bargainers.

The problems of a union that doesn't want to keep going to arbitration on grievances it knows it will lose, yet doesn't want to keep saying "no" to faithful members, are fairly obvious. But Mr. Fleming observes that arbitration cases can cause political strains within a company, too; they may trigger disputes between production managers and the industrial-relations men, he says (without giving any examples). Many union and management authorities, he says, accept a rule of thumb that the company will win about 70% of the grievances that go to an arbitrator, and companies sometimes worry that they may be undermining union leaders they get along with fairly well if they win a greater share.

These political problems of arbitration are far more intriguing to the non-specialist than the questions of costs and legal rules that Mr. Fleming dwells on at length. And Mr. Fleming, with the extensive first-hand knowledge and thorough study of the field that he displays in this book, could discuss them with authority. Now that he has written a book focusing on some of the more technical aspects of arbitration, one hopes he will write another focusing as deeply on some of these topics of more general interest.

—GEORGE J. CHURCH

Arbitrators rule on cases ranging from fine points of subcontracting rights to how many beers are a "couple."

LABOR

Taking the grief out of grievances

Voluntary arbitration wins wide favor with management and unions as a tool for keeping shops open while cases are decided. Third party also takes the heat off disputants Say "arbitration" to most people and they will think of compulsory arbitration, where the government steps into a labor-management contract dispute and names an arbitrator who dictates a settlement. It is a technique generally abhorred by labor and management, and rarely employed in the U. S.

But say "arbitration" to an industrial relations director, or to a union official, and he will think of something quite different: voluntary—or grievance—arbitration. It's one of the handiest tools in his professional kit—and one of the most effective systems yet developed in the U. S. for stabilizing labor relations.

This kind of arbitration deals only with the interpretation of an existing contract. Union and management negotiate the provisions; the arbitrator clarifies their meaning when differences of opinion cannot be settled on the lower reaches of the grievance procedure. Meanwhile, work continues on the production line or at the office. That's what a grievance procedure culminating in arbitration is all about—in contrast to the British system, which gives the worker no institutional alternative but a wildcat strike if management shrugs off his grievance.

In the U.S., voluntary arbitration is a remarkably popular system. According to the American Arbitration Assn. more than 93% of all U. S. collective bargaining agreements contain arbitration clauses, an estimated 30,000 labor arbitrations took place last year, and the total grows annually.

No fooling. The unions are in dead earnest about arbitration. The AFL-CIO recently held the first of what promises to be a series of Arbitration Institutes—a weeklong crash course for union officials who handle arbitrations. Instructors were arbitrators, lawyers, economists. Some were from the University of Illinois (which cosponsored and housed the institute), others from AFL-CIO.

At the institute, two facts stood out clearly:

- Arbitrations are increasing not only in number, but in importance and complexity, too. Most cases still deal with whether Joe was docked unfairly for lateness, and similar matters. But many others now involve such issues as the company's subcontracting rights, or how to adjust seniority ratings to conform to antidiscrimination guidelines.
- Many unionists have developed an expertise sharp enough to sting the most complacent manager. Among 30 at the institute, some 20 asked questions and offered comments that clearly struck their teachers as highly sophisticated. A handful appeared ca-from flying above to submerging below...

The unusual Dolphin hydrofoil cruises six feet above the surface of the ocean propelled by a Buehler power transmission system, while far beneath the surface submarines of the U. S. nuclear fleet rely upon precision reactor rod motors produced by The Buehler Corporation.

Buehler's 35 years of experience include the pioneering and improving of the Turbopower marine jet propulsion system. Buehler jets are currently used for auxiliary propulsion on hydrofoils such as the Dolphin and prime movers for work boats as well as pleasure craft. And, the low maintenance, efficient Turbopower jets are ideally suited for many undersea applications.

This wide range of marine experience makes The Buehler Corporation particularly qualified for new undersea projects and a preferred source for many leading names in aerospace, nuclear, marine and commercial products industries.

When you need a full service source with facilities to handle the toughest problems, turn to The Buehler Corporation.

THE BUEHLER CORPORATION
9000 PRECISION DRIVE, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA 46236

pable of teaching the course themselves.

Teachers and experts

These men had learned from experience. They knew, for instance, that discipline cases (the largest category) are usually the simplest. Precedents are fairly clear, the member either wins something at the company's expense or loses it at his own (i.e., back pay), and the case frequently hinges on nothing more complicated than how many beers were "a couple of beers."

Bumping. At mention of seniority (the second largest category), the unionists moved uneasily in their seats. Seniority involves promotions, layoffs, bumping (moving a higher-level worker into a lower-level job to make room for someone with more seniority). Here the member wins only at another member's expense, and precedents vary wildly. Moreover, nowadays a seniority case can plunge the union into the dangerous depths of the generation gap or the racial problem.

For example: A contract says that a job must be filled by the senior man in cases of equal ability. That's the standard formula. But what is the union to do if a low-seniority high school graduate files a grievance, demanding the job on grounds that the senior man never got beyond sixth grade—and therefore is not equal?

"That's a typical problem—even where you wouldn't expect it," commented an AFL-CIO headquarters man. "I've seen education cited in disputes about janitors' jobs. 'He can't even read the instructions on the back of the boiler,' says the young fellow. 'I've been firing a boiler for 15 years and nothing ever went wrong,' says the senior guy."

The equal ability rule raises another question: Does it mean present ability or potential? There have been, and are, plenty of cases revolving around that issue. Should it be equal ability at the moment the job opens up, or after training? How much training? And—bedrock union doctrine—shouldn't the senior man get a chance to show he can do the job? Arbitrators have ruled every which way.

Or suppose a high-seniority man whose department has closed wants to bump a low-seniority man in another department despite a contract clause that establishes departmental, not plantwide, seniority. Is it really an open-and-shut case if the grievant is black and the clause dates from the days when the departments were segregated?

The unionists also dealt candidly with the "political" aspects of arbitration, including (quite sympathetically) management aspects.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

They knew all about the unrealistic top management order that would cause chaos and rebellion among the work force—and the plant manager who accepts it without argument, applies it as quickly and clumsily as possible, and sits back to await the inevitable losing arbitration. The record will show that he didn't reject the top management plan; the arbitrator did.

On the union side, the typical "political" case involves a popular member with a weak grievance. Weak or not, it will go to arbitration. Other political cases involve grievances filed by members of the local's opposition group. These will be lost in the shuffle or carried ostentatiously to arbitration, depending on the principles and political necessities of the local administration.

Podunk local. Relations between union locals and their international are part of the "political" picture, too.

"What do you do," asked one international union staffer, "if most of your industry contracts have the same unclear clause, you're watching for a grievance that will give you the best chance of a favorable arbitrator's interpretation—and out in Podunk, some idiot local starts arbitrating a case it can't possibly win?"

The answer, supplied by a chorus of students, was that the international uses its finest eloquence—and, if available, political influence—to talk the local out of its decision. Constitutionally, no international can order a local to drop an arbitration. Even if the local were willing to obey blindly, it would run legal risks. A recent Supreme Court decision permits a grievant to sue his union if it fails to press his case on grounds unrelated to its merits.

"If the international can't persuade the local that it has a lousy case, well worth dropping, the best you can do is to send help from headquarters to save as much of the case as possible," said one union veteran. "And pray."

Not guilty. Discussing whether a lawyer was needed in arbitration, students and teachers expressed roughly the same opinion: Sometimes, but try to avoid it.

Their reasons went beyond the obvious ones of additional expense and—in some areas—the intrusion of a stranger who knows little about the case's previous history and perhaps less about labor practices.

Basically, they feared the introduction of legalistic attitudes into the deliberately easy-going world of arbitration.

A legal case involves evidence presented under strict rules to prevent

We keep our eyes on your small air cargo shipments.

The Iberia eyes which you see above represent the watchful way Iberia treats small shipments as well as larger shipments destined for Spain and other countries.

No shipment is too small to get this special treatment.

Your cargo is logged in and goes through a swift and secure system that assures its prompt arrival. Air cargo delivered to the airport as little as two hours before departure makes the plane.

What's more, Iberia offers the only one-carrier air cargo service to all Spain. Iberia also services most major cities in Europe, Scandinavia, Africa, Central and South America. For prompt attention in New York call MU 7-6332, ext. 205 or the Iberia representative in Chicago, Los Angeles, Dallas, Cleveland, Montreal, Toronto.

IBERIA Air Lines of Spain IB monitored air cargo system

The Matchmakers

Experts at matching your plant to the ideal location.

Over 500 cities and towns in Texas and Oklahoma want your new plant! The Matchmakers at Lone Star Gas Company know them all. Intimately. And they have more plant site information than anyone else. They can find the one perfect location for your needs. Put them to work for you today. Mail in the coupon below. In return, the Matchmakers will send you some eye-opening facts about Lone Star Land, plus an informative free copy of Texas Parade's special Lone Star supplement.

Send for free information.

Mr. John Perryman,
Lone Star Gas,
Dept. BW-1,
301 S. Harwood,
Dallas, Texas 75201.

Please tell me more about the advantages of locating in Lone Star Land:

Lone Star Gas

Name_____

Company_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

the misleading of an untrained jury, a fight between antagonists who may never see each other again. Above all, there's the question of innocence or guilt.

Arbitration, on the other hand, is a single incident in a continuing relationship—a private service paid for by its users. Nobody's guilty, nobody's innocent; somebody simply misinterpreted the contract—or didn't. Even the arbitrator's decision goes by the neutral name of "award." Rules governing testimony stress common sense rather than detailed instructions; the arbitrator is an expert unlikely to be swayed by razzle-dazzle or irrelevance.

Ground rules

Labor and management recognize the special nature of the proceeding, the AFL-CIO professors noted. Both fight to win, but avoid inflicting wounds that will fester.

Except in the direst emergency, few companies will put one union member on the stand to testify against another; few unions will put a recently created foreman (or sometimes any "good-guy foreman") in a position where he must testify against either the company that promoted him or the men who work under him.

Both sides know that, when the case is over, they'll still be working together.

Genesis. This stabilizing effect on labor relations gave arbitration its first major boost during World War II. The War Labor Board, armed with the power to approve wage increases, endorsed only those contracts that included arbitration, as a means of helping to insure uninterrupted production.

The typical formula had—and still has—the shop steward taking up a grievance with the foreman, the local business agent carrying it further with the supervisor, and an international union representative moving it on with the personnel director (or some similar progression). If all else fails, an arbitrator is called on to decide the case.

Afterward, almost everyone who had adopted arbitration continued it. Others who had observed their experience negotiated their own arbitration clauses. Today, the principle of arbitration tends to be disputed only where the existence of unionism is still disputed, as in some areas of the South.

Elsewhere, criticism focuses on particular aspects of arbitration rather than the institution itself.

Murmurs. Unions usually complain about the expense.

At a typical arbitrator's charge of $150 a day and a probable minimum of two days' charge—one for hearings, one for study and writing the award—the parties will pay a rock-bottom bill of $300, and many bills are very much higher. They may also pay legal fees if lawyers have conducted the case; transcript charges if a transcript was regarded as necessary; and the wages lost by witnesses who appeared to testify.

The AAA—which, together with the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service and state agencies, provides most of the 500 lawyers, educators and other third parties who serve regularly as arbitrators—has offered one solution. It would schedule several relatively simple cases in one day so that a single arbitrator can hear them all at a reduced rate for each case.

But many unions and companies reject this alternative because it requires complex programming and allows them to pick only the panel from which the arbitrator would be drawn, not the specific arbitrator.

Management, for its part, often protests alleged encroachment of its rights if an arbitration clause is loosely phrased or if an arbitrator interprets it loosely. General Electric has made something of a crusade of this issue, carefully refining its arbitration clauses to limit the definition of arbitrable issues and challenging legally any award that it feels exceeds this limit.

Most arbitrators believe GE is fighting a losing battle. The drift of U. S. jurisprudence, they say, is toward leaving labor relations as much as possible to institutions developed specifically to deal with them. Unless the judge is convinced that the arbitrator grossly overstepped his bounds, he will generally uphold his right to rule—and on the ground that annoys GE most: that the arbitrator himself is probably in the best position to know if the issue is arbitrable.

The limit. Union and management agree, however, on a third object of attack: the occasional overzealous arbitrator who rules not on the clause in the contract, but on the clause he wishes were there instead—for the sake of smoother plant relations, for the sake of the economy at large, for the sake of abstract justice, or whatever. Among most clients and practitioners of arbitration, he ranks as a kind of professional leper.

An arbitrator at the AFL-CIO institute summed up the general feeling: "I would consider it the height of arrogance to sit here in Academe and decide that I know better than the men on the plant floor and in the business office what should have gone into the contract they must live under. I would also be taking their money dishonestly. They are paying me to be their servant, not their fellow-negotiator." End

COMPLAINT FORM - FOR USE IN STEP I

International Union _____

Local No. _____

Complaint and Grievance No. 68 Date 1/26/59

Department 142 Shift First

Employee's Name George Jones Clock No. 310

Employee's Phone Adams 7-6341 Seniority 3-7-53

Notes:

1. Not clear as to time of Jones' arrival on Monday morning. Jones says 7:20 a.m.; Foreman says 7:50 a.m. Starting time of shift is 7:00 a.m.
2. Company time clock records show 6 late arrivals for Jones - 5 less than 15 minutes, one of 25 minutes in past year. (Checked by steward and found to be accurate).
3. No reprimands given to worker or union in accordance with Sec. 7, Article IV. No previous penalties.
4. Jones' incentive earnings are lowest of 8 men in the department doing identical welding operations. Company mentions this to show Jones' indifferent attitude and to justify not overlooking Jones' repeated tardiness. Men in department agree that Jones is lowest producer.
5. Search of union grievance files shows no previous grievances on suspensions for tardiness.

Company's Reply Date _____

Company decision given by: _____

(signed) _____

Department Steward

(Use reverse side if more space is needed)

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers
Training for Arbitration

THE ABOLISHED JOB

BACKGROUND

Boilermakers Local 27 has been recognized by the Billings & Springer Company, of Hartford, Connecticut as the exclusive bargaining representative for production and maintenance employees at the plant.

The Company is a drop forge plant in the Eastern part of the United States. While business has in the past been fairly good, there have been slack periods. Recently the Company was taken over by a larger company called General Forgings. The name of the subsidiary company was not changed, but a new plant manager was brought in by the parent company, and he has some definite ideas about improving the profit picture, which is currently poor due to a downturn in orders.

The last contract was negotiated in 1963, just before the company was taken over by General Forgings Corp.

The Local Union is serviced by a business agent. In addition to the Billings & Springer plant, the local also has three other companies organized in the Hartford area. The Local currently has a membership of 900 paid-up members. Each of the four plants has a separate agreement, which vary from good to poor. The Billings & Springer contract is one of the poorer.

The Local Union was involved in a strike over wages in 1958 - the strike lasted only three weeks, but the Union succeeded in securing a small improvement in the wage package as a result. The members are not particularly anxious to repeat the process for a while, however.

The Union has been involved in three arbitrations with Billings & Spencer on previous occasions. In 1960 the company bypassed a senior employee to give a Machine Operator Job to a man who allegedly had better dexterity, according to an aptitude test he was given. The senior man refused to take the test on the ground that it was not a bargained part of the promotion procedure. The arbitrator went along with the Company position in the case. In 1961, the company discharged an employee for incompetency, but an arbitrator ruled that he should be returned to work. The third dispute with the company involved a three-day layoff of a man who made a practice of coming to work late. The arbitrator ruled that the layoff was in accordance with past practice and the current agreement provisions, and the discipline stood.

THE GRIEVANCE

On July 1, the Company notified George Dix, the Yard Clerk & Stock Painter, that his job was being abolished, and that he was free to bump onto the next job that his ability, competance and seniority entitled him to. Dix was told that the reason his job was abolished was because there was not sufficient work left during the slack period to warrant the services of one man, and that residual duties would be performed by the Yard Foreman.

Dix immediately filed a grievance protesting the Company's action, and while the grievance was pending, "bumped" into the job of Fork Lift Operator, which he has worked prior to taking the Yard Clerk's job. His "bump" set off a chain of similar "bumps" until the junior man in the Janitor classification was notified that his services were no longer required, and he was laid off.

The Company, at the time of the action, stated that there was the possibility that the job would be reinstated when economic conditions and forging orders warranted, at which time Dix would be free to bid on the job as was provided for in the agreement.

The Yard Foreman, following the Company's action, has been performing most of the duties previously performed by the Yard Clerk and Painter, Stock.

During the period prior to the Company action, the Yard Foreman, as well as other supervisory personnel, had a good deal of time on their hands due to the slack business period. The Yard Clerk and Stock Painter's spare time was spent performing various incidental duties as required by the Foreman. Since orders for billets and ingots were less than ordinary, more time was spent performing other incidental work, including the following:

1. Lubricating & storing dies, picking up and delivering dies as required, using hand truck or the fork lift truck (some of this work was done by other members of the bargaining unit during busier times).

2. Doing spot checks of weights of billets & ingots against mill invoices to determine whether proper sizes were delivered to the plant (the Company had occasional problems resulting from improper stock sizes). During busy periods this work was not done.

3. Minor yard clean-up work as directed by the Foreman.

When the foreman is rushed, other foremen have been directed to come out to the yard to assist him. This has happened on occasion since Dix's job was abolished (at least three times).

The job os Yard Clerk and Stock Painter is of such a nature that a certain amount of time has always involved periods of little or no activity (see job description). This was the case even prior to the downturn in business.

On several occasions in the past the Company, when they believed business conditions warranted, have moved foremen back into the bargaining unit and restored their original seniority. When business improved, the foremen were placed back on their supervisory jobs. The Union has never agreed that this was a proper procedure, but since no union members were ever required to take a demotion or a cut in pay, no grievances were filed. In the present instance, the Yard Foreman's name was not placed on the Seniority roster, as was the case previously. (Note: on the previous occasions the Foremen's names were removed from the seniority list immediately following a move out of the bargaining unit)

At the last contract negotiations in 1963, the Company and Union agreed to raise the rate of the job of Yard Clerk and Stock Painter by 34¢ per hour to compensate Dix in lieu of the indirect incentive plan that was abolished for his position. The job had formerly been placed on incentive to encourage the Yard Clerk and Stock Painter to locate and mark stock rapidly enough to keep ahead of Forge Department needs.

Prior to 1951 the Company had assigned the duties performed by the Yard Clerk and Stock Painter to the Yard Foreman, but since the unit of production and maintenance was organized by the Boilermakers in 1955, the job has always been listed in the Wage Appendix of the Agreement.

August 25, 1964

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

The University of Wisconsin
TRAINING FOR ARBITRATION
School for Workers

THE WILDCAT STRIKE

BACKGROUND

Molders Local #163 has been recognized by the Love Brothers - Giddings Company of Hartford, Wisconsin as the exclusive bargaining representative for all foundry operations since 1912.

The Company operates in the city of Hartford in three plants, designated Number one, Number two and Number three. Plant #1 handles the heating, pouring and molding, Plant #2 pouring, molding, chipping & grinding, and Plant #3 handles weighing and shipping. All three locations are organized into Local #163 and are covered by the same contract.

The last contract was negotiated in 1964.

The Local Union is serviced by a business agent with the assistance of the District Representative. The Local currently has a membership of 475 paid-up members, most of whom are employed at Love Brothers - Giddings Company. In addition to the foundry operations, local #163 has a nearby barber shop and employees of a pool hall three blocks from the plant organized.

THE GRIEVANCE

July 24, 25 and 26 were warm and humid. Although the 25th and 26th were not days of work, they were warm enough to make tempers short. In addition, the men had been working considerable overtime due to an increase in orders for castings for the automobile and machine tool industries. Conditions were "right" for trouble on Monday, the 26th of July.

Approximately one hour after the shift starting time of 6:00 a.m., the Molders in Plants 2 and 3 left in one big group. Shortly thereafter the employees in other departments at both plants were sent home. Those employees had reported for work and had worked for approximately one hour. A grievance was filed on behalf of the Soft Iron Department in Plant two on July 28, 1965. The steward signing the grievance was requested to obtain the names of the employees involved in that grievance. Fifteen men signed the grievance, which was then again presented to the Company. The grievance alleged a violation of Article VI, Paragraph 1.

On July 29 a grievance was filed on behalf of employees in the Chipping and Annealing Departments in Plant 2, which was thereafter signed by four employees. That grievance requested three additional hours of pay in accordance with the contract. No grievances were filed on behalf of any other employees similarly affected in either Plant 2 or Plant 3.

On July 29 a joint letter was sent to the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, advising the Board of the issue involved in the request for arbitration. That letter contained the following paragraph:

> "2. On July 26, 1965 the Company's molders reported to work but then decided it was too hot to work and walked off the job en masse without the Company's permission. Thereupon Management sent certain other groups of employees home. A grievance was filed on behalf of some of these employees claiming they were entitled to report-in pay under the provisions of Article VII set forth in paragraph 1 above. Management contends that the paragraph does not apply because the situation comes within the exception set forth in the paragraph."

The Molders did not return to work on July 27, 28, or 29, 1965. The Company received no notification of their intention to report or not to report on any of those days. Following communication by the Company with the International Vice President, the Molders returned to work on Friday, August 30, 1965. All other employees worked on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of the week in question. The Chippers involved in one of the grievances did not report to work until Friday, July 30, the same day as the Molders returned. No disciplinary action was taken against the Molders.

IN THE MATTER OF ARBITRATION

LOVE BROTHERS - GIDDINGS COMPANY Hartford, Wisconsin -and- MOLDERS AND ALLIED WORKERS UNION Local Number 163	AWARD In the matter of three hours report-in pay for 19 aggrieved employees Hearing: August 5th, 1965

APPEARANCES FOR THE COMPANY - Harry S. Mason, Counsel; Mr. James R. Juno, General Superintendent, Plants #1, #2, #3; Mr. David Carnegie, Foreman, Plant #2; Mr. Kelby O'Hara, General Foreman, Plant #3

APPEARANCES FOR THE UNION - Mr. George S. Hagglund, District Representative, Molders & Allied Workers' Union; Mr. James Gross, President, Local #163; Mr. Edward Egielski, Chipping Department Steward; Mr. Rober Slaughter, Grievance Committeeman, Soft Iron Department; Mr. Charles Morehead, Soft Iron Department Steward

AWARD

The Company shall pay each of the 19 aggrieved employees three (3) hours pay at their regular hourly rates of pay for Monday, July 26, 1965

It is noted for the record that the parties agreed to waive the standard arbitration opinion in favor of a summary statement of the basis of the award, in the interest of an early decision

* * * * *

Decision and Award

The Provision of the Agreement cited as applicable in the instant dispute is hereinafter set forth as follows:

ARTICLE VII - REPORT-IN PAY

> 1. If an employee reports for work, unless previously notified not to report, he shall receive four hours' pay at not less than his regular hourly rate. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply in case the inability of the Company to provide work is due to conditions beyond its control. In the event of any down time due to power failure involving more than twenty minutes interruption of work in any one day, employees who are required by the Company to remain at work will be paid at their base rate for the time that they are unable to perform their regular duties because of said power failure.

The provision, in and of itself, is clear and unambiguous. The primary issue before the Arbitrator is centered on the exception to the application of the provision covering instances where the inability of the Company to provide work is due to conditions beyond its control. The background of the development of provisions of this type is sufficiently well known to the parties and requires no further analysis or discussion. Employees reporting for work and who have not been prev iously notified not to report, must receive four hours' work or four hours' pay. The only exception is in that area where conditions arise beyond the control of the Company, which would prevent the Company from providing the work necessary to keep the employees occupied during the first four hours following their respective report-in time. The words "due to conditions beyond its control" encompass a wide area. Power failures, unanticipated machine breakdowns, flood, fire, and other factors could create conditions and circumstances which would fall within the exception portion of the general application of the provision.

In the instant case, the Company had the right to expect that when the Molders reported for work, they would remain on the job for the full period of the shift. When the Molders left work without permission, they subjected themselves to disciplinary action and placed the Company in a position where it was required to re-evaluate its production schedules and needs. The Company was not required to "make work" for those employees who remained on the job, but if work could have been provided for them for an additional three hours without disrupting the basic efficient operation of the plant, the Company was required to retain those employees for the full four hours, as provided under Article VII, paragraph 1. Employees who leave their jobs without permission create a condition which generally would fall within the exception portion of the application of Article VII, (1), as it would apply to the remaining employees. The question that must be determined is whether or not the Company could have in fact provided work for the grievants. If work was available and could have been provided within the area of efficient operation of the plant, sending the grievants home after one hour of work would, in fact, constitute a penalty against employees who had not violated the contract, while at the same time permitting the Molders to violate the agreement without the imposition of any similar type of penalty.

The Company stressed the fact that the weight-shifting needs were of paramount importance in its decision to send the employees home. Weight-shifting occurs normally near the end of the shift and a considerable period of time after the first four hours of the shift. The grievants would have completed four hours of work at approximately 10:30 a.m., and if the Molders had continued to work, the employees assigned to weight-shifting would not have performed those duties until approximately 1:30 p.m. There was unquestionably cleaning and chipping work available, which could have been performed, as evidenced by the fact that that type of work was performed for some 15 additional hours on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of the same week, even though the Molders did not work on any of those days. The Company contended that it provided the work because of pressure from its customers to ship whatever finished products that it could, and, in addition thereto, it was necessary that the remaining employees work in order that the molding production, which had been accumulated prior to the time that the Molders left their work, could be weighed in order that the payroll computations could be completed before Friday of that week.

On the basis of the evidence offered, it is the opinion of the Arbitrator that work was available for the additional three hours on Monday, July 26, in the classifications where each of the grievants normally worked and which could have been performed without disrupting the normal flow of work and without impairing the efficient operation of the plant for the additional three hours involved on Monday, July 26, 1965. In substance, it is the opinion of the Arbitrator that the theory upon which the Company relied when it sent the grievants home on Monday, July 26, was contractually sound, but the facts and circumstances which were actually in existence on that day did not support or warrant the application of that theory. The grievants on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday performed exactly the same kind of work without the availability of any additional molding production on those days. The grievants could have and should have been permitted to continue their normal functions for an additional three hours on July 26, 1965.

The joint submission to the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service refers to a grievance filed on behalf of "some of these employees. * * * " Although the grievance of July 28, 1965, refers to the "Soft Iron Department," it was specifically signed by certain named individuals, which removed the grievance from a general departmental or group grievance and thereby covered only the actual signers thereof. The same situation existed with respect to the grievance of July 29 covering the four named employees in the Chipping and Annealing. Theaward, therfore, will cover only those employees who are named as grievants.

AWARD

The employees who signed grievance number 470 dated July 28, 1965 in the Soft Iron Department and those who filed grievance number 471 dated July 29, 1965 in the Chipping and Annealing Department, both departments in Plant #2, shall be entitled to receive an additional three hours of pay at their repsective hourly rates of pay for Monday, July 26, 1965.

Anthony W. Sinicropi/s
August 6, 1965

AGREEMENT BETWEEN ---------

Love Brothers - Giddings Company

and

International Molders' and Allied Workers' Union, AFL-CIO

Hartford, Wisconsin

Article I - Purpose

1. The general purpose of this Agreement is to promote the mutual interest of the Union and the Company, to provide for the operation of the plant of the Company under methods which will further to the fullest extent the safety and welfare of the employees, economy of operations, quality and quantity of production and minimization of waste, to establish rates of pay, hours of work, and to avoid interruptions of work.

Article II - Recognition

1. The Company recognizes the Union as the sole collective bargaining agency for all production and maintenance employees employed by the Company at its Hartford, Wisconsin plant, excluding all office and clerical employees, salesmen, timekeepers, foremen and all supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

Article III - Management

1. The Management of the Company, and the direction of the working force, including the right to plan, direct and control plant operations, hire, suspend, or discharge for proper cause, or transfer or relieve employees from duty because of lack of work, or for other legitimate business reasons, and the right to introduce new or improved production methods or facilities, is vested exclusively in the Company; provided that nothing contained herein shall be used for the purpose of discriminating unfairly against any member of the Union. This Article shall be applied in conformance with the other provisions of this agreement.

Article IV - Grievance Procedure

1. A grievance is any difference of opinion or dispute between the Company and any employee or Union representative regarding the interpretation or operation of any provision of this Agreement, and shall be dealt with as follows:

   a. The Grievance is to be first taken up with the foreman of the Department involved by the aggrieved employee or the Department Steward, or both.

   b. If the Grievance is not settled in one (1) above within two working days then it shall be submitted in writing to the Department Manager and taken up with the Personnel Manager and the Union President, Department Steward and the Business Agent. If no settlement is reached, a conference with the Company's Executive in charge of negotiations, or his representative, will be arranged as soon as possible and in no event later than one week.

c. If the conferences do not satisfactorily settle the grievance then it shall be submitted to arbitration as herein provided, and provided such request is made in writing.

Article V - Arbitration

1. In the event that both parties fail to adjust any controversy arising out of this Agreement over wages, hours or working conditions, or the interpretation or application of this Agreement, the Union and the Company hereby agree to submit for arbitration such grievances to the Wiconsin Employment Relations Board and its decision shall be final and binding until the expiration of this Agreement or any extension thereof.

Article VI - Seniority

1. Seniority shall be observed on a basis of accumulated service in any one department and shall not begin until after twelve (12) months of employment in any one Department. These Departments, sub Departments, and Groups, shall be in accordance with the master seniority list mutually agreed upon by the Company and the Union and maintained in the Company's Personnel Office, copy of which is supplied to the Union.

2. The Company shall also keep posted a seniority list based upon Company records showing the date of last hire, said seniority list to be correctly revised at thirty (30) day intervals.

3. When conditions warrant a decrease or increase in the number of employees, the following factors shall apply:

   a. Seniority (Department-wide)

   b. Ability

   c. Competency to perform the work

   Where ability and competency are substantially equal, seniority of service shall govern.

Article VII - Report-in pay

1. If an employee reports for work, unless previously notified not to report, he shall receive four hours' pay at his regular hourly rate or not less than four hours' work at not less than his regular hourly rate. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply in case the inability of the C mpany to provide work is due to conditions beyond its control. In the event of any down time due to power failure involving more than twenty (20) minutes interruption of work in any one day, employees who are required by the Company to remain at work will be paid at their base rate for the time that they are unable to perform their regular duties because of said power failure.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT INSTITUTE
UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT

TRANSCRIPT OF AN ARBITRATION HEARING

JAMES BROTHERS, INC.

AND

LOCAL 125, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF MINE WORKERS, CIO

An arbitration hearing in the above case was held on May 19, 1952 at New Haven, Connecticut for the purpose of arbitrating a dispute over the discharge of an employee of James Brothers, Inc.

Those present were:

The Arbitrator

Company Attorney
Company Personnel Manager

Union President
Union Steward

PERTINENT CONTRACT CLAUSES

Article II, Section 2

Except as otherwise set forth in this agreement, the Union recognizes the retention by the Company of the usual management rights, including, but not limited to ... the right to hire, suspend or discharge for just cause ...

Article IX, Section 8

The Company may discharge an employee for proper cause ...

Article IX, Section 10

If a discharged employee desires to make a complaint concerning his discharge, his steward shall file the same in writing within five working days of the discharge ... If the employee is found at such hearing to have been unjustly discharged, he shall be reinstated and receive his regular hourly base payroll rate of compensation, not to exceed five days' pay.

Article V, Section 8

Settlement of all grievances involving the payment of money, including adjustment of protested incentive rates, shall not be retroactive beyond the date on which the grievance was filed in writing.

Arbitrator: The question we will consider this morning is the discharge of Jack Lafano. I would like to straighten out the submission: "Whether or not the Company violated the Contract in the discharge of Lafano." The Union proposed that in the event it is determined he has been discharged unjustly he shall be reinstated with back pay for all time lost.

Company Attorney: That would be determined under the Contract also.

Union President: That is covered under the grievance procedure on the matter of money on page 14 and page 23, Section 10.

Arbitrator: There is no necessity then for any further discussion of the issue? The question is: Did the Company violate the Contract in the discharge of Jack Lafano? We will proceed. This was filed on the 15th of February?

Union President: That is right. Jack Lafano, an employee of James Brothers was arrested on December 10, 1951 and subsequently served 45 days in jail for breach of the peace. The Company was informed of his arrest the day after it occurred. Upon his release from jail, he reported to work and was informed that he had been fired. When the Union filed a grievance seeking Lafano's reinstatement, the Union was informed that he was "discharged for cause" - the cause being the fact that he had served "over thirty days in jail." The Union seeks the reinstatement of Lafano without loss of seniority and with back pay for all time lost as a result of an unjust discharge. The Union's position is that the company's discharge of Lafano violated the existing agreement between the parties. Nowhere in the agreement does a jail sentence of any duration in itself constitute sufficient grounds for discharge of an employee. Until Lafano's case was processed through the grievance machinery the Union never knew of any "30 day" rule on the part of the Company. The Union has never made any agreement either orally or in writing with the Company that a jail sentence in itself constitutes sufficient grounds for the dismissal of an employee. The breach of the peace for which Lafano was tried and sentenced was not the result of an incident arising out of the employment relationship between Lafano and the Company but was wholly separate and distinct therefrom. Under such circumstances, management can not presume to set itself up as the moral arbiter of the lives of its employees nor seek to police and pass judgment upon their private lives. So long as the conviction did neither affect nor threaten stable employment relationships (such as conviction for theft or assault on a fellow employee), the employer can not use it as a pretext for dismissal. The "dismissal for just cause" in our agreement can not therefore apply to this case. The Company has no right under the terms of the existing agreement between the parties to adopt "rules" to justify a discharge. The Union is the sole collective bargaining agent for all production and maintenance employees in regards to working conditions and any rules governing discharge would have to negotiated with the Union. From a common sense viewpoint, the Company's dismissal of Lafano was completely unjustified. The Company had hired employees who served prison sentences for longer periods than Lafano. Everyone in the plant knows it. To now pick Lafano to make an example of him is completely unfair. The Company's action furthermore violates one of the basic principles of fair play and sound theories of penology. Lafano having committed a breach of the peace has paid his penalty. To fire him from his job is to add an additional and unwarranted punishment for his act. Lafano out of work can constitute a hazard to society. Jobs today are not easily available. The only place he can re-habilitate himself is where he has worked and had an unblemished work record. In view of the above, the Union asks that Lafano be returned to work with full back pay. That is the Union's position on the issue. We have cases here sent to us on similar issues.

Union President: Continued
We have the case of the Caterpillar Tractor Company, 7LA. 554. It was ruled that assault on a fellow employee was not cause for dismissal. The arbitrator ruled that control ceases after an employee leaves the Company premises. Another case is that of Pioneer Gen-E-Motors Corporation, 3LA 486. The same reasoning and same conclusion were reached. Also the same reasoning was reached in the Verdun Manufacturing Company Case, 10 LA 637.

We feel this employee is entitled back to his job with full reinstatement of back pay. It is quite clear that management has no right to discharge a person for something he did outside of the employment of the Company. We have quite a few employees in the plant that have jail sentences and the Company never questioned this. Some were arrested before and the Company never took action. I don't think it is fair to this employee at all.

Arbitrator: Other employees were arrested before?

Union President: And employed by James.

Arbitrator: Before they were hired?

Union President: We feel the Company has no right to fire anybody like that. If a guy gets arrested out on the street, it has nothing to do with his employment at James.

Arbitrator: Can you give us specific cases where an employee was arrested?

Union Steward - Joe Turno He worked as a tool setter and was arrested for some reason and given six months. After his term, he was rehired. I don't know whether or not he lost seniority rights.

Union President: This man has paid his penalty from the courts. We don't feel the Company should give him another penalty on top of the one he served. We feel that it is the duty of the courts to penalize anybody for anything he does outside the Company.

Arbitrator: What was he sentenced for?

Union President: The Company never raised issue because it was stated clearly in the minutes by the Personnel Manager that regardless of what he was arrested for it was not cause for discharge.

Arbitrator: Then that is not a problem before us today.

Company Attorney: I think it is relevant but we are not relying upon it.

Arbitrator: Cause for discharge is not defined in the Contract in any way?

Union President: The Union says that just cause is the cause.

Company Attorney: There are two clauses. One is Article II, Section 2 of the Management clause which refers to the retention by Management of its right to discharge for just cause, and Article IX, Section 8 which has specifically to do with discharges and refers to discharges for proper cause, so that if there is any difference between those two words the discharge would be upheld if it were either for proper cause or just cause. There may be distinction between the two words. The facts are these. Mr. Lafano was arrested on December 9, 1951. He was arrested and charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor. He did not appear for work on December 10. The first time we heard what happened to him was on December 17 when his wife advised the Company of his difficulties. His trial did not take place until December 26. At that time he was sentenced to 90 days. Subsequently, apparently and as we were advised, due to his family circumstances and needs, the sentence was reduced to 45 days. He was discharged when we learned that he would be absent from the plant for 90 days. Now a little while ago, the question was raised as to what, if any, importance is to be placed on the type of offense he was charged with. We say that the type of offense he was charged with is relevant to the case but I don't believe we have to rely on that. There are certain types of offenses which by themselves, even if a man is not sentenced to a long period in jail, make a man unsuitable to work as an employee in any plant. For example, if a man were determined to be a kleptomaniac, I think that even if he were not sentenced to a long period in jail, it would make him unfit to be an employee. He is not the kind of a person which a plant should be required to keep in its employ and the discharge of such an individual, I think, would be just and would be for proper cause.

But, aside from that though, what we actually discharged him for was because he was not going to be available for work at the time we discharged him for a period of three months. We are in business. We don't give leaves of absence for long periods of time. We don't give leaves of absence to anyone except for what we consider to be a good reason. There is nothing in the Contract about leaves of absence except for the purpose of union activities. We think we were entitled to fill this man's job with another man. It isn't placing a man on trial twice for the same offense as he said. We weren't really concerned about the offense in judging whether or not he was guilty or how bad the offense was. We were concerned with his being absent for 90 days from the plant. That is the reason he was discharged. There have been other cases of this type where companies have been upheld. I want the opportunity if I can have it of looking into these cases the Union referred to. I think I have a good idea of what they are about. I remember the Caterpillar case even though it happened about 7 years ago. For instance, striking a foreman off the job, if a company discharges an employee for that offense, they are discharging a man because of actions which they think make him unfit to be an employee especially if his striking is done in the direction of supervisors. Those cases the Union cited did not have anything to do with a discharge because a man would not be available for work. We are talking about here a man not being available for work. If you carry the Union's argument to its extreme which would seem nonsensical but illustrates the point. Let us say that Mr. Lafano in time of war had been sent to jail for treason for ten years. True, he had paid-the penalty for violating the law as far as the Government is concerned but we are not obligated, it seems to us, to keep the job open for 10 years. That is just carrying the same situation to an extreme and making the position the Union is taking much clearer.

You might say, "Well, what if a man were caught speeding and was sent to jail for a couple of days?" Under those circumstances, I suppose someone might quarrel with us if we took the position he was discharged because he was going to be absent two days. That is not the situation. We are talking about a sentence for three months. The fact that he got out in 45 days doesn't have any bearing on the case. He was discharged at the time he was sentenced.

Company Attorney: Continued

It was going to be three months. Even if it were 45 days, the action would be the same. It was 90 days.

Arbitrator: What was his classification?

Personnel Manager: Laborer.

Company Attorney: We are not making the argument that we should be allowed to replace him because his was a highly skilled job and we couldn't hire another man to take his place unless he was guaranteed a permanent job. We are saying that we do not have to keep a man's job while he spends his time in jail. We should not be required to.

Personnel Manager: I would like to remark on the point raised on Joe Turno. He was sentenced to a long term in jail and was terminated in the same way as Mr. Lafano. When he came to work he was a skilled lather hand. He was rehired when he came out as a new man losing all seniority and all benefits.

Arbitrator: He was terminated? You mean he was discharged?

Personnel Manager: That is right. So far as remarks about other people in the plant who served jail sentences, that is so. We have people who served jail sentences before they worked for us. During the War when we began to check on people working for us we found out a lot of information which is confidential. I remember instances where we took people just out of jail and gave them jobs to help them along.

Arbitrator: You base your claim on unavailability for work during this period. Would you consider rehiring him?

Personnel Manager: I will tell you what happened to the job. Around the time this happened, we had a man with us for many years longer than Mr. Lafano who because of a physical disability became unable to do the job he was on. We had to find something for him to do and he got this job. This fellow was working in the plant as a grinder and was not able to continue on. We did want to find something for him if we could. This is the job he got and holds. As far as reemployment, everyone knows the situation. We have had substantial layoffs.

Arbitrator: Would you rehire him if there was an opening for a laborer?

Personnel Manager: I would have to say no.

Arbitrator: What service did he have?

Personnel Manager: Since November 30, 1945, until this thing happened, about 6 years, a little over 6 years.

Company Attorney: When you ask that question and when the Personnel Manager answers, he is taking into account the nature of the offense the man was charged with. The charge was changed to make it easier for him. That to me is an obvious reason why we would say no.

Arbitrator: Do you know for a fact that is why it was changed?

Union President: We called the courts. It was such a muddled up affair they didn't know what to do. Due to the fact that the man couldn't speak English or write it, he was clipped. They couldn't charge him for what he was called in for. It seems very much like they wanted to dispense with the case and charged him with breach of the peace. That is what the courts told us, that it was a muddled affair.

Union President: Continued

Union Steward: On this other fellow who was rehired in his place, there was quite a squabble that Mr. Lafano's place was not filled for some time.

Company Attorney: If his position was not filled for some time, perhaps there was no job to begin with.

Union Steward: It could be possible you pushed the work on someone else.

Union President: In a meeting we had with the Company, the Company stated that the charges this man was jailed for would not be reason for discharge. Now their lawyer brings up the issue why he was arrested and trying to make it have a bearing on the case. I don't think it has. There were a lot of children molested in the Red Mill Village. Mr Lafano lived around there. He was picked up and the pressure from the people was great. They had to put some pressure on this fellow. They figured they would blame him. That is why they changed the case to breach of the peace. They really didn't have a case on it. All the person is charged with is breach of the peace. That is the reason he was given 45 days. The Company stated clearly it had no bearing on this discharge. As far as the man not being capable to work in the plant, if the Company thinks he is not capable to work they should have fired him before this. He was employed in 1945. This is 1952. It has no bearing on the case at all. His work record is good. The Company has not questioned his work record. As far as his job not being available, we know there are laborers in the plant now that have less seniority than this guy.

Arbitrator: It would seem that I can't presume to make a determination as to whether or not this person was sentenced to jail justly. The matter before me is to determine whether or not he was discharged for proper and/or just cause under the terms of your Agreement with the Company. Do you want to comment as to the Company's position that absence for extended period over 90 days is justifiable?

Union President: The Company could put someone on his job while he was out. We feel it is not just cause. He was arrested outside of the employ of the Company.

Arbitrator: Would 90 days of absence be just cause?

Union President: Why should the Company say that 90 days of absence is just cause? They have given people leaves of absence to go to Europe three or four months at a clip. The man here is paying a penalty by law. He should be entitled to the job. The Company Attorney says they have reasons for giving leaves of absence. Is a vacation for three or four months at a time a reason? Certainly, this guy should have the right to come back to his job in 90 or 60 days, whatever the term is he has to serve in jail.

Company Attorney: In connection with that, although I don't think it is completely relevant, you might be interested to know as far as loss of seniority rights are concerned, on page 24 it says:

"12. An employee shall lose his seniority rights and be removed from the Company seniority records if he:

C. Is absent for five (5) working days without reporting except when circumstances caused by sickness or accident make it impossible for him to report, or for anyone else to report for him."

Company Attorney: Continued

That hasn't to do with a discharge. Seniority is an important right and we have agreed that it is possible for a man to lose seniority rights by reason of a 5-day absence.

Arbitrator: From December 9, when he was arrested to December 17, you heard nothing of this matter? The absence was for reasons unknown to the Company?

Company Attorney: That is right.

Union President: I think it was the next day after the person was arrested that the Company gave him a discharge slip.

Company Attorney: Are you sure? We are saying he was discharged December 26.

Personnel Manager: The discharge was made retroactive to December 10. Your notice was probably dated December 10, but you didn't get it until after Christmas.

Union President: In that clause the Company Attorney cited, it says: "when circumstances caused by sickness or accident make it impossible for him to report, or for anyone else to report for him." We know this person couldn't call up. He didn't have a telephone booth in his cell. I doubt if his wife can speak English. She wouldn't be able to.

Company Attorney: She told us on the 17th what happened to him.

Union Steward: There were a lot of questions in the employment office too.

Company Attorney: We are not here rehashing what was done in court. I don't go along with the theory the Union is advancing that a man is sentenced in court to a jail sentence because they have to do something with the cases, that they send people to jail to get rid of cases. I don't go along with it. We have said already that we didn't discharge him because of contributing to the delinquency of a minor but the Arbitrator asked whether we would take him back. We will take into account the nature of the charge made against him. A couple of paragraphs you ought to keep in mind are Article IX, Section 10, the discharge paragraph referred to at the beginning of the hearing; and you should also take into account Article IX, Section 8. Do we have in the record all the dates? The date when the grievance was first filed was February 15, the date the man applied again for work was the day before the grievance was filed, February 14. The date the man returned looking for work was February 14?

Union President: Yes. Retroactive pay is based on the date the grievance was filed.

Company Attorney: There is some question in the Arbitrator's mind on the section which speaks of the maximum of 5 days.

Arbitrator: It appears that is not a matter before me today.

Company Attorney: The clause referred to first is Article IX, Section 10 and has to do with discharges and you will notice that the last sentence in that has to do with reinstatement.

Arbitrator: To the effect that if the employee is found at such hearing to have been unjustly discharged, he shall be reinstated and receive his regular hourly base payroll rate of compensation, not to exceed five days' pay.

Union President: That is grievance procedure.

Company Attorney: The issue is very clear before you. The Union has said plainly that no matter how long he was sentenced to be incarcerated, that is his penalty. He is entitled to come back to his employer at the end of that period with full seniority rights I take it. I don't know whether or not he accumulates seniority while he is in jail. We don't need to go into that. We say that is an unreasonable, impracticable, and dangerous kind of policy to make as an obligation of any employer.

Union President: The Union is not saying that if a man has to serve 5 years in jail that the Company has to take him back. If a man has to serve a reasonable length of time, he is entitled back to the job.

Company Attorney: What is a reasonable length of time to spend in jail?

Union President: That would be a matter of negotiation.

Company Attorney: We have to negotiate how long a man should spend in jail before taking him back? That is one of the rights we hope to hang on to.

Arbitrator: We should confine our discussion to the length of time away from work. As the Company Attorney said, the Company feels there is a certain amount of relevancy to the reason for his being out of work. Our determination should be made on the basis of the time away from work.

Company Attorney: I don't want to say anything which would imply that if a man were charged with murder and managed to get out and we had good cause to believe he was guilty we would take him back. I don't want to make that statement even if he spent only six months getting free.

Union President: Management seems to feel they have the right to judge whether they are free from murder.

Union Steward: It is a breach of peace he was charged with and they are trying to say he did something else. He is not charged with something bad. He hasn't harmed anyone. I didn't say the man was judged innocent. The thing was so muddled they didn't know what to do. If a court had him for delinquency, they wouldn't charge him for breach of the peace.

Personnel Manager: We have nothing further.

Union Steward: If they can give people leaves of absence to go to Europe, this is good enough cause to give him the right to have time off.

Company Attorney: We have retained the right to grant leaves of absence for reasons we deem proper. We do not propose to give anyone a leave of absence to go to jail at any time for any length of time.

Arbitrator: If neither the Company nor the Union has anything additional to offer to me to assist me in arriving at a fair decision, we will consider the matter closed.

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
SCHOOL FOR WORKERS

CASE FOR ARBITRATION

The worker is an Assembler in Dept. 226. He has about 5 years seniority. During 1951-52, he was steward in this department. He was on the ball and was frequently at odds with the foreman, who is still in the department.

In September, 1953, trouble developed between the worker and the foreman. The worker claimed that the foreman was riding him, giving him the dirty jobs and nagging him about production. The worker expressed his thoughts to the foreman, and the foreman threatened him with a charge of insubordination.

The foreman filed a report against the worker. The company brought the matter up for discussion with the Grievance Committee on Oct. 1, 1953, as provided under Rule 5 of the contract. Instead of a direct application of rule 5, the union and the company agreed to a transfer for the worker into Dept. 220 in order to separate the worker and the foreman. This was OK with the worker. It was agreed to by the union on the assumption that this was a special application of rule 5 as it had been used in the past, and that it was not a disciplinary act on the part of the company. The worker reported to Dept. 220 on Monday, Oct. 5, 1953.

On Thursday, Dec. 3, 1953, the company gave the worker and the union committee a copy of Notice of Violation of Rule 5, as follows:

> This worker was given a transfer to Dept. 220 on Monday, Oct. 5, 1953 under the application of Rule 5 of the contract. He has not met the requirements of the job during the 60 day trial period. His general performance is unsatisfactory, his production is not up to standard, he questions the legitimate instructions of his supervisor and interferes with the work of other employees in the department.

As provided in the contract (VI-8, p. 23) the company offered this case for discussion at a meeting with the grievance committee on Monday, Dec. 7, 1953. The committee charged that the company was mis-applying the rule since the initial transfer had not been disciplinary in nature and furthermore, there was no basis for the company's charges. The company contended that the union was wrong and insisted that the grievance committee follow out the provisions of the rule, naming two departments into which the worker could transfer. This the union refused to do. The company acted on its own, named two departments. The worker refused to make a choice on the advice of the union. So the company transferred him into Dept. 225.

The worker thereupon filed a written grievance, charging mis-application of rule 5 and a transfer in violation of the contract. The grievance was filed Friday, Dec. 11. The worker went to work in Dept. 225 on Monday, Dec. 14, 1953.

The grievance committee attempted to adjust this case with the company but was unsuccessful. By early February, 1954, the committee came to the conclusion that the case would have to be arbitrated and was preparing to make such a recommendation.

On Thursday, February 11, 1954, the following events occurred in Dept. 225:

The worker and a fellow worker were doing assembly work in the department. Pieces were bulky, weighing 85 to 90 pounds. Pieces had to be lifted and positions changed. The men were making use of an available overhead hoist.

The foreman came by and questioned the use of the hoist. He claimed it took too much time and therefore wasted money. His remarks were abusive and were directed at our worker. The foreman lifted a piece himself and said that if he could do it alone, the two of them ought to be able to do it. He charged that this was a deliberate effort to slow down. Our worker attempted to defend the use of the hoist, but the foreman shut him up. He said (words to this effect): "I've had my eye on you. We don't want any of your smart ways in this department". He ordered the men to handle the pieces by hand, and left.

Later in the day, the other worker mashed a finger and went to the dispensary after reporting the injury to his steward since the foreman was not in the department at the time. Our worker continued on the job, but began to use the hoist since he was alone. The foreman came by and asked about the absent worker. Then he spoke words to this effect: "I told you not to use that damn hoist". Our worker said: "We weren't, but my buddy has gone". The foreman said: "That makes no damn difference. I can lift those pieces alone and so can you". Our worker said: "You did it once but I have to do it all the time". The foreman said: "By God, I told you to do it one way and that's the way it's going to be done. We expected trouble from you and you're not going to get away with it here. You've been here 60 days and now you've slowed down production and refused to obey orders. You're going to leave this place and not come back".

The foreman handed the worker a notice of violation of rule 5 and took off. He came back soon with a notice of violation of rules 8 and 9. The worker was told that he was fired as of the end of the shift.

The union filed a grievance on the discharge and argued the case with the company at the committee level. The company's main pitch was that the worker was subject to automatic discharge under both rule 5-f and rule 8 and the union could take its pick. The company would not budge and the union decided to take the case to arbitration.

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
SCHOOL FOR WORKERS

ARBITRATION OF DISCHARGE OF ROSWELL RUDY

COMPANY PRESENTATION

OPENING STATEMENT by Company's chief spokesman

The case which is before arbitration today involves the discharge of Mr. Roswell Rudy. It seems like a pretty clear-cut case and we are somewhat surprised that the union has made an issue of it. However, the company is quite prepared to defend its actions.

Mr. Rudy has been with the company since Jan. 6, 1949. We would like to submit Company Exhibit 1 which is a copy of the Department and Rate Record of the employee.

(The company gives copies of Exhibit 1 to the arbitrator and to the union)

The company does not believe that this exhibit needs to be discussed, but will be glad to answer any questions if there are any.

(Company answers any questions from union or arbitrator)

The circumstances which led to this discharge are not new. The company has had occasion to discipline Mr. Rudy in the past. It was our that his attitude and actions might change as a result. We regret that this has not been the case.

To back up this statement, the company wishes to intorduce its Exhibit 2, which is a record of warnings and complaints filed against Mr. Rudy. As the union knows, this is our customary procedure in matters of this sort.

(Company gives copies of Exhibit 2 to union and arbitrator)

Since these facts have a direct bearing on this case, we would like to read it into the record.

(Company reads Exhibit 2)

Again we will pause to see if there are any questions from the union or the arbitrator.

UNION SPOKESMAN ASKS: Is it not true that the complaint dated 2-6-51 was suspended because the union convinced the company that there was no basis for the penalty?

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: It was settled at a regular grievance meeting.

UNION SPOKESMAN ASKS: Is it not true that the complaint dated 1-10-52 was settled in arbitration as the result of a grievance filed by the worker. The arbitrator awarded one week's pay which the worker lost.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: We don't have that noted here, but you may be right.

UNION SPOKESMAN: We have the records right here if the arbitrator wants to see them.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: That won't be necessary.

UNION SPOKESMAN: We naturally have other questions on these complaints, but we will get to them later.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN CONTINUES PRESENTATION: The company would like to introduce one other exhibit at this time. This is Exhibit 3. It is a list of verbal warnings directed to Mr. Rudy.

(Company gives copies of Exhibit 3 to union and arbitrator)
(Union studies exhibit briefly)

UNION SPOKESMAN: We must enter an objection to the introduction of this Exhibit 3. We will detail our objections later when we present our side. But right now, we want to call the arbitrator's attention to the fact that these are records kept solely by the company. The worker does not know about them. The worker does not receive any copy of a verbal warning.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: If the union is implying that this is not a bone fide exhibit and that these warnings have been fabricated, then we resent the implication.

UNION SPOKESMAN: We did not say that. We will get to this thing later on.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: All of our submission so far has been in the nature of background material. It is designed to give the arbitrator a broad picture of the situation. We would now like to place our first witness on the stand, Mr. Wilcox.

(Arbitrator swears Wilcox in)

THE COMPANY SPOKESMAN QUESTIONS WILCOX:

Q: Please tell the arbitrator your name and job.

A: My name is Richard Wilcox, foreman in department 226, day shift.

Q: Were you foreman at the time that Mr. Rudy was in the department?

A: I was.

Q: Will you describe the circumstances which led to the transfer of Mr. Rudy from your department?

A: Rudy was in the department for about 4 years. We had a lot of trouble with him. His production was never too good and he used to beef a lot about what he was told to do. I had to keep on him all the time and he seemed to resent it when I talked to him. He was always sounding off to the other employees. The records show that we had to warn him a lot, but they don't show half the trouble we had.

Q: You have a copy of Company Exhibit 2, Record of Warnings and Complaints. Do you recognize the one dated Sept. 28, 1953?

A: Yes, that's the one I finally had to file under Rule 5. I understand that it resulted in his transfer out of the department.

Q: What were the circumstances that led you to file this complaint?

A: Well, like I said, he wasn't doing a job. He just wasn't measuring up and something had to be done about it.

Q: You felt that the time had come for the company to do something in order to give him a chance to straighten out?

A. That's right.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: We wish to inform the arbitrator that this was the first of many incidents which culminated in the discharge. These events occurred under Article VI, Rule 5 of the contract, page 22, to which we call your attention.

Q: Will you identify this paper?

A: This is a copy of a report submitted by me to Industrial Relations dealing with Mr. Rudy.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: We would like to introduce this as Company Exhibit 4.

(Company gives copies of Exhibit 4 to union and arbitrator)

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: The union and the company discussed this report at a meeting on Oct. 1, 1953. The union would not agree to the application of Rule 5 a, b and c, which would have resulted in a warning and a 30 day trial period in the same department. What the union did agree to was a transfer under Rule 5-d, which calls for a transfer. Under the workings of the Rule, the employee chose to transfer into department 220

UNION SPOKESMAN: We would like to cross-examine Mr. Wilcox.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: OK, we are through with him.

UNION SPOKESMAN CROSS-EXAMINES WILCOX:

Q: Mr. Wilcox, do you recall who was steward in department 226 during 1951 and 1952?

A: That's a long time ago. Stewards come and go. I can't recall.

Q: Would you be willing to agree with us that Roswell Rudy was the steward?

A: I guess I'll have to. You fellows have the records on that.

Q: Would the fact that Rudy was a steward in your department have any influence on the way you treated him, at that time or since?

A: Of course not. We don't discriminate against any employees, even when the are stewards.

Q: How was that again?

A: I said we don't discriminate against anyone.

Q: Even when they are stewards?

A: Even when they are stewards.

Q: You criticized Mr. Rudy's production in your department. What seemed to be the trouble.

A. There just wasn't enough.

Q: Was he low man?

A: Well, maybe not low man.

Q: Next to the bottom?

A: I don't recall. It just gave us trouble.

Q: You keep records on all of this. Why didn't you bring them?

A: I didn't know you'd ask about it.

Q: You said Rudy "beefed a lot" and "sounded off to other employees". Just what do you mean?

A: Well, he'd complain that we were asking the men to do too much, even when they weren't making standard. Then he was always trying to get the men to file grievances on this and that. He seemed to want to make trouble. He kept bringing these complaints to me.

Q: Were they all his complaints, or those of other workers?

A: Both.

Q: Do you recall now that Rudy was steward in your department?

A: You reminded me of it.

Q: Do you suppose his activities had something to do with his job as steward?

A: His job was with the company, not with the union.

Q: I call your attention to Company Exhibit 3, Verbal Warnings by Foreman. Does the worker get a copy of these warnings.

A: No.

Q: How does he find out about them?

A: When we give him a verbal warning.

Q: And then you make a record of it. Why do you make a record?

A: Just in case.

Q: How do you mean?

A: If something comes up later, we know what was said.

Q: You said that these don't represent half of the warnings?

A: That's right.

Q: Well, why didn't you write the other half down?

A: Well, I don't know. They weren't so important. It takes a lot of time and I've got a job to do in the department.

UNION SPOKESMAN: That's all.

The union wants to make it clear to the arbitrator why we are exploring incidents which are so far removed in time from the case before you. The company has introduced this testimony in what seems to be an effort to justify its most recent action. Therefore, we feel impelled to question the testimony which the company presents.

(The arbitrator may wish to question the witness)

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: We would like to continue our presentation.

Mr. Rudy went to work in Department 220 on Monday, Oct. 5, 1953. The arbitrator will note under Rule 5-e that a worker is entitled to a 60 day trial period after transfer under this provision. Mr. Rudy was given his 60 days. He did not measure up.

We call your attention to Company Exhibit 2, the complaint notice dated 12-3-53. The record of Mr. Rudy in Department 220 was offered by the company for discussion at a regular meeting with the union committee on Monday, Dec. 7, 1953. The union was reluctant to discuss the case. It refused to meet its obligation under 5-e to designate departmets for transfer. The company gave Mr. Rudy the opportunity to chose. Under what we presume was the advice of the union, Rudy refused to designate any departments or to make achoice between the two designated by the company. We had no alternative but to proceed with the transfer and Mr. Rudy went to work in Department 225 on Monday, Dec. 14, 1953.

Mr. Rudy did not prove satisfactory in his new department. To establish this fact, we would like to place Mr. Joe Breuer on the stand. Mr. Breuer is foreman in department 225.

(The arbitrator swears Breuer in)

COMPANY SPOKESMAN QUESTIONS BREUER:

Q: Please state your name and occupation for the record.

A: Joe Breuer, day foreman in department 225.

Q: Mr. Breuer, will you please relate the events that took place in your department on Thursday, Feb. 11, 1954, relative to Mr. Rudy.

A: Well, Rudy and another worker were assembling on job 22. I stopped there early in the shift and found that they were using a hoist to lift parts into position which I could lift alone by myself. Naturally this use of the hoist made the work slower. I questioned them on the use of the hoist and even lifted a piece myself to show how it could be done. I pointed out that this would save time and money. Mr. Rudy seemed to resent my suggestion but I instructed them to proceed on the job without the hoist.

When I returned to the job later in the day, I found that Mr. Rudy was using the hoist. I felt that this was a deliberate effort on his part to take things easy. It was also in direct violation of my orders. Considering his record in the other department and his actions and attitude in my department, I figured we'd have to let him go.

Q: Under what rule did you consider that discharged was authorized?

A: Under Rule 5-f and Rule 8. He'd been there 60 days and hadn't worked out. That calls for discharge. Then he was insubordinate about my orders and you can fire a man for that.

Q: Mr. Arbitrator, that is a reference to Rule 8, Article VI on page 25 of the contract.

Mr. Breuer, you gave Mr. Rudy instructions on how to do a job and he failed to obey them?

A: That is correct.

Q: Would you consider that this insubordination was extreme?

A: Certainly. After all, he was on trial for 60 days. Then when I admonished him for not doing it the way I told him to, he got all hot and complained about being over-worked.

Q: On what basis do you think the company was justified in discharging the employee?

A: Well, he'd had his last chance under Rule 5 and he'd been extremely insubordinate. That comes under Rule 8. Besides, he was costing the company money by limiting his production.

Q: Had you had other troubles with Mr. Rudy before this time?

A: Yes. We had trouble with his production.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: That's all.

UNION SPOKESMAN: We would like to examine the witness.

UNION SPOKESMAN QUESTIONS BREUER:

Q: Mr. Breuer, when Rudy came into your department, did you know about the circumstances surrounding his transfer?

A: Yes. I knew they'd had trouble with him in 220.

Q: How did you learn of the circumstances?

A: Well, we have the man's record. Then too, these things get around among the foremen. We pass the word along.

Q: What word was passed along to you?

A: Well, nothing much. Just that there had been some trouble.

Q: The company's exhibits 2 and 3 fail to include any complaints or warnings from you, except those directly before the discharge. The company is generally pretty thorough in its record keeping. How does it happen that you let Rudy go 60 days without trying to straighten him out? Or didn't he need any warnings?

A: He needed them all right.

Q: But you made no effort to help him get adjusted?

A: The work was the same as in 220. I had plenty of other things to do than play nurse to a man who has been here five years.

Q: What was the name of the man working with Rudy on the day we are discussing?

A: I believe it was Clarence Lokken.

Q: Is it true that in directing these men not to use the hoist, you talked only to Rudy?

A: No. I talked to both men.

Q: Is it true that in your remarks to Rudy you used words to this effect: "I've had my eye on you. We don't want any of your smart ways in this department"?

A: No. I didn't say that.

Q: Well, what did you say?

A: Well, I don't remember. It was quite a while ago.

Q: And yet you recall that Rudy seemed to resent your order?

A: Sure he did.

Q: How much did the pieces in question weigh?

A: About 50 pounds. Maybe a little more.

Q: Were they compact or bulky?

A: They weren't so awfully bulky. You could handle them.

Q: Is it true that when you returned to the job later in the day, Mr. Rudy was working alone?

A: Well, yes.

Q: What had become of Mr. Lokken?

A: He'd gone to the dispensary.

Q: What was his trouble?

A: He said he had gotten hurt.

Q: What was the nature of his injury?

A: Something about his finger.

Q: What about his finger?

A: I don't know. I wasn't there when it happened.

Q: Is it true that Lokken had mashed his finger while carrying out your instructions to handle pieces by hand and that he had reported the injury to the steward in your absence as provided in Section K, page 54, of the contract, and that he went to the dispensary where the injury was treated?

A: As you say, I wasn't there at the time.

Q: There are records on all this which we will get if we have to.

A: Well, something like that happened.

Q: Do you still consider that Rudy was insubordinate for using the hoist when his partner was no longer present because he had been doing the job your way?

A: I had instructed them to do it by hand.

Q: But there were two of them then.

A: Well, Rudy should have asked what to do before he disobeyed me.

Q: Were you in the department to be asked?

A. Well, not right then.

Q: Where were you?

A: I had business at other sections of the plant.

Q: When you called Rudy down for using the hoist, did you use words to this effect: "I told you not to use the damn hoist. By God, I told you to do it one way and that's the way it's going to be done. We expected trouble from you and you're not going to get away with it here. You've been here 60 days and now you've slowed down production and refused to obey orders. You're going to leave this place and not come back"?

A: No.

Q: No, what?

A: I didn't swear. I don't make a practice of using profanity.

Q: Well, what did you say?

A: I told him that he'd finished his 60 days and that he hadn't measured up and that he'd slowed down and disobeyed orders and he'd have to go.

Q: Did you give Rudy a notice of violation of Rule 5?

A: Sure.

Q: How did you happen to have it at the time?

A: I got it from the Industrial Relations office. His 60 days were up.

Q; Exactly 60 days?

A: Exactly 60 days.

Q: And then what did you do?

A: Well, because he had been extremely insubordinate, I got a notice of violation of Rule 8 and gave it to him.

Q: Is it the usual procedure for you to walk around processing disciplinary complaints?

A: In an emergency we do.

Q: In what respects was this an emergency? Why didn't you use the procedure specified in the contract under Article VI, paragraph C?

A: Well, we couldn't afford to have him stay around. It would have been bad for the other employees to have him there. Besides, the discharge was automatic under Rule 5 and Rule 8 gives us the right to discharge immediately.

Q: Do you happen to know how they did this job on the 2nd shift

A: The same way as I instructed Rudy and Lokken to do it on my shift.

UNION SPOKESMAN: That's all.

(The arbitrator may wish to question the witness)

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: This completes the company's presentation. We would like to sum up at this point.

We believe that the combination of exhibits and testimony offered here are sufficient to prove grounds for the discharge of Mr. Rudy.

Rule 5 is clear. It ran its course and the penalty is automatic. The testimony establishes a clear and aggrevated violation of Rule 8. The penalty under the circumstances is also automatic and immediate.

The union may attempt to question the company's dispatch in bringing this thing to a head. But Mr. Breuer pointed out that Rule 8 does provide for immediate discharge in cases of extreme insubordination. We believe that the intent of the parties is clear and fits this case.

We are confident that the arbitrator will agree that the company was justified in all respects under the existing circumstances, and showed great forbearance in not acting before it did.

COMPANY EXHIBIT 1

DEPARTMENT AND RATE RECORD - RUDY ROSWELL

1-6-49	Hired in Department 226 as Assembler
2-7-49	30 day raise
4-6-49	3 month raise
5-7-49	Seniority date
12-26-49	General Increase
7-26-50	General Increase
7-27-50	Installation of Job Evaluation System
7-26-51	General Increase
7-26-52	General Increase
9-10 to 10-1-52	Granted leave of absence: "Serious sickness in family"
7-26-52	General Increase
10-5-53	Transfer to Department 220
12-14-53	Transfer to Department 225

COMPANY EXHIBIT 2

WARNINGS AND COMPLAINTS - ROSWELL RUDY

Formal Warnings and Complaints:

10-1-50 First warning of a possible change in classification: "Talking too much. Has been warned several times".

2-6-51 Complaint report, violation of Rule 9: "The Company charges that this worker in his capacity as steward has wilfully encouraged workers in his department to limit their production". Penalty: one week's layoff without pay.

In minutes dated 2-10-51, the penalty was suspended at the request of the Union.

1-10-52 Complaint report, violation of Rule 8: "The Company charges that this employee has been insubordinate in his attitude and actions toward his foreman, questioning the legitimate instructions of supervisory personnel". Penalty: one week's layoff without pay.

Penalty was suspended at the request of the Union.

12-3-53 Notice of violation of Rule 5: "This employee was given a transfer to Dept. 220 on Monday, Oct. 5, 1953 under the application of Rule 5 of the contract. He has not met the requirements of the job during the 60 day trial period. His general performance is unsatisfactory, production is not up to standard, he questions the legitimate instructions of his supervisor and interferes with the work of other employees in the department". Penalty: transfer to another department under Rule 5.

2-11-54 Notice of violation of Rule 5: "This employee was given a transfer to department 225 on 12-14-53 under the application of Rule 5. He has not met the requirements of the job during the 60 day trial period. His general performance is not satisfactory and his attitude toward his work and supervisors leaves much to be desired". Penalty: immediate discharge under Rule 5-f.

2-11-54 Notice of violation of Rule 8: "Aggrevated refusal of employee to obey orders of supervisor". Penalty: immediate discharge under Rule 8.

COMPANY EXHIBIT 3

VERBAL WARNINGS BY FOREMAN - ROSWELL RUDY

Approximately January, 1951, employee was warned for taking too much time for investigating grievances during working hours. In his reply, employee claimed he had the right to do this.

Approximately March, 1951, employee was warned about insubordinate attitude. He was told that if it occurred again he would be given one week off without pay.

1-6-52 Employee was warned about talking with other workers on company time.

During 1953, foreman warned employee numerous times for poor work, low production and insubordinate attitude.

COMPANY EXHIBIT 4

FOREMAN'S REPORT — Roswell Rudy

Date: 9-25-53

Dept: 226

Foreman: Wilcox

Shift: 1

Rate employee as indicated, from 3 (poor) to 2 (average) to 1 (good)

Cooperation	3	2	1
Use of working time	3	2	1
Ability to get along with other workers	3	2	1
Quality of work	3	2	1

UNION PRESENTATION

UNION SPOKESMAN: If it is agreeable with the arbitrator, we would like to make a statement giving the union's conception of this case and taking issue with various statements and exhibits offered by the company. We will be using witnesses a little later on, but I believe we will save time with some direct presentation at the start.

(See if this is OK with the arbitrator)

The union's contention is that Mr. Rudy has been discharged in violation of the contract and should be reinstated with pay for all time lost. We will attempt to prove that the company has violated both the wording and the spirit of the contract.

The company has introduced the worker's entire record. We believe that most of this information has no bearing on this case. We think it was done for a purpose. That purpose is to build up in the mind of the arbitrator that here indeed is a worker who is hopeless.

We believe it is necessary to challenge the company's approach, not because we agree that the record is damaging, but because of the false impression which may be created by it.

We want to emphasize that the complaint reports dated 2-6-51 and 1-10-52 contained in Company Exhibit 2 were settled and are therefore dead issues. The 2- 6-51 case was settled at a grievance meeting with the company agreeing that the ch-arge had no basis in fact. The case dated 1-10-52 was settled in arbitration with the arbitrator granting the union's request for back pay. The company's exhibit simply says that the penalty was suspended at the request of the union. This implies a spirit of cooperation which was not noticeable at the time.

We must contest the use of verbal warnings as contained in Company Exhibit 3. A worker has no record of these and is in no position to challenge their merit. The company certainly has the right to introduce such exhibits, but we do not believe they deserve consideration in attempting to build a case against a worker. The arbitrator will note the vagueness of the dates and the statements and will contrast it with the elaborate disciplinary procedure provided in the contract.

However, we are greatful to the company for introducing Exhibits 2 and 3, in this respect. We will establish that Rudy was a steward in department 226 during 1951 and 52. Two of the formal warnings and complaints and the first three verbal warnings occurred during Rudy's term of office. Reference is made to this fact in the company's own exhibit. This contrasts with Mr. Wilcox's failure to remember who was steward at the time. We believe that the company's dis-satisfaction with Rudy began when he undertook the job of representing the workers in his department.

We would now like to discuss the circumstances leading to the discharge. We will introduce copies of two grievances as union exhibit A. There are two grievances because the case involves a sort of chain reaction, with each company action being calculated on the basis of a prior action.

(Union gives copies of Exhibit A to company and arbitrator)

The arbitrator will note that the first grievance applies to the 2nd transfer mentioned by the company. It charges that Rule 5 has been mis-applied. The union attempted to settle this case with the company, but was unsuccessful. We were preparing to certify the case to arbitration when the discharge occurred.

The second grievance applies to the discharge. Of necessity, it refers to the previous grievance. The adjustment of the second case as requested will dispose of the first case, and it is the second case which is up for your decision. We want to make sure the you understand that the union did not agree with the company's action in the second transfer.

The discharge grievance contends first, that the discharge was unjustified by the circumstances, and second, that it was not handled as provided in the contract.

The application of Rule 5 is important to this case. The rule applies to employee performance. When questions arise as to such matters, the company is required to discuss each case with the union. Management, however, makes the decisions. The union has the right to grieve.

The steps in the application of Rule 5 provide time limits and the penalties are relatively automatic.

We wish to establish two things with regard to this rule. First, paragraph g of Rule 5 provides that the time table shall be informal and that the stated trial periods are minimums. After the first transfer, the company waited exactly 60 days. Then it charged a violation of the rule and transferred the man unilaterally when the union refused to acknowledge any justification for the charge. Then, exactly 60 days later, the company again acted. This was the discharge on Feb. 11. The foremen, Mr. Breuer, was actually equipped with the notice of violation when he returned to the department that day. The alleged violation of rule 8 required a second trip to the front office. We note a certain indecent haste on the company's part, in spite of what the contract says in 5-g.

This is not the way in which these cases are usually handled.

Second, the company mis-applied the Rule from the start. There have been cases in the past in which workers and foremen did not get along. When alleged Rule 5 violations have brought these matters to the attention of the union under 5-b and it has developed that the problem is really one of personalities, the union has occassionally agreed to a transfer. But the transfer has not been disciplinary in nature nor has it been a true application of Rule 5.

To back this up, we introduce Union Exhibit B. These are exerpts from transcribed proceedings at union-management grievance meetings.

(Union gives copies of Exhibit B to company and arbitrator)

You will note in the first two discussions that the union is concerned that it is not greasing the skids for the worker involved. Unfortunately, the record for 10-1-53 is not as clear. The union makes the assumption that this is a special application of Rule 5, but the company makes no concurring statement. We did not anticipate subsequent events.

We would now like to discuss Article VI, paragraph C, page 28, of the contract. The section details the method under which discharges shall be handled. The last sentence states: "Before or at the time of discharge or lay-off of any employee for violation of the rules, the superintendent or his assistant shall take the matter up with the union committee, giving the reasons for the discharge or layoff".

In this case, the company did not follow this procedure. It fired Mr. Rudy as of the end of the shift and the union knew nothing of the matter until the steward and the worker reported it to a committee member. The company has claimed that 5-f provides for automatic discharge and that Rule 8 allows immediate discharge in extreme cases. In our view, Section C takes precedence as a procedure governing all discharges. Rules 1 through 4 also use the words immediate, but in all cases, the matter has been brought to the attention of the union first. We can see no place for any exceptions to the procedure set up in paragraph C.

The union believes that all of this is sufficient to invalidate the company's action. However, we do not believe that the circumstances warranted the discharge either. We don't want the company to say, OK, you got us on a technicality - now we'll go back and do it right.

We would like to put Mr. Rudy on the stand.

(Arbitrator swears Rudy in)

UNION SPOKESMAN QUESTIONS RUDY:

Q: Will you state your name and previous occupation?

A: Roswell Rudy, assembler in departments 225, 220 and 226.

Q: How long have you been with the company.

A: For five years.

Q: Were you a steward in department 226 during 1951 and 1952?

A: I was.

Q: Who was the foreman at the time?

A: Mr. Wilcox. He still is the foreman.

Q: Do you believe that Mr. Wilcox knew that you were the steward?

A: He must have known. The union sends a list. Besides, a lot of grievances came up while I was steward. I argued them with him and when they were written down, my name was on them and so was his.

Q: Did Mr. Wilcox interfere with your duties as steward?

A: Not exactly. He used to gripe about it and said I spent too much time investigating cases. He seemed to be mad when we filed grievances.

Q: Why were you transferred out of department 226?

A: Wilcox and I didn't get along too well.

Q: Did you consider you were being disciplined under Rule 5?

A: No. It was supposed to be just a way of getting us apart.

Q: In the next transfer to department 220 did you consider that you were being disciplined?

A: Yes. By then, I figured they were going to give me a hard time.

Q: Will you identify this Union Exhibit C?

A: This is a record I kept of my production and department production in department 225. The company records will show the same.

Q: Why did you keep this record?

A: They'd claimed my production was poor in department 220 as one excuse for the transfer. Mr. Breuer objected to my production here today. I wanted to be ready in case anything happened.

UNION SPOKESMAN: Here is Union Exhibit C. It is a copy of Rudy's production while he was in department 225 up to the time of his discharge. The figures who that Rudy was about average in comparison with other workers on the same job.

(Union givies copies of Exhibit C to company and arb.)
(The arbitrator may wish to ask questions. So may the company)

QUESTIONING OF RUDY CONTINUES:

Q: Will you describe what happened on the day you were fired?

A: Well, Lokken and I were on job 22. We had to lift and position pieces that weighed 85 or 90 pounds. They were large and bulky. There was a hoist there and we used it. Mr. Breuer came by and objected to the use of the hoist. He lifted a piece to show us he could do it. I said that could be dangerous but he shut me up. He said he'd been watching me and that he didn't want any of what he called my smart ways in his department. Then he said to do it by hand and left.

Q: Did he speak to you, or Lokken, or both?

A: He talked right at me.

Q: What happened next?

A: About noon, Lokken mashed his finger. He went to the dispensary. I stayed on the job and began to use the hoist since Lokken was gone. Pretty soon, Breuer came by and hit the ceiling because I was using the hoist. He said he'd told me not to use the damn hoist. I said that Lokken was gone. He said he could do it alone and so could I. I said he'd done it once but I had to keep doing it. Then he said he'd expected trouble from me and I'd been there 60 days and slowed down production and now I was insubordinate. He handed me a notice of violation of Rule 5 and said I was automatically fired as of the end of the shift. He went away and then came back with a notice of violation of Rule 8 and said I was fired again.

Q: Did he have the notice of Rule 5 violation with him when he first came to you.

A: Yes. I guess he got the other one just to make sure.

Q: Why did you start using the hoist when Lokken left?

A: So I could keep up the job. Then, Lokken had been hurt and the safety rules in the contract says we should use care and judgment to protect ourselves.

UNION SPOKESMAN: We call the arbitrator's attention to the Safety Rules and Regulations, page 51, Rule 3, which states: "Employees are not required or expected to take any risks from which they cannot protect themselves by care and judgment".

We also refer the arbitrator to Article VI, paragraph A, page 28, of the contract. This states: "The general rules of safety must be observed. Failure to do so will incur the penalties as set forth in the safety code. The company will cooperate to see that these rules of safety are observed by all employees".

COMPANY SPOKESMAN QUESTIONS RUDY:

Q: Mr. Rudy, did Mr. Breuer instruct you not to use the hoist?

A: Yes, he did.

Q: And yet you did use the hoist?

A: Yes, after Lokken was hurt and left the job.

Q: You admit that you disobeyed the foreman's orders. Don't you consider that to be insubordination?

A: No, because Lokken wasn't there any more.

Q: Why didn't you follow your orders until the foreman came around and then ask him what to do?

A: Well, I didn't want to hunt him up.

Q: No. Why didn't you do as he said til he came by and then ask?

A: I thought I could do it faster and better with the hoist. Breuer said he wanted production.

Q: You claim that Mr. Breuer used profanity. Were there any witnesses?

A: No, I guess there weren't.

Q: Did you keep your temper?

A: More or less.

Q: Did you swear?

A: I may have, but there were no witnesses.

Q: You admit you disobeyed your foreman and that you used abusive language toward him. Don't you consider this to be a failure to measure up to the job under Rule 5? Don't you consider that to be insubordination?

A; Well, no, I don't.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN: That's all.

(Arbitrator may wish to question the witness)

UNION SPOKESMAN: We would like to place Clarence Lokken on the stand.

U (Arbitrator swears Lokken in)

UNION SPOKESMAN QUESTIONS LOKKEN:

Q: Will you please state your name and job?

A: Clarence Lokken, assembler, department 225, day shift.

Q: You worked with Rudy on the day he was fired?

A: Up til I got hurt.

Q: When the foreman questioned the use of the hoist, to whom did he talk?

A: He started talking to both of us but then he talked mostly to Rudy.

Q: How heavy were the pieces?

A: The specification says 85 pounds.

Q: Could you lift them by hand?

A: Two of us could, but with one it would be tough. You'd have to keep doing it and then hold them in position.

Q: How did you get hurt?

A: We were swinging a piece into position and I caught my finger.

Q: Would you say that the hazard was greater or lesser when one was trying to do the work of two?

A: It would be greater.

Q: That's all.

COMPANY SPOKESMAN QUESTIONS LOKKEN:

Q: You say the foreman spoke mostly to Rudy. How could you tell?

A: He kept saying "you".

Q: You can mean two people.

A: Yes, but he'd turned away from me.

Q: Did the foreman give you and Rudy an order to do the job by hand.

A: Yes, he did.

Q: If a man of his own free will refuses to do what he is told to do, isn't that insubordination?

A: Well, it depends on the situation.

Q: Does a refusal to obey a simple order "depend on the situation"?

A: Well, I think it was wrong.

Q: That's all.
(Arbitrator may wish to question witness)

UNION SPOKESMAN: This concludes our presentation. In summarizing our position, we would like to stress the following points.

Under methods and procedures, the company has offered no satisfactory reason for failing to abide by the procedures outlined in Article VI, paragraph C, of the contract. The company, according to the record as we have submitted it, mis-applied Rule 5. The original transfer was not disciplinary and should not have been so interpreted and used by the company. The company used it to get a couple of jumps ahead on the road to discharge. Union Exhibit B should make clear the intent of the parties.

The company never missed a 60 day period when it came to expediting this case.

The company's foreman, Mr. Wilcox, indicated great vagueness in the matter of whether or not Rudy had been steward in his department. We question whether this apparent ignorance is possible under the circumstances. We contend that as a matter of fact the original basis for the company's action was its definite knowledge that Rudy had been an agressive steward.

The company's use of old complaint and warning notices without mentioning clearly the manner in which they were disposed of indicates the lengths to which they have gone in attempting to build a case. The same may be said for the use of verbal warnings.

On the immediate circumstances surrounding the discharge, we believe that the company has shown no grounds for its action. The foremen seemed to be out for trouble. In our opinion, Rudy showed good judgment as far as his actions go. Lokken was hurt. Paragraphs 3 on page 51 and A on page 28 place the worker under an obligation to use common sense.

The fact that the company was already with the final step at Rule 5 indicates premeditation. Apparently, Rudy was through whatever he did. The company, however, left nothing to chance, actually walking a notice of violation of Rule 8 through channels so that the worker would not be forced to leave without it. To us, this is a clear-cut case of trying to get the worker. We think the company was wrong in its reasons and the way it did it. We believe Rudy should be back in department 220 with full rights and lost pay.

COMPANY'S CLOSING STATEMENT, BY COMPANY SPOKESMAN:

The union has made a great issue of technicalities in this case. The fact remains that Mr. Rudy was transferred under Article VI, Section 5, paragraph d and that after a 60 day trial period and subsequent transfer plus an additional 60 days, the contract provide for automatic discharge. To us, automatic means just that. The union had been fully aware of the case and had been consulted under Rule 5 at each step.

The company also considers that Rule 8 permits immediate discharge. This is the exception to the rule of prior consultation. There is a reason for this. We ask the arbitrator to imagine the chaos into which our operation would sink if we were forced to permit cases of extreme insubordination to go unchallenged, with the worker constantly present in the department while the company waits upon the union for a discussion of the case.

As to the circumstances, we contend that our exhibits and testimony fully establish that the company was justified in discharging Mr. Rudy under Rule 5 or Rule 8 or both. As has been amply demonstrated, he did not measure up despite repeated trials. Furthermore, he has openly admitted that he refused to obey the the orders of his supervisor. We believe that the arbitrator will uphold our position.

UNION EXHIBIT A

COPY OF GRIEVANCE DATED 12-11-53

This worker was given a transfer from department 220 to 225 effective Monday, 12-14-53. The union contends that there is no basis for this action by the company and that it is a misapplication of Rule 5 of the contract. The union requests that this transfer be cancelled, that the worker be returned to his proper job in department 220 and that the notice of violation be stricken from his record.

/S/ Roswell Rudy

COPY OF GRIEVANCE DATED 2-15-54

This worker was discharged by the company on 2-11-54. The union contends that this discharge was unjustified by the circumstances and was improperly handled under the terms of the contract. The union requests that this worker be reinstated with full seniority and pay for all time lost and, since this discharge is related to this worker's grievance of 12-11-53, that such reinstatement be in department 220.

/S/ Roswell Rudy

UNION EXHIBIT B

MINUTES OF GRIEVANCE COMMITTEE MEETINGS
DEALING WITH SPECIAL APPLICATION OF RULE 5

6-12-52: Subject under discussion - notice of violation of Rule 5

Union: "It is agreed, then, that this worker will be offered a transfer under Rule 5 but that this is in no way a disciplinary penalty - that he is not on a trial period or anything?"

Co: "That is correct - it's just to resolve the personality problem in the department".

1-17-53: Subject under discussion - grievance charging foreman with nagging worker

Co: "Can't we adjust this case the way we did that other one last summer - by making a special application of Rule 5?"

Union: "I think we can, so long as you agree that this doesn't constitute one link in the chain of events that might lead to discharge".

Co: "That will be OK with us".

10-1-53: Subject under discussion - foreman Wilcox's report of 9-25-53 on Roswell Rudy

Co: "Then we will arrange for Rudy to transfer to 220".

Union: "OK, but we certainly aren't looking at this as a penalty under Rule 5".

Co: "What about this next case?"

COMPANY EXHIBIT C

COPY: Production Records, Roswell Rudy, department 225

Note: Since production was an issue in transfer of Rudy from department 220 to 225 (to which the union did not agree) the union requested that the worker keep his own production records in his new job.

Week Ending:	Production Units	Department Average
12-18-53	32 units	33 units
1 - 8-54	31 units	30 units
1 -15-54	35 units	37 units
1 -22-54	30 units	29 units
1 -29-54	50 units (new job)	54 units
2 - 5-54	47 units	48 units

University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

May 5, 1954

In the matter of:
Discharge of Roswell Rudy

Hearing April 28, 1954

L. R. Tripp,
Arbitrator

Award and Opinion

Facts:

Roswell Rudy has had about five years' seniority in Department 226 and was department steward during 1951 and 1952. On 9/25/53, a foreman's report was issued for this employee alleging poor cooperation, use of working time, and quality of work. On October 5, 1953 he was transferred to Department 220 after some discussion of his situation between the Company and Grievance Committee at a meeting on October 1, 1953. The circumstances and basis of this action are in dispute and will be the subject of further comment below.

In any case employee Rudy spent the following two months to 12/14/53 in Department 220. On 12/3/53, a notice of unsatisfactory performance was issued to this employee and the Company invoked rule 5 to effect a second transfer. This action was contested by the Union grievance dated 12/11/53. The employee was nonetheless transferred to Department 225 until his discharge on 2/11/54, sixty days after the second transfer.

On the basis of the testimony at the hearing the events immediately leading to his discharge on 2/11/54 may be summarized as follows: employee Rudy and another employee Clarence Lokken were doing assembly work in Department 225, lifting and placing into position pieces weighing an estimated 50 and 90 pounds. (Union testimony uncontroverted by the Company stated that specifications called for 85 pound weight). At approximately ten o'clock of the morning in question, the foreman directed the two employees to do this work by hand. Some words passed between the foreman and Rudy although the exact language is in dispute. At any rate, the two workers followed the foreman's orders for the rest of the morning. At approximately noon, however, Lokken injured a finger allegedly when they were swinging a piece into position. Lokken thereafter went to the dispensary in accordance with the safety rules and Rudy continued at work, but returned to using the hoist when he was working alone. Later in the day, the foreman came back, handed the worker a discharge notice of unsatisfactory performance under rule 5, and charged him with refusal to obey orders in the use of the hoist. He later handed him a notice of discharge for insubordination under rule 8.

Relevant Contract Provisions:

Article VI, rules 5 and 8 of the contract are cited by the Company as justification for the discharge, on the basis of the total performance records of the employee. The union questions the applicability of rule 5 and the entire personnel history in this case and argues that the discharge was not justified under the contract provisions, either procedurally or on the merits of the case. Rule E3 of the Safety rules and K referring to First Aid are also considered relevant by the Union.

Applicability of Rule 5:

The Company points out that the measuring stick applied by Management to employees whose record indicates unsatisfactory performance is agreed in Article VI, rule 5, of the contract to follow a standard procedure. They agree to discuss each case for the purpose of selecting individuals who justly deserve a first warning. The clause goes on to state that the Management's decision is final as to those cases to receive warnings and the thirty day trial period in their regular department. Thereafter there are discussions provided but if Management determines a violation, there is a compulsory transfer to another department selected from those suggested by Management and Union. After a sixty day trial period "the Management will again discuss each case with the Union and determine whether the employee has violated the rule for a second time." Again a transfer is "compulsory", and after a third trial period (also of sixty days) if the employee is again found by Management to be in violation of this rule, discharge is "automatic".

The Union argues however that rule 5 has not been properly invoked in this case. They submitted minutes of the grievance committee meeting of 10/1/53 when the first transfer of Rudy was discussed. The minutes show that the Union's understanding of Rudy's transfer was one of separating clashing personalities as had been done in other instances without invoking the performance disciplinary procedure. The Company did not deny this statement but neither did it give confirmation.

Under these circumstances, the arbitrator is faced with a difficult problem. If rule 5 applies, the series of disciplinary measures and ultimate discharge are automatic as determined by the Company in accordance with its disciplinary determinations and warnings. If the initial transfer, however, was one of convenience to both parties and not of unsatisfactory performance, then the same automatic features are not controlling.

The following considerations lead the arbitrator to conclude that rule 5 is not applicable under the peculiar circumstances of this case:

1. Rule 5 after all deals with "efficiency and good workmanship" and must be interpreted in the light of this intent. On this test, the entire record does not substantiate a finding of poor workmanship. Two earlier complaints had been reversed--one in the grievance procedure and one in arbitration. The foreman's report of 9/25/53 emphasized intangible elements such as cooperation and was not supported by production records. The notice of 12/3/53 of generally unsatisfactory performance in Department 220 was also unsubstantiated by either supervisory testimony or production records. And finally during the most recent employment experience in Department 225, the Union production record, uncontroverted by the Company, showed performance equal to and higher than average during some weeks.

2. Although the foreman handed Rudy a notice of violation of rule 5 on the date of his discharge, 2/11/54, he charged Rudy primarily with refusal to obey orders.

3. The grievance committee meeting minutes of 10/1/53 contain sufficient doubt as to an understanding that rule 5 was to be applied as to warrant resolving this issue against such application. If rule 5 were clearly being applied, it is possible that a discipline grievance might have been presented even then, which would have provided a basis for more consideration of production and other aspects of performance in the subsequent steps.

The arbitrator finds, therefore, that rule 5 is not applicable to this case and will, therefore, confine his consideration of the discharge to the immediate events of 2/11/54.

Applicability of Rule 8:

It is agreed in the testimony that Roswell Rudy disobeyed his foreman's orders in the use of the hoist that day. The questions at issue are (a) whether there were extenuating circumstances mainly of a health and safety nature and (b) whether his disobedience constituted extreme insubordination, warranting immediate discharge under the contract or merely a violation calling for one week's layoff without pay, the alternate penalty provided in the contract.

Not sufficient information was available to the arbitrator to make a finding that Rudy's use of the hoist when working alone was a necessary exercise of care and judgment against safety risks under rule E3. When Rudy under cross examination by Company counsel answered that his reason for using the hoist was to "keep up production", it appears that he could have carried out supervisory orders without risk, even if producing somewhat more slowly in his judgment. This judgment was disputed by Company testimony.

With respect, however, to the matter of extreme insubordination the arbitrator finds no justification in the facts of this case to consider the offense extreme in any sense. There were honest differences in judgment. There was no apparent reason why paragraph C could not have been followed in this case.

In view of the considerations set forth in the above opinion, the arbitrator hereby directs the reinstatement of employee Roswell Rudy, with retroactive pay except for the penalty of one week's lay-off without pay under rule 8. The parties themselves may determine whether he should be placed in Department 220 or Department 225, since no stipulation was made referring the previous transfer grievance to the arbitrator at this time.

Arbitration

TRAINING FOR ARBITRATION
The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

Arbitration for Boilermakers' Officers

CLASS OUTLINE

1. Why the need for arbitration?
2. The grievance procedure and the arbitration step.
3. Typical arbitration procedure - an overview in outline form.
4. MOVIE: "Let's Arbitrate" (American Arbitration Association).
5. The agreement to arbitrate.
    a. General principles
    b. Contract clauses of class members
6. Preparing for the arbitration hearing - general.
7. The arbitration hearing - general.
8. Preparing for arbitration - actual practice case.
    a. Stipulating the issue
    b. Main points to be developed
    c. Preparing questions and briefing witnesses
    d. Preparing exhibits
    e. Preparing the opening statement
9. Practice Arbitration Hearing.
    a. Opening statement
    b. Examination, cross-examination of witnesses
    c. Concluding summary statement
10. The decision of the arbitrator
11. Union experience with the arbitration process.

August 9, 1965

GRIEVANCE FORM - FOR USE IN STEP II

INTERNATIONAL UNION Boilermakers, Shipbuilders, Forgers, etc.

Local No. 27 Date July 3, 1964

Complaint and Grievance No. 1358 Shift Day

Department FORGE Clock No. 128

Employee's Name- George Dix Seniority 8/18/59

Statement of Grievance:

I have been temporarily removed from my job as Yard Clerk and Stock Painter in the Forge Department without just cause and my work has been transferred outside the bargaining unit. I feel that I bid on this job and am entitled to retain it as long as there is work on the job, or until I am bumped according to Seniority, Ability and Competance clause in our contract by an employee within the bargaining unit. I asked to be replaced on my job and ask due consideration be granted for any loss in pay that may consequently be administered.

Signed _____
AGGRIEVED EMPLOYEE

Management Reply:

There has been a decline in the amount of work to be performed by Dix over the past five years. In the interest of efficiency and economy it is necessary for the Company to abolish this job and assign what work remains to the Yard Foreman. For this reason the grievance is denied.

Signed _____
PERSONNEL MANAGER

Arbitration

JOB DESCRIPTION

JOB TITLE: Yard Clerk and Stock Painter

EMPLOYER: Billings & Springer Co.

REPORTS TO: Yard Foreman

DEPARTMENT: Forge

DATE: November 20, 1956 (re-analysis)

ANALYST: Roger Schwenn

PRIMARY FUNCTION:

Checks incoming stock & material, marks stock, maintains inventory in yard, fills forge department orders.

JOB DETAILS:

1. Checks stock on, off freight cars during loading and unloading operations.

2. Is responsible for checking incoming equipment, signing delivery receipts, determining whether material or equipment was damaged enroute.

3. Takes phone orders from Forge Department for ingots and billets.

4. Paints SAE numbers (various colors) to indicate orders to be picked up by Floormen or Fork Lift Operator.

5. Determines nature of first shop operation called for, as follows:

   a. Sawing, shearing, cold or hot

   b. Heat cut under press or hammers.

6. Maintains yard inventory of billets and ingots, notifying foremen when stock of particular sizes runs low.

INCIDENTAL DUTIES:

1. Spot-weighs billets and ingots to check actual weights against delivery invoice weights to determine whether mill shipped proper sizes per order.

2. Lubricates and stores dies, picks up and delivers dies with hand truck.

3. Occasionally operates yard crane when regular operator not available.

4. Helps tidy yard as directed by Foreman when other work not available.

5. Performs other miscellaneous duties as may be required.

5. May on occasion operate Fork Lift Truck.

COMPANY POSITION

1. The work on the job of Yard Clerk and Stock Painter was previously performed by a supervisor before the job was established in 1951. The job was established to meet requirements of a peak period when the work load was very great, and supervisors needed to be relived of some work to free them for other responsibilities.

2. The same kind of duties are now performed by Foremen in other departments, and have never been part of unit work.

3. There has been a drastic reduction in the amount of work available in the Forge Department from 1955 on, due to a change in materials handled and a reduction in the number of forging types produced, decreasing the inventory and a reduction in the amount of necessary yard space.

4. Hours of work spent per day on major functions of painting SAE numbers, taking phone orders and maintaining inventory has dropped from approximately six in 1955 to 3 1/2 in 1964. This was verified by an examination of daily time slips filled out by the Yard Clerk and Stock Painter for the period 1955-1964 prior to the change in work assignments.

5. The work performed on this job is primarily clerical in nature, and there is no provision in the agreement that prohibits the Company from assigning such work to supervisors if desired.

6. The Management clause in the agreement specifically reserves the right of the Company to "transfer or relieve employees from duty because of lack of work, or for other legitimate business reasons, and the right to introduce new or improved production methods or facilities....." There are plenty of arbitration precedents for actions such as the one taken by the Company in the present dispute.

7. Just because a job title appears in the Agreement does not have the effect of "freezing" it in its present form.

8. The Recognition Clause of the Agreement specifically excludes clerical employees from the bargaining unit, and further, that foremen, while acting as such, do not fall within the bargaining unit.

9. The action taken was in the interests of economy and efficiency of operations.

GRIEVANCE FORM - FOR USE IN STEP II

INTERNATIONAL UNION Molders and Allied Workers' Union

Local No. 163 Date July 28, 1965

Complaint and Grievance No. 470 Shift Days

Employee's Name Soft Iron Dept. Seniority

Statement of Grievance:

On July 26, 1965 the Company's Molders reported to work but then decided it was too hot and went home. Thereupon Management sent other employees home.

The Union contends the Company violated Article VII, paragraph 1 of the Agreement in effect.

The Union demands that the Company pay three hours pay to the 15 men of the Soft Iron Department.

Signed
STEWARD/EMPLOYEE

Management Reply:

Article VII does not apply in the case of a wildcat strike provoked by conditions beyond Management's control. There was no need for the Soft Iron Department employees when no castings were being turned out. The situation falls within the exception provided in the same Article VII (1).

Signed Owen Kapper
PERSONNEL MANAGER

GRIEVANCE FORM - FOR USE IN STEP II

INTERNATIONAL UNION Molders and Allied Workers' Union

Local No. 163 Date July 29, 1965

Complaint and Grievance No. 471 Shift Day

Employee's Name Chipping Dept. Seniority

Statement of Grievance:

On July 26, 1965 the Company's Molders reported to work but then decided it was toohot and walked off the job en masse without Management's consent. Thereupon Management sent the Chippers home.

The Union contends the Company violated Article VII, paragraph 1 of the Agreement.

The Union demands that the Company pay the three hours' pay coming to the 4 Chippers involved in the action.

Signed (see below)
STEWARD/ EMPLOYEE

Management Reply:

Article VII does not apply in the case of a wildcat strike provoked by conditions beyond Management's control. There was no need for the Chippers' services when no castings were being produced. The situation falls within the exception provided in the same Article VII (1).

Signed Owen Kapper
PERSONNEL MANAGER

Harry Holmes/s

Abe Sikorski/s

Henry Bethely/s

Irving Salmon/s

July 30, 1965

Mr. Arvid Anderson, Commissioner
Wisconsin Employment Relations Board
Wisconsin Industrial Commission
Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. Anderson:

Persuant to the collective agreement governing relations between Love Brothers - Giddings Company of Hartford, Wisconsin and Local #163 of the Molders and Allied Workers' Union, we hereby request use of an arbitrator selected by the WERB. If it is at all possible, we would like to schedule a hearing next week in order to dispose of the dispute as promptly as possible.

The Company and Union have agreed that the issue to be decided revolves around whether or not the Company, by sending workers home on July 26th, 1965, violated the following Article of the collective agreement:

Article VII - Report-In Pay

1. If an employee reports for work, unless previously notified not to report, he shall receive four bours' pay at his regular hourly rate or not less than four hours' work at not less than his regular hourly rate. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply in case the inability of the Company to provide work is due to conditions beyond its control. In the event of any down time due to power failure involving more than twenty minutes of work in any one day, employees who are required to remain at work will be paid at their base rate for the time that they are unable to perform their regular duties because of said power failure.

On July 26,, 1965, the Company's molders reported to work but then decided it was too hot to work and walked off the job en masse without Management's consent. Thereupon Management sent certain other groups of other employees home. A grievance was filed on behalf of some of these employees claiming that they were entitled to report-in pay under the provisions of Article VII set forth above. Management contends that the paragraph does not apply because the situation comes within the exception set forth in the paragraph.

We respectfully ask for your prompt action on the above request.

Sincerely,

Love Brothers - Giddings Company

Molders Local Number 163

LOCAL #163 - Molders & Allied Workers Union

LIST OF FIFTEEN AGGRIEVED EMPLOYEES OF THE SOFT IRON DEPARTMENT

Peter Herold/s

DePardo Philip/s

Don Leakway/s

Benjamin Jones/s

Duncan Pelmear/s

Admiral Nesbary/s

Ralph Dean Miller/s

Melvin L. Carter/s

Jim Gurdess/s

George E. Roper/s

Charles Morehead/s

James V. Vittorio/s

Dan Jacobucci/s

Ben Hall/s

Earl Hall/s

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
SCHOOL FOR WORKERS

ARBITRATION

1. Purposes of arbitration

   - to resolve a dispute short of a strike or lockout
   - a safety valve, beyond the regular grievance procedure
   - to resolve a situation that needs a decision
   - to test the meaning of the contract
   - face-saving

2. The basis of the arbitrator's decision

   - not what he thinks is fair, or right, or wrong; rather what he thinks the contract says in relation to the circumstances presented to him in the hearing; past practice may also be important.

   - the jurisdiction of the arbitrator is usually defined in the contract; the matters on which he may rule, and the nature of his ruling - meaning intent of parties, application, interpretation. Usually excluded are changes, additions, deletions or modifications of the contract.

3. Types of arbitration

   - ad hoc, single: one impartial individual, hired by the parties for a particular case or series of cases.

   - permanent, single: one impartial individual selected by the parties and usually named in the contract who will hear all cases for the duration of the agreement.

   - arbitration board, ad hoc or permanent: each party appoints one or two representatives to board, board in turn selects impartial chairman; decision is by majority vote of board.

4. Selection of arbitrator

   - named in contract
   - by agreement between parties
   - failing agreement, or by agreement, on application to the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, the American Arbitration Association, or some professional individual, usually a lawyer or professor or judge.

5. Procedures and methods

   - formal and informal systems

   - stipulations: may their preparation help to clarify the issue, perhaps produce a solution short of arbitration, assure a ruling on the particular dispute? or will it tend to freeze the case, reduce flexibility?

   - briefs: read at beginning of hearing, used as basis for presenting case even when not submitted; a matter of practice and choice.

   - opening statement: what it's all about, what you're going to show.

- Who goes first: not necessarily the party requesting arbitration- rather, the prosecution, the party which took the initiative in the dispute: as in a discharge, the company; in a request for an increase in a piece rate, the union.

- Direct presentation: by the spokesman (men); telling things to the arbitrator, possibly introducing some exhibits - but where you have an able witness with expert or first-hand information, his testimony will usually be more effective.

- The use of exhibits: copies of contract, grievance, transcripts of earlier meetings, pictures of the job, production records, check stubs, etc.

- Witnesses: examined (questioned) by their side, then subject to cross-examination by the other side, with the arbitrator often asking questio May also involve re-examination and re-cross-examination. Exhibits are often introduced through witnesses and explained by them.

- Summation: summary of major points made in direct presentation, throug witnesses and exhibits, with counter arguments to what other side has presented: should be relatively brief, should include specific reference to decision wanted from arbitrator.

- Post-hearing briefs: one side or the other may request permission to file post-hearing briefs: should not include new material unless by mutual agreement where facts were not available at hearing. May be use to stall, delaying a decision, as deadlines for filing are extended.

6. Follow-up, after receipt of award

- whatever the award, should be viewed as to manner in which it can be used to build the union; this a matter of how it is presented to the individual and the membership.

- see that terms of award are carried out, and that situation does not arise again; company may be resentful, attempt retaliation in same or other area.

- enforcement: if arbitrator did not exceed jurisdiction, did not engage in fraud, corruption or other misconduct, decision is enforceable in court. Will not be set aside for errors in judgment as to law and fac

- award should be considered in relation to application to other grievances, future changes in the contract.

7. Arbitration clauses

- wording of clause most important: what may be arbitrated, jurisdiction of arbitrator, limitations on his power of decision, question of whether decision final and binding or resort to strike, questions of time limits on getting case to arbitration and on arbitrator in rendering award, importance of consistency in contract, all are factor which must be considered.

SCHOOL FOR WORKERS
UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

ARBITRATION

PREPARATION OF THE CASE

Examine what took place at the earlier stages of the grievance procedure.
- what have been the company's main arguments
- what have been the union's main arguments
- what can the union exploit from the company's early presentation
- what might the company take advantage of from the union's presentation
- what approach will the company probably take
  - as indicated by previous experience in arbitration
  - as indicated by the early stages of the procedure
- what witnesses will the union need
- what witnesses will the company probably use
- who will probably be in charge of the company's presentation
- what exhibits will the union need
  - grievance
  - letters
  - contract
  - transcripts of earlier meetings
  - technical and statistical information
  - other possible exhibits (pictures, materials, records, etc.)

Check for precedents and past-practice
- settled grievances of a similar nature
- arbitration awards, local and general
- past practice, the generally accepted way of doing things which has been accepted by both parties, at least tacitly, without regard to what the contract or company rules may provide

Prepare presentation
- opening remarks; what the union will seek to establish
- direct testimony; remarks by union representative
- witnesses; reinforcing the union's contention by developing points through witnesses
- preparing questions for witnesses
- drilling union witnesses on prepared testimony
- attempt to prepare witnesses for cross examination by company
- attempt to prepare for cross examination of company's witnesses

Line up exhibits
- prepare copies for the union, company and arbitrator
- decide when and where they will be introduced
- number accordingly

PRESENTATION OF THE CASE

(Where the company has taken the initiative, as in a discharge, it is adviseable for the company to present its case first. Where the union has taken the initiative, as in an effort to raise rates, the union will probably present its case first.)

While the company is presenting its case
- take notes on company's opening remarks, direct testimony and statements of witnesses
- prepare to cross examine company witnesses
- consider the possibility of calling certain company representatives as union witnesses; may catch them off balance

The union's case
- follow a logical sequence
  - --the circumstances
  - --the contention: facts, witnesses, exhibits
  - --the conclusion: summation of case
- amend and modify or amplify prepared presentation as required in light of company's presentation
- use care in deal-ing with company representatives and witnesses
- have consideration for the arbitrator as a person
  - --maintain composure in spite of provocation
  - --have presentation well organized
  - --see that exhibits are clear and fit into presentation
  - --indicate respect, BUT NO SOFT SOAP.
- summation
  - --brief and well organized
  - --hit the main points

It is possible that one party, or both, may request the right to file briefs. If one so requests, the other party must decide whether it is important to do likewise, or whether the case can stand as presented in the hearing. Occasionally, the parties will request the privilege of replying to each other's brief. This often results in considerable delay in gaining a decision.

APPEARANCES FOR THE UNION

Chairman

Mr. George S. Hagglund - District Representative, Molders and Allied Workers' Union, AFL-CIO

Witnesses (in order of their appearance)

Mr. James Gross, President, Molders & Allied Workers Local Union #163

Mr. Edward Egielski, Chipping Department Steward, Local #163

Mr. Robert Slaughter, Grievance Committeeman, Soft Iron Department, Local #163

Mr.Charles Morehead, Soft Iron Department Steward, Local #163

2/52 News

University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

Jews - Finish

Fear - No Procedure - Needs their Explanation
Contract
Union Strength
Confidence in Steward
Law

PREPARING THE CASE

1. Questioning the Worker

- Worker's name, department, shift, clock number, job, rate, seniority, address, phone number.

- Are there other workers involved? Names?

- Name of foreman or immediate supervisor, plus names of other management people who may be involved.

- What are the circumstances: what happened, or failed to happen?
  - what did the company do? (are there witnesses, if needed?)
  - what did the company fail to do? (are there witnesses, if needed?)
  - what did the company say, who said it, and are there witnesses?

- When did it happen?
  - date, shift and hour (if needed)

- What does the worker say about his record?
  - production (quantity)
  - quality
  - any record of discipline
  - attendance record
  - attitude (has the company made this an issue in the past?)
  - does the worker have other grievances filed at this time, or has he filed grievances in the past?
  - union activity: is the worker known to be active in the union?

Writing Records

For use of Settlements

Stewards Meetings
1) Union Leaders
2) U-W
3) Films

2. Information from Other Sources

- What section(s) of the contract apply?

- Should I check with the committee on whether there are or have been similar cases?

- Should I check with other stewards and/or committeemen on procedure.

- Should I check with other workers? (same shift, other shifts, other departments)

- Should I look at the job or the materials or the working conditions?

- Should I get the worker to keep any records (such as production, time spent waiting on materials, time spent in washroom, number of times supervisor talked to him, etc.)?

- Should I ask the worker to provide back check stubs?

- Should I obtain any records or statements from the company?
  - in order to see if there is a case
  - should I do this before talking to the company, or wait for the first meeting on the case?

Files
Grievances
Supp. Agreements
Arbitration
Special Plans
Pension
Negotiation Notes

3. Preparing Case for Argument - Steward uses information obtained from his investigation as basis for notes used in presenting case to company.

UNION EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES - Appearance Number one

Local #163 President

Main Points to be brought out:

1. That Molders were not disciplined or punished in any way for walking out.

2. That work was available for both Chippers and Soft Iron Dept. employees on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

3. That weather was warm on Monday (not an important point), as well as humid.

DIRECT QUESTIONS:

1. Your name?

2. Position with Union?

   a. How long have you been President?

3. Position with Company?

   a. How long have you held this job?

   b. What other positions have you held with Company?

   c. How many years all told in foundry business?

4. Tell us, in your own words, what happened on July 26th morning?

   a. Did Company take any action against the Molders?

   b. Did the Company ever indicate that they were planning to discipline the Molders?

   c. Does the Union condone the action taken by the Molders on 7/26?

5. Was there work available on Monday, July 26th, that aggrieved employees could have performed to fill in the remaining three hours necessary to meet four hour call-in provision (ARTICLE VII (1))?

   a. Why is it possible that other employees can work while Molders are not working, in your opinion?

6. What kind of weather were we experiencing here in Hartford, Wisconsin on July 26th, at 6:00 a.m.

   a. Was it the kind of day that looked like it would get even hotter later in the day?

UNION EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES - Appearance Number two

Steward For Chippers (four man grievance)

Main Points to be brought out:

1. That chipping work, and related duties, was available in sufficient amounts to keep the men occupied for four hours on Monday morning.

2. That other men worked on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at chipping in other departments, and they could just as well have been employed as other men.

DIRECT QUESTIONS:

1. Your name?

2. Position with Union?

   a. How long have you been Steward in this Department?

   b. How long have you worked in this Department?

3. Position with Company?

   a. How long have you held this job?

   b. What other jobs have you held with the Company?

4. What does chipping work normally involve, in your own words?

   a. Under normal conditions, where does molding operation fit into your operation?

   b. How long after the Molders finish with the castings does it take for your department to begin working on them?

   c. On a Monday morning, for example, do you work with castings produced and poured on the same day?

   d. Do you ever work with castings poured on that very day?

5. Were the Molders ahead of, or behind, or about even in terms of production of castings?

   a. Have you been working overtime lately?

   b. Why?

6. Were other Chippers employed on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of the week of the walkout?

   a. Was work available for your group on the morning of the 26th?

7. Did you process the grievance for the four Chippers involved in the grievance?

UNION EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES - Appearance Number three

Grievance Committeeman employed in Soft Iron Dept. (15-man grievance)

Main Points to be brought out:

1. That there was considerable work left over from Friday to keep men in department employed for four hours on Monday morning.

2. That men actually performed this work on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday for a total of 15 hours.

3. A general picture of the relationship between heating, mold making, pouring, cooling and finishing work.

DIRECT QUESTIONS:

1. Your name?

2. Position with Union?

   a. How long have you held this position?

   b. Have you ever been Steward in the Soft Iron Dept.?

3. What is your position with the Company?

   a. How long have you held it?

   b. What other jobs have you held with the Company?

   c. How long have you worked with the Company?

4. Was there work available to do on Monday morning?

   a. What time were you sent home Monday morning?

   b. When did you come back to work?

   c. What did you do when you were called back to work?

   d. Was that work available on Monday morning when you left?

   e. How long did you work during the week of July 26th, and how many hours each day?

5. Will you explain to the arbitrator, in general terms, how a casting is made and processed, from heating to shipping?

   a. How long after the molders finish with a casting does it take for the Soft Iron Department to begin work on it, generally speaking?

   b. When do the molders generally finish with a casting before the Soft Iron Department gets it, in terms of Monday work?

UNION EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES - Appearance Number Four

Shop Steward for Soft Iron Dept. (15-man grievance)

Main Points to be brought out:

1. The nature of work available that does not tie directly to Molders' production of the same day (grinding, chipping, clean-up, trucking, inspecting, etc.)

2. That Steward handled grievance for fifteen men.

3. That work was available to employ men for additional three hours on Monday morning.

DIRECT QUESTIONS:

1. Your name?

2. Position with Union?

   a. How long have you been a Steward in the Department?

3. What action did the Company take that the men in your department objected to?

4. Explain to the arbitrator the nature of the work performed in the soft iron department.

   a. How big are the castings that you normally work with?

   b. How long do they take to cool, generally speaking?

   c. What pouring run does the Soft Iron Department normally work on Monday mornings?

5. Have the Molders been running ahead of the Soft Iron Department recently?

   a. Has the Soft Iron Department been working overtime lately?

6. Did you handle the grievance for the aggrieved men in your department?

   a. Who signed the grievance?

   b. Who signed it later?

7. Was there work available for the men to perform on Monday morning?

   a. When did they actually do this work?

   b. Could they have performed it on Monday?

UNION POSITION

1. While the Union does not condone the action taken by the Molders, the action of the Company sending the other employees home was, in effect, a penalty placed upon those employees for the action taken by the Molders. Article VII is clear - it provides that the Company work for the three hours claimed, since chipping work was available.

2. Although Molders did not work on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday of the same work week, all other employees worked for approximately five hours on each of those days.

3. Thus, if work was available on the remaining days of the week despite the fact that the Molders did not work, then there obviously was a sufficient amount of work available on the day on which three hours' pay is claimed.

4. The Molders were not penalized for going out on an unauthorized strike; therefore it is unjust to penalize another group of employees who had no control over their actions on the day in question.

5. While it is true that the Chippers did not work on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday of the week in question, other employees whose work was equally dependent upon castings did work. Chipping was available for all fifteen men, and it could have been done on Monday, just as well as on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

ARBITRATION COURSE (24 hours)

I. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND - GOALS OF THE LABOR MOVEMENT

A - Recognition
B - Economic Aims and Working Conditions
Questions: What is a worker worth? What he or she produces?
How do you measure the value of the production?
What the worker and family need?
How do you measure that?
How do you go about getting it? Strike?
Compulsory Arbitration? Buy into the company?
What else?
C - Arbitration
D - What next?

II. AGENCIES CONDUCTING ARBITRATION

A - Federal
B - State
C - Umpireships
D - American Arbitration Association
1 - Straight AAA
2 - AAA in the alternative
E - Individual Arbitrator or Board of Arbitration?
F - The Cost of Arbitration

III. THE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

A - Steps
1 - Steward and Foremen
a. Investigate the facts
b. Attempts to settle
c. Writing up the grievance - Check the contract
2 - Chief Steward and Head Foreman
3 - Grievance Committee (or Business Agent or International Representative) and Upper Level Management (attempts to settle)
B - Arbitration
1 - Definition
2 - Is Arbitration a part of the grievance procedure?
3 - Which grievances should be Arbitrated?
(Statesman or Stooge?)
a. Interest of the workers
b. Interest of the union
c. Effect of the Landrum-Griffin Act
d. Interest of the public
e. Interest of the stockholders

IV. ARBITRATION

A - The Demand
- 1 - Function
- 2 - Demand vs. submission
- 3 - Initiative with management
- 4 - A management view of management rights and arbitration

B - Choosing the Arbitrator
- 1 - Check the opinions, not the awards
- 2 - Judge? Inquisitor? or Messiah?

C - Who should present the case?

D - Arbitrability
- 1 - Effect of the Contract
  - a. By its Terms
  - b. As interpreted by prior awards
- 2 - Effect of the grievance procedure

  Question: Should a strike to achieve an arbitrable objective result in a loss of the right to arbitrate?

E - Framing the Issue
- 1 - Effect of:
  - a. Grievance
  - b. Second and Third Step Answers
- 2 - Effect on:
  - a. Arbitrator
  - b. The presentation of the case
- 3 - But what if there is no agreement?

F - Presenting the Case
- 1 - The theory of the case
- 2 - Burden of proof ("management's rights" clause)
  - a. Where there is a "just cause" clause
  - b. All other cases
- 3 - Opening statements
- 4 - Presenting the evidence
  - a. By witnesses
    - 1) Direct exam
    - 2) Cross exam
    - 3) Redirect and recross
  - b. By documents
  - c. Objections
- 5 - Closing statement
- 6 - Briefs
- 7 - Language and Logic

G - Time Study and Job Evaluation Cases

H - The Award
- 1 - Enforcement
- 2 - Setting it aside

V. "ARBITRATION IN ACTION" CRITIQUE

Note: Each session one person will argue the company case and one the union case from a fact situation and contract clause given out a week in advance. The presentation should be in the form of a final argument and should take from ten to fifteen minutes each. Members of the class will act as a three-man Board of Arbitration and will make an award on the spot.

Arbitration

TRAINING FOR ARBITRATION
The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

POINTERS FOR LOSING AN ARBITRATION CASE

1. Take a case to arbitration because the involved employees will raise a fuss if you don't.

2. Hire an attorney to represent you at the hearing and then assume that the union officers don't have to do any more work.

3. Start preparing for the arbitration hearing the evening before the hearing is scheduled.

4. Let the company stipulate the issue before the arbitrator.

5. Assume that the party that raises the most objections and makes the most noise is making the best impression on the arbitrator.

6. Let the other side harass and badger the Union witnesses.

7. Have the union witnesses read their answers to questions off a sheet of paper.

8. Try to develop the union's main points by questions addressed at witnesses or company officials called to the hearing by the company.

9. Refuse to give copies of union exhibits to the company.

10. Where the grievance is specific about contract violations, try to formulate new contract violations not specified earlier.

11. Don't tell the union witnesses what questions you are going to ask until they are on the witness stand.

12. If your international representative or others charged with preparing the case ask for material, don't send it to them until the last minute, or don't send it at all.

13. If you don't have a specific contract violation to argue, contend that the company discriminated against the aggrieved.

14. When preparing for the arbitration, don't look back at past precedents, previous grievance settlements, or previous arbitration decisions involving similar issues.

15. Postpone the arbitration hearing in hopes the company will settle.

16. Don't ask the company for involved records or information because it will tip the hand of the union.

17. When checking on proposed arbitrators, don't investigate their backgrounds or earlier decisions in similar cases.

18. Forget that you are directing your arguments at the arbitrator.

The University of Wisconsin
University Extension
School for Workers

Planning and Preparation for Arbitration

OUTLINE

1. Union Liability and Rights in Processing Grievances

   - Recent Supreme Court Decision
   - Points of Law Relating to the Grievance Procedure

2. The Contract - Grievance Procedures

   - Scope of the Procedure - what is a grievance?
   - Who can Present Grievances
   - Sample contract language - good and bad points

3. The Process of Arbitration

   - Definition
   - The Agreement to Arbitrate
   - Costs and time involved in arbitration

4. Preparing for Arbitration

   - Procedure
   - Structure of the Arbitration Hearing

5. Movie: Let's Arbitrate (American Arbitration Association).

6. Duties of a grievance officer (time permitting)

November 10, 1967

Article III - Grievance & Arbitration Procedure

Section 3.1

Consolidated Local No. 889 shall elect from its membership a Union Bargaining Committee of not to exceed eight employees who, together with the President and Vice President of the Union, shall serve as the negotiating committee of the Union, and whose members shall participate in the processing of grievances to the extent set forth in this Article.

Section 3.2

Consolidated Local No. 889 shall elect Stewards, who shall participate in the processing of grievances, to the extent set forth in this Article. The said Stewards shall be assigned to represent a department or other suitable group of employees, and the number of Stewards shall not exceed seventeen.

Section 3.3

The Union shall notify the Company promptly of the names and assignments of the foregoing representatives, and of any changes therein which may occur during the life of this Agreement.

Section 3.4

For purposes of this Agreement the term "grievance" means any difference or dispute between the Company and the Union concerning the meaning or application of the provisions of this Agreement.

Section 3.5

Grievances shall be waived unless taken up for adjustment within three working days of the occurrence of the alleged violation of the contract on which such grievance is based.

Section 3.6

The Procedure for handling grievances shall be as follows:

It is recommended that the employee discuss the grievance informally with his immediate supervisor and he may, if he desires, be assisted in such discussion by his Steward.

Step I

If the employee desires that the grievance be processed further, the grievance must be reduced to writing on a form mutually agreed upon by the Company and the Union, dated and signed by both the employee and his Steward and be filed with his supervisor within two working days after the initial informal discussion. The supervisor shall arrange for a discussion with the employee and his Steward as soon as practicable after the date of filing and shall answer the grievance in writing within five working days after the date of filing (Working days, as used in this Article, mean calendar days, exclusive of Sundays and Holidays. Saturdays shall also be excluded if the plant or mill is working a 40-hour week.)

Step II

An appeal from the answer in Step I may be taken by filing the same in writing on the grievance form signed by the employee and his Bargaining Committee, with the Mill Superintendent (in the case of Maintenance and Power Plant employees, the Chief Engineer; in the case of the Finishing [illegible] Superintendent; in the case of Laborat[illegible] Director of Research and Development) within two [illegible] after receipt of Step I answer. The appropriate Company representative (as above defined) shall arrange for a discussion of the grievance between himself, the employee and the Bargaining Committeeman. Such discussion shall be held as soon as practicable after the date of submission to Step II and the grievance shall be answered in writing within five working days after the date of filing in this Step II.

Step III

An appeal from the answer in Step II may be taken by filing the same in writing on the grievance form, signed by the employee and the President of the Local Union, with the Production Manager, within five working days after receipt of the Step II answer. The said Production Manager shall arrange for a discussion of the grievance between himself, the employee, the President of the Local Union and the Committeeman from the department involved. Such discussion shall be held as soon as practicable after the date of submission to Step III and the grievance shall be answered in writing within five working days after the date of filing in this Step III.

Step IV

An appeal from the answer in Step III may be taken by filing the same in writing on the grievance form signed by the employee and the President of the Local Union, with the Industrial Relations Manager, within ten working days after receipt of the Step III answer. The Industrial Relations Manager shall arrange for a discussion of the grievance between himself and/or such other Company representatives as he may select, and such representatives as the Union may select. Such discussion shall be held as soon as practicable after the day of submission to Step IV and the grievance shall be answered in writing within ten working days after the date of filing in this Step IV.

Step V

It is the agreed purpose to reach a prompt solution to all grievances through the cooperative efforts of the Company and the Union; however, in cases where it is impossible to effect a settlement of any grievance involving the interpretation or application of the provisions of this Agreement by these means, the grievance shall be referred to arbitration if written request is made by the Company or the Union within 10 days after the date of the answer in the fourth step.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

(a) Notice of Arbitration: Either party desiring to arbitrate any matter in dispute shall notify the other in writing, and the failure of either party to appoint its Arbitrator within ten (10) working days after the sending or the receipt of such notice, as the case may be, shall forfeit its case if the matter in dispute is arbitrable under the terms and provisions of this Labor Agreement. When any matter has been thus submitted, Arbitration shall proceed as follows;

(b) Selection of Arbitration Board: An Arbitration Board shall be organized as promptly as possible consisting of three (3) persons, one (1) to be chosen by the Company, one (1) by the Union, and the two (2) thus chosen shall meet daily to select a third (3rd), who shall be impartial and a disinterested person. If the Arbitrators chosen by the Union and Company are unable to select a third (3rd) Arbitrator within ten (10) days, then the third (3rd) Arbitrator shall be chosen by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

(c) Powers of the Arbitration Board: It is understood that the function of the Arbitration Board shall be to interpret and apply this Labor Agreement, and that the Board shall have no power to extend the duration thereof, nor to add terms or provisions thereto, no to arbitrate a dispute concerning a general wage adjustment, no to enlarge its own jurisdiction except upon mutual written consent of the Company and the Union.

(d) Arbitration Board Decision Conclusive: The decisions of the Arbitration Board concerning any matter properly arising out of this Labor Agreement and referred to the Board pursuant to the provisions hereof shall be final and conclusive upon the employees, the Union and the Company.

(e) Arbitration Expense: Each party shall bear the expense of preparing and presenting its own case and the expense of its Arbitrator. The expense of the third (3rd) Arbitrator and incidental expenses mutually agreed to in advance shall be borne equally by the parties to this Labor Agreement.

Section 3.7

Any grievance not appealed to the next succeeding step in writing and within the time limits specified will be considered settled on the basis of the Company's last answer and shall not be eligible for further appeal. The parties may, in any individual case, by mutual agreement, extend the time limits in any step.

ARBITRATION COSTS, AMOUNTS OF TIME INVOLVED

A frequently heard complaint states, in effect, that the cost of arbitration to a local union has reached the point where it becomes difficult if not impossible for a local union to resort to it often. In addition, Local Union officers often complain that too much time elapses between the filing of a grievance and the arbitrator's decision. Robben Fleming, in a recently published book titled The Labor Arbitration Process, (University of Illinois Press, 1965), studied both of these problems and made the following findings:

COSTS RELATED TO ARBITRATION

Charts I and II show per diem rates and total fees of arbitrators. Chart I indicates that in 1951-52 over half of the arbitrators were charging less than $100 per day. Practically all of the others were listed at an even $100. In a relatively few cases the rate was a bit higher than $100.

CHART I. Arbitrator's per diem hearing rates [a]

[a] Selected years, 1951–63. Discharge cases. All information taken from Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service files. Each year's sample included 98 cases.

In contrast, in 1956-57 less than 10 per cent of the arbitrators charged less than $100 per day. Approximately 58 per cent had a per diem rate of $100, almost 18 per cent charged $125

CHART II. Arbitrator's total fees [a]

[a] Selected years, 1951–63. Discharge cases. All information taken from Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service files. Each year's sample included 98 cases.

The fact that the total fee did not rise as fast as the per diem fee would suggest that arbitrators cut back on study days at the same time that they raised per diem fees. Since this appears to be inconsistent with the study day chart which follows, a logical explanation may be that the arbitrators with the higher per diem fees charged fewer study days.

CHART III. Length of hearing [a]

[a] Selected years, 1951–63. Discharge cases. All information taken from Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service files. Each year's sample included 98 cases.

If arbitrators are padding their fees this would be more likely to appear on study days than hearing days, for the former are not readily ascertainable by the parties. Our sample of study days is shown on Chart IV. It shows that there has been some upward movement since 1951. In that year about 20 per cent of the cases were decided in less than a day of study time, while in 1956 the figure was 9 per cent, and in 1963 it was only 8 per cent. The number of cases in all three periods requiring one day of study remained relatively the same. In those cases requiring more than one day, but less than two, 1951 and 1963 are not far apart, but 1956 climbed above both. The number of cases, however, is not significant and may well be accounted for by the small size of the sample. Cases requiring two days of study have shown a steady upward trend from 1951 to 1963, although once again the movement is slight. The remaining data simply demonstrates that few cases require more than two days of study. The FMCS tabulation for all cases in 1962 showed average study days of 1.84. Our tabulation for discharge cases in 1962-63 was about an average of 1.75 study days.

Conclusions from this data are tentative, but they would seem to indicate that there is a drift away from less than a day of study for the decision in any case, and that there is a slight upward drift in the number of days, up to two, which are charged for preparing the decision. Beyond two days there is no discernible trend.

CHART IV. Study days charged [a]

[a] Selected years, 1951–63. Discharge cases. All information taken from Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service files. Each year's sample included 98 cases.

LAWYERS' FEES

The best sources of arbitration statistics are the files of the two major appointing agencies, the American Arbitration Association and the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Unfortunately, in neither case do the files contain any information about fees which lawyers charge their labor and management clients. Nor were we able to locate any useful information in the hands of the bar associations. We therefore undertook our own survey. The accuracy of the results can be debated, hence we offer them only after a full explanation of how they were obtained.

We were not interested in identifying particular practitioners, but we did want to know whether counsel represented companies or unions, and the geographic area of his practice. Our theory in both of these situations was, of course, that there might be a differential of work. In large firms where hourly rates are used the rates differ according to whether a senior or junior man works on the case. In that situation we asked them to furnish us with an average hourly rate which would take into consideration differing hourly rates.

To no one's surprise, the first clear conclusion which one can draw from the survey is that management lawyers are better paid than are union lawyers. Hourly charges by union counsel showed up as follows:

UNION LAWYERS' HOURLY RATES

Fee	Number Charging	Per Cent
$12.50 to $15.00	3	6
$20.00 to $24.00	16	32
$25.00 to $29.00	19	38
$30.00 to $34.00	6	12
$35.00 to $39.00	5	10
$40.00 to $45.00	1	2
	50	100

The average fee of the union lawyer is $25 per hour. The median fee is in the $25 range, and the largest number of union lawyers charge in the range of $25 to $29 per hour. (Two lawyers indicated that they represent both companies and unions, and they are therefore included in both lists.)

The fee structure for company attorneys looks quite different. It shows:

COMPANY LAWYERS' HOURLY RATES

Fee	Number Charging	Per Cent
$15.00	1	1
$20.00 to $24.00	5	4
$25.00 to $29.00	21	18
$30.00 to $34.00	25	22
$35.00 to $39.00	28	25
$40.00 to $49.00	19	17
$50.00 and up	15	13
	114	100

The average fee of the company lawyer is $36 per hour. The median fee is in the range of $35 to $39, and the largest number of lawyers also charge fees in this range. Nearly a third of the company lawyers charge more than $40 per hour, the highest reported fee being $75 per hour.

UNION LAWYERS' TOTAL FEES

Amount	Number Charging	Per Cent
Under $200	18	31
$200–$299	10	17
$300–$399	12	20
$400–$499	10	17
$500–$599	4	7
$600–$749	2	3
$750–$1,000	3	5
	59	100

From these figures it is clear that almost one-third of the union lawyers charge less than $200 for the average case. The average total fee for the union lawyers is $315.

COMPANY LAWYERS' TOTAL FEES

Amount	Number Charging	Per Cent
Under $200	8	7
$200–$299	11	9
$300–$399	17	15
$400–$499	11	9
$500–$599	12	10
$600–$749	15	13
$750–$1,000	27	23
$1,000 and over	16	14
	117	100

A breakdown of total fees by size of cities shows the following comparison for union and company lawyers:

TOTAL FEES FOR AVERAGE ONE-DAY HEARING

Size of City	Average Union Lawyer	Average Company Lawyer
Small (Under 500,000)	$273	$491
Medium (500,000 to 1,000,000)	$297	$639
Large (Over 1,000,000)	$382	$890

The average company lawyer in the large city makes 39 per cent more than his counterpart in the medium-sized city, and 81 per cent more than his colleague in the small city. The range on the union side is much smaller. The big city union lawyer gets 29 per cent more than his counterpart in the medium-sized city, and 40 per cent more than the small city attorney.

A court reporter can apparently take about fifty pages per hour in the course of a hearing. Travel expenses would, of course, vary with the location. As to the other items, this is what we found in a survey of six cities:

COURT REPORTERS' FEES

City	Price, Original and One Carbon	Second Carbon	Attendance Fee
City 1 (Southwest)	$1.40	.40	none
City 2 (Southwest)	$1.55	.30	$9.50 per hour
City 3 (West Coast)	$1.37	.25	Not available
City 4 (Middle West)	$1.30	.40	$6.00 per hour
City 5 (Middle West)	$1.25	.25	$6.00 per hour
City 6 (East—not New York)	$1.25	.25	$5.00 per hour

Our average one-day hearing was defined as six hours, but the reporter is not transcribing testimony all of this time. The total cost of a transcript seems to run between $200 and $300, with each side paying one-half of the expense. The range of the total bill varies with the number of copies which the parties obtain. Sometimes each side obtains a copy but one of these copies is then sent to the arbitrator, along with the brief, and he is asked to return it when the case is decided. On a 200-page transcript, which might represent something like four hours of fairly steady reporting, a third copy of the transcript would cost the parties between $50 and $80, depending on the rates in the particular city.

TOTAL SERVICE FEE COSTS OF ARBITRATION

From the previous information it is possible to put together a schedule which will show what purport to be average service fee costs to a union and to a company for a one-day arbitration case. This does not represent the total cost because it does not include the following items, and perhaps others which might apply in a particular case: (1) travel expenses for the arbitrator, (2) travel expenses for counsel, (3) travel expenses for the court reporter, (4) lost time paid for committeemen attending the hearing, (5) conference room expense, (6) preparation time by company and union representatives other than counsel, (7) service fee for agency under whose auspices the hearing is conducted, (8) and any damages which the company may have to pay as the result of the decision. Of these items only travel and lost time paid are likely to add up to much.

Looking solely at the fees of arbitrators, lawyers, and court reporters the cost of an average one-day hearing emerges as follows:

	Cost to the Union	Cost to the Company
Arbitrator's fee ($400)*	$200	$200
Lawyer's fee	315	700
Court reporter's fee ($250)	125	125
Total	$640	$1,025

* Average fee per case for all FMCS cases in 1963.

In comparing lawyers' charges to companies and unions it will be remembered that hourly charges by company lawyers are more than in the case of union counsel, but that they also reported working more hours in preparing the case and in writing post-hearing briefs.

AMOUNT OF TIME CONSUMED - Grievance to Decision & Demand to Decision

CHART 1

Date	Survey Auspices	Average Lapse of Time from Demand to Decision
1954	AAA	97.5 days
1963	FMCS	154 days

CHART 2

Date of Cases	Survey Auspices	Average Lapse of Time from Grievance to Hearing	Average Lapse of Time from Hearing to Decision
1945–46	Ross	99.9 days	27.8 days
1955–56	Ross	111.7 days	45.9 days
1963	FMCS	167 days	73 days

CHART 3

Date of Survey	Auspices	Grievance to Demand	Demand to Appointment	Appointment to Hearing	Hearing to Decision
1963	FMCS	86 days	30 days*	51 days	73 days

* Three days for the FMCS to make the appointment and 27 days for the parties to reply.

52) 12000 (246.61
104
240 208
320 312
8
52

WHO CAN PRESENT GRIEVANCES?

The determination of the individuals and parties who have access to the grievance procedure and who can present grievances is important for several legal and tactical reasons.

Let's list some of those reasons:

Now, in the light of these tactical and legal reasons, let's take a look at some sample contract clauses relating to the initial presentation of grievances and discuss whether or not they seem to say what we think they should say.

Sample Clause No. 1

"The grievance shall first be presented by the aggrieved employee in person, and, if he so desires, in the presence of his department steward, to the shift or immediate foreman under whom the employee is working. The department steward shall be given an opportunity to be present at the adjustment of the grievance..."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 2

"The dispute, difference or grievance shall be taken up by the aggrieved employee, the department steward, and the foreman of the department involved..."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 3

"If an employee has a grievance, he shall report it to his steward, who shall endeavor to adjust such grievance with the foreman designated to handle grievances for that department..."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 4

"The grievance procedure shall be available to the union and to the company as well as to the employees. When a complaint originates with the company, it shall follow the same steps as a complaint originating with an employee..."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 5

"Any grievance which arises shall be processed through the following procedure: The dispute will be brought to the attention of the departmental foreman by the aggrieved employee(s) and/or his (their) Steward or Committeeman."

Comment: _____

_____

_____

****

A related issue which we should be clear about is the right of the union representative who is not an employee of the company to take part, at some stage, in the grievance procedure. Companies sometimes attempt to limit the right of their employees to obtain the assistance of their union representatives.

Let's look at some more sample clauses and discuss each one as regards how broadly or narrowly defined they are as regards participation of union representatives:

Sample Clause No. 1

"It is understood that an international representative of the union may be present on the union's behalf during step 4 and onward."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 2

"At the request of the local union, not more than two international union representatives shall be permitted to participate in discussions of grievances at top management level..."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 3

"Representatives of the Union's Regional Director and the International Union will have access to the company plant during working hours and the company office by appointment."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

****

THE UNION'S RIGHT TO INITIATE GRIEVANCES

Where there is any doubt whatsoever about the right of the union to initiate grievances, contract language which covers this problem is desirable. Many companies like to think that only individual workers or groups of workers have such rights. However, this is a position which can never be supported logically and can rarely be supported contractually. Even so the question involved is a common source of controversy.

Take a look at the following sample clauses in this regard. Which of these examples assures the union complete access to the grievance procedure?

Sample Clause No. 1

"Grievances by the company, and grievances of a general nature by the union, shall be initiated in step 4 by a written statement thereof..."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 2

"A grievance other than that filed by an employee (i.e., a policy grievance) may be filed by the union at the appropriate step of the grievance procedure."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

Sample Clause No. 3

"Grievances involving groups of employees, the union, provisions of the Agreement having general application, or policy matters, may be brought by the Union or the Management above the first step of the grievance procedure.

In any instance where the Union is of the opinion that any individual employee has failed or refused to file a meritorious grievance, the Union shall have the right to initiate such grievance at the second step in the grievance procedure."

Comments: _____

_____

_____

POINTS OF LAW RELATING TO THE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

If a union represents a majority of the workers in a bargaining unit (i.e. the union has been recognized as the bargaining agent), the company must deal with the union on any grievance it presents to management.

Although an individual worker may take up a grievance with the company on his own hook, this right is subject to the following limitations:

(1) the union has the right to be present when the complaint is settled (unless it has waived the right).

(2) any settlement cannot interfere with the terms of the labor agreement.

(3) the company is under no legal obligation to handle grievance on an individual basis (unless the labor agreement calls for this procedure).

(4) the company cannot encourage workers to avoid use of the grievance procedure. It was ruled an unfair labor practice by the NLRB when a company told workers they would get a better deal by taking their complaints directly to the foreman without consulting with the union.

RP 6/22/67

The University of Wisconsin
University Extension
School for Workers

UNION LIABILITY IN PROCESSING GRIEVANCES

Does your union have to take every grievance to arbitration? If a member believes he has a good case and insists that the union go all the way with it, can the union refuse without being subjected to legal liability? What happens if you get sued? If the union decides not to take a grievance to arbitration, what conduct is demanded in order that there be sufficient legal protection? A new decision of the United States Supreme Court has just come down which provides sound answers to most of these questions.

A Missouri man had high blood pressure and his company forced him off the job. He filed a grievance and his union took it through every step of the grievance procedure short of arbitration. The man's family doctor said he was able to work, but the company doctor imposed a veto. The union then sent the man to another doctor at union expense for another medical opinion. This doctor was doubtful and on the basis of his opinion, the union decided it would not take the case to arbitration. The man then sued the union for a breach of the union's duty of fair representation. A Missouri jury burned the local union with a judgment of $9,500 in damages, which was affirmed by the Missouri Supreme Court. The case was accepted by the United States Supreme Court because of the important labor law issues in it, and was reversed with a final ruling in favor of the union.

The outstanding holding of the case is an answer to one of the questions we posed above. Your union does not have to take every case to arbitration, regardless of its merit or lack of merit. The union has a considerable range of judgment in every case, which must be exercised in a fair and nondiscriminatory manner.

The law is well established now that every union has a legal duty to every member of fair representation. This legal duty is couched in the following legal terms, according to the Supreme Court: "A breach of the statutory duty of fair representation occurs only when a union's conduct toward a member of the collective bargaining unit is arbitrary, discriminatory, or in bad faith." But what conduct would be arbitrary or in bad faith? If the union ignores the member's grievance altogether and fails to represent him, this would be strong evidence of a violation. The Supreme Court also indicated that if the union processed the grievance in a "perfunctory" manner it might beliable.

But what is processing a grievance in a perfunctory manner? Careless delay, lack of investigation, or a general lack of enthusiasm for a member's day in court might constitute such a case. It is far easier to show the opposite by following each step of the grievance procedure and seeking all the information available. We recently told you about another new Supreme Court case that requires the company to furnish information about a grievance during the grievance procedure. Since you now have that legal right, a failure to seek pertinent information might even be considered less than sound processing of a grievance.

Also, if there is evidence of personal hostility between a union officer and a member, and that officer used his influence to have a grievance dropped, then that might be evidence of bad faith.

But all throughout such a procedure, the member also has the burden of showing that his grievance was indeed a sound one. On the other hand, union officers who decide to drop a grievance do not do so at their peril if it is shown that the grievance did have merit. The only legal standard involved is "good faith," as the Supreme Court said. In the Missouri case, the jury, by its verdict, indicated that it did agree with the member that he had a sound grievance, but since the union had acted in good faith, it had a legal right to be wrong without suffering the consequences. In other words, the member who insists that his grievance be taken to arbitration must prove two important points: (1) that the union acted in bad faith in dropping his case, and (2) on the merits, his grievance was sound. When it is considered that many cases are lost in arbitration that appear to be sound on their face, you can easily understand how difficult it may be to prove that a grievance could be won in arbitration.

The Supreme Court also made the union position a little easier in its decision when it held that damages must be apportioned fairly between the company and the union. If the company committed a violation in the first instance, the union should not have to bear the entire financial burden. A member should sue both the company and the union, and courts would have the duty of apportioning damages between the two. This brings the employer into every such lawsuit and causes him to share the burden of defense. This undoubtedly makes it more difficult for a member to recover.

This Supreme Court decision will not stop lawsuits against unions and employers in grievance cases, but it does define legal rights more clearly than anything we have had in the law previously. Most union agents will continue to do their jobs honestly and sincerely, and need not fear lawsuits if they make reasonable decisions, right or wrong.

Joseph E. Finley
OPEIU General Councsel
White Collar
April, 1967

Scope of Grievance Procedure

The most desirable definition of a grievance is one which encompasses any difference of opinion, job related of course, between the company and a worker, the company and a group of workers or, the company and the union. Unions believe that nothing is to be gained by writing a contract banning grievances which are not specifically covered by the terms of the agreement. A company which insists on such provisions places a premium on negotiators who are "crystal ball" gazers. To the extent that the contract fails to anticipate every problem the company also invites reduced morale by failing to make provision for the processing of legitimate complaints.

A series of contract clauses relating to the definition of admissable grievances is listed below. Indicate whether the clause, in each case in your opinion, is all inclusive or limited.

Sample Clause No. 1

Grievances, within the meaning of the grievance procedure, shall consist only of disputes about wages, hours of work, and working conditions, as provided in this agreement; about the meaning and application of this agreement; and about alleged violations of this agreement.

All inclusive ☐ Limited ☐

Why? _____

_____

Sample Clause No. 2

For the purpose of this agreement the term "grievance" or "complaint" means any dispute between the company and the union, or between the company and any employee concerning the effect, interpretation, application, claim of breach, or violation of this agreement.

All inclusive ☐ Limited ☐

Why? _____

_____

Sample Grievance No. 3

For the purposes of this agreement, a "grievance" is defined as any complaint, controversy or dispute concerning a question of fact, by and between the employer and the union, or a member thereof, including but not limited to such questions of fact arising either under or by virtue of the provisions of this agreement and involving the application of such provisions either to the status or to the rights, privileges, powers and/or immunities of the employer and/or of the union, or of a local union or of a member thereof, or of any person or persons employed within the bargaining unit not a member of the union but represented by the union in collective bargaining procedures.

All inclusive ☐ Limited ☐

Why? _____

_____

Sample Grievance No. 4

A grievance shall be any dispute over the interpretation or application of this Agreement or any difference which may arise between the parties hereto.

All inclusive ☐ Limited ☐

Why? _____

_____

THE AGREEMENT TO ARBITRATE*

Labor-management disputes are brought to arbitration in one of two ways, either by a submission agreement which describes an existing controversy which both parties want settled by an impartial person, or by a demand for arbitration filed by either party to a contract, provided that contract has an arbitration clause.

Of the two forms which the agreement to arbitrate may take, the arbitration clause is by far the most common. Surveys indicate that approximately 95 percent of the collective bargaining contracts in effect contain future dispute clauses. The construction of the arbitration clause is of utmost importance to both parties, for it represents a voluntary and binding agreement to settle differences in impartial arbitration rather than in any other way.

The advantage of a future dispute arbitration clause is that it leaves nothing to chance. When a controversy arises, the parties may be in no mood to agree and it is sometimes difficult to get both parties to submit to the procedures of arbitration. But when they are subject to a clause, arbitration may be initiated without delay by either party.

The agreement to arbitrate, if it does not refer to established rules and procedures, does not by itself answer all questions. Among the problems that remain are:

How shall arbitrators be appointed?

When and where shall hearings take place? And who will make these decisions if the parties cannot agree?

Shall the arbitration board consist of one or of three neutral arbitrators?

If a tri-partite board is preferred (see Glossary of Terms), what shall the remedy be if the two party-appointed arbitrators cannot agreee upon an impartial member of the board?

What about representation by legal counsel? Shall witnesses be sworn?

How shall requests for adjournments be handled? May briefs be filed?

How are hearings closed and under what conditions may they be reopened?

When will the award be rendered? To whom delivered?

How much should the arbitrator be paid?

*Material adapted from "Labor Arbitration - Procedures and Techniques" published by the American Arbitration Association.

THE ARBITRATION HEARING

The date for the hearing is fixed by the arbitrator and the parties.

The customary order of proceedings is as follows:

1. Opening statement by the initiating party, followed by a similar statement by the other side.
2. Presentation of evidence, witnesses and arguments by the initiating party.
3. Cross examination by the other party.
4. Presentation of evidence, witnesses and arguments by the defending party.
5. Cross examination by the initiating party.
6. Summation by both parties, usually following the same order as in the opening statements.

This is the customary order. The arbitrator may vary this order, either on his own initiative or at the request of a party. In any case, the order in which the facts are presented does not imply that the "burden of proof" is more on one side than the other, for both parties must try to convince the arbitrator of the justice of their positions.

JS:1/64

Arbitration (preparation) [Poler]

Get witnesses together prior to hearing

Put questions to them (have written in advance, but ask orally of witness) — Strike questions that are too troublesome — add needed questions

Don't ask questions to which you don't know the answers —

Don't let co. Lawyer make proceedings too formal — if "objections" raised to question don't back down — at least make arbitrator rule (preferably to note objection but hear the answer)

Work on letting people know what to expect — overcoming intimidation

Force Co. through Arbitrator to produce their case and its support — if they challenge production, where are the records, etc.

(why come, or don't come — Ape in Bar 9/10 ⁰⁰ Everton B. Tender] Supt of Schools Sales Tax

Preparing Case

Memo sheet

Listen — carefully, critically

Ask questions of worker — a) Get More Info b) Sharpen Info

→ Investigate

→ take Notes

Sources of info:

Info in a complaint

Where get

Facts — what happened

Contention — what should (not) have happened

Request for Settlement — remember retroactive

Files { Grievances (written & unwritten), Supp. Agree, Arbitration
Special plans (Pensions, etc.) Negotiation Notes
McEvoy, Seniority lists, Grievance Hearing Notes where do members live?

~~workshops — 3~~

Written Grievances

Take Notes
Using Complaint forms, Chron

Preparing Case
Investigation – Sheets
Case
Presenting Issue – Narrow vs. Broad

Selecting Case – not too hasty
Where there is a choice estab. Principle
What can be taken – Feinsinger on Pat Practice
Working on Jones Case

Questions

Sheets – Read

Film Producer
Actors – characters
What to watch for Process – formality vs. informality attitude

Jones Case
Prep – getting facts where list sources

Sides { ask the 'Criminal law' stand } Procedural Due Process vs. double jeopardy

Shifted in #4 after if not guilty from 'what's the remedy' to If guilty what is the penalty proper

Goat – co
Contentions
"Sullen"

Film – Arbitration in Action

Discharge case – arbitration –
Union protests ——— reinstate, back pay
Co – for good cause

Assn has appointed arbitrator

6/24/57

Oath – optional fairly informal
Union went ~~first~~ Introduction only – is this customary
Introduction

"Demand" for arbitration
from Int'l Rep

Issue – get it stated was Heathcliff Discharged for just cause if not, what remedy

Co. first –
K cited – Joint Exhibit #1
Statement of case
Absences
Tardies
4/20 incident that caused discharged

Union – opening statement

Co.

Witness — personnel director — 14 years sworn identity established

Info on worker
stock clerk — drove truck

Relaxation on rules of dis charge

To Exhibit #1 dis charge slips
1) warned several times have been absent without notice
2) inefficient in driving the truck

Any complaint about work yes, lifting of heavier crates
"lumbago"

Employment record (presented to Union) — Exhibit #2
Was it an original record

12 absences
20 tardies

March only — 11, 12, 13 absent wife called on 3/12 wanted to know where he is

Absence 4/20 on a business trip left early, & did not return

Cross examined by Union any other records

did you warn — yes, indirectly (through wife) told Co of lumbago when hired — are you anti-union; do you like him lost Co. customer by slow "delivery(?)

Something New — ~~Not Tolman~~ Bob Manning Unknown Witness — helper in Stockroom was at plant on Sat. 4/20 went with Heathcliffe (Boggess)

2 at Heath. initiation

Started at 8:30, warehouse, Parade witness loaded truck — finished 11:30 went to Boston for lunch 12:—1:30
Drink? 3 or 4 beers

Another place until 3:30 3 or 4 beers
Back to plant at 5:30

Cross: not even warned, when was 1st Time talk in office — week ago —
"Concerted" — don't like word, don't answer if you don't understand lot of absentees

3rd Witness — Supt

Night before — week order for next day
2 hours should do it for trips

4/22 — Monday — gave slips in Supt office

Cross — no questions, no warnings (Too short for establishing prejudice "you don't like"

Recess — because of new testimony

Union case

Witness — BA

Not a year of K — 1st arbit.

Heathcliff is shop steward

Call from H. on 4/22 about discharge

Called to arranged meeting

To: absenteeism was point —

What mention about ~~on~~ 4/20 — just say time

Had told to that they were disc.

The Man — Engdahl

Co had given good Conduct pin

Worked 10 years

No warnings or discipline

Active in Union — Started it — Steward

His Story — Fri Night 4/19 — Hennish talked to

Went to Cincinnati — wasn't ready

No drinking — tried to get back safely

Steward meeting

Cross by Co — Service pin or good Conduct

Absences — 3/11, 12, 13 — Vague response

[prepared for this due to absenteeism case]

4/20 Loaded — Launch

L Some beer

later to another place

Held up by Marathon (Ship?)

Summary — 1 minute

Procedural due process

Reason known to to at time must be the reason —

To — Author of book cited

Capital punishment of ind rel.

Cites another to — W. Wirtz, Arb.

Cite

Due process has no applicability

Decision — usually have time (30 days)

1) What is issue — equal was discharge for just cause

2) Cause — absentee — inefficiency

3) Was he guilty

12 days absent — no warning

at least some others have equally bad

4/20 — Neglect of job by admission

4) was penalty proper

Hayland

ARBITRATION AND TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE: A Survey of Experience in the 1960's

I. INTRODUCTION

A contention that was frequently expressed in the first two years of this decade alleges that "automation" has become an increasingly larger area of controversy between organized labor and management(1). There are, of course, a considerable number of ways in which the controversy could be expressed, including stalemated negotiations, authorized and sanctioned strikes, court proceedings, NLRB hearings, increased usage of the grievance procedures provided by the contract, "spontaneous" walkouts or slowdowns, arbitration hearings and so on. It is, unfortunately, difficult to make an empirical determination about the amount of friction traceable to automation, or for that matter, the amount traceable to other causes. To complicate matters still further, reliable information concerning strikes, contract negotiations, grievances and other types of disputes is almost impossible to find in government records and the industrial relations literature, without having to make matters more difficult by trying to identify and sift out those disputes arising from automation or technological change. A partial exception is found in the case of arbitration proceedings, however - a considerable number of arbitrators make a practice of sending reports of arbitration hearings to the Bureau of National Affairs and similar labor-management services for publication, and the student of industrial relations has the opportunity to collect information from these reports.

According to Slichter, 90 to 95 percent of all labor agreements in effect in 1959 provided arbitration as the final step in the grievance procedure(2). The arbitration hearing is a major contractual outlet for unresolved disputes between the two parties and normally provides that a disinterested third party render a decision that is binding upon the parties involved in the dispute. If there really is more friction arising out of matters related to technological change, it is reasonable to expect the number of arbitration disputes to increase. The primary purpose of this paper is to determine whether the previously described contention of "increased labor-management friction" in matters related to technological change is demonstrated by the available reports of arbitration experience of the past year and a half. In order to see whether a change has actually occurred over preceding experience, it is of course necessary to compare the recent decisions with earlier arbitration experience, which will also be done in the course of this paper. Our major hypothesis, therefore, will be as follows: "A larger proportion of labor-management disputes, culminating in the arbitration hearing and involving technological change, occurred in the period running from the middle of 1960 to the end of 1961 than occurred in the period 1953-'54, an approximate equivalent."

This paper will also consider the following related questions, first for the period 1960-'61, and then the later period will be compared with the arbitration experience for the roughly comparable period 1953-'54, as follows:

1. What areas of personnel administration tend to become involved in disputes related to technological change?

2. What are the jobs, and what technological changes are involved in labor-management disputes?

3. What unions and industries are involved in disputes over technological change?

4. What is the nature and effectiveness of the contentions of labor and management in these disputes?

5. Who participates in an arbitration hearing called for resolving a dispute arising out of technological changes?

6. What proportion of all reported arbitration cases include issues arising out of technological innovation?

7. What is the effect of such changes upon jobs and job content?

8. Is technological change having an effect upon the collective bargaining process?

II. METHODOLOGY

"Automation" is a popular non-technical equivalent for the term "technological change" in the layman's (and many arbitrators') parlance. The two terms will therefore be treated synonymously hereafter. The terms are defined as "The installation and use of new or improved equipment and machines accompanied by varying amounts of change in jobs and job content." "Equipment and machines" will include servomechanisms of an automatic or semi-automatic nature, with or without self-adjusting and self-monitoring features. Changes in operations or methods not accompanied by a change in equipment or machinery will not be be considered to be bona fide technological change.

The data are drawn from the Bureau of National Affairs' Arbitration Reports bound in Volumes 21, 22, 23, 35, 36 and 37. The paper is based upon the reports published between the dates September 7, 1953 and December 31, 1954, and the dates September 7, 1960 and December 31, 1961. The 1953-'54 period was chosen because economic conditions were approximately the same as for the period extending from the middle of 1960 through the end of 1961; both periods include parts of recessions and extend into the beginning of recovery periods, and both were peacetime periods.

The Bureau of National Affairs publishes almost all of the arbitration reports mailed them by the various arbitrators desiring to see their decisions in print. Some arbitrators send BNA reports on most hearings in which they participated where they could secure the permission of the parties. It is very probable that permanent arbitrators report a larger proportion of their cases to BNA than do ad hoc arbitrators; there is no reason, however, to suppose that this introduces an unforgiveable bias to the results. It is likely that the cases reported by the Bureau of National Affairs are reasonably representative of all arbitration cases heard and decided upon during the two periods previously defined.

Arbitration disputes involving technological change were identified by applying the previously described definition of automation to each of the cases reported by BNA during the defined periods. This involved reading the titles and digest of each report and determining whether or not there was "technological change" involved in the dispute. The system, while far from foolproof, is believed to have been sufficiently precise to identify the greater number of disputes of the type to be studied. BNA reported on 543 arbitration hearings during the period 1953-'54, of which number 13 were judged to involve technological change; BNA reported 647 arbitration hearings in the period 1960-'61, of which 38 included some form of technological change. Some of the reports considered several grievances and made several distinctly separate decisions; one case involved 52 separate decisions (15).

More data were collected than could possibly be presented; the data will be grouped, where it is possible, and general responses made to the questions phrased earlier - reference will be made to specific BNA reports wherever possible (see footnotes at back of paper).

III. RESULTS

The results indicated a significant increase in the percentage of cases involving technological change - 5.7 percent of the 1960-'61 disputes involved technological change compared to 2.4 percent for 1953-'54. There was an accompanying increase in the number of cases reported; 647 were reported in 1960-'61 compared to 543 for 1953-'54. The preceding percentages indicate that disputes involving technological change are relatively few in number; it is probable, however, that their importance far outweighs their numbers and have a greater impact upon the parties than is accurately indicated by frequency of occurrence. The reports indicate that management actions tended to be more drastic and involve larger numbers of workers than was the case in other types of disputes.

What areas of personnel administration did the disputes over technological change tend to erupt in? The issue of crew reductions was disputed by unions in 41 percent of the cases of the 'Sixties (5,7,8,9,12,15,17,18,21,24,26,27,36,38). Crew reductions were disputed in only 15 percent of the cases in the period of the 'Fifties (45,46). Abolishment of jobs was disputed in 22 percent of the cases for the 'Sixties (6,19,25,28,31,32,33,34) and only one case in the 1950's(51). In the period 1960-'61 the reduction in number of jobs and people working was by far the largest source of anxiety to workers and unions, while it was a far less serious problem in the period 1953-'54.

Other subjects for dispute between the parties, for the period 1960-'61, include the following, in order of importance: disputes involving new jobs (10,11,14,29,30); job or work jurisdiction (11,13,20, 30,35); rate adjustment disputes (4,10,14,22,33,37); addition to work load (4,22a,37); seniority rights of female workers (25,31); dispute over issue of seniority versus ability in promotions (29); and finally, determination of amount of royalties to be paid into union fund (16).

For the period 1953-'54, the most important issue, by far, centered around the determination of rates and job classifications (40, 41,42,43,47,49,50,52).

What kinds of jobs were involved in disputes in the two periods? The largest number of disputed jobs were of a semi-skilled machine tending nature in both periods. The disputes reported in 1953-'54 did not involve any white collar or technical employees, while six cases in the period 1960-'61 did (3,6,11,14,30,35). The period in the 'Sixties indicated that a larger proportionate number of cases involved unskilled jobs, such as truckers, machine helpers or attendants and maintenance helpers, although the total number of cases was small in both periods.

What kinds of technological changes occurred? In both periods the largest percentage of disputes involved the installation of new equipment or improvements to old equipment. For the period in the 'Sixties, 55 percent of the cases were of preceding type (6,8,11,14,17, 18,19,20,21,22,22a,23,26,28,30,32,33,36,37,38,39) and in the 'Fifties new equipment or improvements to old equipment or improvement to old equipment (40,42,43,46,49,52). The installation of automatic or semi-automatic equipment elicited disputes in 29 percent of the cases in the 'Sixties (3,4,7,10,12,13,27,31,34,35) and none for 1953-'54. Other disputes in 1960-'61 centered around the issues of containerization (16, 24) and centralization of power house controls (5,29). Other disputes in 1953-'54 involved changes in loading and warehousing (45,50) and equipment or process changes of an inconsequential nature (41,51). Automation is truly a problem of the 'Sixties, judging from the arbitration evidence!

What unions are involved in disputes over technological change? For both periods, the United Steelworkers of America led the field, by a large margin, for disputes involving automation. For the period 1960-'61, other unions include the United Auto Workers, the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers, the United Mine Workers, the Glass and Ceramic Workers, the Bakers and Confectioners and others (see footnotes for complete listing).

What industries appeared most often in disputes related to technological change? Basic steel and steel fabrication, considered as a group, led the field in both the 'Fifties and 'Sixties. Food processing figured in a considerable number of cases in the period 1960-'61 (12, 26,27,31,33,34,38). Other industries involved in disputes in the 'Sixties include chemicals (5,9,11,32), 'longshoring (16,24), railroading (13,39), electrical manufacturing (6,10,23,25), and paper, newspaper and printing (7,17,37). For the period in the 'Fifties, other industries included aircraft (42), shoe manufacturing (43), food processing (45), textiles (46), chemicals (48), and grain milling (50).

What arguments were commonly employed by the parties during the period in the 'Sixties? The most frequently noted (and presumably the most compelling to arbitrators) management argument arranged itself around one and/or both of the following premises: Management has an inherent right to make any technological changes deemed necessary to increase productivity and improve plant efficiency and no contract clause should be interpreted as limiting this fundamental right; second, Management has the unilateral right to make changes in jobs, or job content, that are deemed necessary to adjust to and take full advantage of technological improvements made in the work place. Unions, on the other hand, argued that any changes affecting employees in the bargaining unit were both arbitrable issues and matters for joint determination (the arbitration disputes were usually protesting unilateral actions by management). Unions often argued that the safety and health of employees was threatened by the changes accompanying technological innovation (particularly in cases of increased work load and abolishing of jobs). In a couple of instances, the unions charged that "technological changes" existed only in the minds of management and were not found in the work place; actually, they stated, automation was being used as an excuse to make changes in jobs that they could not otherwise make without negotiating with the union.

Unfortunately, no time was available to compare the arguments of the 'Sixties with those used in the period in the 'Fifties.

How did the arbitrators react to the arguments of the parties? The decisions, in the 'Sixties, were normally very much in favor of the companies. The unions were favored in only 13 percent of the cases (6,10,16,35,37). Unions were favored in disputes concerning rate disputes (10,37), amount of royalties payable to the union fund (16), in a case involving abolition of a job - the arbitrator held that the job still existed (6), in a dispute where the company attempted to transfer a programming function to a salaried, non-union technical employee (35). The employees and unions were largely unsuccessful in claiming that companies should negotiate matters pertaining to technological innovations. Contract language appeared to play a minor role in decision-making by arbitrators.

For the period in the 'Fifties, the arbitration decisions were surprisingly different; the unions got favorable decisions in 53 percent of the cases involving technological changes (40,43,44,45,49,50,51). They were favored in disputes involving pay commensurate with increased productivity (40,43,49), reduction of crew (45), abolishing jobs (51) and freezing job content and rate until negotiations (50) - arbitrators of the 'Sixties held that similar contract clauses "did not apply" where technological changes were introduced, and management had an inherent right to "unfreeze" involved jobs.

What are the backgrounds of arbitrators participating in the hearings? Information is not available for every arbitrator, so percentages will be based upon the 34 cases where information was available for the period 1960-61; fifty percent of the arbitrators were associated with the legal profession compared to 70 percent in the 'Fifties. Economists, industrial relations specialists and persons in similar fields (Commerce, etc.) were used in 44 percent of the reported cases of the 'Sixties compared to 23 percent for the same type of people in the period ending in 1954. Twelve percent of the arbitrators in the 'Sixties had industrial engineering training compared to eight percent (one case) in the period ending in 1954. Of the individual professions, the economists gained the most ground and the lawyers lost the most in the seven-year period. The preceding figures do not add up to 100 percent for either period - some arbitrators indicated proficiency in more than one area (Economics - Theology, etc.).

What kinds of occupational backgrounds were found among the people appearing for the companies? Information was available for 21 out of 38 hearings for the period 1960-'61 and eight out of 13 hearings for 1953-'54. For the period 1960-'61, the occupational breakdown is as follows: lawyers, 76 percent; industrial relations managers, personnel managers and personnel assistants, 67 percent; production management, 52 percent; labor relations experts, industrial engineers, electrical engineer, other specialists, 38 percent; top management (vice-president and above), one case. For the 'Fifties the breakdown was as follows: lawyers, 88 percent; industrial relations personnel, 63 percent; production management, 38 percent; experts and specialists of the types described for the '60's, 25 percent. Comparison of the two periods suggests that fewer technicians were utilized in the 'Fifties and fewer lawyers in the 'Sixties.

What are the occupational backgrounds of the persons appearing for the unions, and how often did they appear? Information was available for 22 out of 38 hearings for the period 1960-'61 and for seven out of 13 hearings for 1953-'54. The occupational breakdown for '60-'61 follows: full-time paid union staff (international or business representatives); 73 percent, local union officers, 64 percent; lawyers, 50 percent; local union committee members, 27 percent; chief stewards and stewards, 18 percent; witness, one case; the grievant, one case. For 1953-'54, occupations were as follows: full-time paid union staff, 43 percent; local union officers, 57 percent; lawyers, 29 percent; local union committee members, 29 percent; chief stewards and stewards, one case; no witnesses appeared and the grievant appeared in one case.

What is the effect of technological change upon the disputed jobs? The major effect, it appears from the arbitration record, is to reduce the number of jobs within the bargaining unit, as the unions have had little success in preventing the company from making crew reductions and abolishing jobs. There are, of course, disputes involving new jobs, but they do not come near replacing the numbers of jobs that are lost, at least insofar as the cases here reported are concerned. The 'Sixties' arbitration experience involved rate adjustments far fewer times than in the earlier period - more union efforts were directed at "slowing down" the rate of technological change. Due to the relatively few number of cases reported in 1953-'54, a note of caution is indicated when making comparisons; in general, the unions appeared to be more successful in moderating the effects of technological change upon their members in the earlier period than in the 'Sixties.

What effect has recent technological change (insofar as arbitration disputes are concerned) had upon collective bargaining? The arbitrators are in more or less agreement that companies have the inherent right to change methods, equipment and jobs as a part of their fundamental and unassailable management function. The decisions have favored the management argument much more than the unions' (see earlier results). The decisions of the arbitrators have tended to remove from the collective bargaining table the actions, of management, stemming from technological changes.

IV. DISCUSSION

The proportion ot arbitration cases involving technological change does not appear unduly large, if we generalize from the published arbitration reports. Slichter and colleagues noted in their book that practitioners and scholars are "unduly preoccupied" with the idea that a low volume of arbitration cases is "good" while a high volume is "bad," and they suggest that the contrary might be true (53). He illustrates by including several cases showing companies that have secured favorable decisions in a large majority of cases (54). He suggests that it may be advantageous for management to increase the volume of arbitration disputes rather than seek settlement through other channels (at the bargaining table, settling in low stages of grievance procedure, labor management committees, etc.). His suggestion would appear to be worthy of consideration for disputes involving technological change, as nearly 87 percent of the decisions favored the companies in the 'Sixties. Thus, it might be to the advantage of management to increase the number of technological change disputes carried through to arbitration, as the likelihood of a favorable decision is quite good, provided the stock contentions are employed.

On the other hand, Slichter points out the potential "risks of winning;" if management succeeds in securing favorable decisions in too many of the arbitration cases, there is a risk that the union will lose faith in the arbitration process and seek satisfaction through other means (55). The record of decisions favoring management in disputes related to "automation" is such that it may become disillusioning to local unions and members - to forestall the results of this disillusionment, Slichter suggests that a few "weak" case be occasionally allowed to go to arbitration - the resulting decisions are assumed to restore rank-and-file faith in the arbitration process with a continuation of a status quo generally advantageous to management.

The arbitration reports indicate that the process is not a major channel for resolving disputes, contractual or otherwise, related to automation and technological change. Union leaders choosing between various methods for solving problems of technological innovation would find the arbitration record unimpressive. The arbitrators have been more sympathetic to the "inherent management rights" argument than they were in earlier years. The major concern of unions in cases of the 'Sixties has been with job security; in the 'Fifties, it was with rate and job classification adjustments. "Increased pay for increased productivity" no longer is a major topic for arbitration, as it was in the earlier period.

If arbitration has done little to enhance union members' job security, it has done considerably more for industrial relations technicians; they are being utilized, in the arbitration hearing, in greater numbers than was the case seven years earlier. Lawyers are used less often, although they are still the largest occupational group appearing for the various participants (unions, however, are using lawyers oftener than in the period 1953-'54).

Management appears to enjoy three major advantages in presenting their arguments to the arbitrator; authority is more centralized, they are less "hampered" by a respect for democratic representation of grievances, and are hence able to screen out poor arbitration risks more efficiently; they employ more skilled technicians who more effectively gather facts and present cases; and finally, the arbitrators appear to be more sympathetic to management arguments than they were seven years earlier.

END

George Hagglund
January 8, 1962

Footnotes

1. Barbash, Jack. "The Impact of Technology on Labor-Management Relations." From forthcoming volume, Adjustments to Technological Change. Industrial Relations Research Association, Sterling Hall, University of Wisconsin. (1962)

2. Slichter, Livernash and Healy. The Impact of Collective Bargaining on Management. Brookings Institute. 1960, page 739.

3. Bethlehem Steel Company, Shipbuilding Division and Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers ofAmerica. 1/15/60, 35 LA 72.

4. United States Ceramic Tile Co. and United Glass & Ceramic Workers 3/7/60, 35 LA 113.

5. Allied Chemical Corp. and United Steelworkers of America. 6/13/60, 35 LA 289.

6. Borg-Warner Corp. and United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers. 4/14/60, 35 LA 367.

7. United States Steel Corp. and United Steelworkers of America. 6/30/60, 35 LA 588.

8. Waltham Screw Company and United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers. 11/21/60, 35 LA 602.

9. Midwest Carbide Corp. and Oil , Chemical and Atomic Workers. 6/29/60, 35 LA 618.

10. Magnavox Co. and International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers. 12/9/60, 35 LA 662.

11. Linde Co. and Oil Chemical and Atomic Workers. 11/15/60, 35 LA 664.

12. California and Hawaiian Sugar Refining Corp. and Sugar Workers Union. 11/30/60, 35 LA 695.

13. Union Pacific Railroad, Order of Railroad Telegraphers and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. 1/3/61, 35 LA 810.

14. Western Union Telegraph Co. and American Communications Assn. 5/27/60, 35 LA 856.

15. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. and United Glass and Ceramic Workers. 6/60, 36 LA 21.

16. New York Shipping Assn. and International Longshoreman's Assn. 11/16/60, 36 LA 44.

17. Publishers' Assn. of New York and New York Mailers' Union. 8/11/60, 36 LA 86.

18. Bethlehem Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America. 2/13/61, 36 LA 162.

19. United States Steel Corp. and United Steelworkers of America. 9/24/60, 36 LA 273.

20. United Carbide Plastics Co. and United Mine Workers, District 50. 9/16/60, 36 LA 376.

21. Bethlehem Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America. 3/17/61, 36 LA 394.

22. Keasby and Mattison Co. and United Cement, Lime and Gypsum Workers. 9/16/60, 36 LA 423.

22a. New York Air Brake Co. and Int. Assn. of Machinists.

23. Triangle Conduit & Cable Corp. and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers . 6/5/61, 36 LA 1097, 24. Hilo Transportation & Terminal Co. and International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. 1/5/61, 36 LA 1132.

25. Essex Wire Corp. and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. 6/18/61, 36 LA 1254.

26. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. and International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America. 2/9/61, 36 LA 1289.

27. McGough Bakeries Corp. and United Bakery & Confectionery Workers. 8/1/61, 36 LA 1388.

28. Independent Lock Co. of Alabama and International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers. 6/22/61, 36 LA 1392.

29. Wisconsin Electric Power Co. and International Union of Operating Engineers. 6/21/61, 36 LA 1401.

30. United States Steel Corp. and United Steelworkers of America. 8/8/61, 37 LA 6.

31. American Sugar Refining Co. and United Packinghouse, Food & Allied Workers. 7/6/61, 37LA 16.

32. Diamond Alkali Co. and United Mine Workers of America. 5/5/61, 37 LA 24.

33. Borden Ice Cream Co. and Dairy & Bakery Salesmen and Dairy Employees.

5/9/61, 37 LA 140.

34. Braun Baking Co. and American Bakery & Confectionery Workers. 5/12/61, 37 LA 169.

35. General Motors Corp. and United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers of America. 9/16/61, 37 LA 192.

36. Bethlehem Cornwall Corp. and United Steelworkers of America. 8/28/61, 37 LA 318.

37. Weyerhaeuser Co. and Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. 9/11/61, 37 LA 323.

38. Libby, McNeill & Libby and International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. 9/20/61, 37 LA 466.

39. Union Carbide Metals Co. and United Steelworkers of America. 8/2/61, 37 LA 501.

40. Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp. and United Steelworkers of America. 7/29/53, 21 LA 84.

41. Veeder Root, Inc. and International Assn. of Machinists. 7/16/53, 21 LA 387.

42. McDonnell Aircraft Corp. and International Assn. of Machinists. 10/26/53, 21 LA 424.

43. International Shoe Co. and United Shoe Workers of America. 8/21/53, 21 LA 550.

44. Bethlehem Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America. 10/19/53, 21LA 598.

45. Weston Biscuit Co. and Biscuit and Cracker Workers Union. 12/10/53, 21 LA 653.

46. Celanese Corp. of America and Textile Workers Union of America. 12/17/53, 22LA 148.

47. Jones and Laughlin Steel Corp. and United Steelworkers of America. 2/4/54, 22LA 270.

48. International Minerals and Chemical Corp. and International Chemical Workers Union. 3/15/54, 22 LA 446.

49. Dayton Steel Foundry Co. and United Steelworkers of America. 2/26/54.

50. Nebraska Consolidated Mills,Inc. and American Federation of Grain Millers. 3/7/54, 22 LA 785.

51. Lone Star Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America. 8/27/54, 23 LA 164.

52. Bethlehem Steel Co. and United Steelworkers of America. 9/7/54, 23 LA 340.

53. Slichter, et al: op cit, pp 774.

54. Slichter, et al: op cit, pp 778

55. Slichter, et al: op cit, pp 799

ALBERT KING CASE

BACKGROUND

Albert King has worked for the Trane Company during his current period of employment since March 28, 1954. He was hired to work on the Gilbert Milling Machine in Department 326. He worked at this job for a period of some 18 months to the apparent satisfaction of the Company. During part of this time, King served in the position of supervisor which is a job of some responsibility in the nature of leadman and carried with it the sum of 5¢ per hour over the regular rate.

King is a former employee of the Company. He was hired on about Jan. 22, 1951 (with a seniority date of May 22, 1951) and ended his employment on April 1, 1953. The fact that he was rehired indicates that the Company held his abilities in some regard.

The issues in this case do not reflect a dispute as to King's general abilities as a worker. The Company has insisted that the man is well qualified and capable. It is on these very attributes that the Company bases part of its contention - it has said that such a man is capable of better work on the basis of his record and experience and that therefore his alleged recent errors must be viewed more sternly.

NATURE OF COMPANY CHARGES

In a series of meetings with the Union grievance committee, the Company detailed the charges against King. All of the incidents occurred on the third shift. The Company charges are as follows:

In November, 1954, King was working on heat exchangers on the Gilbert Mill. A notation on the blue print called for a groove 11/16 inches deep. King is alleged to have gone 1¼ inches deep instead of 11/16 inch on one unit. The Company said that the Material Review Board (a government board which checks on work being done for the government) had been watching King's work on the basis of his recent performance and informed the Company that it would accept no more errors. (The Union, of course, does not encourage faulty work and fully appreciates the need for quality on both government and civilian orders).

On Friday, Nov. 19, 1954, the Company has said that King was taken off the Gilbert Mill and placed on the adjoining lathe operation. According to the Company, this change was accompanied by an AVO slip which indicated that he was being moved due to errors in his work which made it unacceptable to the Material Review Board and that he was to be removed from the Gilbert Mill and all machines until further notice. (AVO stands for "avoid verbal orders" and is a form regularly used by the Company for the transmission of instructions.) This AVO slip was shown to King but was not returned to him after being taken away by the foreman.

(The Union contends that the Company is in error as to the date of King's removal from the Gilbert Mill. The Union contends that King stayed on the Gilbert Mill until approximately December 8, 1954. He continued to run all regular work except units pertaining to 542 and 547 - heat exchangers - and in addition, ran a radial drill, an old lathe on the opposite end of the job, and swept and cleaned up, all before being moved to the lathe).

On Thursday, Dec. 9, 1954, the Company stated that Rider 49999 was issued to build up and remachine three engine air inlet headers which had been machined .10 inch short. These errors were charged to King, now on the lathe, and the Company says it cautioned King about checking his work to insure adherence to required tolerances and reminded him of the importance of quality. The Company says that King indicated that he would check each piece. The Company stated that King had not stamped his pieces but that he finally "admitted" that he must have run them if the other pieces were accounted for. However, the Company also stated that this matter of stamping was somewhat incidental to the case (page 5, minutes of Jan. 27, 1955 meeting).

(The Union wishes to point out that if King ran these pieces and did not stamp them, this did not indicate an intent on his part to avoid responsibility for the work. King turned in to his foreman the core numbers of his pieces with the knowledge that this made the work traceable to him. At other times, heat exchangers have been milled too short and riders issued to that effect, also stating that the operator was unknown even though the units were stamped with individual markings. Many units are repaired by welding, etc., on operation #66).

On Monday, December 13, 1954, the Company stated that Rider 52966 was issued covering King's work and involving repairs on 8 units on which the high pressure outlet header groove had been machined about .01 inch too deep. The Company said that King had run one piece at which point the foreman checked the job. The foreman checked all the demensions except the groove in question which the Company says the foreman could not check without a checking fixture. It says that the foreman asked King about the groove and that King replied in somewhat colorful language that it was OK. The Company says that King then proceeded to run 7 more units all containing this one error.

(The Union contends 1) that seven rather than eight units are involved. The eight units were lying behind the lathe. The error on one unit was the responsibility of another operator. This point is not made to quibble about numbers; the Company showed marked interest in King's earlier alleged failure to stamp his work - yet in this instance the Company failed to adequately identify his work. In addition, the fact that one unit was chargeable to another worker indicates that errors of this nature are not restricted to King's work (see below - How Errors Are Handled On Days). 2) There is a dispute as to the foreman's role in checking the job after the first piece. The Union contends that the foreman did not check the depth of the groove although King asked him to do so before the foreman was called away. Although the Company says that the foreman could not check the groove without a checking fixture, the Union suggests that if the worker could check it, the foreman would be equally capable of doing so. Furthermore, King had already run one unit which was available for checking in its entirety. Finally, in the light of the Company's expressed concern over the alleged inaccuracies of this worker, the Union suggests that the Company as represented by the foreman might have shown a more acute interest in checking this phase of the work of a man who was under observation).

ACTION TAKEN BY THE COMPANY

On Friday, Dec. 17, 1954, the Company called in the Union grievance committee, announced the results of its investigation regarding King, and stated that it was going to penalize him with one week off without pay and a final warning that future acts of negligence would be cause for discharge. This decision was formalized in a COMPLAINT REPORT, as follows:

> Albert King has displayed marked negligence in the performance of his assigned duties. He was transferred on or about 11-19-54 from the Gilbert milling machine because of machining errors on heat exchangers resulting in rejection of the work by the Materials Review Board. He was given written notification of the faulty work and was removed from the job. He has since been negligent on two occasions while working on the lathe. The last instance discovered this week involved machining errors on 8 heat exchangers.

The report was dated Dec. 17, 1954, and was signed by T. A. Rodman. The disposition stated:

> One week layoff without pay and final warning that future acts of negligence will be cause for discharge.

A penned notation said: "effective 12-20-54.

This same report was made apart of the minutes of the meeting with the Union grievance committee on Friday, Dec. 17, 1954, indicating that the Company was prepared to act prior to any consultation with the committee.

It was on this date, Dec. 17, that the Union first heard of the matter. Although there was no steward in that department at that time on the third shift, the Company had never involved a steward from another department or shift, or a grievance committeeman in the absence of a steward (both common practices) in its discussions with King, and had never discussed the case as it developed at any of the frequent meetings with the Union grievance committee.

At the meeting on Dec. 17, the Union indicated that if the man wished to file a grievance the Union would investigate the case (page 3, minutes of Dec. 17, 1954 meeting). The worker did subsequently file a grievance on January 7, 1955, stating that he felt he had been treated unjustly and requesting pay for the time he had off.

UNION'S POSITION RELATIVE TO COMPANY'S CHARGES AND ACTION

The Union makes two basic contentions relative to the Company's charges and action in this case. In the first place, the Company admittedly went outside the contract in its handling of this case and in the imposition of the penalty. The Union believes that the Company is bound by the contract, and furthermore, that if the Company had followed the procedure provided in the contract, the case never would have been aggrevated to the point of a disciplinary layoff.

In the second place, the Union entertains considerable doubt as to whether the discipline imposed was justified under all of the circumstances which will be detailed below.

Action Outside The Contract

Among the 38 pages which constitute the main body of the contract, 9 pages, 21 to 29 inclusive, or 23.7 percent, are devoted to Article VI, Rules and Regulations. This Article states in great detail a wide variety of rules and provides with painful explicitness for the penalties which will result from any violation of the rules.

The Union has presumed that within this part of the contract are the rules and regulations which the Company believes are necessary for its efficient operation. This is a negotiated agreement with the Union signing its name to a contract including these most detailed rules and penalties. The Union agreed to these nine pages of rules and penalties. It did not agree to permit the Company to by-pass these rules at its discretion. The Union contends that there is nothing in the case of Albert King which requires the Company to act outside the contract even if it had the right to do so which the Union believes it does not. The Company has been able to get along with these rules for almost five years. Management's right to discipline is clearly defined and limited, if you can call it that, to nine pages.

Article VI is not a general clause stating, for example, that management has the right to discipline for just cause and that the Union has recourse to the grievance procedure in the event of a dispute. In this case, the Company has signed a contract which spells out exactly what will happen in every situation. Nonetheless, in this case the Company said that it had to go outside the contract.

In previous meetings with the grievance committee on this case, the Company had difficulty expressing itself as to the nature of King's offense. It said that "this case involves negligence", that "it could be described in stronger terms such as deliberate disregard of the foreman's orders", that "maybe it could be regarded under many rules," that "you might call it deliberate scrapping of materials", or "if there is such a term as deliberate negligence or refusal to follow instructions it might be involved", and, in summary, that "it is unique in that it does not fall within the rules that are written in the contract". (References are to pages 1 and 2, Dec. 17 meeting)

> (The Union here suggests the question in its mind as to what may happen to its relationship with the Company if either party is permitted to wander at will from this and perhaps other provisions of the contract because in the opinion of one or the other party, a situation is "unique", or in the event that it feels cramped by the confinements of any current agreement.)

However, the Company could not bring itself to call King's offense any of these things. Although some of the Company's suggestions are reminescent of the language in the first four rules, a violation of any one of which calls for immediate discharge, in the opinion of the Company they did not apply - nor does the Union suggest they should.

Nor did the offense in the Company's view fall under Rules 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, or 17. There are three specific mentions in the contract of the Company's chosen penalty of one week off without pay, but the Company did not choose any of these rules. One week off without pay is found in various applications of Rules 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 and 17. The Union suggests that this wide latitude permitted in matters of discipline also acts as a limiting factor which makes it unnecessary and contractually improper for the Company to go outside the contract as the Company acknowledges that it did in this case.

The Union contends that the Company was not helpless in the case of Albert King. The contract specifically provides for cases of this nature under Rule 5. The possible application of this rule was never mentioned by the Company to the Union in the early meetings on this case and the Company expressed surprise when the Union, after its investigation, suggested that this rule be applied at the Jan. 27, 1955 meeting.

Rule 5 comes into frequent use. It is found on pages 22, 23 and 24 of the contract and provides as follows:

> Efficiency and good workmanship will be required of all employees. This Rule will be applied as follows:
>
> a) Using a standard measuring stick for employee performance, the management will apply this Rule in regard to employees whose record indicates unsatisfactory performance in accordance with the following procedure.
>
> b) The Union and the Management will discuss each case for the purpose of selecting those individuals who justly deserve a first warning. The Management's decision will be final as to those cases to receive warnings.
>
> c) Individuals who receive a first warning shall be permitted a thirty (30) day trial period to determine whether their performance has been satisfactorily improved.

d) At the end of the thirty (30) day trial period, the Union and the Management will again discuss each case. The Management will determine which, if any, of the so warned employees are in violation of this Rule. The first violation of this Rule will result in a compulsory transfer of the infringing employee to another department. The Management and the Union Committee will each designate two (2) departments into which the employee may be transferred. The employee may select the department into which he will be transferred, but he must select one.

e) If, after an individual has received a transfer into a new department, he will then be given a sixty (60) day trial period to determine if his performance in the new department is satisfactory. The Management will again discuss each case with the Union and determine whether the employee has violated the Rule for the second time. A second violation will result in a compulsory transfer of the employee to another department. The Management and the Union Committee will each designate two (2) departments into which the employee may be transferred. The employee may select the department into which he will be transferred but he must select one.

f) If, after an individual has received a second transfer into a new department, he will then be given a sixty (60) day trial period to determine if his performance is satisfactory in his new department. If the employee is again found by the Management to be in violation of this Rule, he will receive an automatic discharge.

g) The selection, discussions, and any resulting transfers resulting from Rule No. 5 will not come under any formal time-table except that the first trial period will be at least thirty (30) days long and the second and third trial periods will be at least sixty (60) days long.

h) Under the application of Rule No. 5, an employee may receive a warning as specified in paragraph "c" and improve sufficiently during the thirty (30) day trial period in which case the warning will be dropped; or an employee may improve sufficiently after a transfer to a new department as specified in paragraphs "d" or "e", in which case the warning will also be dropped. Under no circumstances, however, will an employee be permitted to accumulate more than three (3) warnings as specified in paragraph "c" within a period of less than a year and a half. Receipt of a fourth warning during this period will result in discharge.

i) Any results of the operation of this rule shall be subject to arbitration in accordance with the grievance procedure set forth in this contract.

It should be noted that this rule deals with "efficiency and good workmanship" as required of all employees. This is the basis of the King case - the Company complained of his workmanship. 5-a refers to "unsatisfactory performance"; this is in line with the Company charges against King.

The Company's form "NOTICE OF FIRST WARNING" used under Rule 5 quotes the "efficiency and good workmanship" phrase at the top and then proceeds as follows:

> A review of your job performance based on speed of production, use of working time, accuracy and cooperation indicates that you are below average on:
>
> ____USE OF WORKING TIME
> ____SPEED OF PRODUCTION > ____ACCURACY
> ____COOPERATION
>
> Therefore, in accordance with the 1950-55 Labor Agreement, the Company is invoking Article VI, Rule #5, paragraph (c) which states:
>
> > "Individuals who receive a first warning shall be permitted a thirty (30) day trial period to determine whether their performance has been satisfactorily improved".
>
> At the end of the thirty (30) day trial period your performance will be jointly reviewed by the Company and the Union. If your job performance, based on the above four traits, has shown sufficient improvement the warning will be dropped. If satisfactory improvement has not been shown, however, you will have violated Rule #5 and will be subject to paragraph (d) of that Rule.

The Union calls attention to the words "accuracy" and "cooperation" as used in the NOTICE OF FIRST WARNING. Certainly the Company's charges against King were in the realm of accuracy, and the Company's implications of "deliberate disregard of foremen's orders", "negligence", "deliberate scrapping", "deliberate negligence" and "refusal to follow instructions", which the company seemed to feel fell under none of the rules, may be considered to deal with the problem of cooperation.

It should also be noted that when Rule 5 is applied, the Union is consulted at every phase of the procedure. In the case of King, the Union knew nothing about it until the Company announced its intent to procede against the man outside the contract.

There is a reason for involving the Union in the application of this Rule. Although Management's decision is final (with the Union having the right to file a grievance), the participation of the Union committee in the discussions of a case makes it possible for the Union to know what is happening, and not infrequently to assist a warned or transferred worker to make good. The union is able to reinforce at a different level and from the worker's perspective the Company's desire to straighten out an employee. The Company felt that King was capable but needed to be straightened out, and could find no rule under which to do it. The Union believes that Rule 5 gave the Company exactly what it needed. In addition, personal problems uncovered by the Union's investigation under Rule 5 cases are often found to be contributing factors to on-the-job problems. This would have held true in this case as will be subsequently explained.

The Company expressed a real desire to see King Straighten out, but it failed to use the rule which, among other uses, had a specific application; which would have given the Union the opportunity to enter the case at the beginning when it might have done some good; and which would have really alerted the worker to the nature of the Company's objections to his performance. King contends that he was never cautioned about prior alleged errors until he was taken off the Gilbert Mill. He states that he did not know that the Material Review Board had its eye on him. The AVO slip given to him which the Company says detailed the reasons for his removal from the Mill was taken by the foreman and never returned.

The Union suggests that the Company could have better expressed its concern over a good man which it felt was apparently slipping by applying Rule 5, by seeing to it that he was given an opportunity to retain the AVO slip, and by checking his work closely through the foreman - an omission in the case of 7 units which precipitated the Company's decision to lay him off for a week. The timetables in Rule 5 are qualified under 5-g as being informal - it is perfectly conceivable that no transfer would have been necessary had the Rule been applied with all its many opportunities for investigation and discussion.

The effect of what the Company did do was to place the man under extreme pressure, teetering on the brink of discharge, not knowing what minor error might cause his dismissal. This is in direct contrast to all other rules, and especially Rule 5, which let a worker know just where he stands at every phase of their application.

Circumstances Which Suggest the Injustice of the Company's Action

The Union's major contention is that the Company had no right and no need to go outside the contract. However, the Union does not just state that the Company did it wrong. There are circumstances involved (all of which would have come to light under an application of Rule 5) which cast grave doubt on the justice of the Company's action, aside from other considerations.

1) Defects in jigs and equipment.

Prior to the alleged error leading to King's removal from the Gilbert Mill, mistakes occurred on three units of 3105 due to improper jig stops and alignments. The day worker made the same mistake and stated that the jig was wrong.

While charged with eight bad units on the lathe, King only ran seven of them. Someone else ran the eighth and made the same error. The Company did not, so far as the Union knows, check the checking equipment to see if the error might have been in the equipment itself. The foreman did not attempt to measure the groove on the finished piece nor of the piece on the lathe.

King's cutting tools on the Gilbert Mill were inspected and passed by the foreman and Company inspector, but were rejected by the Navy inspector. So far as the Union knows, the cutting tools on the Gilbert Mill and the lathe were not checked for possible defects before King was disciplined.

The Union has discovered a jig used on the Gilbert Mill and lathe (but on different units than apply in this case) which was at least .007 inches off. The Union suggests that there is room to consider that King's jigs may have been off.

The Union has discovered another jig which was determined as at least .0035 inches off.

The Union suggests that its investigation of jigs and cutting tools makes at least possible the conclusion that errors in King's work may have been beyond his control.

2) The manner in which errors in this department are handled on other than the third shift.

There were welders working on the first and second shifts in this department, but not on the third shift. When errors such as those charged to King occurred on the first or second shifts, they are welded up and remachined. The Company is familiar with this practice and acknowledged at previous meetings that when a worker has brought his error promptly to the attention of supervision, it has been possible to build up the groove by welding and remachining the unit. There is an implication here that King might have done likewise had he caught the first error and had a welder available. It has already been noted that many units have been repaired by welding on operation 66.

The Union contends however that the usual practice on the first and second shifts is that if a man makes an error he does not go to the foreman or superintendent. Instead, he goes and has it welded up on his own and machines it over again without consulting supervision.

The Union suggests that it is possible that the absence of welders on the third shift contributed to a situation under which the Material Review Board put the Company on the spot for a common practice which could not be conducted on the third shift and that the Company therefore felt compelled to take action against the worker. The Union is not attempting to justify errors occurring on other shifts, but it does point out that King did not have the resources available to him which others enjoyed. Errors were occurring on the other shifts but no discipline resulted because the errors were immediately repairable. The Company has made no effort to discontinue this practice since the time it was informed of it by the Union on Jan. 27.

3) King did not have a chance to become familiar with the lathe.

King was placed on the lathe on about Dec. 8, 1954. The Company's first charge against him on the lathe was on ~~Friday,~~ Thursday, Dec. 9. Even an experienced machinist requires a little time to familiarize himself with the operation of an unfamiliar machine.

In connection with the Company's charge involving the seven units which was reported on Monday, Dec. 13, King was not familiar with the checking equipment, a detail which should have concerned the Company to the extent of instructing him in its use and checking more closely on his work, particularly since it was concerned about his performance. It should be noted that only one working day elapsed between these charges, hardly a long time in which to become familiar with a new operation. (Rule 5 provides for a minimum trial period of 30 days).

4) King was not aware that he was on the spot.

Some of these facts have already been mentioned but will be restated as being pertinent to this section.

King states that when he was taken off the Gilbert Mill he was not cautioned about previous alleged errors or informed that the Material Review Board was watching him. The AVO slip given to him at the time of his removal from the Gilbert Mill was taken away by the foreman and never returned. The Company could perhaps not insure that he would keep it, but by seeing to it that it was in his possession it would have served to emphasize the Company's concern. Both of these items would have been subject to thorough discussion under an application of Rule 5.

5) King had a serious personal problem.

At the time of the occurrance of the Company's charges, King was involved in a serious and tragic misfortune. His wife was confined to the hospital and lost their child at birth. This same event had occurred on several previous occasions. Such things will affect all aspects of a man's behavior. At about the same time, parties unknown inserted sugar into the gas tank of King's car, requiring some $500 worth of repairs.

In the initial discussion of this case with the Company on Dec. 17, 1954, and before the Union had knowledge of these facts, it raised with the Company the possibility that some personal problem might be involved. The Company accepted the possibility but suggested that it was nonetheless necessary to have an attentive worker from a safety standpoint. The Union acknowledges the soundness of this view, but points out that if Rule 5 had been applied at the beginning, these facts would have been discovered and the problem could have been dealt with in view of all the circumstances.

SUMMARY

The Union's contentions are that the Company had no right to go outside a contract which is most exhaustive and explicit in matters pertaining to discipline; that the Company had a rule - Rule 5 - at its disposal which if properly used might well have caused the problems resulting in this hearing never to arise; and that in view of the many circumstances cited by the Union, the Company not only acted improperly but also without sufficient cause.

The Union requests that the disciplinary action against Albert King be removed from his record and that he be compensated for his lost wages.

UNION LEADERSHIP ACADEMY

FALL SEMESTER

APPLIED UNIONISM CURRICULUM

WORKSHOP ON ARBITRATION

In Cooperation With

New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations
Cornell University

Labor Education Department
Pennsylvania State University

Labor Program
Institute of Management and Labor Relations
University Extension Division
Rutgers - The State University

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Introduction to Arbitration Course

The rules and procedures for arbitration vary according to the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement or the rules adopted by the arbitrator or the arbitration board. No effort is made in this course to deal with the rules or procedures provided in collective bargaining ontracts since these usually depend upon local circumstances. Thus, procedures which arise before the actual conduct of an arbitration proceeding are omitted here. A set of simple rules are used in the mock arbitration proceeding.

The emphasis is generally upon the technique of analysing cases, particulary in relation to the provisions of collective bargaining agreements. This is the central problem which confronts the union whenever it finds itself having to use the arbitration clause of its agreement.

Since an arbitration decision necessarily relates to the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement under which it arose, arbitration awards do not have the value or significance that decisions of law have. Therefore, none of the decisions cited here nor any of the conclusions reached in the course of these sessions have any direct bearing upon cases which arise in your experience in the future. The important thing is that you sharpen your own tools of analysis, not that you learn any facts or precedents of value elsehwere.

The course consists of two parts. The first is a series of brief cases, disputes which have arisen in various places in industry. These are to be read and analysed with the aid of two work sheets in this section of the binder: 1) arbitration analysis form and 2) arbitration witness form. The second part of the course is built around longer cases which are used in a mock arbitration proceeding.

When to Take A Case to Arbitration

Decide in each of the following cases whether or not you think the union should take the case to arbitration. Be ready to give reasons for each answer.

	Arbitrate? Yes	Arbitrate? No
1. The union agreement is about to expire. The grievance committee is deadlocked with the company over an issue involving subcontracting of a plant repair job. The contract is silent on subcontracting.	____	____
2. It is in the middle of the contract year. The company and union are disputing rates set on new jobs. The contract provides that all unresolved grievances may go to arbitration in the fifth step.	____	____
Would your answer be the same if the contract was about to expire?	____	____
3. A steward was fired. The company alleges that the reason was "unsatisfactory work" and too many unexcused absences. The union agreement simply states that a worker may be fired for "just cause". This steward has been under some company pressure for agressive handling of grievances.	____	____
4. A worker was fired for leaving the plant without permission. It had been a fairly common practice but recently the company has been getting tougher. Two workers received one-day layoffs recently for the same offense. The contract has three months to run.	____	____
5. The contract states that the company may set job standards subject to the grievance procedure. The union has lost two arbitration cases on this subject in the past six months. Now a grievance has arisen involving about 50 workers in a plant of 300. The contract expires in 60 days.	____	____

Handling Arbitration Cases

1. The Union Agreement

The starting-point in all arbitrations is the union agreement. If there is any part of the contract that covers the point at issue, it will be considered first by any arbitrator in making his award. If the contract is silent on a matter, or if the language is unclear or not detailed enough, the arbitrator will look to other standards for judgment.

2. Plant Practices

Where the language of the agreement is not a sufficient guide, an arbitrator will look into the practices of the particular plant where the arbitration case arises. Here he will look at how similar problems have been treated in the past and at such evidence as records of grievance or bargaining sessions where they have been discussed.

3. Practices in other plants of the same company or industry

Where neither the union agreement nor plant practices form a reliable guide, arbitrators sometimes take account of practices elsewhere in the company or industry. Strictly speaking, they are not supposed to do this. They are obligated to decide the issue on the basis of the particular plant and the particular agreement before them. There are no such things as legal precedents in arbitration, except where permanent arbitrators are established and there is a specific agreement that precendents will be used.

There are hazards to both sides in wandering too far afield to get supporting evidence.

4. Practices in industry generally

The same comments made in point 3 above apply here. These practices are even more remote from the plant where the problem arises. But arbitrators love to quote each other and sometimes when they can find no other reason for a decision, they will look to other arbitration awards on the same subject. The hazards to both unions and management of deciding an issue in the chemical industry on the basis of a decision in ladies' garments are obvious.

Subcontracting is a good example of an issue where arbitrators look at general practice in the absence of contract language and specific plant practice where the case arises.

Arbitration Analysis Form

Company _____

Summarize issue, including settlement desired:

_____

Union _____

_____

Points on which union and company can agree:

1 _____

2 _____

3 _____

4 _____

5 _____

6 _____

Points union will try to prove:

1 _____

2 _____

3 _____

4 _____

5 _____

Points company will try to prove:

1 _____

2 _____

3 _____

4 _____

5 _____

Clauses from agreement union will rely upon:

1

2

3

Clauses from agreement company will rely upon:

1

2

3

Arbitration Witness Form

List names of witnesses of union first, then company	For each witness enter briefly -
	What he or she is expected to establish	Questions to ask of witness on cross-examination

ARBITRATION ANALYSIS

Discharge for Leaving Plant

Arthur Black, a millwright at the XYZ Company, was planning a vacation in Arkansas. He wanted to get off early on Friday, July 11, so that he could get a head start. He asked his foreman, Bill Sims, if he could leave at noon on Friday. It was Thursday when he asked. Sims looked a little annoyed and said that he did not think it would be possible, with three welders out of the plant on loan and one thing and another. However, when Black persisted, Sims finally said that if the job on which Black was working was near enough to completion by noon the next day, Sims would let him know, and he could get off.

Later in the day, Sims told Hal Peterson, the lead millwright, to tell Black to hurry and weld a plate on which he was working, if he wanted to get off early. Peterson passed this word along to Black Friday morning. Black was pleased, for it seemed to him that things were shaping up just the way he hoped.

Black did not see Sims that morning, except at a distance. He did not make any special effort to see Sims. If anyone had asked him, he would probably have protested, he didn't want to bother Sims.

Black had his welding line and torch with him at the machine on which he was working. He was going to shift to another part of the job where he would no longer need to use the welding equipment. He asked his mates if they could use it after he left. They told him to leave his buggy there, and one of them would lock it up in the maintenance shop.

Several times on Friday morning leadman Peterson, according to Black's account, gave Black hand signals concerning his work. Several times during the morning Peterson gave him signals meaning "tighten up" or speed up. Around noontime Peterson gave a signal that Black interpreted to mean "knock off". Other millwrights were around when the signals were given. Sam Fogler was working alongside Black. A number of the men, Fogler in particular, say that they saw the signals.

At noon, Black put his helmet and goggles on his buggy and walked towards the shower room, about 35 or 40 yards ahead of Peterson. Sims was in his usual place at the maintenace office desk. Black went to the showers, clocked out and headed for Arkansas. While on vacation, he received a call from the local president saying he had been discharged.

The union has proceeded with his case. The grievance committee has talked with most members of the crew. They say that the job on which Black was working was finished Friday afternoon at 3:30 p.m. Fogler reports that he saw Peterson give the hand signals and he would have assumed, in Black's place, that the signals meant he could leave. Fogler added that as steward, he would certainly think that Peterson had authority to let Black leave early.

The agreement has a standard "management rights" clause. Included in the Company Rules, Group II, First Offense - Discharge is the following.

"18. Leaving the plant and plant premises during working hours without authorization."

Charles Dexter, the Company's personnel man says that a notice had been posted six weeks earlier on the maintenance bulletin board to the effect that all shift changes had to be approved by Sims.

Several of the men on the millwright crew argue that they have changed their schedules by talking with Peterson. There are more men who would acknowledge that they have re-arranged their schedules personally with Sims. It seems to be a matter of "to whom do you like to talk?". But everyone agrees Dexter is right about what the board says. A few fellows add, "But who reads the board? There's so much junk there anyway".

Sims naturally is annoyed about the whole matter. He is saying to a number of the maintenance men that he knows why Black left his buggy out in the mill. He was afraid to check back in the maintenance shop, where he would run the risk of confronting Sims.

1. Fill out the Arbitration Analysis Form.

2. Determine who are the witnesses for each side and fill out the Arbitration Witness Form. Pay special attention to what each witness is expected to establish and what questions could be asked on cross-examination. Do not use a witness if you think his testimony might hurt your case.

ARBITRATION ANALYSIS

Case of the Gabby Clerk

Elvis Kowalski worked nights and went to college during the days. He was absent on payday (Thursday) and on Friday on his own time went to the payroll office to pick up his check, according to company practice. He stood beside the desk of a payroll clerk for 10 minutes while she carried on a three-way telephone conversation which the employee said consisted of "hideous laughs and nonsense". After 10 minutes of listening he pressed down on the connector bar, interrupting the conversation. The clerk then looked for his check and told him it wasn't there. He came back two hours later, and she told him she did not like what he had done and wanted him to go with her to see the office superintendent. He agreed. The superintendent said he had been in the wrong and must apologize. He refused, and was suspended by the superintendent. The next day he saw the Assistant Director of Industrial Relations who said he should apologize and, if he did, he could return to work. Again he refused and a grievance was filed. Several conferences followed, with the company offering several times to take the employee back if he would apologize, or say that he was sorry about his part in the telephone incident. He went so far as to say he would exchange apologies, but would go no farther. The company said in that case the discharge would stand.

The company relied on a clause in the agreement providing discharge for "interfering with the work of an employee".

At one of the grievance meetings on the case, the union brought in Stewardess Doris Murphy who had been in the payroll office when the incident had occurred. She stated that the conversation had taken place between two girls in the payroll office (whose phones were bridged together on one line) and someone else outside. She said that a great deal of giggling was done, but that it was impossible to tell what subject the conversation was on. It was her firm opinion, however, that it was not a business call. She said that as soon as the employee left, the girl whose call was interrupted had rushed in to see the superintendent. The company offered no evidence to refute her testimony, but insisted that it was a business call. Furthermore, they pointed to the "management rights" clause stating their authority to run the company and reiterated that "nobody was going to tell them how to run their office".

The union said at the first grievance meeting that the company had acted improperly by suspending Kowalski without giving him an opportunity to have union representation. However, they said they would not raise this as an objection at the arbitration because they were sure they would win the case. They also mentioned the "cooperation" clause and said the company was not being very cooperative by making an employee wait 10 minutes to pick up his check when he is in the payroll office on his own time.

The company brought into the grievance discussion a report from John Gardzit, the watchman who had been involved in the parking-lot incident with Kowalski six months earlier. Kowalski had driven in almost at shift change and, finding no space available, had parked in a visitors' lane. Gardzit ordered him out of there, and through Kowalski was in a hurry, he paused long enough to call Gardzit a "nosy s.o.b.", and several other names which Gardzit found too salty to put in the report. Kowalski also blew his horn noisily out of anger. The company said that this report had raised a doubt in their minds as to whether Kowalski had the right attitude towards the company and its employees, and the latest incident in the payroll office had confirmed their suspicions.

The discharge clause listed the causes for discharge and one of the causes was "interfering with the work of an employee".

1. Fill out the Arbitration Analysis Form.

2. Determine who are the witnesses for each side and fill out the Arbitration Witness Form. Pay special attention to what each witness is expected to establish and what questions could be asked on cross-examination. Do not use a witness if you think his testimony might hurt your case.

Case of the Discharge of a Local Union President*

Melvin Capote had been working at the Right-Wing Company as a Pressman for a number of years. Altogether he has had twenty years with the Company, in various jobs, since he worked his way up to his present job, which is one of the top-paying jobs in the plant. He made his greatest strides during the war years, when younger men left the plant for military service.

He has been president of Local 945 for about eight years. Previously, he had held minor offices in the local union, and he had been steward several times. He is a very popular fellow, always willing to listen to any member about problems big or small. As a matter of fact, the men and women in the department often stop at Melvin's machine, to air their grievances, since they know they will never be given a brush-off by him.

In addition to his activity in the Union, he is active in his church and in many civic organizations. When the community decided to solicit volunteer contributions for a new War Memorial Recreation Center, Melvin was up to his ears in the work. He discussed the project with his local union Executive Board, and they decided to make an all-out drive in the plant, to get funds. The drive had become very closely associated with the unions in the community (there is a large and active union membership here) and also with some of the churches and other civic organizations. The five large companies, including Right-Wing, had been approached, but they had taken no action yet about their contributions.

The local union executive Board decided to make collections in the plant. Melvin approached the Company personnel director, Mr. Lawrence, and told him of the union's action.

"We are going to make an all-out drive on this thing, Mr. Lawrence, and we want to solicit money right here in the plant. When the fellows are not busy, of course. But we think we can really do the job this way. This will be a really big thing, you know. Wrinleville doesn't have any decent place for our people to have meetings and hold dances, and we are thinking we might be able to finace a group of sports activities as part of the center. It'll be a big thing, Mr. Lawrence, bigger than anything we've attempted."

Mr. Lawrence fidgeted as he listened to Melvin's glowing account of what could be done by the people, for the people and so on.

"Well, I think that's just fine, Melvin. Why don't you just hang up a collection box at the time card racks? The fellows can put their money in as they come and go."

With this, Mr. Lawrence made ready to break up their conversation and leave. Melvin was badly disappointed. He tried to persuade Mr. Lawrence.

"Oh, that won't do the job. You know how hurried the men are when they come in at shift changes, and they are even worse when they are going home. Now, I was thinking that one of our men could make a tour of the plant. We would be willing to pay him for lost time, of course, and that way he could really do the job. I know everyone wants to support this project of ours."

"No, I am afraid we just cannot do that. It would take too much time. It would disrupt production. It just wouldn't work, Melvin. Try the collection box and let's see what happens. We can always change our approach later, if necessary."

And with a broad smile, Mr. Lawrence left Melvin thoroughly dissatisfied. He decided not to hang up the box.

The following Sunday the local held its regular monthly meeting. Melvin made a long report on his conversation with Mr. Lawrence. He had been talking it over with members of the executive board, and by now the Company's lack of cooperation really took on gigantic proportions for him. Meanwhile, he had been meeting with the Recreation Center committees, and his concern about the project mounted.

He talked at length about his conversation at the local meeting. Subsequently, when various members were asked what he said, there were conflicting accounts. The local secretary had only a minute on the final action, so that the actual statements could never be verified. It appeared that Melvin had left the impression with some of the local members that the Company would not cooperate in the solicitation. One of Melvin's strong supporters finally moved that a letter be sent to the principal Recreation Center Committee, regretting that management at the Company would not cooperate and that accordingly funds could not be solicited there.

Among other things, the letter said: "The President of Local 945 regrets that the Right-Wing Company refuses to permit our union stewards to solicit funds in the departments, for this very important cause. Our local union regrets that we are prevented from cooperating with you because of the Company's attitude". The letter was signed by Melvin.

Meanwhile, rumors were throughout the plant. Workers were discussing the Company's refusal to cooperate. At the same time, there were some production difficulties. The material supply department was having trouble, and as a result defective board was being conveyed to the press rooms, and substantial amounts of printed box blanks has to be discarded. The supply machine crews complained that there was something wrong with the glue, but the foreman said it was the same glue they had been using for months. The defect in the board did not really show up until after the cutting, creasing and printing, so that large quantities were wasted before corrections could be made on the supply machines.

* This was has been adapted from Case 12, page 152 of COLLECTIVE BARGAINING: PRINCIPLES AND CASES by Dunlop and Healy, with the permission of the publisher, Richard D. Irwin, Inc., for use ataff training seminar of the Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO.

At the end of the week Melvin was called to Mr. Lawrence's office. Mr. Lawrence said he had heard from several members of the standing committee and members of the union that it was too bad the Company took such a bad position on the Recreation Center collections. When Mr. Lawrence asked where they got this idea, he was told they had all heard it at their union meeting. Lawrence insisted that Melvin had reported their differences incorrectly and that he should issue a written statement correcting the story. Melvin was annoyed to begin with, and after further exchanges, he insisted that it was none of Mr. Lawrence's business what happened at union meetings, and that he had better give the names of the "squealers". Lawrence sent him back to his machine, and by this time both men were in a temper.

Two hours later, Melvin was called to the plant superintendent's office. John Carlson, superintendent, formerly was a member of the union. He asked Melvin to sit down and began with a casual comment about the difficulties they were having with board and box blanks. He continued,

"But that's not really why I called you up here, Melvin. We have to do something about this business of the local meeting and what you said about Mr. Lawrence. You know he is quite upset and insists that you retract your statement. I think he is right, and that you ought to clarify your statement at once."

"I don't know what bothers Mr. Lawrence", Melvin replied. "He has no business meddling in what we do at our meetings. I have nothing to to retract."

"Well, Melvin", Carlson continued, "I really think in view of all these production difficulties, you had better retract right now. You know, you have some responsibilities here, too, and this whole think is getting pretty bad against you. I would advise you to change your mind and make a statement right now. If not, I shall have to suspend you".

"I am not making any retraction", Melvin countered.

"All right, Melvin, then you are suspended as of now. We'll let you know in a day or two whether the thing becomes a discharge. We have to review the facts. You can consider this the notification to the union."

Melvin left, but he went through his department before punching out and left a trail of rumor and gossip as he departed.

The next day he received a formal notice from the Company, and the local union received a copy, as required by the agreement:

"You are hereby discharged. The reason is your having made false statements concerning the Company and its officers, and you have repeatedly violated the rules of the Company. Production records, furthermore, indicate that you are not performing your duties properly. These matters have been called to your attention, but you have refused to cooperate".

The union has taken up the case, and it is now on its way to arbitration. Additional things have been happening and being said.

The Company has been questioning employees about the statements made by Capote at the union meeting. John Silver and Jack Small seem willing to say something to the effect that Capote had said the Company would not cooperate in the drive to raise War Memorial funds and that Mr. Lawrence particularly had been uncooperative. They also seem to think that no indication had been given at the meeting that the Company was willing to permit the posting of a contribution box.

It is known in a vague way that Capote has over the past several years made derogatory statements about officers and agents of the Company.

Also relevant are the following facts, subject to interpretation.

There was a substantial loss of production in the week following the union meeting. Capote did fail to catch the damage before it has been repeated to a point where a whole order had to be done over. As Pressman on the second-largest machine, he was responsible for all the work coming off the press. Furthermore, he has a certain responsibility for inspecting stock as it is fed onto the machine.

Production records over a period of time showed that Capote's press had on at least ten occasions during the preceding five years been the lowest in terms of production of all the ten presses in the plant. Earnings are based on an incentive system, and average earnings on this press were consistently lower than on comparable presses elsewhere in the department. No reprimands had been issued on this basis, however.

The record of defective box blanks is different. Reports covering 20 different days during a three-year period showed that on each of these dates defective box blanks had come off Capote's press. On two occasions the specifications had not been followed exactly, so that orders had to be duplicated. On one occasion Capote was given a demerit for faulty production. One of the 20 reports followed this demerit.

There is some evidence in Company records that Capote had repeatedly violated plant rules, mostly on minor issues. He had been away from his machine too long at rest periods on four occasions. He had left the machine early on three occasions. He violated the rule on absenteeism twice. For all of the infractions he had received two reprimand slips, and he had a one-day suspension. All of the violations had occurred since he took over the presidency of the local union.

In addition, the superintendent has voiced the following sentiments since the discharge:

"Sure, Melvin Capote has been promoted in our plant several times, and we have never fired him for his infractions of rule or his inferior production. His promotions all occurred during a period when labor was very hard to get. Our standards were lower then than they are now.

* * * *

"Capote has never been one of our top men. But his work has been fair, just fair, that's all. He has always talked too much, and most of the time we don't object. We try to be fair to our workers.

"But now during the last month, I can cite occasions every few days when Capote has been busier talking to someone from another department, rather than tending to his machine. He has a first-class helper on that machine, and he takes advantage of him. Normally, we don't care, but when all these things are added up, they spell trouble.

* * * *

"Just last week, when I passed the press, I saw Capote talking with one of the girls on the partion machine. Ten minutes later, when I passed again, they were still talking. Now, I don't know who was doing the partion work, and I don't ask any questions unless trouble developes, but this just gives you an idea of how he operated.

"I had the feeling that week we fired him, that we would never have had all the trouble on his press, if he had been more attentive to the operation and watched it more carefully."

PREPARATION FOR ARBITRATION

By Mozart Rattner

1. In selecting an arbitrator try to find out as much as you can from other local unions in the area or union lawyers who handle arbitration about the views of the potential candidates on the kind of matter that you will be involved in your arbitration case.

2. As far in advance as possible, try to ferret out of your opponents their contentions and the arguments they intend to rely on. One way to do this is to attempt to agree with them upon the precise issue that is to be arbitrated. Whether you agree or not on the issue, you will get a chance to get them to state their position in advance.

3. Remember that in most cases, the other side would not go to arbitration unless it believed that it had a position which it had a good chance to sell to the arbitrator. Investigate their position carefully; that is the only way you could prepare adequately to meet it.

4. Prepare your own witnesses and your own documentary evidence, whatever it may be, in great care before the hearing. You should know before you ever step into the hearing room exactly what questions you intend to ask each of your witnesses, exactly what their answers will be to your questions and exactly what documentary evidence you intend to introduce. You should also have prepared your witnesses in advance for the kinds of questions you anticipate they may be asked on cross-examination by the other side.

5. Before the hearing, prepare a written statement setting forth the principal facts on which you rely and the reasons which lead to conclude that you are right in your position. Writing it out will help you to see which facts are the strongest elements in your case and will lead you to place greater emphasis on them and less emphasis on the relatively less important points.

   As you work the statement over, you may find that there are questions that you have not discussed with your witnesses and will want to cover. You may also find holes in your case that you will want to make some effort to fill. You may use your written statement either as an opening statement to the arbitrator, or save it for use at the conclusion of the arbitration.

6. Do not as a general rule argue your case while you are putting in the facts; save argument about what the contract means or the justice of the situation, etc., until the end of the hearing.

7. As a general rule, do not try to establish your case through company witnesses. They are there to hurt, not help you. There are a few occasions when it is desirable to call company witnesses as your witnesses before anything else is done for the purpose of getting their story on record and cross-examining them before your witnesses testify, but at the times when this should be done are rare. In general, do it only when you don't care what story the company gives, but you want to be certain that they cannot shift it in the light of what your witnesses will testify.

8. Cross-examination is a dangerous weapon for the one who uses it. It is a general rule that you should never ask a question on cross-examination unless you know in advance what the answer must be and are prepared to prove that a contrary answer is a lie. Here, again, there are exceptions, but the general rule is the safest one to follow.

9. Part of your preparation in arbitration cases should be to examine what other arbitrators have held in similar situations. Arbitrators are not bound by the principle of stare decisis, that is, following precedent. However, they are influenced by the reasoning of arbitrators in other similar cases, and if you can find well reasoned arbitration opinions in other cases that support you, they are very apt to prove most helpful.

10. Agree upon the arbitrators' fees in advance and also make arrangements for sharing all costs of the arbitration.

11. Most arbitration cases are won before you ever get to a hearing. They are won at the contract drafting state, and they are won in way grievances are presented. When you are drafting a contract clause, try to think of all the possible circumstances which may arise involving the subject and draft language which will, if possible, protect you in all the situations you can think of.

12. In presenting your grievances, try to phrase your claim in the most sympathetic manner possible from your point of view in the list of the language of the contract or the circumstances on which you rely. Remember, the way the grievance is phrased may ultimately be the way the arbitrator first sees the question, and initial impressions can be important.

13. Watch the time steps provided in your contract within which grievances must be processed and arbitration demanded. Remember that if you let the time go by, the arbitrator may not be able to reach your case on the merits at all. Similarly, if the company does not respond within the time fixed by the contract, the arbitrator may be required to grant your grievance without even looking into the company's defense.

14. In construing a collective bargaining contract, arbitrators will generally follow the rule that if the language of the contract is clear, neither the past practice of the parties nor any verbal understandings can be relied upon to change the effect of the clear written language. However, if the written language is ambiguous and can support either of two interpretations, past practice, oral understandings, and even custom in other companies or in other industries may be relied upon by the arbitrator in deciding what your contract means. Where you have ambiguous language, you should, in preparation for your case, examine industry custom and practice as well as the background of past practice in the plant involved.

[n.d.]

Source: Bureau of National Affairs
- Collective Bargaining, Negotiations and Contracts

SCOPE OF ARBITRATION

Generally speaking, the disputes which collective bargaining contracts commit to impartial determination are the same as those which may be handled in the grievance procedure.

The subjects most widely excluded from arbitration are disputes encountered during interim contract reopenings for the general consideration of wage rates; disputes over production standards; and amendments or modifications of the agreement.

The most common limitation appearing in contracts prohibits the arbitrator from adding to, subtracting from, or otherwise modifying the agreement; he is usually confined to questions involving the application or interpretation of the contract itself.

Affect of 1960 Supreme Court decisions

The scope of arbitration has been broadened in practice by the 1960 decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court in the three Steelworkers cases (46LRRM 80). In these decisions, the Supreme Court largely limited the role of courts, in collective bargaining arbitration cases, to determining whether:

a) the claim of one of the parties was governed by the contract (not whether it had merit);

b) the contractual arbitration clause covers the dispute (if the dispute is not clearly excluded from arbitration, the courts should send the case to the arbitrator);

c) the arbitrator based his award on the contract and remained within his authority (if he did, a court may not overrule him even though it disagrees with his award).

The limitation of the courts' role in arbitration and the concurrent stress on the contractual agreement to arbitrate differences rather than to strike or lock out have created controversy as to whether and how to restrict the scope and volume of arbitration.

Matters subject to arbitration (examples)

1. "All" complaints, disputes or grievances

(ILG and National Dress Mfrs. Assn. Inc., exp. 1-64)

All complaints, disputes or grievances between the parties hereto involving questions of interpretation or application of any clause of this agreement, or any acts, conduct or relations between the parties or their respective members, directly or indirectly, shall be submitted in writing by the party hereto claiming to be aggrieved to the other party hereto, and the manager of the Association and the manager of the Joint Council, or their deputies, shall, in the first instance, jointly investigate such complaints, grievances or disputes and attempt an adjustment. Decisions reached by the managers or their deputies shall be binding on the parties hereto. Should they fail to agree, the question or dispute shall be referred to a permanent umpire to be known as the "Impartial Chairman" in the industry and his decision shall be final and binding upon the parties hereto.

Comment: Elsewhere in the contract the arbitrator is specifically given broad powers, including the authority to fine employers for contract violations, examine their books, and adjust piece rates.

2. Any disputes germane to the contract

(Laundry Workers and New Jersey Linen Supply Cos., exp. 9-64)

Any and all disputes and controversies arising under or in connection with the terms and provisions of this agreement or in respect to anything not herein expressly provided for, but germane to the general subject matter of this agreement, which disputes or controversies cannot be or are not settled or adjusted in accordance with the prior section hereof, shall be submitted for decision to an arbitrator selected according to the procedure of the New Jersey State Board of Mediation whose decision shall be final.

3. Interpretation of contract terms on conditions of employment, demands for changes therein, grievability or arbitrability of a dispute, or other matters not reserved to management.

(Motor Coach Employees and Cleveland Transit System, exp. 6-63)

Any dispute, claim, grievance or difference between any employee or employees of the Cleveland Transit System who have chosen to be represented with respect thereto by (the union) on the one hand and the management of the Cleveland Transit System on the other hand which may arise out of or relate to any condition of employment contained herein, at the request of either party to any such dispute, claim, grievance or difference shall be submitted to an impartial umpire . . . provided that . . . 2. Such dispute, claim, grievance or difference shall be concerned with one or more of the following matters: a) The interpretation, construction, applicability or intent of any condition of employment set forth herein; b) Demands upon behalf of the employees or the management for any change in any condition of employment set forth herein to become effective July 1, 1961, and thereafter until changed by further order of the Transit Board; c) A determination as to whether a particular matter is or is not a grievance subject to the procedure provided . . .d) A determination as to whether or not a particular alleged difference, dispute, claim or grievance is properly referable to the Impartial Umpire; e) Any other matter which may arise by reason of the employer-employee relationship except matters reserved to the exclusive supervision, control and management of the Transit Board as provided (in the management rights section).

4. Discrimination or injustice

(Gulf State Paper Corp and Papermakers, exp. 10-62)

. . . the complaint may be referred to arbitration provided: 1) The dispute arises out of the Agreement. 2) It is considered a breach of the Agreement. 3) It is considered discrimination or injustice.

5. Local trouble of any kind

(Warrior and Gulf Navigation Co. and Steelworkers)

Should difference arise between the Company and the Union or its members . . . as to the meaning andapplication of the provisions of this Agreement, or should any local trouble of any kind arise, there shall be no suspension of work on account of such differences, but an earnest effort shall be made to settle such differences in the following manner (by the grievance and arbitration procedure).

Comment: There also was a provision excluding strictly management functions from arbitration. The employer contracted out work and subsequently - in part as a result - laid off some bargaining unit employees. Federal district and appeals courts upheld the employer's refusal to arbitrate the union's grievance, ruling that contracting out work was within the management function. But the U. S. Supreme Court sent the matter to arbitration on the ground that while the question of arbitrability is for the courts to decide, courts should not refuse to issue orders to arbitrate "unless it may be said with positive assurance that the arbitration clause is not susceptable to an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute. Doubts should be resolved in favor of coverage." (46 LRRM 2416)

6. Power to review reasonableness of penalty

(Clark Equipment Co. and AIW, exp. 4-65

The Company shall have the right to discipline (including discharge) any employee who instigates, participates in, or gives leadership to an unauthorized strike in violation of this Agreement. If the matter is submitted to arbitration, an Arbitrator shall have the power to review the reasonableness of penalties imposed under this section, except that he may order back pay only upon a finding of innocence.

7. "Grievance" limited to matters involving contract; arbitrator limited to grievances, unless parties agree to refer other matters

(U. S. Steel and Steelworkers, exp. 6-64)

"Grievance" as used in this Agreement is limited to a complaint or request of an employee which involves the interpretation or application of, or compliance with, the provisions of this Agreement . . . The Board shall have jurisdiction and authority only to interpret, apply, or determine compliance with the provisions of this Agreement and such local working conditions as may hereafter be in effect in the plants of the Company, insofar as shall be necessary to the determination of grievances appealed to the Board. The Board shall not have jurisdiction or authority to add to, detract from, or alter in any way the provisions of this Agreement...

If the officers of the Company and of the Union shall so agree in writing, any request or complaint not a proper matter of grievance and thus not appealable to the Board, or other matter not covered by the procedures of Section 6 - Adjustment of Grievances - may be referred to the Board for determination upon such terms as the parties may mutually agree.

8. Detailed listing of matters subject to arbitration

(General Motors and UAW, exp. 8-64)

It shall be the function of the umpire, after due investigation and within thirty days after the submission of the case to him, to make a decision in all claims of discrimination for union activity or membership and in all cases of alleged violation of the terms of the following sections of this Agreement, and written local or national supplementary agreements on these same subjects: Recognition; Representation; Grievance Procedure; Seniority; Disciplinary Layoffs and Discharges; Call-In Pay; Working Hours; Leaves of Absence; Union Bulletin Boards; Establishment of New Plants; Strikes, Stoppages and Lock Outs; Wages, except paragraph (97); General Provisions; Apprentices - Represented; Skilled Trades; Vacation Pay Allowances; Holiday Pay; Paragraphs (79) through (79f) relative to procedures on Production Standards; and of any alleged violations of written local or national wage agreements.

(Comment: for listing of matters not subject to the authority of the arbitrators under the above contract, see clause on page 7.)

9. Incentive disputes

(Mosaic Tile Co., Zanesville, and Glass and Ceramic Workers)

The arbitrator shall only have jurisdiction and authority to interpret the agreement and apply it to the cases presented to him. He shall not change or modify this agreement, or have any authority in the making of a new agreement. He shall have no authority over wage rates established by this agreement, but shall have authority to arbitrate such wage rates, bonus rates and values, or incentive rates as involve changes of method or new operations or new or changed jobs arising during the period of this agreement.

10. Job classification

(Iron Fireman Mfg. Co. and IAM, exp. 4-64)

The Company will evaluate any new or changed job classifications as arising by application of the job evaluation formula . . . and forward the new or changed job description to the Union . . . In the event the Union disagrees with the evaluation made of such new or changed jobs as described, it may challenge the evaluation on the basis of the job evaluation formula. The Company and the Union Representatives thereupon will meet for the purpose of reaching agreement. If no agreement is reached within thirty calendar days after receipt by the Union of the new or changed job description, the matter promptly will be referred to arbitration.

11. Job-rating disputes, which must be heard by industrial engineer or other qualified arbitrator

(Gardner-Denver Co. and IAM, exp. 10-64)

Except as provided in section (67) (see below), the paragraphs providing for arbitration shall not apply to the determination of wages, or the classification or wage rates of jobs, except where an alleged violation of this contract is concerned . . .

(67) If no agreement is reached on the job rating, the Union may take the "Classification Grievance" to arbitration following the method, procedures, and time limits specified . . . except that the arbitrator selected . . . shall be an industrial engineer or other person who is by experience qualified to employ recognized principles and techniques of job evaluation.

The arbitrator shall establish the questioned classification by employing recognized principles and techniques of job evaluation and shall establish such classification in line and by comparison with the existing job classifications of the Company. Such classification so established shall be final.

Matters NOT subject to arbitration

1. Addition to, subtractions from, or modifications of contract

(Clay Sewer Pipe Industry and Brick and Clay Workers, exp. 4-62)

. . . the arbitrator shall not have the power to add to, subtract from or modify any of the terms of this Agreement or any agreement supplemental thereto, nor to pass upon any controversy arising from any demand to increase or decrease any wage rates, excepting as provided in Article X of this agreement.

2. Contract negotiations

(Flour, Feed, and Cereal Employers Assn. and Grain Millers, exp. 7-63)

In the event this agreement or any such Supplemental Agreement is opened for negotiation the subject matter of such negotiation will not be required to be referred to arbitration.

3. General wage scale

(U. S. Rubber and Rubber Workers, exp. 6-63)

It is understood and agreed that the general wage scale shall not be subject to arbitration.

4. Disputes over terms of new contract

(LeTourneau-Westinghouse Co., Adams Div. and USA, exp. 1-64)

It is agreed that any differences arising incident to negotiations or terms of a new agreement are not covered by this section, the sole purpose of which is to make grievances arising out of and during the term of this Agreement subject to arbitration.

5. Issues over which a work stoppage has been called

(Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. and URW, exp. 4-63)

In the event there is any interruption in plant operations due to a stoppage of work or slowdown, the Company and the Union shall not consider the merits of that dispute, nor shall any arbitration proceed or continue on that matter until such time as the interruption has been terminated.

The term "slowdown", as used in this Agreement, shall be understood to mean an intentional reduction or restriction of production on the part of one or more employees below a reasonable production rate.

6. Job classification, rates

(Caterpillar Tractor Co., Joliet and IAM, exp. 1-65)

Disputes arising out of the establishment of job classifications and the rates therefore . . . will not be subject to the grievance procedure or arbitration.

7. New rates, changes in existing rates, new jobs, production methods or standards, or safety

(Clark Equipment Co, Battle Creek and AIW, exp. 4-65)

The arbitrator shall have no power to establish a new rate or to change the existing wage structure, or establish new jobs or change existing job content, or to decide any matter pertaining to production methods or standards or safety and health.

8. Business practices not directly affecting employees or their relations with supervisors

(Cincinnati Industries, Inc. and TWUA, exp. 1-64)

Changes in general business practice, matters involving capital expenditures, the opening or closing of new units, the choice of personnel (subject, however, to the seniority provisions), the choice of materials, products, processes and equipment, or other business questions of a like nature not having to do directly and primarily with the day-to-day life of the employees and their relations with their supervisors, shall not be the subject of grievances and shall not be arbitrable.

9. Subcontracting, layoff after notice, termination of contract, other matters outside of the contract, and management rights not limited

(Gulf Oil and Oil Workers, exp. 1-64)

Any question on any matter outside of this Agreement shall not be the subject of arbitration. It is specifically understood that the rights of management which are not limited by the provisions of this Agreement are not the subject of arbitration. The matters not subject to arbitration include, but are not limited to, the following: (1) The use of contractors and (2) the exercise of the Company's right to layoff after notice and the consequent right of either party to terminate as provided in the last paragraph of Stipulation No. 33 of even date herewith.

10. Production standards; pensions and insurance; SUB; waiver of reopening right - see p. 4, no. 8

(General Motors and UAW, exp. 8-64)

The Umpire shall have no power to add to or subtract from or modify any of the terms of this Agreement or any agreements made supplementary hereto; nor to establish or change any wage; nor to rule on any dispute arising under Paragraph (78) regarding Production Standards.

The Umpire shall have no power to rule on any issue or dispute arising under the Pension Plan, Insurance Program and Supplementary Unemployment Benefit Plan Section or The Waiver Section.

Any case appealed to the Umpire of which he has no power to rule shall be referred back to the parties without decision.

Limitations on arbitrator's power

1. Arbitrator may not alter, add to, or go outside contract terms; may not go beyond submission

(Bunker Hill Co. and Northwest Metal Workers, Ind., exp. 1-66)

The arbitrator shall have no authority to alter, add to, or go outside the terms of this Agreement. He shall not go beyond the submission and any case referred to him by either party of which he has no power or authority to rule shall be referred back to the parties without decision.

2. Company may not be overruled unless it violated express contract terms

(Great Western Sugar Co. and Teamsters, exp. 3-64)

The Board of Arbitration shall have no power to substitute its judgment for that of the Company and shall have no power to overrule a decision of the Company unless the Board of Arbitration actually determines that the Company has violated one or more of the express and specific terms or provisions of this Agreement.

The Board of Arbitration shall have no power to render a decision on any matter not specifically covered by the terms or provisions of this Agreement . . .

3. Back pay awards: limit to retroactivity

(American Radiator, Louisville, and Allied Trades Council, exp. 1-63)

Awards and settlements of grievances by arbitrators may or may not be retroactive as the equities of each case demand, but in no event in any award to be retroactive beyond the date on which the grievance was originally presented . . .

4. Production standards may be reviewed only as to whether sound engineering methods were used in setting or changing them, or what the change would have been under such methods if a "significant" change is disputed

(Wyman-Gordon Co., Ingalls-Shepard Div. and Boilermakers, exp. 11-63)

(b) Only disputes which may arise between the Union or employees and the Company which assert either (1) a violation by the Company of a specific provision of this Agreement, or (2) that cycles for a new job or cycles resulting from a significant change in work methods, equipment or work conditions on an existing job have not been properly set by the Company after a fair and adequate trial in accordance with sound industrial engineering methods as described in Section 1, shall be arbitrable. A significant change shall be one which results in a change in the original cycle of not less than 5%. The issue to be arbitrated under (2) above shall be whether or not the cycle for the new job or resulting from a significant change in the existing job have been properly made by the Company in accordance with sound industrial engineering methods as aforesaid, and if not, what the cycle in question should be under such methods; provided, however, that in cases involving a significant change made by the Company the issue subject to arbitration shall be whether or not such change has been made by the Company based on sound industrial engineering methods as aforesaid and what the change in the cycle resulting from such change only should be, and provided further that the Board of Arbitration shall not use past performance or past practice on jobs not set in accordance with industrial engineering methods in determining such grievances...

Arbitrability

1. Matter taken up through grievance procedure, including arbitration

(Western Union Telegraph and Communications Assn., Ind., exp. 5-64)

If any question arises as to whether a particular dispute is or is not a grievance within the meaning of this section, the question may be taken up through the grievance procedure and determined if necessary by arbitration . . .

2. Arbitrator has power to pass on any objection to jurisdiction

(Pacific Maritime Assn and Longshoremen, Exp. 7-66)

The arbitrators shall have the power to pass on any and all objections to their jurisdiction. If an arbitrator holds that a particular dispute does not arise under the Agreement, then such dispute shall be subject to arbitration only by mutual agreement.

3. Arbitrator determines if question of arbitrability is raised

(International Harvester and UAW, exp. 10-64)

If either party shall claim before the arbitrator that a particular grievance fails to meet the tests of arbitrability, as the same are set forth in this Article, the arbitrator shall proceed to decide such issue before proceeding to hear the case upon its merits. The arbitrator shall have the authority to determine whether he will hear the case on its merits at the same hearing in which the jurisdictional question is presented. In any case where the arbitrator determines that such grievance fails to meet said tests of arbitrability, he shall refer the case back to the parties without a decision or recommendation on the merits.

4. Determined by mutual agreement

(Dow Chemical Co., Midland, Mich., and District 50, UMW, exp. 3-65)

In the event a disagreement exists as to whether or not an issue will be arbitrated, the President of the Company or his appointee together with the Regional Director of the Union or his appointee shall determine whether or not the issue shall be arbitrated.

5. Determined by court unless parties agree otherwise

(Gulf Oil Corp., Port Arthur Refinery and Oil Workers, exp. 1-64)

Any dispute as to the arbitrability of a given matter shall be resolved by a court of competent jurisdiction and not by an arbitrator, unless the parties specifically agree otherwise in writing.

SENIORITY vs. ABILITY

A Practice Arbitration

Reprinted from
THE ARBITRATION JOURNAL, Volume 13, No. 3
AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION
477 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

SENIORITY vs. ABILITY

A Practice Arbitration

EDITOR'S NOTE: The practice arbitration has become one of the most effective instruments for training management and labor groups and for use in academic teaching at various levels. The case presented below, popularly called the Acme Office Machine Company Case, has been performed hundreds of times before organizations of all kinds and has proved to be one of the most popular. Most often, it is presented before an arbitrator who has no previous knowledge of the issues. In this way, maximum advantage is derived not only from role-playing, but also through audience participation. Members of the audience may take the arbitrator's oath and vote on a decision, thus comparing their own judgment with that of the professional arbitrator.

The Arbitrator: Gerald Jones
Appearances: For International Association of Machinists, AFL-CIO
Michael Delaney, Grand Lodge Representative
Sam Wilson, the aggrieved employee
Ralph Brown, Shop Steward
Appearances: For Acme Office Machine Company
William Clayton, Personnel Director
Ben Hopkins, General Foreman
Joe Safford, an employee
Appearances: for the American Arbitration Association
Tribunal Clerk

TRIBUNAL CLERK: Mr. Jones, will you rise and take the arbitrator's oath?

(Both rise and raise right hands)

PAGINATION INCORRECT

Do you solemnly swear that you will faithfully and fairly hear and examine the matters in controversy and that you will make a just award according to the best of your understanding?

ARBITRATOR JONES: I do.

TRIBUNAL CLERK: This proceeding is under the Voluntary Labor Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. Arbitration was initiated by Demand for Arbitration in accordance with a collective bargaining agreement dated May 10, 1957. The Arbitration clause reads:

> Any dispute, claim or grievance arising out of or relating to this agreement shall be submitted to arbitration under the Voluntary Labor Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. The parties further agree that there shall be no suspension of work when such dispute arises and while it is in process of adjustment or arbitration.

The Demand for Arbitration, dated August 4, 1958, contains this statement of the grievance:

> Sam Wilson, classified as an inside repairman, with an hourly rate of $1.70, claims that he was discriminated against in that the Employer on June 18th promoted a man with less seniority to the position of outside serviceman, at a rate of $1.80 per hour. Mr. Wilson further claims he is entitled to the outside serviceman job by reason of his seniority and ability to perform the duties of that classification. He demands reclassification to outside serviceman plus 10¢ per hour for all hours worked since June 20th, the date on which he filed a grievance.

It was signed by Dave Edwards, President, Lodge 200, International Association of Machinists.

In reply to this Demand for Arbitration, Joseph Perkins, Manager of the Acme Office Machine Company, wrote the following letter to Mr. Edwards, a copy of which was sent to the American Arbitration Association:

> Dear Mr. Edwards:
>
> We have received a demand for arbitration asking that Sam Wilson be upgraded to outside serviceman and be granted the difference in pay between his present rate and that of outside serviceman since June 20.
>
> The company emphatically disputes such claim. Sam

Wilson is not qualified to perform the duties of outside serviceman and the company therefore felt justified in filling the vacancy in that position by promoting a qualified employee.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH PERKINS, Manager

ARBITRATOR JONES: Thank you. Well, gentlemen, now I believe we can proceed. Since the union is the party who initiated this arbitration I suggest we hear from that side first. Mr. Delaney, would you care to make an opening statement?

DELANEY: I would, thank you. Mr. Arbitrator, this arbitration case has grown out of a grievance filed by Sam Wilson, a first class repairman employed by the Acme Office Machine Company. Mr. Wilson's grievance is that he was discriminated against in not getting an upgrading to the position of Outside Serviceman, when that vacancy occurred last June. Mr. Wilson is now at the top of the rate range for his present classification. This rate is $1.70 an hour, while the starting rate for Outside Serviceman is $1.80 per hour. Mr. Wilson therefore claims, in addition to the Outside Serviceman job, the difference of 10¢ per hour for every hour worked since the grievance was filed on June 20th.

The facts of the case are as follows: Early in June, an Outside Serviceman was inducted into the army and the vacancy was posted on the bulletin board on June 10th, in accordance with Article VII of the collective bargaining agreement. On June 11, Wilson bid for that job. One other bid was entered, by a man with less seniority. On June 18, the company promoted the man with less seniority. A grievance was filed on June 20th and after the company failed to give satisfaction during the preliminary steps of the grievance procedure a demand for arbitration was sent to the company on August 4th, in accordance with the collective bargaining agreement. My first witness, if there is no objection, will be Sam Wilson.

ARBITRATOR JONES: Just a moment, Mr. Delaney. Perhaps Mr. Clayton would like to make a brief opening statement before you introduce your first witness.

CLAYTON: If you don't mind, Mr. Arbitrator, I would just as soon wait with my opening remarks until it is my turn to present the company's case.

ARBITRATOR JONES: As you wish. Before we proceed, I think it might be a good idea to place the collective bargaining agreement in the record, perhaps as a joint exhibit, if you gentlemen agree.

DELANEY: Yes, that's a good idea.

CLAYTON: I agree. I have a copy here of the agreement in printed form.

ARBITRATOR JONES: I will ask the Tribunal Clerk to mark it as Joint Exhibit 1. I think we can now proceed. Mr. Wilson, you may take the stand.

(WILSON takes the stand and is sworn)

TRIBUNAL CLERK: Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

WILSON: I do.

DELANEY: Please state your name, present job classification and rate of pay.

WILSON: My name is Sam Wilson. I'm a first class repairman at $1.70 per hour.

DELANEY: How long have you been with the company?

WILSON: About eight years.

DELANEY: Will you give a brief account of your progress with the company?

WILSON: Well, I started as a general helper. After about a year, I was made an apprentice to the typewriter repairman. I was moved around after that and learned to repair all the different types of machines the company handles. About two years ago, I was made a first class repairman and that's what I am now.

DELANEY: Did you take any special courses of training for your job?

WILSON: Yes. I took a course in machine shop practice in night school.

DELANEY: Did the Company know about your studies on your own time to improve yourself on the job?

WILSON: Yes. In fact, the company paid half the cost. That's the company policy. And when I got my certificate that I finished the course, a copy was sent to the personnel director.

DELANEY: Have you any evidence that the company appreciated your work as a first class repairman?

WILSON: Well, I got two merit increases, that brought me to the top of the rate range. I never heard any complaints about my work. In fact, I generally get the most complicated jobs that come into the shop.

DELANEY: What's your seniority status with the company?

WILSON: I have top seniority in my department and I'm about sixth or seventh in the company.

DELANEY: That means you have more seniority than any other first class repairman, doesn't it?

WILSON: That's right.

DELANEY: Have you ever been disciplined or have you ever had any complaints about your conduct at work?

WILSON: No. I get along OK with everybody.

DELANEY: Now tell us briefly about your bid for the Outside Serviceman job and what happened.

WILSON: Well, I've been waiting for an opening to get into that job because I'd like that kind of work and besides, it pays more money. Last May I found out one of the men in that department was quitting. The man actually left the first week in June and as soon as I saw a notice on the bulletin board, I put in for it.

DELANEY: And what happened?

WILSON: Nothing. The first thing I knew was that someone else got the job.

DELANEY: Are you qualified to do the work of an Outside Serviceman?

WILSON: Sure. In fact, the outside man fixes only the easy jobs. If there is a big job to be done he brings it back to the shop for us to work on.

DELANEY: That's all the questions I have to ask Mr. Wilson right now.

ARBITRATOR JONES: Mr. Clayton, would you like to cross-examine the witness now?

CLAYTON: Yes, I would, thank you. Mr. Wilson, you testified that you have been with the company for eight years. Where did you work before you came here?

WILSON: I was with the Erie Railroad.

CLAYTON: Doing what?

WILSON: Yard laborer.

CLAYTON: And where did you work before that?

WILSON: Before that I was working for a gas station.

CLAYTON: Were you selling gas?

WILSON: No. I changed tires and helped in the grease pit.

CLAYTON: What kind of jobs did you have before the gas station job?

WILSON: I helped on trucks and had other odd jobs.

CLAYTON: In your whole work experience, did you ever have an office job?

WILSON: No.

CLAYTON: What education have you had?

WILSON: One year high school. A few years ago I went to night school to learn machine shop practice.

CLAYTON: Did you ever have any experience in salesmanship or take any courses of training for selling jobs?

WILSON: No.

CLAYTON: During periods of unemployment, before you came to work for Acme, did you ever look for selling jobs or try to learn salesmanship?

WILSON: Well, when I wasn't working, I generally took the first job that came along, if the pay was right.

CLAYTON: But you never worked at selling or in clerical jobs.

WILSON: No, I never did.

CLAYTON: That's all the questions I have to ask Mr. Wilson.

DELANEY: I would like to call as my next witness Ralph Brown.

(BROWN takes the stand and is sworn)

TRIBUNAL CLERK: Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

BROWN: I do.

DELANEY: Please state your name and position in the shop.

BROWN: My name is Ralph Brown and I'm shop steward.

DELANEY: Are you familiar with the collective bargaining agreement and with this grievance?

BROWN: I am.

DELANEY: What does your agreement say about promotions and upgrading?

BROWN: The contract says that when there is an opening for a better job, notice should be posted on the bulletin board for three working days before it's filled. Men who think they qualify for it can then bid, and the man with the most seniority gets it, provided he's qualified.

ARBITRATOR JONES: Excuse me, Mr. Delaney, but would you care to identify the contractual provision you refer to?

DELANEY: Yes, I was coming to that. It is Article VII and it reads:

> "When any vacancy occurs within the bargaining unit, it shall be filled on the basis of seniority, provided the senior employee is reasonably qualified to perform the duties of that position. Notice of such vacancy shall be posted on the bulletin board at least three working days before the vacancy is filled. Employees shall have the right to bid for the job within that period of time. Bids submitted after the three days notice may be disregarded at the discretion of the employer."

Now, getting back to Article VII, Mr. Brown, did the company comply with its provisions when the vacancy occurred in the Outside Serviceman job?

BROWN: Well, they did insofar as posting notice is concerned. But Sam Wilson didn't get the job although he had more seniority than the man who did get it.

DELANEY: Is Sam Wilson qualified for upgrading?

BROWN: He is. He's the best repairman in the shop.

DELANEY: Does your company have a job evaluation plan?

BROWN: Well, a plan was drawn up a few years ago, before the union was recognized.

DELANEY: Has the union accepted the plan?

BROWN: Not completely. In every contract we negotiated, some changes were made in the way jobs were grouped into labor grades. But mostly we went along with it.

DELANEY: Has the Outside Serviceman job always been considered a higher job than the first class repairman?

BROWN: Yes. We never objected to that.

DELANEY: So that the next higher job for a first class repairman would be an Outside Serviceman?

BROWN: That's right. Promotion to outside serviceman is the only way a repairman can move ahead after he's at the top of the range for the first class repairman. The outside serviceman is the top job within the bargaining unit.

DELANEY: As shop steward, you are in a position to know all about the efficiency and conduct of Mr. Wilson, aren't you?

BROWN: Yes. I can tell you that there has never been any trouble with him. He always did a good job, got along all right with the men and with supervision and the fact that he gets the top rate for first class repairman proves it.

DELANEY: You don't have an automatic progression plan from minimum to maximum of the rate range in your shop, do you?

BROWN: Only partly. The way we work it, progression is automatic, by length of service to the mid-point of the rate range. But the rest of the way is by merit alone. The company has the right to give or refuse to give merit increases, and the union has a right to make a grievance of it if we suspect discrimination. In Mr. Wilson's case, there was no problem because he got his merit raises.

DELANEY: No more questions. Your witness, Mr. Clayton.

CLAYTON: Mr. Brown, you know Mr. Wilson well, don't you?

BROWN: Pretty well, yes.

CLAYTON: He's a member in good standing in the union?

BROWN: Yes.

CLAYTON: How long has he been a member of the union?

BROWN: Since we were recognized, three years ago.

CLAYTON: Does Mr. Wilson now, or did he ever, hold union office?

BROWN: No. I think he may be on some committees, but he's not an officer.

CLAYTON: Did he ever run for office?

DELANEY: Now just a minute, Mr. Arbitrator. I don't see how Mr. Wilson's running for union office has anything to do with this case.

CLAYTON: If you will just permit me to ask one or two more questions along this line I think it will be clear.

ARBITRATOR JONES: Well, I don't exactly see the pertinence of that question, but go ahead. I'll reserve decision for a few minutes.

CLAYTON: Thank you. I'll repeat the question. Did Sam Wilson ever run for union office?

BROWN: Yes. Once or twice. He didn't make it.

CLAYTON: Mr. Wilson is popular with his fellow workers, isn't he?

BROWN: Yes.

CLAYTON: But when it came to electing someone to represent the union, they voted for someone else, didn't they?

BROWN: Well, Wilson got a lot of votes. It's just that someone else got more votes.

CLAYTON: Don't you think it significant that his fellow workers considered that he lacked personal qualifications, in education and training, to be in a position where he would have to speak persuasively?

ARBITRATOR JONES: Excuse me, Mr. Clayton. I don't think I'm going to allow any more questions along that line and in coming to a decision on this case I'm not going to give any weight to evidence concerning Mr. Wilson's record as a union member at all.

BROWN: Well, even though no weight is going to be given to this subject, I don't mind telling you that nobody ever took a poll to find out why people vote one way or another. We have a democratic union and every member can vote as he pleases.

ARBITRATOR JONES: All right. You've answered the question. But I said I'm not going to allow any more arguments along that line. Please proceed with a proper course of cross-examination.

CLAYTON: Mr. Brown, are you familiar with the company's job evaluation plan and job descriptions?

BROWN: Yes.

CLAYTON: Did the union ever object to the accuracy of the job description of the Repairman, First Class and Outside Serviceman, which I now show you?

BROWN: No. But I think you're probably overstating the importance of the sales angle in the outside serviceman job.

CLAYTON: I have no further questions of this witness. Mr. Arbitrator, I would like to introduce for the record two job descriptions, one of the Repairman, First Class, and the other of the Outside Serviceman. Both are taken from the official job evaluation plan.

ARBITRATOR JONES: Have you any objection, Mr. Delaney, to receiving these exhibits?

DELANEY: No, subject, of course, to the point Mr. Brown just made about our never having negotiated those descriptions and our not agreeing that they are fully accurate.

ARBITRATOR JONES: Well, these are introduced as company documents and they will be considered as such. The clerk will mark them Company exhibits one and two.

JOB DESCRIPTIONS

Repairman, First Class

Inspects, adjusts, repairs, cleans and overhauls office machines such as adding machines, calculating machines, tabulating machines, bookkeeping machines, multigraph machines, mimeograph machines, typewriters or cash registers; diagnoses the defects in the machines by inspection, by disassembling the machines and examining the moving parts or other mechanisms, or by starting the machines in operation and testing for unusual sounds; removes, repairs and replaces broken and worn out parts. Must be familiar with machine shop practice.

Outside Serviceman

Visits premises of customers to perform routine servicing operations on office machines such as adding machines, calculating machines, tabulating machines, bookkeeping machines, multigraph machines, mimeograph machines, typewriters or cash registers; cleans, oils, adjusts machines; if machines are merely out of adjustment, tightens, loosens, sets or otherwise adjusts gears, rollers, pinions, and other parts, using hand tools, such as wrenches, pliers, and screw drivers; if larger repairs are required, removes machine to the factory for overhaul by repairman, first class. Gives instructions to machine operators, explaining the action of the mechanism and otherwise shows how to avoid damage. Consults with customers on condition of office machines and recommends purchase of new and rebuilt machines to replace worn out and obsolete models. Sells service contracts for regular check-up of office machines.

ARBITRATOR JONES: You may call your next witness.

DELANEY: We have no further witnesses.

ARBITRATOR JONES: In that case, you may proceed, Mr. Clayton. I believe you want to make an opening statement.

CLAYTON: That is right. We will prove in this arbitration hearing that the company complied with all its contractual obligations and that we exercised management's prerogatives in a proper manner. The applicant for the job of outside serviceman who had most seniority was not qualified for that job. Consequently, we upgraded the less senior man, who was qualified.

The facts about the way the vacancy came about, our posting of a notice on the bulletin board, Mr. Wilson's bid, and his filing of a grievance are substantially as indicated in the union's presentation of the case. I won't take the time at this hearing to go over it again, except to emphasize that it shows how scrupulously the company fulfilled its obligations under the contract. I would also like to point out that as the union admits, we moved Mr. Wilson up pretty steadily and we gave him two merit increases last year. That shows we have nothing against him as an inside man and that accusations of discrimination are unjustified.

My first witness will be Mr. Ben Hopkins.

(HOPKINS takes the stand and is sworn)

TRIBUNAL CLERK: Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

HOPKINS: I do.

CLAYTON: Please state your name and position in the shop.

HOPKINS: My name is Ben Hopkins. I'm general foreman.

CLAYTON: Are you in the collective bargaining unit?

HOPKINS: No.

CLAYTON: Are you in charge of the inside workers, or do all employees in the bargaining unit come under your jurisdiction?

HOPKINS: I'm in charge of all, inside and outside.

CLAYTON: How long have you been with the company?

HOPKINS: About seven years.

CLAYTON: Were you hired as a foreman?

HOPKINS: Well, I was only a department foreman when I came in. I was promoted to general foreman a few years later.

CLAYTON: Were you general foreman when the job evaluation plan was drawn up?

HOPKINS: Yes.

CLAYTON: Tell us about it.

HOPKINS: Well, about four years ago, the company hired a firm of industrial engineers to draw up this plan for us because the company had been hiring and setting rates in a very haphazard way and there was dissatisfaction. These engineers drew up job descriptions for all the jobs and grouped them into labor grades with a rate range for each job. In this way, there was established an orderly way of progression and the men were satisfied they were treated fairly.

CLAYTON: Did the union accept this plan?

HOPKINS: It was already in effect when the union was recognized. But changes were made from time to time in negotiations. One change was that instead of merit increases all the way in the rate range, we agreed to length of service raises half way, and merit increases the rest of the way.

CLAYTON: What do you think of Sam Wilson?

HOPKINS: As a worker or personally?

CLAYTON: Well, both.

HOPKINS: As a worker, he's very good. That is, as a repairman. But I don't think he has the kind of personality for a selling job.

CLAYTON: What do you mean by that?

HOPKINS: He speaks in kind of a rough, uneducated way, and sometimes he's not very tactful.

CLAYTON: Will you describe the duties of an Outside Serviceman?

HOPKINS: When we get calls from customers telling us that their office machines are out of order, we send a serviceman out to fix the machines on the spot or to bring them in if they need major work. The serviceman has to get along well with people and do sort of a selling job, too. If a machine is too old to be fixed properly, the serviceman tries to take it as a trade-in on a new machine. It is especially important that he get along with the female employees of our customers. We once had a man who could never get past the receptionist when he visited a large office because he was such an objectionable character. Eventually, we got rid of him. The Outside Serviceman job is a sensitive spot for the company and we have to have a man we can be sure of.

CLAYTON: No more questions.

ARBITRATOR JONES: You may cross-examine, Mr. Delaney.

DELANEY: Mr. Hopkins, how long have you been supervising Sam Wilson?

HOPKINS: All the time I've been with the company, seven years.

DELANEY: Have you ever had any trouble with him?

HOPKINS: No, not real trouble.

DELANEY: What do you mean "not real trouble"? Has he been a good worker, or not?

HOPKINS: He's been a good worker. Once in a while there'd be an argument in the shop about something and I'd have to caution him to take it easy and quiet down. But I don't regard that as real trouble.

DELANEY: In your experience as a foreman, do you find that workers in the shop sometimes talk rough and use profanity?

HOPKINS: Oh, yes!

DELANEY: And you don't pay any particular attention to it, do you?

HOPKINS: Not unless it gets out of hand so that it might lead to violence.

DELANEY: In other words, a certain amount of unpolished speech, shall we say, is normal in the factory, isn't it?

HOPKINS: Yes, a certain amount.

DELANEY: When things go wrong in the shop, do you sometimes do some cursing yourself?

HOPKINS: It happens sometimes, but not often.

DELANEY: But when you're outside the shop, particularly in the presence of ladies, you behave like a gentleman, don't you?

HOPKINS: Yes.

DELANEY: Then why do you doubt that Sam Wilson would exercise the same discretion in the office of a customer?

HOPKINS: It isn't only a matter of cursing. Wilson doesn't have enough education. He just doesn't have the personality for getting along without arguments. And the way he talks would be kind of conspicuous in an office. He just hasn't got what it takes to be a salesman.

DELANEY: Are you familiar with the job description of Outside Serviceman, as introduced by Mr. Clayton as a company exhibit?

HOPKINS: Yes, I am.

DELANEY: Do you find anything in that job description about education?

HOPKINS: Well, no. That's not a description of the necessary qualifications for the job. It's just a description of what a man actually does.

DELANEY: But the company never saw fit, in writing that job description, to stress educational background.

HOPKINS: No. As I say, it isn't that kind of a job description.

DELANEY: Have you ever hired Outside Servicemen?

HOPKINS: Do you mean whether I ever hired any personally?

DELANEY: Yes.

HOPKINS: I never hired any directly, but when the Personnel Department is considering a man they usually send him along to talk to me as well as to others. And then I usually tell Mr. Clayton what my impressions were.

DELANEY: Now, Mr. Hopkins, getting back to an earlier remark, you said that Sam Wilson hasn't got what it takes to be a salesman. I believe those were your exact words. How do you know he wouldn't learn what is necessary if you gave him a chance?

HOPKINS: I just don't think he's got the aptitude for it.

DELANEY: Mr. Hopkins, has it ever happened, in the past, that you promoted a man to the next higher job even though he wasn't fully qualified at the time of promotion?

HOPKINS: Oh, yes, that happens often!

DELANEY: You do that because you believe in giving a man a chance to grow into the higher job, isn't that right?

HOPKINS: Yes, when I think he has it in him.

DELANEY: But you refused to give Wilson that chance. You just took it for granted that he would talk and act outside the job just as he does inside. You assumed he wouldn't learn and you refused to give him a chance.

HOPKINS: Well, as I say, the Outside Serviceman job is too sensitive. It would be too risky. We would be losing accounts with every bad impression Wilson would make.

DELANEY: No more questions.

CLAYTON: My next witness is Joe Safford.

(SAFFORD takes the stand and is sworn)

TRIBUNAL CLERK: Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

SAFFORD: I do.

CLAYTON: Mr. Safford, how long have you been with the company?

SAFFORD: About three and a half years.

CLAYTON: What was your job classification until last June 18th?

SAFFORD: I was a Repairman, First Class. I'm now an Outside Repairman.

CLAYTON: How much education have you had?

SAFFORD: High school and one year of college.

CLAYTON: Where did you work before coming to Acme?

SAFFORD: I worked in the complaint and adjustment office of a department store.

CLAYTON: Will you describe briefly your duties and length of service with the department store?

SAFFORD: Well, when a customer complained about the quality of something she bought, I interviewed her to get the facts and followed it up to see what could be done to make the adjustment. Sometimes it was a matter of getting the article exchanged, and sometimes it involved a repair job. I followed the case up by seeing that the customer was satisfied, and wrote up reports for the buyers in cases where mechanical defects or poor workmanship showed up. I was with the department store for three years. I had to quit and move here because the winters were too severe for my wife and the doctor advised us to move to another area.

CLAYTON: In other words, your previous employment experience was on a job that required contact with the public and exercise of considerable tact.

SAFFORD: That's right.

CLAYTON: I have no more questions. Mr. Delaney, do you want to cross-examine?

DELANEY: No cross-examination. Joe Safford is a good union member and would no doubt make a competent Outside Serviceman. We are not disputing that. But I think it is also indisputable that he hasn't got the seniority.

CLAYTON: That is our case, Mr. Arbitrator.

ARBITRATOR JONES: If there are no further witnesses, we can proceed with summations. I suggest the same order as before. Mr. Delaney first.

DELANEY: When the current collective bargaining agreement was negotiated, the company agreed to the principle of promotion from within. This was stated in Article VII which says:

> "When any vacancy occurs within the bargaining unit, it shall be filled on the basis of seniority, provided the senior employee is reasonably qualified to perform the duties of that position. Notice of such vacancy shall be posted on the bulletin board at least three working days before the vacancy is filled. Employees shall have the right to bid for the job within that period of time. Bids submitted after the three days notice may be disregarded at the discretion of the Employer."

We believe that in ignoring Sam Wilson's bid, the company violated the quoted section of the agreement. I want to call particular attention to the phrase "provided the senior employee is reasonably qualified . . ." The contract does not say the employee must be fully qualified, and it does not say that he must be perfectly suited to the job he wants. To be reasonably qualified means to have most of the skills required, and to be capable of developing in the job.

In the cross-examination of Mr. Hopkins, the general foreman, it was established that the company often promoted men when they had potentialities for the higher job, and gave the men a chance to develop those potentialities by experience. No such chance was given Mr. Wilson.

What we have here is a situation in which two men applied for a job which involved two main elements: mechanical ability as an office machine repairman, and an element which has been called salesmanship. Neither of the two men were perfectly well qualified, because neither had the identical previous experience required by the company. Both were "reasonably" well qualified in that both had more than the required mechanical ability and both could develop the salesmanship. Under such conditions, the collective bargaining agreement says clearly that upgrading shall be on "the basis of seniority." But the company didn't do that. They passed up the senior man, a man who admittedly is the best man in the shop, and they promoted a repairman with less seniority.

In pre-judging Mr. Wilson unfairly, and in not giving him a chance which his long service entitled him to—the company has breached the collective bargaining agreement. We therefore demand that the company live up to its contractual obligations and give Mr. Wilson the Outside Serviceman job with the difference in pay, retroactive to the date of filing this grievance.

ARBITRATOR JONES: All right, Mr. Clayton, now it's your turn.

CLAYTON: I would like to state at the outset that I regret exceedingly the necessity of making an issue of the personality of any employee, especially an employee who has been an asset to the company and whose good will and continued service with us we would like to retain. If we have done this, it is only because there was no other way to justify our decision. We feel strongly that we cannot risk the loss of business which would result from Wilson's tactlessness or inefficiency as a salesman.

Perhaps a few words about the kind of business we are in would help clarify the situation. Ours is a competitive business. We try to write service contracts with large offices, so that our servicemen get a foot in the door, so to speak, and get a chance to sell new machines. We lose money on the service end of our business. Obviously, paying servicemen at a rate of $1.80 an hour and up, we can't make a profit on just servicing those machines. It is only when a serviceman can get an order for new machines or for major repair jobs, that he is pulling his own weight.

Even when we write service contracts on a monthly basis, at a loss, as I indicated, we have no guarantee that the customer will buy from us when he needs new machines. He is visited daily by our competitors who try to give him more favorable terms. So our servicemen have to be on their toes at all times and they have to be of the best personality for that kind of work. A single mistake, the loss of a single account, can be costly to the company and can result in loss of jobs among the inside crew.

What does the evidence produced here show? It shows that the company has observed all of its contractual obligations toward the union and toward the employees. With respect to Sam Wilson, the company has gone beyond contractual obligations. It was brought out in the examination of witnesses that Sam Wilson got two merit increases last year. Our contract permits management to decide whether or not increases should be granted from the mid-point of the rate range. We gave such increases to Wilson voluntarily, because we believed he deserved them. This should indicate that we have no ill feelings toward that employee.

The two men who applied for this job were not both reasonably well qualified. They were both over-qualified as far as mechanical ability is concerned. With respect to personality and an aptitude for salesmanship, one man—Joe Safford—the man we promoted, showed signs of having what it takes. The other man, Mr. Wilson, showed definitely that he lacks what it takes. If the job involved were one in which a mistake or two could be discovered before much damage was done, we might take a chance. But on the Outside Serviceman job, we learn of mistakes only when our business disappears. That would be too great a risk to take.

I therefore ask the arbitrator to rule that in passing over the man with most seniority, the company hired the only man available who was reasonably qualified for that job. In doing so, the company acted in its own best interests and in the best interests of the employees as well.

ARBITRATOR JONES: Thank you, Mr. Clayton. Well, gentlemen, we seem to have come to the end of this hearing. Are you all satisfied that all your evidence, witnesses and arguments have been presented?

(general nodding of assent)

In that case, I will declare the hearing closed.

TRIBUNAL CLERK: According to the Voluntary Labor Arbitration Rules, a written award will be rendered within thirty days.

Institute of Industrial Relations

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA 90024

MONOGRAPH SERIES: NO. 13

THE SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES ON RIGHTS IN AUSTRALIA

By Paul F. Brissenden

In Australia industrial disputes over rights, or grievance controversies, are dealt with by a number of public tribunals which make and vary awards. This study traces the origins of the federal and state systems, explains their structure and jurisdiction, and assesses their effectiveness. Seventeen cases, illustrating procedures and types of tribunals involved, are outlined to give American readers an understanding of public arbitration and dispute settlement. Professor Brissenden's thorough familiarity with the subject matter, as well as his repeated visits to Australia to gain firsthand information, make this comparative analysis of industrial relations practices especially interesting.

Price: $2.75 a copy

REPRINTS

No. 162 Evidentiary Concepts in Labor Arbitration: Some Modern Variations on Ancient Legal Themes, by EDGAR A. JONES, JR. (1966)

Price: $1.00 a copy

No. 161 Poverty in the Ghetto and Poverty in Los Angeles, by PAUL BULLOCK (1966)

No. 163 The Design of Jobs, by LOUIS E. DAVIS (1966)

No. 164 1966 West Coast Longshore Negotiations, by MAX D. KOSSORIS (1967)

No. 165 Union Impact on Retail Food Wages in California, by WALTER FOGEL (1967)

Price: One copy free of each reprint; additional copies 20c each

ORDER FORM

Name.....

Address.....

.....

(U.S. addresses must include ZIP Code)

..... copies The Settlement of Labor Disputes on Rights in Australia @ $2.75 each .....

..... copies Reprint No. 162, Evidentiary Concepts in Labor Arbitration: Some Modern Variations on Ancient Legal Themes @ $1.00 each .....

..... Reprint 161 ..... Reprint 164 one copy free of each reprint;

..... Reprint 163 ..... Reprint 165 additional copies 20c each .....

SUB-TOTAL .....

California residents add 4% sales tax .....

Mailing and Handling Charge ..... .15

TOTAL AMOUNT ENCLOSED .....

Make check payable to: THE REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA 90024

Nonprofit Org.
U.S. Postage
PAID
Permit No. 12378
Los Angeles, Calif.

Popular Pamphlets
Monographs
Reprints

A complete list of Institute publications available on request

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

141

21m-2,'67(H225s2)

Now available!

PROBLEMS OF PROOF IN ARBITRATION

PROCEEDINGS OF THE NINETEENTH ANNUAL MEETING
NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS

EDITED BY DALLAS L. JONES, PROFESSOR OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

416 pp. Indexed $8.50

Contains complete reports of the findings of four separate panels of management and labor representatives and professional arbitrators on the place of rules of evidence and judicial procedure in labor arbitration proceedings, plus transcripts of extensive workshop discussions of the reports and of a general session aimed at bringing out areas of agreement and disagreement

BNA BOOKS
THE BUREAU OF NATIONAL AFFAIRS, INC.
1231-24th St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20037

BULK RATE
U.S. POSTAGE
PAID
Washington, D. C.
Permit 1016

EMORY VIA SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL INC
5 FORSYTH ST N W
ATLANTA GA

C

30303

RETURN REQUESTED

PROBLEMS OF PROOF IN ARBITRATION

PROCEEDINGS OF THE NINETEENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS

What standards should guide the arbitrator and the parties in the presentation and evaluation of evidence?

Management executives and union representatives will find in PROBLEMS OF PROOF IN ARBITRATION no fewer than nine separate — and extremely illuminating — approaches to this highly controversial question.

In addition to reproducing the full text of detailed reports prepared by four tripartite committees of management and labor representatives and arbitrators, this latest volume of Proceedings of the National Academy of Arbitrators provides transcripts of extensive workshop sessions devoted to thorough discussion of the findings of each of the tripartite committees, as well as of a general session of the Academy membership aimed at uncovering areas of agreement and disagreement on the central question of the application of rules of evidence and of judicial procedure in arbitration proceedings.

Working from a common agenda, the tripartite committees (and the subsequent workshop sessions on their findings) explore such problem areas as: Which of the established rules of evidence are applicable in arbitration proceedings? When is parol evidence admissible? How should circumstantial evidence be treated? What standards should apply in the examination and cross-examination of witnesses? How can credibility be determined? When is the use of "new" evidence permissible? Does the way evidence is obtained or its source affect its admissibility? How should the arbitrator police the hearing? Are the pre-trial procedures utilized by the courts desirable in arbitration?

Among the many sub-topics examined in greater or less detail are: the applicability of presumptions and the concept of judicial notice in arbitration proceedings; exclusionary rules (hearsay, res gestae); rules on opinion and expert testimony; the area of privileged communication; the best-evidence rule; the admissibility of evidence of offers of compromise; what constitutes relevant and material evidence; the handling of proof of past practice; whether there is a duty on an adversary party to produce evidence or to testify; and the use of subpoena power by an arbitrator.

One of the committee reports provides a fully annotated study of the historical evolution of the rules of evidence and of the arbitration process, while another offers 18 concrete examples of testimony calling for rulings by the arbitrator, suggests the rulings appropriate in the circumstances, and discusses the implications of each ruling.

For everyone concerned to know how to prepare a case for arbitration and how to present evidence before an arbitrator, PROBLEMS OF PROOF IN ARBITRATION offers an abundance of pertinent information, including valuable pointers on the criteria arbitrators use to govern the admissibility of evidence and to assess its weight.

Among the other papers considered by the Academy and included in this volume are Father Leo C. Brown's examination of the problems of wage-setting industry committees in Puerto Rico, an address by Dr. Jaime Benitez, President of the University of Puerto Rico, entitled "Reflections on the Commonwealth," a report on collective bargaining in the East and Gulf Coast longshore industry by David H. Stowe, and Russell A. Smith's Presidential Address.

Father Brown, who has served as a public member and chairman on several tripartite industry committees, proposes that the Secretary of Labor authorize discretionary reviews of the minimum wage recommendations of industry committees, since such committees are capable of serious economic error. The functioning of industry committees, he adds, should also be studied and evaluated under congressional auspices. Father Brown believes that the Wage and Hour Division should use subpoena power to gather all relevant economic data prior to industry committee hearings and should make such data available to the committees. And he says that Division economists should provide examples of comparative economic costs as a foundation for the economic judgments the committees are required to make.

Dr. Benitez surveys the economic and social progress of Puerto Rico to date and recommends that proposals for change in the Commonwealth should come from the people, that common commitment of the United States and the Commonwealth to human rights, democracy, and the goals of the Great Society program be re-affirmed, that there be flexibility in applying the principle of bilateralness, and that the term Free Associated State, rather than Commonwealth, become the accepted expression for Puerto Rico.

Mr. Stowe, who served as director of a study committee established by the Labor Department as part of the settlement of the 1962 strike in the longshore industry, finds evidence of the chaotic condition of the industry in the fact that six times since the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act it has been necessary to use the injunction procedures of the Act. He describes how the Labor Department went about conducting a study of the longshore industry in the East and Gulf Coast ports, as required by the terms of the Morse Board settlement, discusses the findings and recommendations of the study committee, reviews the 1964 industry negotiations, and examines the prospects for fruitful collective bargaining in the industry in 1968, when the present contracts expire.

In his Presidential Address, Russell A. Smith takes note of the criticism of arbitrators and the arbitration process made by Judge Paul Hays in his Storrs Lectures at Yale University, suggests that research to prove or disprove Judge Hays' charges be undertaken, and outlines the kind of research he believes necessary.

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

FIRST CLASS
Permit No. 1210R
Washington, D. C.

BUSINESS REPLY MAIL

NO POSTAGE NECESSARY IF MAILED IN THE UNITED STATES

POSTAGE WILL BE PAID BY—

THE BUREAU OF NATIONAL AFFAIRS, INC.

1231 24th Street, N.W.

Washington, D.C. 20037

BNA BOOKS

You can now order — at substantial discounts — these earlier volumes in

BNA'S LIBRARY OF LABOR ARBITRATION

(PROCEEDINGS OF THE ANNUAL MEETINGS OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS, 1948-1966)

See money-saving, multiple-purchase rates on reply form below

PROCEEDINGS OF THE 18TH ANNUAL NAA MEETING, 1965. Topics include: problems in opinion-writing; procedures under the Railway Labor Act; how to maintain an orderly and efficient arbitration hearing; the desirability of restricting the scope of arbitration; the automated arbitrators; and the public interest.

LABOR ARBITRATION: PERSPECTIVES AND PROBLEMS (Proceedings of the 17th Annual NAA Meeting, 1964). Examines critics' complaints that arbitrators charge too much, take too long, and produce opinions burdened with unnecessary legalism and unsought advice. Experts report on detailed studies of these problems, and make suggestions for overcoming criticism that is found to be valid.

LABOR ARBITRATION AND INDUSTRIAL CHANGE (Proceedings of the 16th Annual NAA Meeting, 1963). Leading arbitrators discuss the problems of merging seniority lists, the rehabilitation of distressed grievance procedures, automation and job evaluation, the right of intervention, and the remedy power. Also included is an address by the Hon. Willard Wirtz, Secretary of Labor.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AND THE ARBITRATOR'S ROLE (Proceedings of the 15th Annual NAA Meeting, 1962). Topics discussed: legal principles and effective arbitration, labor arbitration in the federal courts, neutral consultants in collective bargaining, silent contracts vs. express provisions, gamesmanship in labor arbitration, how arbitrators decide cases, employee job rights vs. employer job controls, and the development of qualified arbitrators.

ARBITRATION AND PUBLIC POLICY (Proceedings of the 14th Annual NAA Meeting, 1961). Considers the Supreme Court's landmark decisions in the Warrior, American, and Enterprise cases; due process and fair procedure in labor arbitration; arbitrators as neutrals; past practice in the administration of collective bargaining agreements; and the factor of consensus in labor relations.

CHALLENGES TO ARBITRATION (Proceedings of the 13th Annual NAA Meeting, 1960). Explores procedural and substantive challenges to labor arbitration. Among the questions studied are the steel strike of 1959, the problem of subcontracting, direct criticism of the arbitration process, and use of voluntary arbitration in contract disputes.

ARBITRATION AND THE LAW (Proceedings of the 12th Annual NAA Meeting, 1959). Assesses probable effect of the Supreme Court decision in the Lincoln Mills case upon established systems of industrial self-government. Also included: a survey of the role of the law in arbitration today, a description and analysis of the General Motors-UAW umpireship, and a commentary on the arbitrator's role in world affairs.

THE ARBITRATOR AND THE PARTIES (Proceedings of the 11th Annual NAA Meeting, 1958). In a "tripartite symposium," representatives of unions and management evaluate arbitrators and the arbitration process, and are themselves evaluated by professional arbitrators. Other topics: due process in arbitration, potential uses of grievance and arbitration procedures in public employment, the Chrysler-UAW umpire system, and the current crisis in American unionism.

CRITICAL ISSUES IN LABOR ARBITRATION (Proceedings of the 10th Annual NAA Meeting, 1957). Highlights some of the most difficult arbitration problems in the field of industrial relations. Included are: a study of experience in reinstatement cases, a vigorous presentation of industry and labor viewpoints on the arbitration of disputes involving incentive standards, and a critical view of the trend toward technicalities in arbitration.

MANAGEMENT RIGHTS AND THE ARBITRATION PROCESS (Proceedings of the 9th Annual NAA Meeting, 1956). Provides guides to the solution of problems involving: the pros and cons of seniority vs. ability, the technicalities of methods and standards engineering, job classification difficulties, varying concepts of industrial discipline, and hard-to-answer questions of arbitrability and jurisdiction.

ARBITRATION TODAY (Proceedings of the 8th Annual NAA Meeting, 1955). Contains the practical advice and guidance of a panel of top-flight specialists on such problems as wage incentives, arbitrability of grievances, piece rate provisions, grace periods, job evaluation, seniority claims, ability disputes, security risk cases, reinstatement and back pay, "wildcat" strikes, "bumping" complications, and job reassignments.

THE PROFESSION OF LABOR ARBITRATION (Selections from the proceedings of the first seven Annual NAA Meetings, 1948-54). Discusses such questions as: Where is arbitration going? How can arbitration best help effectuate the labor contract? Is the labor arbitrator expendable? What is the heart and essence of the arbitration process? What is the place of law in labor arbitration? How can labor disputes in major industries best be handled? How should responsibility for labor policy be allocated as between state and federal authorities? What social, political, economic, and technological trends seem likely to affect labor arbitration, and how?

TEAR OUT AND MAIL—TODAY!

BNA BOOKS ■ THE BUREAU OF NATIONAL AFFAIRS, INC.

10-DAY APPROVAL OFFER

☐ Please send me_____copy/copies of PROBLEMS OF PROOF IN ARBITRATION at $8.50 per copy, plus postage and sales tax where applicable. Bill me later. I understand I may return the book(s) within 10 days for full credit.

☐ At the same time, please send_____copy/copies of the other volumes in BNA's Library of Labor Arbitration that I have checked below, billing me at the reduced combination rate applicable to my total purchase, as shown in the table alongside. (Same return privilege.)

- ☐ Proceedings of the 18th Annual NAA Meeting $8.50
- ☐ Labor Arbitration: Perspectives and Problems $8.50
- ☐ Labor Arbitration and Industrial Change $8.50
- ☐ Collective Bargaining and the Arbitrator's Role $8.50
- ☐ Arbitration and Public Policy $8.50
- ☐ Challenges to Arbitration $8.50
- ☐ Arbitration and the Law $8.50
- ☐ The Arbitrator and the Parties $8.50
- ☐ Critical Issues in Labor Arbitration $8.50
- ☐ Management Rights and the Arbitration Process $8.50
- ☐ Arbitration Today $8.50
- ☐ The Profession of Labor Arbitration $8.50

REDUCED COMBINATION RATES FOR MULTIPLE PURCHASES

All 13 Vols.	$56.25	Any 7 Vols.	$38.00
Any 12	53.50	Any 6	34.20
Any 11	50.70	Any 5	30.05
Any 10	47.80	Any 4	25.50
Any 9	44.75	Any 3	20.50
Any 8	41.50	Any 2	15.00

(Signed) _____

NAME _____ TITLE _____

ORGANIZATION _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____

A

0267 pc 5697

AGREEMENT BETWEEN ---

The Billings & Springer Company

and

International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron
Shipbuilders, Blacksmiths,
Forgers and Helpers

AFL-CIO

Hartford, Connecticut

Article I - Purpose

1. The general purpose of this Agreement is to promote the mutual interest of the Union and the Company, to provide for the operations of the plant of the Company under methods which will further to the fullest extent the safety and welfare of the employees, economy of operations, quality and quantity of production and minimization of waste, to establish rates of pay, hours of work, and to avoid interruptions of work.

Article II - Recognition

1. The Company recognizes the Union as the sole collective bargaining agency for all production and maintenance employees employed by the Company at its Hartford, Connecticut plant, excluding all office and clerical employees, salesmen, timekeepers, foremen and all supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

Article III - Management

1. The Management of the Company, and the direction of the working force, including the right to plan, direct and control plant operations, hire, suspend or discharge for proper cause, or transfer or relieve employees from duty because of lack of work, or for other legitimate business reasons, and the right to introduce new or improved production methods or facilities, is vested exclusively in the Company; provided that nothing contained herein shall be used for the purpose of discriminating unfairly against any member of the Union. This Article shall be applied in conformance with the other provisions of this Agreement.

Article IV - Grievance Procedure

1. A grievance is any difference of opinion or dispute between the Company and any employee or Union representative regarding the interpretation or operation of any provision of this Agreement, and shall be dealt with as follows:

   a. The Grievance is to be first taken up with the foreman of the Department involved by the aggrieved employee or the Department Steward, or both.

   b. If the grievance is not settled in one (1) above within two working days then it shall be submitted in writing to the Department Manager and taken up with the Personnel Manager and the Union President, Department Steward and the Business Agent. If no settlement is reached, a conference with the Company's Executive in charge of negotiations, or his representative, will be arranged as soon as possible and in no event later than one week.

c. If the conferences do not satisfactorily settle the grievance then it shall be submitted to arbitration as herein provided, and provided such request is made in writing.

Article V - Arbitration

1. In the event that both parties fail to adjust any controversy arising out of this Agreement over wages, hours, or working conditions, or the interpretation or application of this Agreement, the Union and the Company hereby agree to submit for arbitration such grievances to the Connecticut State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation and its decision shall be final and binding until the expiration of this Agreement or any extension thereof.

Article VI - Seniority

1. Seniority shall be observed on a basis of accumulated service in any one department and shall not begin until after twelve (12) months of employment in any one Department. These Departments, sub-departments, and groups, to be in accodance with the master seniority list mutually agreed upon by the Company and the Union and maintained in the Company's Personnel Office, copy of which is supplied to the Union.

2. The Company shall also keep posted a seniority list based upon Company records showing the date of last hire, said seniority list to be correctly revised at thirty (30) day intervals.

3. When conditions warrant a decrease or increase in the number of employees, the following factors shall apply:

   a. Seniority (Department-Wide)

   b. Ability

   c. Competency to perform the work

   Where ability and competency are substantially equal, seniority of service shall govern.

Article VII - Promotions

1. In filling new jobs or vacancies of a permanent nature within a department, the Company shall post such vacancies, including classification number, in all departments for a period of two (2) full working days. Employees interested in applying for said positions must apply in writing within five (5) working days with the Personnel Manager.

2. A thirty (30) day trial period shall be given to all employees transferred to a job in a Department other than their own, without loss of seniority providing such employees are transferred before the end of the following month from the date of layoff.

Appendix A - Wage Rates

All employees covered by this Agreement shall receive an increase of .06¢ per hour May 1, 1963 and an additional .05¢ per hour May 1, 1964, except that Indentured Apprentices shall receive the increases according to the provisions of their contract.

The following wage schedule will become effective on the date shown

Die Department	May 1, 1963	May 1, 1964
Die Sinker - A	3.12	3.17
Die Sinker - B	2.85	2.90
Die Sinker Apprentice	per scheduled contract
Trimmer Die Maker	2.82	2.87
Machine Operator	2.52	2.57
Die Room Machinist	2.79	2.84
Forge Department
Hammerman - 1500-2500 lbs.	2.80	2.85
- 1200-1499 lbs.	2.66	2.71
- 800-1199 lbs	2.61	2.66
Hammerman Trainees - 1st 60 days	2.31	2.36
Upsetter Operator	2.60	2.65
Bulldozer	2.41	2.46
Set-up (Press)	2.36	2.41
Coin Hammer & U-Bolt Flattener	2.41	2.46
Yard Clerk & Stock Painter	2.41	2.46
All Bending & Presswork Operators	2.31	2.36
Heater	2.31	2.36
Wheelabrator Operator	2.21	2.26
Press Cut-off Saw & Floormen	2.16	2.21
Furnace Tender	2.71	2.76
Janitor	2.06	2.11
Fork Lift Operator	2.31	2.36

See Page 19

The WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEE

THOSE WHO SERVE . . . . . STATE GOVERNMENT'S GREATEST POTENTIAL RESOURCE

Harry S. Manchester Inc.

The Straightaway Silhouette

Spring '53's

Newest Look!

At Manchester's Now

at the Price You Like

$29.95

Straight as an arrow from shoulder to hemline, gently curved at the waistline . . . that's Spring '53's newest look!

Expressed here in a navy rayon sheer dress with red and white polka-dot trimming. Sizes 12 to 20.

Fashion Center Dresses,

Second Floor

Those Who Serve . . .

THE LATE Governor Julius P. Heil used to go all over the country selling Wisconsin cheese. This cheese is right good cheese; there is no better. On the other hand Mr. Heil was never known to brag about Wisconsin's reputation for good government.

Succeeding governors, to their credit, besides promoting the great dairy industry of this state, have also, on occasion, commended the industry and ability of the public servants who have made Wisconsin state government a model in this nation.

We wonder, however, whether the great taxpaying public in this state truly understands and appreciates the valuable resource it has in its honest, graft-free, and efficient state government. Maybe it's a case of being too close to the woods to see the trees. Good government is simply taken for granted. There is no ten per cent levy on state employees' salaries by the political party in power; such a thing is unheard of in Wisconsin. Yet it happens in many states. And we can't remember when any large scale graft or corruption was uncovered in state government. By and large the taxpayer gets a dollar or more of honest service for every dollar he pays in taxes.

However, the same public complacency which takes top-notch administration and honest, efficient service for granted also may lead to its undoing.

When the people of this state and their elected representatives begin to take the great human organization, on which good service depends, too long for granted; when it is deemed too expensive to meet the salary competition of private employers; and when the philosophy prevails that proposes to start checking inflation somewhere, and that somewhere happens to be the salaries of civil servants and teachers, then the service indeed will have started downhill.

Some economic facts that can't be overlooked are these. The employment market is highly competitive. Private and public employers compete with each other for capable workers. Salaries, retirement pensions, and fringe benefits are major factors in job decisions. Anybody with good common sense and anything at all on the ball works for the employer who does best by him. The state itself is a large employer and faces the same kind of competitive labor market every other employer faces. In order to hold its own in this kind of a market the state must do as well or better than the market.

The fact is the state is doing neither.

And so the state service has lost many of its best people in the interval between sessions of the legislature.

This loss and the resultant deterioration of the service between sessions of the legislature is perhaps inherent in the nature of state government. The legislature establishes a budget and sets salaries and working conditions for a period of two years. While the law permits some flexibility in the interim, state officers charged with the responsibility of adjusting salaries in the absence of the legislature have been reluctant to act, not wishing to commit the incoming legislature to certain expenditures made in the interim.

With the legislature once more in session. civil servants, teachers, and other employees of the state are hopeful that prompt action will be taken to correct injustices and inequalities in compensation which have arisen since 1951. Such adjustments will go a long way toward continuing the high level of public service in this state which has been the envy of the nation.

Have You Been Watching the American Exchange Bank

Weather-Tower

For the Weather Forecasts?

Watch the tower on top of the bank building for changing colors —

BALL

always red for aircraft warnings

STEADY—no precipitation
FLASHING—rain or snow

TOWER

RED—warmer
GREEN—colder
YELLOW—no change

Today's weather shown from midnight until noon

Tomorrow's weather from noon until midnight

THE

AMERICAN EXCHANGE BANK

1 NORTH PINCKNEY STREET

Madison Member of F.D.I.C.

Salary Committee Reports State Salaries Lag 15 Per Cent —

For Specific Recommendations See Page 10.

State Employees Ask $37.50 Average Increase

APPEARING before the state personnel board at a public hearing on February 6, 1953, the salary committee of the Wisconsin State Employees Association made the following general statement and recommendations relating to state civil service salaries:

"The 1947 legislature acknowledged that compensation schedules for state civil service employees were in serious need of overhauling. By authorization of that legislature an expensive professional survey of the entire classification and compensation plan was made during the late months of 1947 and was adopted and put into effect in June 1948. The results of that survey and the resulting increases in salary ranges were accepted gratefully and generally acknowledged as fair with one exception. Because of the amount of money involved, it was not deemed possible to keep the employees in the same equivalent position in the revised salary range as they occupied in the old range. For example, employees with many years of experience who had attained the top of their salary range as acknowledgment that they had reached top experience and efficiency for their job were required to drop back with their juniors and in some cases the very beginners and wait more years to again attain what was then acknowledged as the fair rate for representative top performance.

In October and November 1950 the Bureau of Personnel made a wage and salary survey of public employers and private industry in the various areas of Wisconsin to draw a comparison between their compensation for jobs which were comparable to state civil service jobs. With that and other evidence that the state compensation plan was rapidly falling behind, Governor Kohler made appropriate recommendations to the 1951 legislature.

Although the original recommendations were modified, some adjustment was made by the legislature. The increases were welcomed but were deemed to be inadequate to maintain the level of earning power established by the schedule adopted in June 1948. Certainly no one represented that such adjustments pushed state salaries ahead of those shown in the Bureau's 1950 survey.

Following its established practice, the Bureau of Personnel in October and November 1952 again surveyed other public and private employment rates in the same geographical areas and the same job classifications as covered in their 1950 survey. This provides a fair and accurate basis to indicate what has happened to wage schedules in industry in Wisconsin and in jobs which are comparable to a representative sample of state civil service jobs.

A careful analysis of the 1950 and 1952 Bureau's surveys reveals that during the two year period rates increased 14½% on the average in the establishments and jobs surveyed.

Presumably the purpose of these surveys is to guide those whose responsibility it is to keep the civil service compensation schedule current and in accord with market conditions in general. Presumably the survey would influence the recommended schedules for state employees for the 1953-55 biennium.

The Bureau recognized that in many of the surveyed establishments further basic increases would be granted in the eight months period between the date of its survey and the statutory July 1953 date that new state schedules would put into effect. Accordingly, it was the Bureau's position that it be given until a date later than the convening of the legislative session to submit its recommendations so it could incorporate the latest fluctuations with the results of the survey.

For example, the City of Milwaukee has increased all salaries by 7 to 8% since the date of the survey; Milwaukee Gas and Light Company granted a 6% increase to all its clerical workers in January. A check of all surveyed establishments will show that the number, who have or will before July of 1953, make further increases will substantially affect the survey findings.

The survey's present figures show the 14½% average increase. During this same period state employees have received $11 per month cost-of-living bonus adjustment which represents an increase of between 4 and 5%. When a tabulation is made including the later increases in the surveyed establishments, the disparity will be considerably greater.

Salaries in an Economy Budget

In the budget recommendations made to the 1951 legislature a reasonable attempt to provide fair adjustments in state employees' compensation was made. Although the amounts acknowledged by the administration as warranted had to be modified, a substantial adjustment was made.

With a $40,000,000 surplus to start the 1951-53 biennium it was not so difficult to treat the salary problem with reasonable fairness.

Because a large part of the previous general fund surplus has been used, the prevailing desire of the state's administrators is to keep the budget for the 1953-55 biennium within the state's income provided under the present tax laws. This objective is perfectly reasonable and proper. Toward that objective, it has been stated that departmental requests have been scrutinized and extravagance eliminated, services re-examined and some curtailed or eliminated; some groups or individuals are asked to bear the cost of services conducted for their specific benefit. Every state employee is called upon to exercise greater skill and diligence in the administration of the state's functions under a budget of this kind.

Certainly no state employee can find logical objection to such a program. It is the proper function of the state administration and legislature to act with these objectives in mind.

No one however has stated that the

(continued on page 14)

Capitol Policeman Forrest Manson congratulates Governor Kohler on his re-election.

Capitol Policemen Must Know the Answers---

. . . Or Where to Find Them

By LUCILLE BYSTROM

GET out the bathroom scale, Herman; we've got to weigh the capitol."

Either Herman is just plain stubborn or he can't find the scale, because the policemen and guides at Wisconsin's state capitol still are forced to admit they do not know how much the building weighs. And believe it or not, it is one of the most frequently asked of the hundreds of questions they hear daily.

Subjects range from directions, which is easily understandable, to a wide variety of inquiries with no apparent connection with the location.

"Which door leads to the Capitol Square?" asked one visitor, and another, "Where is the front door?" Or, "Where is the farewell department?" which turned out to be the welfare department.

What a Hay Loft!

One rural resident stood mutely gazing up toward the top of the rotunda and then thoughtfully exclaimed "Gee, this sure would hold a lot of hay."

Two out of town visitors were visibly disappointed because they received an unfavorable reply to their eager, "Which floor is the state fair on?"

Sometimes it is more than the question which stumps the experts. A well dressed woman approached a guide one day and asked, "Which department has the snakes?" (the guide could scarcely refrain from making a 'wise-crack', but he let it remain a mental joke.) He referred her to an entomologist on the fourth floor and showed her to the elevator nearest her destination. But she would have none of that transportation, and started a weary trek up the steps.

A court is synonymous with prisoners in many minds, and a timid lady whispered to the tour guide as they stepped into the supreme court chamber, "Where do they keep the prisoners?"

Youngsters are particularly impressed with the size and grandeur of the beautiful building. It is not uncommon to hear them discuss the murals in the dome. The most frequent interpretation is that the figures are angels or "Jesus." "Look," one little girl exclaimed with an attempt to suppress her excitement, "There's Jesus up there."

Open Your Mouth

Standing hand in hand, a little boy and girl looked raptly toward the towering arches. Said the boy, "Sister, open your mouth, your head will tip back farther."

Guides and policemen can always spot a Southerner visiting Madison because they refer to the building as the "state house." The rural tourist invariably uses the term "town hall."

Many persons take the state building for granted and believe that all government springs from within its walls. Thus they seek to pay their water bills, obtain marriage licenses and even divorces. Then there was the justice of the peace from a small community who had fined a motorist for driving without proper license plates, and didn't know what to do with the money. It was a state law violation and he was determined to see that the state got the money. The guide was perplexed momentarily, because this was a new one posed for his solution. He suggested the man go to the state treasurer's office. If that was not right, the information would be available, he explained.

A few minutes later he learned he had struck it right on the head. The JP returned to say that the money went to the treasurer. This is an example of the question and answer program of the guides. They may not know the answer, but they are expected to know where the information can be obtained.

Where Is Kenneth?

Among the vague questions are such as this one "Where does Kenneth work?" Kenneth's last name, his duties or any further identification was lacking. In fact the man looking for Kenneth wasn't interested in these things. He just wanted to talk to Kenneth.

The interior of the great stone and marble structure is not all that evokes unusual queries. One day a woman

(continued on page 12)

Capitol policemen who are also designated as guides are from left to right. Epha Wright, Robert Sullivan and Ray Hustad.

All This Bill Does . . .

The following list of bills will be of interest to every civil service employee. The bills have been introduced in the Wisconsin legislature at the request of the Wisconsin State Employees Association, with one or two exceptions, and constitute the Association's recommendations for improvements in state salaries, working conditions, and civil service rights and benefits.

SALARIES

Bill 333,A.

Relating to the cost-of-living bonus. Introduced by Assembly Committee on Transportation. The bill increases the cost-of-living bonus for civil service employees from $65 to $90 a month. Bill establishes a new escalator formula and converts the present bonus law from the cost-of-living index for the City of Milwaukee, which has been discontinued by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, to the new revised consumers' price index (all items, all cities combined) (1947-1949=100). Future bonus adjustments to be based on $1.73 for each 0.6 points change in such index. Provides for $1.00 for each 0.6 points change if the index falls below the level of January 15, 1953. Bill also extends the bonus law to teachers in the state colleges and the university.

Bill 145,S.

Relating to repeal of the 80 per cent formula limiting merit step increases. Introduced by Senators Dempsey and Leverich. Bill repeals 80 per cent formula and provides an appeal procedure for employees denied a merit step increase.

Bill 208,A.

Relating to longevity step increases. Introduced by Assemblyman La Fave. Bill provides longevity step increases at the rate of one step for each 3 years of service after an employee has reached the maximum salary of his salary range. The maximum number of such steps is 3 over a period of 9 years.

Bill 153,S.

Relating to time and one half for overtime. Introduced by Senators Gettelman, La Fond, and Dempsey. Bill establishes time and one half rate for all overtime pay authorized by bureau of personnel. Time and one half to be applied to the basic salary plus cost-of-living bonus.

RETIREMENT

Bill 212,S.

Relating to payment of basic pension in addition to earned annuity under Wisconsin Retirement Fund. Introduced by Senate Committee on State and Local Government. Bill seeks to increase retirement benefits by adding to the annuity payment an amount equal to $2.00 a month for each year of service.

Bill 213,S.

Relating to inclusion of the probationary period in computation of prior service credits and eliminating the 6 months' waiting period before a new employee becomes a member of the Wisconsin Retirement Fund. Introduced by Senator Padrutt.

Bill 99,S.

Relating to annuity payments based on attained age. Introduced by Senator Robinson. Bill proposes to pay annuitants retiring between ages 65 and 70 the annuity due them as of their attained age rather than assumed age 65 as is now the practice.

Bill 100,S.

Relating to maximum limit on contributions to the Wisconsin Retirement Fund and maximum annuities payable thereunder. Introduced by Senator Robinson. Present law limits contributions to the first $350 of earnings; also limits any annuity payment to $175 a month plus annuity payable from additional contributions of the member over and above the required 5 per cent. Bill proposes to eliminate the $350 ceiling on salaries to which the normal contribution rate applies and thereby require contributions on earnings in excess of $350 a month and also grant prior service credits on such basis. Repeal of the $350 ceiling also permits payment of annuities in excess of $175 but not to exceed one half the final rate of earnings.

Bill 195,S.

Relating to 7 per cent contribution rate to Wisconsin Retirement Fund for certain classes of employees. Introduced by Senator Olson. Bill applies to conservation patrol boat captains; conservation patrol boat engineers; conservation airplane pilots; forest rangers; state traffic officers; university policemen; deputy state fire marshals; beverage tax investigators; employees of the conservation commission who are subject to call for forest fire control or warden duty; and guards or other employees whose principal duties are supervision and discipline of inmates in state penal institutions. Bill increases contribution rate for such employees from 5 to 7 per cent where such rate is not already in effect and grants prior service credits at the 7 per cent rate to all such employees. Bill makes conservation patrol boat captains, engineers, and airplane pilots eligible for special disability and death benefits under section 102.455, statutes. Others named above already have such benefits.

Bill 152,S.

Relating to disability annuities under the Wisconsin Retirement Fund. Introduced by Senators Nelson and Leverich. Bill increases disability benefit from 40 to 50 per cent of final rate of earnings in certain cases.

Bill 211,S.

Relating to disability and survivorship benefits under Wisconsin Retirement Fund. Introduced by Committee on State and Local Government. Bill repeals offset of workmen's compensation payments against disability and survivorship benefits payable under Wisconsin Retirement Fund to employees who are disabled from an injury or disease arising out of their employment and to survivors of employees who die from such injury or disease.

Bill 293,A.

Relating to survivorship benefits payable to widows and minor children under Wisconsin Retirement Fund. Introduced by Assemblyman Gehrmann. Bill permits members of the Fund to elect single sum settlements or monthly payments to surviving widows and minor children.

OTHER BILLS

Bill 206,S.

Relating to accumulative sick leave. Introduced by Senate Committee on State and Local Government. Bill increases accumulated sick leave ceiling from 60 to 90 days.

Bill 207,S.

Relating to merit awards for state employees. Introduced by Senate Committee on State and Local Government. Bill establishes merit awards board, provides $5,000 to make awards in cash or otherwise to employees who make worthwhile suggestions for improving state operations which will result in savings to the state.

Bill 294,A.

Relating to judgment debtors. Introduced by Assemblyman Gehrmann. Bill provides relief for state law enforcement officers who have judgments returned against them for acts committed in the performance of their duties. Governor, Chairman of Senate and Assembly Finance Committees, and Director of Public Welfare constitute Judgment Debtor Relief Commission to hear appeals from such law enforcement officers. Commission may order reimbursement for the amount of the judgment but not to exceed $5,000 if it finds the officer acted "in good faith."

Bill 204,S.

Relating to certain powers of the personnel board in disciplinary cases involving civil service employees. Introduced by Senate Committee on State and Local Government. Bill authorizes personnel board to issue an order to reduce a suspension without pay or to substitute a suspension without pay in lieu of discharge in disciplinary cases after appeal and hearing thereon.

Bill 63,S.

Relating to unemployment compensation for public employees. Introduced by Legislative Council on recommendation of Statutory Advisory Committee on Unemployment Compensation. Bill newly provides U. C. benefit protection for many salaried public employees employed by covered government units including all salaried state civil service workers. It also provides a new and flexible system of benefit financing based on the New York state "pay-as-you-go" plan which eliminates building reserves.

Bill 117,S.

Relating to seniority credits for certain personnel of the Wisconsin State Employment Service. Introduced by Senator Busby. Bill grants full state civil service seniority to present employees of the employment service who entered the service of the United States on or after January 1, 1942 and were transferred to the service of the state on November 16, 1946. Passed by Senate Feb. 19.

Bill 205,S.

Relating to seniority credits for motor vehicle department investigators who were originally employed as traffic officers. Introduced by Senate Committee on State and Local Government. Bill extends seniority in the traffic officer classification for the 1951-1953 biennium to certain employees of the motor vehicle department now serving in the classification, investigator.

Bills relating to mileage, night work salary differentials, equivalent increases, service ratings, and uniforms had not yet been offered as this publication went to press.

Legislative Session Important To All

THE 1953 session of the Wisconsin legislature, currently the most important factor in the lives of Wisconsin citizens as regards general welfare, was heralded with the rap of gavels on Wednesday, Jan. 14. In fact so emphatic was the bang of the gavel in the assembly, that it flew from the hands of chief clerk Arthur May, in several pieces.

The thirty-three men who make up the senate and the 99 who, with a lone woman, constitute the assembly, were on hand to be sworn to the duties of their offices. With the exception of hold-over senators, all renew their oath each session.

There are fewer new faces in the legislature than in past years. The lower house has 22 freshmen law-makers while the senate has only two. Three additional senators moved from the assembly. The recent appointment of Sen. Rudolph Schlabach of La Crosse, to the board of tax appeals, will mean a substitute will have to be elected at a special election in April.

Smith Leads Senate

Lieut.-gov., George Smith, by reason of his office, retains the speakership of the senate, with Sen. Frank Panzer of Oakfield president pro-tem. Republican floor leader, Sen. Warren Knowles of New Richmond was re-elected, but the nod for the democrat floor leadership was in favor of Sen. Henry Maier of Milwaukee, replacing Sen. Gaylord A. Nelson of Madison.

The switch in party direction from the floor, was in the opposite party in the lower house. Here Arthur Mockrud was replaced by Mark Catlin of Appleton. Catlin returned to the assembly this session after an absence in 1951, when he lost the election to Walter Melchior, also of Appleton. Catlin

(continued on page 15)

By ROY E. KUBISTA

ON JANUARY 20, 1953, Congressman John W. Byrnes of Wisconsin introduced H. R. 2062 in the House of Representatives. This bill proposes to extend old age and survivors' benefits under the social security act to members of the Wisconsin Retirement Fund. It is expected that Senator Alexander Wiley will introduce a companion bill in the Senate of the United States. The Byrnes bill provides social security coverage for members of the Wisconsin Retirement Fund retroactive to January 1, 1951. The bill excludes service performed in policemen's and firemen's positions provided the state of Wisconsin requests such exclusions.

* * *

The retroactive feature of the Byrnes' bill is important to all state employees. By moving the starting date back to January 1, 1951, the benefits under old age and survivors' insurance will be substantially increased for retiring employees. Employees who are 63 years of age or older will be fully covered by social security on the effective date of H. R. 2062. This means that their survivors will be eligible for full social security benefits in the event of death before age 65. It also means full coverage for old age insurance benefits at age 65 for such persons. In addition younger state workers also will be fully covered for survivors' benefits since only 6 quarters of coverage are necessary for this purpose. State employees will not be required to make any additional contributions for these benefits nor will the state pay more. The retroactive payments due social security will be taken from the 5 per cent normal payroll contributions, which were matched by the state, and paid to the Wisconsin Retirement Fund since January 1, 1951. The process will simply be a transfer of funds between the state retirement system and social security.

* * *

The best part of the social security deal is the fact that the additional benefits under social security will not cost the employee or the state more money. State employees will receive two pensions when they retire at age 65, the regular retirement benefit from the Wisconsin Retirement Fund plus federal insurance. Required social security taxes will be subtracted from the normal 5 per cent payroll contribution the employee and the state now pay to the Wisconsin Retirement Fund. All this will happen if and when H.R. 2062 becomes law. Will the state employee receive preferred treatment compared to employees of large private employers under this plan? The answer is no. There are some 10 million employees in this country covered by private pension plans supplemented by social security benefits.

* * *

The story of the fight for the extension of federal old age and survivors' insurance to the employees of state and local governments already covered by their own retirement plans goes back many years. First among those to advocate integration of state and local retirement systems with social security was our own international union, the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees. As early as 1936 the international convention of the AFSCME had taken a firm stand in favor of the extension of social security to public employees. The position of the international was restated and emphasized in conventions held in 1946, 1948, 1950, and 1952. Effective national leadership for the proposition has been maintained, under most discouraging circumstances, by our national Civil Service Counsel, Colonel A. E. Garey. In this connection, I witnessed the very able appearance of Colonel Garey before the Finance Committee of the United States Senate March 17, 1950 on bill H. R. 6000. The atmosphere in the committee room was completely hostile. H. R. 6000 proposed the extension of social security to covered public employee groups. The committee was hostile because there had been so much pressure against the bill by organized teachers, policemen, and firemen who wanted no part of federal insurance. Colonel Garey's argument was airtight, but the bill failed to pass. The congressional fight continued in 1951 and 1952 without success. The prospects in 1953 look brighter.

* * *

The reason prospects are brighter in 1953 is the fact that the principle of extension of social security to covered public workers is now supported by many national organizations that have only recently joined the fight. These include the American Municipal Association; the National Association of County Officials; the National Association of Municipal Law Officers; the U. S. Conference of Mayors; the Association of Governing Boards of State Universities and Allied Institutions; the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities; the National Association of Housing Officials; and the National Association of State Universities. Besides the Wisconsin bill, Congressmen Byrnes and Rains, of Alabama, have introduced companion bills, H. R. 2063 and H. R. 2064, which provide for the extension of federal insurance to employees of state and local governments throughout the nation. Both the Wisconsin bill, H. R. 2062, and the general coverage bills will be pushed by interested groups.

* * *

It should be understood that the Wisconsin bill applies exclusively to the integration of the Wisconsin

(continued on page 16)

H. C. Miller Company

Manufacturers of

Loose Leaf Books
Accounting Forms and Systems

Complete Line of Office Stationery and Furniture

510 North Broadway
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN

D. B. PEDLEY & SON

★

Kenosha, Wisconsin

Louis R. Behling Engraving Co.

★

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Daanen & Janssen

•

General Road Contractors

•

132 North Erie Street
DePERE, WISCONSIN

Recommendations On Civil Service Salaries

Prepared by WSEA Salary Committee

PURSUANT to Chapter 611, Laws of 1947, the State Bureau of Personnel in cooperation with the legislature's committee on reclassification undertook a study of the state classification and compensation plan in 1947-48.

The classification and compensation plan resulting from this study became effective on June 1, 1948. The salary range established for each class of positions was deemed to be equivalent to prevailing market rates and costs and standards of living as of February 15, 1948.

Escalation of state employee's salaries through a "cost-of-living bonus" was established by act of the 1947 legislature. It is based on the cost-of-living index for the city of Milwaukee. The rate of escalation is $1 per month increase or decrease in the cost-of-living bonus for each 1 point change in such index.

The following study seeks to determine how the adjustment and escalation of state employees' salaries compares with the adjustment and escalation of salaries of employees in comparable jurisdictions in Wisconsin for the period July 1, 1948 to January 1, 1953. Included also are comparative figures based on Bureau of Personnel salary surveys for 1950 and 1952.

The Special Salary Committee appointed by the executive board of the Wisconsin State Employees Association was created for the purpose of studying the salary status of state employees and developing criteria to show what, if any, adjustments are warranted on an over-all basis.

Since neither the committee nor the WSEA have the time or facilities to make detailed job evaluations and surveys, we have had to approach the problem on a general comparison basis. We have tried to show what has happened to the salaries of other groups of employees and compare that with increases granted state employees during the same period of time. In our opinion there is no fairness in expecting state employees to accept less than equivalent consideration.

It is admitted our material is limited but we believe it is accurate and generally representative. At no time in our presentation have we consciously slanted facts. If any of the figures appear questionable or if the periods of comparison appear to be chosen to give a distorted basis of comparison, we sincerely request the opportunity to present our reasoning.

COMPARISONS

Case I—

Milwaukee City Employee

From July 1948 to January 1953
Cost-of-Living Bonus increased from $83.02 to $133.92 ..... Bonus Increase $50.90
Basic salary increase for lowest classification:

$15.00	January 1, 1951
8.00	January 1, 1952
8.28	January 1, 1953
	Total Basic Increase	31.28

Minimum compensation increase since 1948 in lowest classification exclusive of merit increases $82.18

Wisconsin State Employee

Cost-of-Living Bonus increase in same period as above—($35 to $65)	$30.00
Basic salary increase in same period as above—($10 on May 1, 1951)	10.00
Minimum increase comparable to above	$40.00

Conclusion—

$42.18 monthly increase is necessary to bring the lowest classification up to comparable basis with the Milwaukee City employees as they were established after reclassification and salary survey in 1948.

Case II—

Milwaukee County Civil Service Employee

From July 1948 to January 1953
Cost-of-Living Bonus increased from $83.02 to $133.92 ..... Bonus Increase $50.90
Basic salaries increased:
$15.00 January 1, 1951
13.00 Average increase by salary survey effective January 1, 1953.
Total Basic Increase Average 28.00

$78.90

Wisconsin State Employee

Cost-of-Living Bonus increase in same period as above $30.00
Basic salary increase May 1, 1951 ..... 10.00

$40.00

Conclusion—

$38.90 monthly increase is necessary to bring state employees up to the comparable basis as established in 1948.

Case III—

Bureau of Personnel salary survey of private and other public units from November 1950 to November 1952 shows a 14.65% average increase in jobs comparable to state classifications.

On May 9, 1951 the director of personnel informed the legislature's joint committee on finance that the proposed state compensation plan to be effective July 1, 1951 together with adjustments provided by Chapter 97, Laws of 1951, was aimed at adjusting for changed employment and economic conditions occurring up to November 1950.

Since the effective date of the state compensation plan (July 1, 1951), state employees have received an increase of $11 a month in the cost-of-living bonus; this is equal to 4.5 to 5 per cent in the lowest ranges and about 3.5 per cent in the middle ranges.

Consequently on the basis of these surveys a 10 or 11% increase in state salaries would be due to bring them into line as of November 1952 with the changes reflected in the Bureau's survey.

However, not included in the Bureau's survey are further and substantial increases that will be effective for many of the private and other governmental units between November 1952 and July 1953 which is the statutory effective date for the Bureau's recommended salary schedules.

For example, Dane County employees, included in the survey, will receive substantial increases effective January 1, 1953. Milwaukee City employees, included in the survey have approved increases due January 1, 1953 ammounting to $9.32 per month plus 4% of their total compensation (basic salary and cost-of-living bonus) in 1952 with the limitation of $25 on the percentage increase.

Conclusion—

With a 10 to 11% increase already shown as warranted on the basis of the Bureau of Personnel's Survey up to November 1952, it is not unreasonable to anticipate that further increases in surveyed establishments from November 1952 to July 1953 will justify another 4 to 5%.

Accordingly, to propose consideration of increases for state employees equivalent to less than 15% would be obviously unfair.

15% INCREASE JUSTIFIED

15% of average civil service salary of $250 per month $37.50
We, therefore, request that increases be made on the following basis:
Cost-of-Living bonus adjustment across the board $25.00
5% Average increase in salaries based on adjustments scheduled by the Bureau of Personnel in review of schedules 12.50

Total Average Increase $37.50

Example

$200 permonth employee would receive—
$25.00 increase in bonus
10.00 average increase in salary

$35.00 Total adjustment

$300 per month employee would receive—
$25.00 increase in bonus
15.00 average increase in salary

$40.00 Total adjustment

Sacony suits of Palm Beach
the suits you can wear as often as your watch...

"it's a wonderful buy!" $25

Capitol Policemen Must Know The Answers . . .

(continued from page 6)

approached a policeman and asked if she could have one of the capitol park squirrels if she could catch it. There were so many there, she added. This was one that could be answered in the affirmative, because the furry creatures, although friendly are also very fast.

Slips from shrubs and plants and the flowers themselves are coveted by many a housewife with a green thumb, but partaking of any is strictly "verboten."

Although there have been many interpretations of the great statue that surmounts the outer dome, it is a fact that it was not sculptured to indicate any personality or symbol. The most accepted title for the golden lady is "Forward", the motto of the state. And this is the general explanation. However, "Forward" is slightly backward in comparison to a sister statue, because she is not hospitable. Many persons are disappointed because they cannot crawl up into her arms as can be done with France's gift to America standing in New York's harbor, the Statue of Liberty.

Where Did That Office Go?

The ever increasing crowding of the capitol has added to the knowledge that must be stored away by the guardians of the building. State departments occupy space in rented buildings in every part of Madison. And Madison covers quite a stretch of territory.

For instance someone will be mighty upset if he is looking for the industrial commission at 137 E. Wilson-st., and is directed to 2218 University-ave., or 448 State-st. He will find the industrial commission at all three addresses, but chances are he won't find the department he wants on the first try. Here is where the policemen come to the rescue. They ascertain if he seeks the employers division of unemployment compensation or the employes division or the employment service. That settled, the interrogator is given the proper directions.

Although the department of agriculture occupies much of the fourth floor and numerous other spots, the department of plant pathology is housed at 315 N. Carroll-st. Similarly the department of public welfare has outgrown its quarters in the state building and has been forced to spread its divisions to various parts of the city. If you are looking for the division of mental hygiene or the bureau of alcohol studies, go to 310 Orchard-st., says the guide. You're not? You'll find the division of corrections at 104-106 E. Dayton-st., and if that isn't what you want, perhaps it is the probation and parole department at 210 S. Pinckney-st., or the Madison district welfare office at 207 N. Pinckney-st. It's all very confusing to the layman, because the terms are puzzling to the person

The path to home-ownership Has its beginning at Anchor

Before you go a step further in planning to build or buy a home of your own, do as thousands of your friends and neighbors have done . . . visit Anchor. Learn for yourself how Anchor's famous Open End mortgage plan can make home ownership easy and economical for you. Learn the advantages of dealing with local people in a 100% local institution. Learn how you can pay principal, interest, taxes and insurance monthly in budget-rated payments . . . learn why Anchor is the best place to get started on the path to home-ownership with its popular interest rated 4½%—4¾% or 5% Home Mortgage.

ANCHOR

SAVINGS & LOAN ASS'N

Al C. Steinhauer, Pres.

2 South Carroll — Madison that knows only "public welfare" as his goal.

Many Outside Capitol

Additional state departments outside the capitol include the conservation department, crime laboratory, board of health, highway commission, department of nurses, public employes social security, public instruction, bureau of purchases, vocational education, Wisconsin retirement fund, and the state retirement system. Together they occupy 91,826 square feet of rented or leased space.

These are some of the types of service rendered by capitol policemen and guides. They indicate that the position is not as simple as it seemed to the elderly man who volunteered, "I could do that job, all you do is set."

There are eight policemen, three of whom double as guides. There is Forrest Manson, with many years of service to his credit, who guards the lower or ground floor. In spite of the rigors of his daily duties, Manson is genial and will always extend himself to accommodate visitors. There was the party of Australians who arrived after closing hours and were shown through the building by Manson, with the aid of a flashlight. As the group ascended the east stairway, it met Gov. Kohler coming down. Undoubtedly he was pleased to see the courtesy paid the people from "down under." Incidentally, the governor had apparently worked over-time too.

Policemen designated as guides are Robert Sullivan, Epha Wright and Ray Hustad. In addition to answering questions they must learn how much gold leaf went into the decorations in the executive reception room; the origin of all the marble and dozens of other kinds of information that goes into the conducted tours.

Served Late Gov. Goodland

Sullivan has served the state in varying capacities since he became a civil service employe 11 years ago. When the late Gov. Julius Heil took office he was transferred from the capitol to the executive mansion, where he served as grounds man. When the late Gov. Walter S. Goodland was elevated to the executive office upon the death of Gov.-elect Orland Loomis, Sullivan was pressed into service as Goodland's chauffeur. He served in this capacity four years.

Ernie Osterfund, who can be found on the west balcony near the office of the secretary of state, is the oldest policeman in point of service, having 41 years behind him. Willard Woodburn, Tony Pickerts and Carlton Jennings complete the roster of guards.

(continued on next page)

Spring Comes to the "Man-Tailored Shop"

New Fabrics . . .

New Colors . . .

New Patterns . . .

in Timelessly Styled

SUITS

proportion-tailored by

HART SCHAFFNER & MARX

to correctly fit

←Tiny . . . Typical . . . and Tall

$65 to $85

Olson & Veerhusen

7 north pinckney on the square

The men work in split shifts, 6 a. m. to 1 p. m. and 1 to 10 p. m.

"What do you mean, 10 p. m.?" you may ask. "that place is closed at 5:30."

Well, we both are right. The official closing time is 5:30 on week-days and 5 p. m. on Saturdays and Sundays. After 5:30 p. m. on week-days only the east entrance is open and any one having official business in the capitol . . . employes or officials . . . may enter by signing in and signing out. Special passes will admit one to the law library.

Although the building is open until 5 o'clock Saturdays and Sundays, you had better get there earlier unless you like to walk, because the elevators are stationary after 4 p. m.

Policemen work six days and have two days off. With the exception of Christmas and New Years, holidays are like any other day. On these two feasts they work split shifts so everyone gets a chance for a "hot meal." One Sunday in every six weeks is guaranteed "off".

This then, is your capitol guide system. The men who are responsible for the general conduct and well-being of the thousands who annually inspect the state's seven million dollar capitol.

Behind the scenes there is Charles Halbert, chief engineer, Malcolm Brown, superintendent of grounds and F. X. Ritger, purchasing agent. And behind each of these is another story.

THEY Look SO SMART

Harry S. Manchester Inc.

Johansen JUNIOR

"SMASH HIT"

With the New Heavenly Foam Insole

Wiggle your toes, flex your feet . . . you've never enjoyed such floating comfort before.

$9.95 Sizes to 11

8 COLORS: Red, green, black, wheat, gypsy brown, navy, golden tan, and white elk.

State Employees Ask $37.50 Average Increase

(continued from page 5)

state is not in a position to meet its necessary financial obligations. The state recognizes the necessity and practice of paying higher prices for materials, supplies, and services as such price increases are made necessary by wage and salary adjustments to employees of such suppliers. Budgetary provisions for this are readily approved. The amount of goods or services may have to be curtailed for economy reasons, but no one proposes that the budget should be figured to cover the same amount of material and/or service at the same price as under previous budgets.

Just as the state expects to pay prevailing rates for materials and supplies there is logic that the state should be expected to pay prevailing rates of pay to those in their employ. If economy dictates curtailment of expenditures, they may be able to buy less but still should pay the fair rate for what they deem necessary.

In the governor's budget message he has recommended $1,250,000 "to provide salary adjustments for some of our upper level civil servants, whose compensation has lagged behind the rise in living costs." It does not contemplate that amount be spread equally, but even if it were, it would represent approximately a 3.3% increase in state employees' compensation schedules.

The Bureau and the Personnel Board

It would seem that the objective of the Bureau of Personnel and the Personnel Board in periodically reviewing and making recommendations regarding state pay schedules is to determine and advise the legislature as to what adjustments are warranted in accord with market conditions and prevailing practices in representative Wisconsin industries. The legislature, of course, must determine the resources of the state and decide the willingness of the taxpayers to pay.

The tail would certainly be wagging the dog were the Bureau and the Board to recommend salary schedules only on the basis of what the legislature or the administration thought they wanted to spend. In such case the Bureau and Board would serve no purpose in reviewing salary plans that any good clerk could not fulfill with a calculating machine. Unless the Bureau and the Board make their true findings known and base their recommended schedules for the next biennium on the basis of what is in line with the compensation schedules of Wisconsin industry, they are not playing fair with the legislature. The joint finance committee is entitled to know how state schedules compare with industry. It is then their prerogative to determine what can and should be done.

If it is not the specific responsibility of the Bureau and the Board to report what their survey and findings warrant in adjustments of the state salary schedules—then whose responsibility is it?

Future Prospects

There is now some reliable indication that the inflationary spiral is leveling off. If state salaries are not now adjusted to the levels as warranted by the actual experience in industry and other public services during the last two years, the present comparatively low rates will likely become the leveled off" rates. If the 1954 survey by the Bureau should show little change from its latest adjusted figures for the 1952 survey, it is unlikely that any one will champion the cause of making belated increases in state schedules at that time.

Unless some fair and warranted action is taken now, state salary schedules will lag further behind with little hope of ever being brought in line with market conditions until another expensive "Griffenhagen" type independent survey is instituted."

Legislative Session Important . . .

(continued from page 8)

is a veteran in State politics. George Molinaro of Kenosha retained his post of minority party leader, and Charles Schmidt of Milwaukee got the assistant's job.

Ora Rice of Delavan, was renamed speaker of the lower house. It may be noted that the Madison area is not represented in the key positions.

197 Bills In First Day

Due to the efforts of the legislative council, which has worked hard during the interim, there were 67 of their measures handed the senators and 103 found their way to the desk of the assembly. In addition 13 individual bills were offered for senate consideration and 14 in the other house.

This flood of 197 printed bills made it necessary for the legislature to adopt

Joanne Hoppmann
Insurance Dept.

Photo by Edward E. Schumann

Spring's newest silhouette the boxy ensemble . . .

Matched colors, contrast in fabrics . . .
clipped poodle jacket, worsted skirt, wool jersey blouse . $65.00
Handbag, new music-roll style, genuine calfskin . . . 13.95★
Gloves—by Hansen, double-woven nylon 2.95
Hat—striped candy-straw bonnet 12.95
★Plus tax.

Simpson's

Kay Windsor

As ever you'll enjoy the elegant simplicity of a Kay Windsor shirtwaister. It's the dress that forms the basis of your season-thro-season wardrobe . . . the dress you'll wear everywhere with assurance. In broadcloth of gray or navy. 10 to 18.

SECOND FLOOR

Baron's

EAGLE STAMPS — YOUR EXTRA SAVINGS

a plan of "skeleton" sessions until Jan. 27, to allow "book work" to catch up.

Thomas Donahue, chief clerk in the senate, together with May, were scratching their heads over the problem of temporary employes. A hastily enacted bill, which the governor was authorized to sign in typewritten form to expedite its effectiveness, increased the per diem salary of these jobs, and the result went a long way to clear the bottle-neck. The increase brought the pay for stenographic work to $9 a day and that for other work to $7.

Civil service employes will want to keep a close watch on the work of the legislature this session, as there will be proposed changes in the laws that will affect them directly.

Capitol Comment

(continude from page 9)

Retirement Fund and social security. Only members of the Wisconsin Retirement Fund will be affected. Members of the Conservation Wardens' Pension Fund will be eligible for social security benefits only if H. R. 2063 or 2064 are enacted and after the Wisconsin legislature has passed the necessary enabling legislation. Members of the Association interested in these bills are urged to make their wishes known to the congressmen.

Husband consoling wife at daughter's wedding: "Don't think of it as losing a daughter; think of it as gaining a bathroom."

REITAN-LERDAHL
Insurance
105 Monona Ave. 6-2656
Insurance Counselors
Since 1925

Wisconsin May Add Third Colony For Care of Mental Defectives

By LUCILLE BYSTROM

DO YOU think you have it tough? Prices high, salary low.

Might as well be low because a raise would mean more taxes, anyway.

The boss pick on you?

The gal at the next desk goldbrick while you do her work?

Maybe so, but spare a few minutes to look at a pattern of life that is really tough and your troubles will look like anemic midgets.

Do you know that the correlated findings of North European and American workers have defined the incidence of mental defect in the general population as 2.27 per cent?

DR. LESLIE A. OSBORN
Director, Division of Mental Hygiene

Perhaps that is pretty general to be effective.

Well then, in Wisconsin this general standard requires institutional treatment for 3,500 epileptics and mental defectives. Brings it a little closer to home, doesn't it?

A report presented to the board of the state department of public welfare by Dr. Thorsten Smith in December of last year, gives some startling and heart-breaking statistics. Statistics are heart-breaking when broken down as they are in the report, because they are not just figures, but translated into human lives.

Legislature Must Act

There will come before the legislature this session a bill empowering the welfare department to build a third institution, similar to the Northern and Southern colonies at Chippewa Falls and Union Grove. The funds are available and the state building commission has given the project the green light. Here is why.

The resident population today of 2,909 is 1,058 above rated capacity of 1851, and represents an overcrowding of 36 per cent. The average yearly increase in resident patients since 1945 has been 103.7, so that even when the new buildings under construction at Southern colony are completed there still will be an overcrowding of 498 patients.

Analysis of first admissions show that of the 310 patients admitted each year, more than one-third are under the age of five. More than one-third are idiots. The trend could be expressed, too, by saying that one-half of all admissions are below the age of five or are idiots. These are long term patients who do not have the death rate known in former years, and must materially enlarge the yearly increase in residents and hasten the decline in the average mental status of resident patients.

To what is this increase in virtually infantile population due? According to the American Medical association figures for 1952, the infant mortality rate was 1 child in 1,000 births. In 1933 six babies in each 1,000 died before reaching the age of one year. Improved medical care and the advent of the "wonder drugs" move hand in hand to save newly created lives, but unfortunately not always for a happy future for either child or parent.

This, says Dr. Smith, explains why one-third of admissions in the colonies are under the age of five and why 55 per cent of these youngest children are idiots and seriously disabled.

Only 10 Epileptics Mentally Normal

The combined population at the Northern and Southern colonies classified as epileptics is 624. Of this number only 10 are not also mentally defective. The lower grades of idiot and imbecile account for 507 and the higher moron grade 107. An average of 7.5 per cent are known as educable and are in school at the institutions. Another 11.4 per cent are in occupational therapy and industry, (small

DURING FEBRUARY

•

Store-wide Clearance of Fine Furniture and Floor Coverings

•

Frautschi's

219 King Street
Madison, Wis.

PAULEY
Cheese Company

•

GREEN BAY, WISCONSIN

WALKER Manufacturing Co. of Wisconsin

•

Manufacturers of

WALKER

Jacks — Lifts — Silencers Oil Filters

•

RACINE, WISCONSIN

routine tasks about the institutions) and 81 per cent have no assignment.

When the stars are handed out for heavenly crowns, a good share will belong to those workers who try to make life a little more bearable for those helpless and hopeless youngsters who are crowded into every inch of space in the two colonies.

A central colony would be built in or near Madison, where it would have the benefit of university research, services of the diagnostic center, (now under construction), the Wisconsin General hospital and affiliated research departments and many other specializations.

The present colonies have passed their limits in size, and proper care of the patient is hindered, says Dr. Smith. The Central colony is proposed to care for the younger, lower grade admissions, and can be especially designed for their care, training and treatment, while the present colonies will be converted to the task of educational functions and training.

Four-Point Program

Dr. Smith outlines four specific programs for the proposed institution, as follow;

1. Care and treatment. Numerous physical anomalies, 50 per cent of them genetic in origin, are seen among the lower grade patients. Even among the present colony populations the extent of disabilities and needs are pronounced. At Central colony special programs must be devised for them and for specific physical handicaps such as spasticity, blindness, deafness and many others. Needed services indicate a pediatric and a geriatric program, care and treatment of the tuberculous mental defective or epileptic, and the study of epileptics, including those of normal mental status.

2. Training of professions. The Central colony can contribute to university education by providing clinics and teaching programs to students, not only in medicine, but in all the biological sciences, in genetics, in anthropology and in psychology, sociology and education.

3. Research. The Central colony could provide research programs in all problems related to growth and development.

4. Diagnostic services and clinics. This could be most easily provided. A diagnosis could be made without a court commitment, the patient remaining at most a few days, thus helping the family and social aspects.

You Are Lucky, After All

The need has been established, the money made available, the project approved by the specialists. The remaining factor must come from the legislature. When it does, the state of Wisconsin will step forward again in her program to care for unfortunate boys and girls.

You really don't have it so tough, do you?

There is always a possibility of more pay.

And those taxes go to a worthy cause.

The boss is a pretty good guy, after all, and P'shaw, let the gal chatter, it's her own funeral!

Heady Spring News

Our new Spring hat styles go right to your head . . . to captivate you, and your admirers, with their bright freshness and gay charm! Choose several to flatter your Spring costumes . . . to suit your every mood.

W. J. Rendall's

On the Square at State St.

NO MORE INK-STAINED HANDS AND CLOTHES

BANKERS APPROVE because miraculous new Paper-Mate ink is permanent, can't transfer — guaranteed for checks and other important documents.

MOTHERS APPROVE because Paper-Mate ink washes out of clothes easily—when children write on clothes, no harm done!

YOU'LL APPROVE Paper-Mate's writing ease, its economical cartridge that holds over 70,000 words and will write for months and months!

PAPER-MATE PEN

DELUXE MODEL

$1.69

REFILLS 49¢

GUARANTEED Leak-Proof
GUARANTEED Smear-Proof

RENNEBOHM

BETTER DRUG STORES

WOMEN IN WHITE

- Should Aids Wear White In A Mental Hospital---
- History of A Grievance

THE following is a case study of the technique of handling employee grievances in the State Department of Public Welfare.

The grievance originated at Mendota State Hospital on April 21, 1952 by petition of 75 female aids who desired to switch from a gray uniform to a distinctive white garment.

Under the department's standard procedure for handling employee problems, the female aids, through their representatives in Mendota State Hospital, Local 13, discussed the grievance first with the immediate supervisors and finally with the hospital superintendent. The result of both discussions was a negative reply to the grievance.

Appeal was taken to the director of the division of mental hygiene.

The various steps in the procedure, the timing thereof, the issues, arguments, and decisions are contained in the following correspondence and memoranda.

●

The Decision of the Director of Mental Hygiene

December 18, 1952

Mr. John W. Tramburg, Director
State Department of Public Welfare
Dear Mr. Tramburg:

Decision regarding Aides' Uniforms

The appeal of the Mendota Local from Dr. Urben's decision was made last spring. I felt the subject warranted careful study for three reasons:

1. As it touches directly on the treatment of patients, the decision had to be one thought best on this primary basis.
2. The uniform question touches on program in various ways, such as ready identification of employees according to their function, appearance, and morale. The relative weight to be given to each of these could not be readily or easily decided upon.
3. Present practices are not consistent between institutions in the Division. It was felt that standard practices for the Division were desirable if practicable.

Because the divisional decision hinged on effects on program, this subject was discussed at three successive divisional staff meetings. At the first, a subcommittee was appointed; its findings were reported to the second, and a wider investigation of the problem was requested by an expanded committee.

Mr. Kubista consented to serve on both committees and Mr. Boyer on the second. On the main point at issue, the larger committee voted a 4-4 tie. This was reported to the divisional staff. The vote of the staff was unanimously in support of Dr. Urben's position.

I concurred personally with this position and gave my decision to Mr. Boyer in a letter dated December 4. In that letter I apologized for the time taken in acting on the grievance appeal. I felt the importance of the subject warranted detailed study and consultation with the superintendents who are directly responsible for program.

My decision was based on the need for identification of employees according to function and the belief that color of uniform is the simplest and most effective way of accomplishing this. Such identification, in my opinion, is required for medical procedures, for patients' understanding of the differing roles and grades of responsibility of those caring for them, and for visitors who have similar need to be aware of differences. There is a relatively high turnover of personnel

WALK-OVER

VEL-FLEX*
CONSTRUCTION

They need no "breaking in"

. . . and there's an airfoam cushion under your feet. Plus smooth, smooth Tread-smooth insoles that can't curl or wrinkle.
Tan $21.95

25 W. MAIN MADISON, WIS.

Bell City Manufacturing Co.

- Threshers
- Corn Shellers
- Grain Elevators
- Corn Pickers

Quality Products Since 1882
RACINE, WISCONSIN

J. W. PETERS & SONS

Ready-Mix Concrete
Washed Sand and Gravel
Trucking — Excavating
Road Building

BURLINGTON, WISCONSIN

Fossland's Restaurant and Service Station
U.S. 41 and Ill.-Wis. State Line
South of Kenosha, Wisconsin

Waukesha Lime & Stone Co., Inc.
Crushed Stone
Agricultural Limestone
Waukesha, Wisconsin

WELLS GRILL
Home of Fine Foods
★
17th and Wells
MILWAUKEE

Krueger Industries
Kruger Metal Products, Inc.
Kruger Sentry Gauge, Inc.
★
Green Bay, Wisconsin

Green Bay Press - Gazette
●
Green Bay, Wisconsin

FRANK VAN NELSON
Excavating — Sand Hauling
2305 Deckner Ave.
Green Bay, Wisconsin

in the aide classification. While experienced aides can and do explain the situation readily when mis-identified, new and inexperienced ones may not. We do have to face this in view of the turnover factor.

The morale factor for all employees, as these deliberations have brought out, requires more attention in regard to uniforms. A subcommittee consisting of Mr. Graham, Dr. Urben, and Mrs. Marjorie Hughes of Southern Colony has been asked to follow up so that maximum contributions of uniforms to morale and appearance consistent with need for differentiation would be assured.

Sincerely yours,
Leslie A. Osborn, M.D.
Director
DIVISION OF MENTAL HYGIENE

●

Pursuant to the provisions of the grievance procedure, final appeal from the decision of the director of mental hygiene was taken to the director of public welfare.

The Case for the Employees

MEMORANDUM

In the matter of the appeal from the decision of the director, division of mental hygiene, relating to the color of the uniforms of female aids employed at the Mendota State Hospital.

TO: The Director, State Department of Public Welfare
FROM: Wisconsin State Employees Association, in behalf of Mendota State Hospital Employees, Local 13

This matter comes up on appeal to the director from the decision of the director, division of mental hygiene, dated December 4, 1952.

The director's decision states:

"After careful discussion, divisional staff decided that there was need to use distinguishing colors to designate different professional groups working in direct contact with patients, and so voted against the request that aides be allowed to use white uniforms" . . . "My own decision concurs with the recommendation which the staff has made to me."

THE PROCEDURE

No question of proper procedure is raised in this case.

The issue originated as a grievance under the standard procedure for handling employee grievances applicable to Mendota State Hospital.

On petition of 75 female aids employed at Mendota State Hospital, Local 13, representing employees at the hospital, was requested to present the grievance to the proper authorities.

A committee of 6 aids and representatives of the union met with Mrs. Janet Nusinoff, graduate nurse VI, on April 21, 1952. The committee requested that female aids be permitted to wear a distinctive white garment and presented its reasons therefor.

Decision in the matter was postponed and a second meeting of the group was held on June 2, 1952. Dr. Edward Burns, medical director, was present. Mr. Steve Clark represented the union. The request of the union was denied.

On June 2, Dr. Walter J. Urben, Superintendent, indicated his concurrence in the decision of Mrs. Nusinoff and Dr. Burns.

The matter then went up on appeal to the director, division of mental hygiene, on June 14. Receipt of the appeal was acknowledged by Mr. A. H. Spevacek, personnel officer, on June 17. Under date of July 18, in a letter addressed to Mr. Alva Boyer, president, Local 13, the personnel officer stated that the question was being cleared with the director of mental hygiene and that the entire matter was being studied with a view toward the establishment of a state-wide policy on uniforms for the department.

On August 6, the director of mental hygiene selected a committee consisting of Mr. Clarence Graham, chairman; Mrs. Olga Kittilson, and Mr. Roy E. Kubista to investigate the subject of employees' uniforms.

The committee met at Mendota State Hospital on September 15. Dr. Urben, Mrs. Nusinoff, and representatives of the employees appeared before the committee.

After thorough consideration of the issues, the committee returned the following recommendations to the director of mental hygiene on September 17.

"It is the recommendation of this committee that the Psychiatric Aides be allowed to wear white uniforms at Mendota State Hospital, but that the uniforms have one or more distinctive markings indicating the wearer is a Psychiatric Aide. The committee further recommends that the date for changing to white uniforms be January 1, 1953, or some other date mutually agreeable to the employees and Superintendent.

It is the opinion of the committee that should the recommendation of this committee be accepted by the Director that the Superintendent and Director of Nurses, together with representatives of the Psychiatric Aides, should establish the type of uniform to be used, and that the Psychiatric Aides accept the responsibility of seeing that their members wear them with the proper dignity and decorum traditionally associated with white uniforms in hospitals."

In a memorandum dated October 28, 1952, addressed to mental hospital superintendents, Mrs. Kittilson and Mr. Kubista, Mr. Clarence Graham stated that in response to a request made at the staff meeting on October 10, the director of mental hygiene had appointed a second committee to review the subject of employees' uniforms.

In addition to the personnel of the original committee, the second committee was composed of: one male nurse to be selected by Dr. Klepfer, Central State Hospital; the director of nurses and one psychiatric aid to be selected by Dr. Urben, Mendota State Hospital; the director of nurses and one psychiatric aid to be selected by Dr. Petersik, Winnebago State Hospital; and one aid to be selected by Mr. Stevens, Southern Colony.

The second committee met on November 14. After discussion of the issues. on motion of Mr. Boyer that the uniform committee recommend the adoption of a standard white garment to be worn by female institution aids employed at Mendota and Winnebago State Hospitals, the vote of the committee was divided as follows: 4 ayes and 4 noes.

There followed the negative decision of the director of mental hygiene and the appeal to the director, state department of public welfare dated December 9, 1952.

Since this matter originally arose as a grievance of employees at Mendota State Hospital and is being heard as such on appeal, the following issues and arguments are limited to the personnel of Mendota.

THE ISSUE

By petition and otherwise, a substantial majority of the female aids at the Mendota State Hospital have indicated their preference for a white garment to replace the gray uniform which is presently standard at Mendota.

The wearing of the uniform of graduate nurses by institution aids is not at issue.

The white garment proposed by the aids contemplates adequate identification markings, short sleeves, and any other suitable insignia to avoid conflict with the garb worn by graduate nurses. Aids do not wish to wear white caps. Caps are not at issue.

THE ARGUMENTS

It is contended by the union that:

1. Gray as a color is limited to cotton garments while white can be obtained in both cotton and nylon. Many women prefer to wear nylon.
2. A colored uniform, in this case gray, is subject to fading through laundering which results in many unsightly shades of gray. White remains uniformly white.
3. White garments may be bleached to remove spots; this is not possible with gray.
4. White garments are available in many different styles and in half sizes providing better fit. Gray is limited to 3 styles. Style and fit help build the morale and pride of the wearers.
5. The general appearance of women in white is neater and fits in better with the hospital atmosphere.
6. The ease of laundering white nylon would permit the women to do their own uniforms on occasion and thereby reduce the burden on hospital laundries. The aids are presently allowed 5 uniforms per week for laundry purposes and have indicited their willingness to reduce the number if a white garment is adopted.
7. All studies of employee uniform trends in mental hospitals in this country indicate that the white garment has become standard for female institution aids.

(continued on next page)

SERVICE TRANSPORT CO., INC.
General Office
Racine, Wisconsin

KROENERT Tool & Die Co.
★
3888 North Fratney St.
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Crucible Steel Castings Co.
A Division of Ebaloy, Incorporated
Electric Steel Castings
Milwaukee 7, Wisconsin

Roemer Drug Co.
Wholesale Drug and Surgical Instruments
Hospital and Physicians' Supplies
Laboratory Equipment
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

A. J. Lindemann & Hoverson Co.
Electric Ranges—Water Heaters
Refrigerators—Home Freezers
Milwaukee 15, Wisconsin

Golf - Dancing - Saddle Horses
Excellent Fishing - Boating - Bathing
The Sterlingworth Hotel at Beautiful Lauderdale Lakes
Elkhorn
Gus Rendell, Manager

B. D. Eisendrath
Tanning Co.
Racine, Wisconsin

BILL'S LOG CABIN
5105 W. National Ave. West Milwaukee, Wis.

GENE'S
Hunter's and Fisherman's Tap
Gene Klees
66th & Beloit Rd., West Allis, Wis.

Artificial Limbs, Trusses, Supporters, Elastic stockings, Health Belts, Invalid Chairs, Crutches, Walkers.
DOERFLINGER
Artificial Limb Co.
2525 W. Fond du Lac Ave., Milwaukee

A. Kieckhefer Elevator Co.
Passenger and Freight Elevators
1100 W. St. Paul Ave., Milwaukee 3, Wis.

TED'S MARDI GRA
GOOD FOOD
Theo. Van Beck, Prop.
2000 S. 11th St., Milwaukee

Herlec Corporation
422 N. Fifth St., Milwaukee

NAN KING
Chinese American
CHOP SUEY RESTAURANT
Milwaukee's Finest Chinatown Style
338 W. State St. Milwaukee

DALE CHEVROLET COMPANY
"Deal With Dale"
Towing & Road Service Genuine Parts
WAUKESHA, WISCONSIN

SANITARY FISH MARKET
1621 West Lincoln Avenue
Milwaukee

Ray's Amusement Co.
Phonographs and Amusement Machines
7223 W. Walker St. West Allis

Bartel's Service Station
Beer Depot — Lunch Room
24 Hour Service
Hwy. 36 and W. Layton Ave. Milwaukee

The Knotty Pine
Excellent Food — Mixed Drinks
Hwy. U.S. 41 & Wis. 50 Kenosha

Sperry Poultry Company
T. M. Sather, Prop.
1200 W. Layton Ave. Milwaukee

8. One result of this trend is that out-of-state candidates for aid positions in Wisconsin frequently come equipped with white uniforms. It is conceivable that white may be an added inducement in recruiting.

White vs. Gray in the matter of identification.

The union takes the position that:

1. In female wards where patients are permitted to wear a variety of colors, hospital personnel clothed in white are more readily identified by supervisory personnel, visitors, and patients.
2. In patient movements from one building to another after dark, hospital personnel clothed in white may be quickly identified in cases of emergency.
3. The argument advanced by the opposition that identical colors of aids' and graduate nurses' uniforms may subject the latter to blame for erroneous technical and medical information furnished to visitors by aids has little validity. It is invalid on the grounds that a layman visitor cannot be expected to know what kinds of questions to direct at various classes of hospital personnel as distinguished by the color of their garments. Proper answers to visitors' questions are a subject of employee training and cannot be identified with the color of the uniform.

White vs. Gray in the matter of encroachment on the rights and privileges of graduate nurses.

The union takes the position that the desire of the aids to wear a standard white garment to work, in no sense encroaches upon the exclusive right of a graduate nurse to wear the traditional white nurses' uniform, pin, and cap. The aids are not permitted to acquire professional standing by changing the color of the uniform nor do they want to pose as graduate nurses.

The union recognizes and respects the exclusive right of the graduate nurse to wear the nurses' uniform. The union admires the nurses' pride in the uniform. However, the union must reject the contention that graduate nurses, as an occupational and professional group, should have a monopoly on color.

It is contended by the opposition that the wearing of a white garment by institution aids will further detract from the professional standing of the graduate nurse and tend to equalize the positions of aid and nurse.

The union rejects the argument.

We submit that, under the Wisconsin Civil Service law, the authority, responsibility, and general character of a position are recognized and rewarded through the provisions of the state classification and compensation plan. The graduate nurses' professional training and education are clearly compensable, but it cannot be contended that the State of Wisconsin ever intended that such compensation consists, in part, of the exclusive monopoly of the color of a uniform.

In conclusion the union respectfully submits that employee morale and improved patient care are closely related. The institution aids deem the color of the uniform an important morale factor.

Since the uniform is worn for the convenience of the employer but purchased at the employees' expense, it seems reasonable that the wishes of the aids in the matter of color based on the foregoing arguments should be given preponderant weight.

December 19, 1952

●

The Director Decides

STATE OF WISCONSIN
STATE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

MEMORANDUM DECISION

IN RE: PETITION OF
Mendota State Hospital Employees, Local 13
Wisconsin State Employees' Association (AFL) relating to uniforms of Psychiatric Aides

PRELIMINARY RECITALS

This is a matter of employee-management relations brought on for final decision of the Director of the State Department of Public Welfare, pursuant to a general plan for processing employment problems as set forth in the department booklet titled "Your Employment Problems." Since it is an administrative matter not involving policy established by the State Board of Public Welfare or Civil Service rules, the Director's decision is final.

A hearing was held in the State Capitol on December 19, 1952, John W. Tramburg, Director of Public Welfare, presiding, and the following persons participated:

Steve Clark, President, Wisconsin State Employees' Association
Roy E. Kubista, Secretary, Wisconsin State Employees' Association
Alva Boyer, President, Mendota State Hospital Employees, Local 13
Walter J. Urben, M.D., Superintendent, Mendota State Hospital
Edward M. Burns, M.D., Clinical Director, Mendota State Hospital
Janet R. Nusinoff, Director of Nursing Service, Mendota State Hospital
Leslie A. Osborn, M.D., Director, Division of Mental Hygiene
Clarence T. Graham, Administrative Assistant, Division of Mental Hygiene
A. H. Spevacek, Personnel Officer, State Department of Public Welfare
Frank P. Fosgate, Legal Counsel, State Department of Public Welfare

The matter arose when a majority of the female psychiatric aides at Mendota State Hospital requested permission to change from gray to white uniforms. The request was denied and the matter carried up to the Division of Mental Hygiene. The Division proposed a plan for a distinctive uniform for psychiatric aides in all state mental facilities, believing this would promote the morale of the employees with resulting benefits to patients. After extended consideration the color gray was designated by the Division for all state mental institutions. However, the Mendota State Hospital Employees held to their original request to change to white uniforms, and appealed to the Department Director.

No question of procedure was raised. The wearing of nurses' uniforms was not at issue. The aides do not wish to wear caps. It was understood that uniforms would have adequate identification markings, short sleeves, and other suitable insignia. The issue was limited to the sole proposition.

SHALL THE UNIFORMS WORN BY FEMALE PSYCHIATRIC AIDES AT MENDOTA STATE HOSPITAL BE WHITE OR GRAY?

●

After consideration of the facts and arguments presented at the hearing, the Director of the Department of Public Welfare makes the following findings, conclusions and directives:

FINDINGS

1. That a distinctive uniform for psychiatric aides at all state mental facilities has probable morale and practical values, and a plan therefore should not be abandoned or limited at this time.
2. That there is no substantial economic or other disadvantage to the Mendota State Hospital employees in continuing to wear gray uniforms.
3. That although white uniforms launder more easily, they soil more easily than gray, and hence require more laundering.

CONCLUSIONS

1. That the designation of white uniforms for female psychiatric aides in Mendota State Hospital would necessarily and unduly limit the choice in the other four state mental facilities for both male and female aides.

2. That gray uniforms are more appropriate and convenient for psychiatric aides because the color will not show soil during duty.

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS DIRECTED:

1. That the use of gray uniforms, presently worn by psychiatric aides at Mendota State Hospital, shall be continued.

2. That this decision is to be reviewed in January, 1954, at a time and place to be mutually agreed.

3. That a continuing study shall be made pending review in January, 1954.

Dated at Madison, Wisconsin this 24th day of December, 1952

/s/ John W. Tramburg, Director
STATE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

Redi Products Co.
211 South Second Street
MILWAUKEE

Elm Point Tavern
5455 So. 27th St.
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Pat and Nell's
Tavern and Bus Depot
Oconomowoc

WESTERN TOBACCO COMPANY
600 S. 6th St. Milwaukee

MORMAN BELTING AND SUPPLY CO.
522 W. State St. Milwaukee

Anthony's Super Bar
John Mick, Prop.
600 W. Clybourn St. Milwaukee

JOHNNY'S TAP
John S. Krzyzanowski
Plate Lunches and Sandwiches Served Daily
4301 W. Burnham St. Milwaukee

Joe Deutsch Cafe
1219 W. Galena Milwaukee

We Buy Wrecks and Used Cars
JOE'S AUTO SALVAGE
We Specialize in Late Model Parts
OCONOMOWOC

WHITE OAKS
Pewaukee, Wisconsin

Echo Lake Farm Produce Co.
WHOLESALE EGG DEALER
Jacob Kramer & Son
Burlington, Wisconsin

The Tip Top
C. M. Rurralo, Prop.
FINE FOOD AND DRINKS
1426 Sheridan Road Kenosha, Wisconsin

Baumeister Motors
REO TRUCKS
Phone 92W Burlington, Wis.

BURLINGTON DRAYAGE COMPANY
Burlington, Wisconsin

Who GIVES BLOOD?

"EVERYBODY!" answered hospital nurse, Dorothy Newman, when the question was put to her at a local Blood Donor Center. "Veterans, businessmen, stenographers. Yes, everybody shares this great experience together.

★ NATIONAL BLOOD PROGRAM ★

GIVE BLOOD NOW

Call Your Red Cross Today!

CONTRIBUTED AS A PUBLIC SERVICE BY

Madison Fireproof Storage
Superior Center Co.
Ray's Amusement Co.
Schaller & McKey Lumber Co.
Schubring's Bar
Schmidt's Buckhorn
Steve's Body Shop
Steinbacher's Bar
Ray Anderson's Garage
Zick's Tavern
Pat and Nell's Tavern
Advance Cast Stone Co.
Bladon Motors
Hickory House
Turk & Leonard Body Shop
Deltox Rug Co.
Goetz Tavern
Center of the World
Bill's Log Cabin
Gille's Frozen Custard
The Heeb Co.

Morale Rated High In Personnel Administration

IN its biennial report to the governor, the state bureau of personnel has presented many interesting phases of the employment operations that are its obligation.

Included in the various reports is one of special interest because it recently has been recognized as an integral part of the relationship between employer and employe. It applies equally to private industry and state employment and is entitled, "Attitude Survey."

"Leaders of business and government today are coming to realize that the most important part of any organization is the people in it, and that the question of how well an organization accomplishes its objectives depends greatly upon the cooperative spirit and unity of purpose of each member of the group," the survey points out.

Major Consideration

"Morale is thus becoming recognized as one of the major considerations in the whole field of personnel administration. Mechanical efficiencies pale into insignificance in comparison with the development in a group of employes of a feeling of unity of purpose, that can be seen as loyalty, enthusiasm, cooperation and pride in the job."

The growing awareness of this factor in the bureau of personnel has resulted in the establishment of a principle of 'equal pay for equal work' and of selection and promotions strictly on a merit pasis. The report continues,

"These are among the basic essentials for a high morale level in any working group. However there are other aspects of morale which need the serious consideration of administrators and supervisors. These include the kind of adjustment the employe makes to his job, to his fellow worker and his supervisors; his understanding of the importance of his job in the overall program and his sense of security on the job as well as his confidence in the purposes of his department and its leadership.

"You and Your Job"

Believing that 'charity begins at home' the personnel department conducted an experimental survey among its clerical workers in March 1951. The survey was to determine how the employes felt toward their jobs, fellow workers, policies and practices. The questionnaire, "you and your job" consisted of 31 statements, each with from two to five alternatives to be checked.

On the basis of the information obtained from the survey, the bureau declared that it has high praise for the procedure. The concensus revealed that certain areas of the department could be improved by positive action, and on the whole it stimulated employes to "think" rather than "gripe" about their jobs.

Departments of the state service were informed of the survey and encouraged to contact the bureau for additional information as to how it could be adapted to their own circumstances.

Fazio's
Famous For Italian Food
Open Seven Nights A Week
1601 N. Jackson St. Milwaukee

Klug & Smith Co.
Consulting and Contracting Engineers
4425 West Mitchell Street
MILWAUKEE

Advance Boiler & Tank Co.
Boilers, Tanks, Smoke Stacks, Steel Plate Construction, Repair Work
Milwaukee 8, Wisconsin

Kingsbury
ARISTOCRAT OF Beer
KINGSBURY BREWERIES COMPANY
MANITOWOC • SHEBOYGAN, WIS.

WIS. SCHOOL FOR BOYS

LOCAL 163, WAUKESHA

Our regular business meeting for January was held Wednesday, 7, at the labor temple. The attendance was the best in several months. The following were accepted for membership:

Donald J. Beck and Theodore Lowery, teachers; Earl Benge, youth counselor; William Tolbert, watchman; and Roy F. Hansen, youth counselor, reinstated.

Some of the legislative proposals to come before the present session of the legislature were discussed with much interest. We expect to have representatives at the hearing on the emergency salary increase bill and on other bills when hearings are held.

Jack Poad, a watchman who suffered a broken arm in an accident several weeks ago is back on the job and doing fairly well. At the present time our baker, Mr. Rosecky is sick in the hospital with heart trouble but we expect him back in two or three weeks. Several other members have been off for short periods with flu and colds but are now coming back. However, Mr. Johnson, our maintenance foreman, has just gone on the sick list, but we are hoping all will be well soon and everything will return to normal.

Our next business meeting will be held Thursday, February 12 at the Fox Head Brewing company's rathskeller.

Louis Mayer

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION DEPT.

LOCAL 145, MADISON

Unemployment Compensation Department Employes, Local 145, recently welcomed five new members to its organization. The new members are Eleanor M. Scheel, Merle H. Pierstorff, Gertrude H. Jacobson, Virginia Kerber, and Margaret O'Neill.

On December 18, 1952, the Union sponsored its annual Christmas party. The party was attended by 135 people, including union members, other Unemployment Compensation Department employes, and guests. The highlight of the party was a skit—a mock unemployment benefit hearing—written and directed by Austin Thorson of the appellate section. Taking part were Arnold Spencer, Ralph Kline, Neil Murphy, and Elnora Scannell of the appellate section, and Helene Cork of the addressograph section. Lots of good food, door prizes, and community singing rounded out the program. Individuals who acted as chairmen and who, with the help of their committees, were responsible for the success of the party were Harriett Callsen, Inez Carlson, Mary Rabyor, Henry Reese, and Mabel Mathias.

The January membership meeting was held on the evening of January 22 at the office at 137 East Wilson Street. Lunch was served after the business meeting, with Charlotte Vetter acting as chairman of the food committee. Ruth Blood showed colored slides of pictures taken by union members on their vacation trips. Those who contributed their slides for our enjoyment were Mary Phillips, Juanita Wilke, Martha Lound, Mary Cowles, Ivanell Croft, and Ruth Blood. The slides were pictures taken in America and Canada, all the way from California to Nova Scotia. The opinion of those present was that the slides were superior as to the beauty of the scenery, choice of subject matter, and ability of the photographers.

At a recent membership meeting President Gmeinder appointed Lewis Palmer to head a committee, whose duty it will be to issue a bulletin periodically containing news of legislative action on items of special interest to union members. Copies of these bulletins will be mailed to members who are located in district offices throughout the state.

Ruth Williams

GRAND ARMY HOME

LOCAL 555 KING, WISCONSIN

On January 22, W.S.E.A. Local 555 held their second annual banquet. The members had the pleasure of having as

Conservation Wardens Elect Officers

The officers of Conservation Wardens, Local 1215, elected at the local's meeting in Wausau January 5, are shown above. Seated: Herb Vander Bloemen, Manitowoc, vice president; E. F. Evans, Superior, president. Standing: Allan Galston, Portage, treasurer, and John Marcon, Medford, secretary.

Attractive Printing

At Attractive Prices

★

- STATIONERY
- OFFICE FORMS
- BROADSIDES
- FOLDERS
- PAMPHLETS
- PROGRAMS
- INVITATIONS
- MAGAZINES
- NEWSPAPERS
- CIRCULARS

★

Campus Publishing Company

Telephone 5-5759
823 UNIVERSITY AVE.

our guest the Executive Secretary, Roy Kubista.

The local officers were somewhat perturbed about attendance because of the prevalence of influenza in the community. However, a delicious turkey supper was served to a fine group of members, guests, and friends.

One of our guests was the music teacher of Waupaca High School, Miss Mary Hanson. She led the group in the singing of some good, old-time favorite tunes. With Mary Peterson at the piano, the members responded generously.

We were happy to have with us also David Johnson, a twelve year old Waupaca student who sang several selections. David has an exceptional soprano voice, for he has appeared on Chicago radio and television stations.

Chief Surgeon, Dr. Hathaway, who was present with his wife, commented on the "esprit de corps" of the Employees' Association, and also thought it was the singingest" group he had ever heard.

We regret that Col. Stordock and Col. Jackson could not be with us because of illness and business. However, their wives pleased and surprised the listeners by coming through with a little speech each in turn.

At this point our capable vice-president, Mary Peterson, read an original poem written about the Home and its personnel. It was a nice piece of work.

Roy Kubista addressed the group on the pending social security program and some of the objectives of the State Employees' Association. Roy has not been here for more than five years, and we were all happy to see him. I am inclined to believe that Roy enjoyed talking to us, and his stories never got a better response or a bigger laugh anywhere.

President Gen Remmel thanked everyone who had contributed to the success of the party and we adjourned.

Parmo Hansen

The WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEE

ESTABLISHED 1932

MARCH, 1953

Volume XXII Number 1

•

THE WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEE

ESTABLISHED 1932

Official Publication of the
WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

Council of State Employee Locals Affiliated with American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFL)

STEVE CLARK . . . . . President
ROBERT GRAF . . . . . Vice President
HAROLD D. WILLIAMS . Recording Secretary
HENRY J. GMEINDER . . . . Treasurer
ROY E. KUBISTA . . . Executive Secretary
LILIAN DYKEMAN . . . . . Secretary

MAGAZINE STAFF

ROY E. KUBISTA . . . . . Editor
LUCILLE BYSTROM . . . Associate Editor
R. T. THOMPSON . . . . Business Mgr.
FAY DURLIN . . Chairman, Editorial Board

Office of Publication
510 Insurance Bldg., Madison 3, Wis.
Phones: 7-1064 and 7-1065
Subscription Rate: 10c a copy
Published bi-monthly.

Marcia: "John, what does it mean when it says in the newspaper that a man went as a delegate at large?"

John: "It means that his wife didn't go with him."

CORNELL PAPERBOARD PRODUCTS CO.

MILWAUKEE 1, WISCONSIN

SPECIALTY PAPERBOARDS, FOLDING CARTONS, CORRUGATED BOXES, SOLID FIBRE BOXES, CLEATED FIBRE CASES, FIBRE WALL BOARDS

WHAT HAPPENED TO THAT PINT OF BLOOD YOU WERE GOING TO GIVE?

CALL YOUR RED CROSS TODAY!

Contributed As A Public Service by

C. E. & P. A. Roth
Eau Claire Lumber Dealers
Pine Lodge
Shubert's
Bauer's Tavern
Davidson's Resort
Johnny's Tap
Club Douglas
Hilltop Garage
Badger Hotel
Paul Schatz Tavern
Don's Liquor Store
Baumeister's Motors
Cris Tavern
Frenchy's
The Brass Rail
LaSalle Hotel
Embassy Club
Colonial Restaurant
Derzon Auto Parts
Mac Barknow Tavern
Bartel's Service Station
Fohr Bros. & Co.
City Hall Restaurant
Hotel Brown
Andy's Parking Station
Two Rivers Green House
Park Hill Hotel

A noted big game hunter was reported missing. It is believed that something he disagreed with ate him.

* * *

Wife talking on telephone while husband glowers in background: "Just a minute, Elsie. I have to see if anything is burning besides Walter."

SCHIFFMANN
Cartage Company
Local and Long Distance Movers
Flagstone 1-8550
4709 W. Mill Road, Milwaukee, Wis.

F. J. A. Christiansen
Roofing Co., Inc.
Free Roof Inspection and Estimates
No Obligation
2139 W. Purdue Milwaukee 9, Wis.

R. R. BIRDSALL & SONS
PAVING AND GRADING
Racine, Wisconsin

James Cape & Sons Co.
Contractors
Highway and Street Construction
Racine, Wisconsin

W. H. Pugh Oil Co.
200 Dodge Street
RACINE, WISCONSIN

Dairy Lane
MILK and ICE CREAM

Haselow's Fine Foods
L. F. "Lefty" Goerke, Prop.
HARTLAND

The Stone Manufacturing Co.
Road Machinery and Contractor's Equipment
312 N. 25th St. Milwaukee

Electro-Coatings, Inc.
★
214 North Milwaukee Street
Milwaukee

Badger Auto Body Co.
Badger Truck and Trailer Co.
415 South Third Street
Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE STOVE AND FURNACE SUPPLY CO.
Heating and Sheet Metal Products
5070 W. State St. Milwaukee

Krumhaus Concrete Block Co.
Vibrated Concrete Building Units
Chimney Block—Sand and Gravel
Waukesha, Wisconsin

John Rauschenberger Co.
Rope—Twine—Paper Products
423 North Plankinton Avenue
Milwaukee 1, Wisconsin

Steuben Inn
"Where Food Is At Its Best"
A Good Place to Eat—Popular Prices
N. 11th and W. Wells Streets
Milwaukee

YAEGER MOTOR SALES
FORD Tractors & Farm Equipment
Sales — Service
5147 W. Forest Home Ave.
Milwaukee

Economy Block Co.
Manufacturers of Vibrated Steam-Cured
A-Lyte Concrete Building Units.
E & A Concrete Floor System
6332 W. State St. Milwaukee

Sec. 34.66, P.L. & R.
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
Madison, Wisconsin
Permit No. 527

Special Services

make First National an ideal bank

for a Woman

If You are a Working Girl . . .

You'll appreciate the convenience of: (1) a First National checking account; (2) our many savings plans; (3) our bank-by-mail service; (4) our spacious free parking lot at the corner of East Washington Avenue and Butler Street; (5) the convenience of Monday night banking between the hours of 6:30 p.m. and 8:00 p.m.

First National Bank

1 South Pinckney Street
905 University Avenue

MEMBER FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Ruth Baumann
10/7/55
RB
Bureau of Govt.

PROBLEMS AND TRENDS IN WISCONSIN STATE GOVERNMENT

I. This is what we expect to do

--explore the reasons why a study of the problems and trends in Wisconsin state government and politics is important.

--discuss the scope and shape of things to come in Wisconsin government and some of the sources that may give us insights into the future

--find out what meaning these trends have for you as individuals, teachers, leaders in the community's life and thought

FEB 1957

Light on a Moot Point: GOVERNMENT UNIONS

By THOMAS FAIR NEBLETT, Labor Relations Consultant, Los Angeles

Mr. Neblett gave a paper entitled "Labor Management Relations in Municipally Owned Utilities" to the annual conference, 1946, of California Municipal Utilities Association. Two articles are based on this address.

(First of two articles)

Mr. Neblett brings the question up-to-date. A fair, considerate statement by an expert

THERE is no single subject of management which has caused so much public controversy and about which there will be found more divergent points of view and opinions as we convert our national economy from war to peace than labor-management relations. Just before the war, organized labor had arrived at a position of towering strength. During the war, labor gave up its final weapon, the strike, and in general faithfully adhered to the no-strike pledge of its leaders. In turn, its thousands of disputes with management were turned over to the Government and particularly to the War Labor Board for adjudication. During the past year, newspapers have been filled with stories of industrial conflict about which have centered much public and private debate. The entire current November issue of Fortune magazine is devoted to the subject "Labor in U. S. Industry."

Organized Labor Is Strong

The various organized labor groups now claim to represent 16,000,000 organized workers out of the approximately 44,000,000 employees in private industry. Throughout the recent years of experience under the Wagner Act and in the direct dealings between labor leaders and management representatives, an acceptable pattern of principles and procedures of collective bargaining has been forged in the inevitable heat of conflict in human interests. Although there are many jagged edges in that pattern which yet must be ironed out in terms of national policy and individual company procedure, we have in the main decided the fundamental issues in a democratic way. Employees have the unquestioned right to organize without restraint or interference; to bargain collectively for all under the democratic majority rule; and the right of contract—all of these are guaranteed by law and are accepted as responsibilities of industry.

With this background of conflict and experience in private industry, it is timely that we here now consider the rules which will govern labor management relations in public employment. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor, in July, 1946, approximately 6,000,000 persons were employed in the various departments of federal, state and local government. An additional 4,000,000 are employed in what might be referred to as proprietary government utility operations. It is only reasonable to assume that such a large segment of our working population will inevitably be involved in and affected by current trends in organized representation.

Those who assume that trade unions and collective representation will soon pass away are sadly mistaken and may be rudely awakened one day. Every management representative, whether in public office or private, can expect sooner or later to be faced with collective employee demands. Employees in private industry are protected by law in their right to organize, and in fact encouraged to exercise it. Although we may reasonably expect that in the near future unions will be disciplined and restricted by legislation as employers now are, there is no reason to expect that unions are going to be disorganized. The roots of collective representation run so deeply in American public acceptance that refusal by management to meet with union leaders will be unheard of.

Public employees are reacting to the same normal motives in associating themselves for common action. Whatever personal views a public administrator may have when directly confronted with such activity in his department, he owes it to himself, and most of all to the public he serves, to base his decisions upon principles which meet present-day tests of validity.

Public and Private Employment

Before going on to a consideration of the major questions which must be faced in developing sound policy, I should like to point out the difference in the employee-employer relationship in public employment as compared with private industry. Later on I shall point out the similarities of the relationship particularly where some or all of the jobs are similar to or can be compared with jobs in private enterprise.

Private employers adopt company policy toward employees designed to promote the success of their enterprise. That success is measured in terms of profit. If unrestrained by law, company policy may bear no relation to employee welfare, nor give regard to the general desirability of a constantly rising standard of living. It is therefore proper to restrain freedom of the private employer to some degree and to safeguard the right of the workers to combine with each other, and to use strength of organization in the matter of wages, hours and working conditions and to strike if necessary. As Judge Shinn, of the California District Court of Appeals wrote in the Santa Monica Bus case decided April 30, 1946 (Nutter et al v. City of Santa Monica) (168 Pac. 2nd 194) (18 LRRM 2156):

> "It is well recognized that a serious obstacle in the way of better labor relationships has been the reluctance of employers to concede a greater share of the profits of industry to labor, whether in the form of higher wages, shorter hours, or other privileges the expense of which would be borne by employers and which would present the threat of reducing profit."

Altogether different conditions prevail in public employment. There is no incentive to public administrators to oppress the worker. The profit motive is removed. Public officers do not have the same freedom of action as private employers. Their authority is derived from the ultimate employer, the public.

Federal law and, in California, State legislation clearly enumerate the right of employees to organize and to strike in private industry and the obligation of private employers to bargain with union representatives if employees organize. The National Labor Relations Act and the California Labor Code provide for freedom of association, self-organization, designation of representatives, to negotiate terms and conditions of employment without restraint or coercion by employers. However, Section 2(2) of the National Labor Relations Act specifically excludes as an employer the federal, state or local government. And in the most recent decision on the California law, the Supreme Court held in the Santa Monica Bus case that:

> "... it was not the purpose of the Legislature, in the enactment of Section 923 (of the Labor Code), to inaugurate a state policy with reference to labor relations which would be applicable to the state or its political subdivisions."

What Should Policy Be

So, in the absence of such law as has been the guide in the conduct of labor-management relations in private industry, what should the policy of a municipal of[illegible] with respect to unionization of e[illegible] under his supervision? Rather than [illegible] ing general discussion let us ask [illegible] tempt to answer four key questions.

Whereas, these questions shall be analyzed and answered in terms whic[illegible] primarily to municipally-owned ut[illegible] they apply as equally to all g ver[illegible] service. The approach shall not be te[illegible] legal or abstract, but rather to r[illegible] to draw from the actual practic[illegible] periences of various public agenc[illegible] retically, in public employee-emplo[illegible] tions, there is no distinction drawn between the exclusively government function, such as postal service, or fire and police protection on the one hand, and government functions in the "proprietary" sense, such as the operation of systems of transportation or power and water supply. Actually, when considered historically and administratively, there is a difference which affects managers and employees in a practical way. The work and the worker are influenced by their competitive relationship to private enterprise directly and indirectly and monopoly is not guaranteed except by a satisfied public.

Proceeding objectively, however, there is no legitimate nor legal ground to distinguish between the strictly governmental and proprietary functions of a body politic as far as collective representation is concerned. The experiences of the various federal agencies in their relations with organized employees offer more precedent perhaps than state agencies. However, neither the Federal Government nor the State of California make any such distinction. In other words, generally speaking, both as to state and federal policy, the rights of employees and responsibilities of management are the same whether the employees involved are postmen, firemen or policemen on the one hand or craftsmen of a public utility on the other.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

1. Should employees in municipally-owned utilities be permitted to join a union?

As a matter of policy and as a matter of administrative practice, both the federal and state governments would protect the right of self-organization and self-chosen representation.

The U. S. Civil Service Commission regulations are clear on this point. Department Circular No. 251, dated February 24, 1941, in connection with plans for settling employee grievances states:

"The commission believes that all plans should recognize the rights of an employee to join or refrain from joining employee organizations or associations without interference, coercion, restraint or fear of discrimination or reprisal because of such membership or non-membership."

Thus, an obligation rests upon government institutions as well as upon employee associations not to interfere with the individual employee's freedom of choice.

President Roosevelt in a letter to the president of the National Federation of Federal Employees, under date of August 16, 1937, expressed the following views:

"The desire of government employees for fair and adequate pay, reasonable hours of work, safe and suitable working conditions, development of opportunities for advancement, facilities for fair and impartial consideration and review of grievances; and other objectives of a proper employee relations policy, is basically no different from that of employees in private industry. Organization on their part to present their views on such matters is both natural and logical, but meticulous attention should be paid to the special relationships and obligations of public servants to the public itself and to the government.

"All government employees should realize that the process of collective bargaining, as usually understood, cannot be transplanted into the public service. It has its distinct and insurmountable limitations when applied to public personnel management. . . . The employee is the whole people, who speak by means of laws. . . . Accordingly, administrative officials and employees alike are governed and guided, and in many instances restricted, by laws which establish policies, procedures, or rules in personnel manners."

President Roosevelt understandingly set forth a sound blue print as to the rights of government employees to organize for the purpose of presenting to the government their views which local governments could well afford to use in modernizing their employer-employee relations machinery.

There is no law of this state which forbids or renders unlawful the organization of public employees for their mutual welfare and benefit. They have the same right to mutual help and assistance as other citizens have, and to group together for concerted action to secure such benefits. (Hagen v. Picard, 12 N. Y. S. (2) 873).

It is generally agreed that public employees as well as private employees should have the right to join a bona fide union.

Courtesy L. A. Department of Power and Light

TYPICAL WESTERN POWERHOUSE

Before passing on, however, there is a notable exception to this rule which should be brought to your attention. In June of this year Congress passed an amendment to the appropriations act of most agencies which required that before a federal employee was paid his salary, he was required first to sign the following oath:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am not a member of any organization of government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States of America and will not, during such period of time as I am an employee of the United States Government, engage in a strike against the Government of the United States of America nor become a member of any organization that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States of America;

"That I do not advocate, nor am I a member of any organization which advocates the overthrow of the United States of America by force or violence."

In Great Britain civil service regulations go a little further. Permanent employees of "the Crown" are prevented from joining "outside" unions which include non-civil servants. In practice the rule has rarely been enforced, particularly in what we call "proprietary" operations. Furthermore, when the present Labor government came into power it immediately announced it would abolish the restriction.

Back to America—obviously any government would be justified in discharging an employee who advocated or joined an organization which advocated the overthrow of the government by force or violence. Such dual allegiance will not be condoned.

It is now generally agreed, however, that a public administrator should permit employees to form independent groups or to join labor organizations which are not in opposition to the public interest. In a democracy he must preserve impartiality and deal with such personnel problems open-mindedly as they arise. So far as I know, all of the A. F. of L. organizations give up the right to strike when representing government. Whether they do or not, the next question is nevertheless raised.

(Continued on page 69)

Public Works Shelf

New PLANNING Tool

U. S. Public Works Agency cooperating with 2,174 different local public bodies throughout nation

ONE of the more expensive lessons which came out of the great depression of the 1930's was that it is too late to develop plans for comprehensive public works programs after millions of men are unemployed. Planning, engineering, land-acquisition and other preparatory work are time consuming and expensive but must be completed before the actual job-creating construction work gets under way. Lack of such prepared plans can only result in the adoption of a program of expensive made-work projects such as the PWA was forced to inaugurate in its early days.

Farsighted statesmen in Congress have attempted to profit by this experience. In 1944 steps were taken to encourage the building up of a backlog of planned state and local public works projects. Title V of the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act created the Bureau of Community Facilities in the Public Works Agency with the responsibility of helping to build up a reserve of fully planned state and local public works, and authorized advances of Federal funds to state and local governments to assist them in making these plan preparations.

Advance Planning Program

By the end of June 1946, the advance planning program of the Bureau of Community Facilities had been in operation for approximately one year. Current economic forecasts which are predicting at least a mild depression sometime in 1947 endow the progress report of the bureau with a timely interest.

The data presented in the report indicates that a reserve of planned public works of moderate volume now exists and is slowly being increased through the concerted efforts of state and local governments and the Federal Government.

At the outset of the program there was a very serious and widespread inadequacy in advance plan preparation. This was to a large extent due to lack of funds available for advance planning, since such funds are often not available before bonds are issued for construction. Federal assistance is, therefore, being offered through this program in the form of advances to state and local public bodies to be used in financing the advance planning of their public works; such advances are to be repaid, without interest, when construction is started on the public works planned.

Reserve of Public Works

The bureau recognizes that a reserve of public works designed to relieve future unemployment should probably consist of projects which could be postponed for a considerable period, as being desirable but not greatly needed at the present time. The agency found, however, that communities are not greatly interested in the planning of projects of only remote usefulness, and the planning of such projects has not been urged. On the contrary, it has given increasing approval to advances for the planning of the types of public works that are essential to the expansion of housing and of industrial construction. Sewer, water and sanitation facilities, schools and other educational facilities, and hospitals and hospital facilities—these together account in terms of estimated construction costs, for 74.2 per cent of the public works for which advances were approved through June 1946.

Housing projects, as such, are not eligible to receive planning advances under this program; nor are planning advances made for those highway and road projects for which planning advances are already available under the Federal-aid highway program. All other non-Federal public works that the applicant expects to construct within four years after the receipt of the advance are eligible for planning advances.

A total of $65 million has been appropriated for this program—$17.5 million in May 1945, $12.5 million in December 1945, and $35 million in June 1946. Sums aggregating $2,083,000 have been made available for administrative use from these appropriations leaving a total of $62,917,000 available for planning advances.

The bureau reports show that advances approved through June 1946 are for plan preparation of public works having an estimated total cost of $1,110,227,000 and an estimated construction cost of $929,948,000.

There are 2,174 different public bodies scattered throughout the country to which planning advances have been made; and the plan preparations have required the services of 623 architectural firms and 471 engineering organizations. The total volume of public works that can be planned with the $65 million thus far appropriated is estimated at about $2.1 billion in terms of present construction costs.

Program Is Extensive

The bureau's program of planning advances has a broad geographical range and extends increasingly into the smaller-sized governmental units of the country. In these respects it serves to complement the planning carried on without Federal assistance —for such state and local planning has tended to be very heavily concentrated in a few states and in a few large cities. There are, however, serious gaps in the reserve thus far, due to the fact that plan preparations for public works are still lacking in a good many communities.

The purpose of all this planning activity, as intimated earlier in this article, is the building up of an adequate reserve of non-Federal public works, fully planned and ready to be put into construction as economic conditions warrant. As an initial objective, there was sought the planning of a reserve of such public works amounting to $5 billion in construction costs, exclusive of Federal-aid highway work. There is still a long way to go before this goal is reached. Industrial states and large cities have a major proportion of the country's total volume of plan preparations for public works; and this is as it should be. But the present distribution indicates a sparsity of plan preparations in the rest of the country generally. Of the 11,926 governmental units reporting on the status of planning without Federal aid as of June 30, 1946, 7,167 units or 60 per cent, showed no plan preparations in either the completed or the design stage. These units with no plans include 275 cities and towns of over 10,000 population, 1,311 towns with population between 2,500 and 10,000, and 1,622 counties.

Planning Categories

Three categories of planning are summarized in the report of the bureau. In the first category are plans being completed under Title V, War Manpower and Reconversion Act of 1944. Of these plans, the estimated construction cost of proposed public works of state and local governments amounted to $33,541,000 in the completed stage and $896,407,000 in various stages of completion.

(Continued on page 80)

PWA Photo

Public works during the war period.

turned from England, happened to come across a bag of nuggets below decks. They turned the same over to Captain Edger M. Kent, industrial manager, U. S. Coast Guard, who in turn had them analyzed. The result was nothing more than "spelter" or impure zinc, the cache, if it had been real gold nuggets would have been worth around $21,000, according to a quotation from the Baltimore Evening Sun.

Our entertainment committee is now proceeding with its plans for 1947.

Our first meeting in January calls for movies, after our regular order of business is dispensed with. Gosh, there goes that "Should auld acquaintance" song again.

Happy New Year!

REUBEN SEARS, P. S.

L. U. NO. 1439, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Editor: We take this opportunity to wish success to the new International officers. Let's all work together with these men in strengthening the I.B.E.W., to the end that it will become one of the strongest unions in the world. Our local is very new in this organization but we already have seen the advantages offered by the International. We are glad that during the year 1946 we became a member of it and we pledge our whole-hearted support.

Our contract was drafted but at the present time we are having trouble getting it printed. Our wage negotiations are stalemated. A strike-notice vote was taken at our last meeting.

Our first apprentice training plan is working in the substations department. Other departments are to follow shortly.

Our new office is in the I.B.E.W. Building, Boyle and Gibson, St. Louis, Missouri.

Well, here's hoping that in the next issue we'll be able to tell you about our wage increase.

K. E. GERDES, P. S.

GOVERNMENT UNIONS

(Continued from page 53)

2. Do public employees have the right to strike?

The courts have never passed directly upon the right of government employees to strike. However, striking against the government would at present probably be held illegal because the terms and conditions of employment are fixed by law and not by private contract and for the further reason that the public welfare and vital public services would thereby be affected.

President Roosevelt in the letter dated August 16, 1937, referred to a few moments ago, stated:

"I want to emphasize my conviction that militant tactics have no place in the functions of any organization of government employees. Upon employees in the federal service rests the obligation to serve the whole people, whose interests and welfare require orderliness and continuity in the conduct of government activities. The obligation is paramount. Since their own services have to do with the functioning of the government, a strike of public employees manifests nothing less than an intent on their part to prevent or obstruct the operations of government until their demands are satisfied. Such action, looking toward the paralysis of government by those who have sworn to support it, is unthinkable and intolerable."

Despite wide-spread recognition of the peculiar position of civil servants, according to David Ziskin in his book "1,000 Strikes of Government Employees" (1940), since 1835 there have been 1,116 strikes of public employees. Mr. Ziskin concludes that the strike is nearly always a measure of desperation and if conditions are sufficiently bad, it will be employed whether or not its use is legally recognized.

Mosher and Kingsley conclude in their book "Public Personnel Administration" (1941) that:

"striking on the part of public workers does not seem to be a hazard to the public welfare as a practical matter, nor does legal prohibition on this right appear to be justified on a theoretical basis. But in the event the freedom of action of public employees is to be restricted, the State should also accept restrictions upon itself as employer. It must be willing to accept employee organization and representation, to heed the requests of workers, when reasonable, and to adjust grievances promptly and amicably. . . . To deny to any group of employees the right to strike against intolerable conditions is to reduce them to a form of slavery. If strikes in the civil service are contrary to public policy then clearly, unsatisfactory working conditions in the public services are against public welfare."

In its recent report on "Employee Organizations in the Public Service," the National Civil Service League concluded:

"It is the duty of the State to avoid unfavorable conditions of public employment and provide adequate machinery for the prevention and removal of employment problems at their source. But when the State fails in that duty it still remains the obligation of public employees to limit the presentation of their case to peaceable methods."

Aside from the question of right to strike, as will be seen in the answer to questions which follow there are ways to avoid and prevent strikes.

From the somewhat theoretical questions we go now to the consideration of a very practical one.

3. If employees form a union, should a municipal utility recognize it?

The most significant recent development in California on this point is the decision of the State Supreme Court in the case of Nutter v. City of Santa Monica, previously referred to. The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen had demanded recognition on behalf of the city's bus operators. The city took the position that the employees may become members of the Brotherhood or of any other organization and that such organized group may make representations or suggestions on behalf of the employees and otherwise advocate the cause of its members. The city refused to recognize the union in writing or otherwise as the representative of all employees for the purposes of negotiating a contract. The court held that Section 923 of the State Labor Code does not compel a municipality to recognize a union in the sense that unions are generally given recognition in private employment where the majority of the employees involved belong to it.

Most unions of public employees will not insist upon exclusive recognition in the traditional sense and will be satisfied if the head of the agency will allow the union on behalf of its members to petition and present evidence and argument on matters which can be determined within the discretion of the agency head.

Senator Wayne L. Morse, while a member of the National War Labor Board, expressed the opinion of the Board in the case of the City of Newark (5 WLR 286):

"The refusal of many government agencies or political subdivisions to even discuss grievances and employment problems with labor organizations representing their employees is provocative of much ill will within government services and results in the perpetuation of many injustices and unfair discriminations. The solution of these problems rests primarily with the electors in the divisions of such government concerned.

"Nevertheless, much of the responsibility for the existing unrest and dissatisfaction among government employees can be placed squarely at the door of those few administrative officials of government who, by their records, show that they have taken a very uncompromising and unenlightened attitude toward the problem of discussing labor relations problems with public employees coming within their jurisdiction."

Enlightened public management policy requires that municipal officials permit employees to band together and to meet with an open mind the self-chosen representatives of employees whether those representatives come from within the service or outside of it. There is no question, according to the attorney-general of the State of California in his opinion in the case of the Housing Authority of the City of Richmond (Opinion NS 5630, dated August 24, 1944) but that such authorities have power to meet with the chosen representatives of their employees.

(To be continued)

"JIFFY"
SOLDER POT

Swinging Cup
No Spilled Solder

TRIAL OFFER
Send $1.50 with this ad to
CLYDE W. LINT
1144 W. Washington Blvd., Chicago 7, Ill.
(Money back guarantee)

NAVY

(Continued from page 57)

ish forces were many times greater, so the colonials limited themselves to attacking the British shipping with the purpose of taking prizes.

There were two important incidents on water during the Revolutionary War. In the summer of 1776 General Arnold, upon his retreat from Quebec, built a flotilla on Lake Champlain with which he delayed the advance of the British Army into New York. Canadian workmen eventually outbuilt his navy and destroyed it, but by delaying the advance of the British for a year, the English were not able to withstand the rallied American forces at Saratoga.

The other most important single incident at sea was the encounter of John Paul Jones in the "Bon Homme Richard" with the English "Serapis" in 1779. The latter was heavily armed and more tractable than Jones' ship, but the clever Scotchman managed to engage it for three and a half hours on a moonlit night until the British commander surrendered. The fight was in no way of decisive naval importance, but it did establish a reputation for American naval enterprise on the continent and inspired the colonials in rebellion at home. Jones, whose own ship sank the next day,

BEST COPY AVAILABLE PAGINATION INCORRECT

You want the JOURNAL! We want you to have the JOURNAL!

When you move notify us of the change of residence at once.

Name _____

Local Union _____

New Address _____

_____
ZONE NO.

Old Address _____
ZONE NO.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS
1200 15th St., N. W., Washington 5, D. C.

boarded the "Serapis" and took it back to France. This was not the first time that he had captured a superior ship or served his adopted country valiantly.

After the war, the Navy fell apart since Congress failed to continue appropriations for its support. In 1794, however, Congress authorized a fleet under the War Department to protect American shipping from the pirates of the Barbary powers. These professional plunderers were highly organized and operated in peacetime with the same government sanction that the American privateers had during war. They were located all along the northern coast of Africa in Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia and Tripoli. Their power waxed for several centuries and was only finally surpressed by the French in 1830 when the latter invaded Algeria.

The craft built as a result of the Act of 1794 were six ships of 248 guns, designed by the best talent in the country. They were manned by nearly 2,000 men and officers and were peers of any in their class. As the ships were nearing completion in 1798, Congress created a Navy Department under a Secretary of the Navy with cabinet status.

The operations against Tripoli in 1803-5 were successful and after that the independence of the Navy was assured. Before the war of 1812 the Navy increased its tonnage to 14,260 and its officers and men to 5,500, with 1,300 marines besides. At first the Americans were able to carry out several daring attacks on English shipping and bring its own cargoes into port, but soon the British Navy proved more than a match for it and the United States harbors were blockaded and our ships cleared from the seas.

Between the War of 1812 and the War Between the States the condition of the Navy was poor. Attempts were made several times to reorganize it, but Congress never saw the basic problems involved in establishing, maintaining, staffing and employing a first rate organization. The need for an extensive fleet was never pressing except in time of war, and even then, as in the Mexican War, although the Navy did very effective and important work, its roll was not a particularly exciting one.

The War Between the States was the occasion of a great expansion from 10,000 to 60,000 men, and from 133,000 to over 500,000 tons of shipping. The duties of the Navy were to blockade the coasts of the Confederate States and prevent shipping on the Mississippi. The thoroughness with which it accomplished this was a major element in contributing to a Union victory. During this war an assistant secretary was appointed to direct operations and practically to assume the duties of a chief-of-staff, an important administrative change, which was abolished, nevertheless, once the war was over.

The Spanish-American War of 1898 brought home to the Americans that they were now a world power needing more extensive defense machines if they intended to contend with other more militaristic and imperialistic nations.

WALL STREET

(Continued from page 47)

Mrs. H does her own housework, with the help of a cleaning woman who comes in once a week to clean and wash. "We have a real bargain there," Mr. H says. "She charges only 40 cents an hour, carfare, and her meals on the job."

Wonder if Mr. H ever gives any thought to how the cleaning woman gets along in these days of high living costs on that 40 cents an hour.

Now we come to the saddest story of all, that of Mr. C, the $200,000-a-year executive of one of the country's top industrial concerns. The headline says, "Mr. C Finds $200,000 Income Shrinks to $36,611 Take-Home Pay. Big Executive Drops Insurance Program; Cuts Clubs, Buys Autos from Savings."

The story calls attention to the fact that "Mr. C's financial problems are not peculiar to him. They are typical of a general belt-tightening by most people earning more than $100,000 a year. During the past five years, their net income or take-home pay has shrunken tremendously, while their living costs, as everywhere, have been inflated."

"The drop in income is bad enough," says Mr. C, "but when it is accompanied by a rise in living costs, brother, it really pinches."

Mr. C did admit to the reporter that he felt he was doing pretty well in spite of these difficulties, and changes in his living standards. Some of his acquaintances are not so fortunate. One of his friends recently was voted a $30,000 salary increase by his company's salary committee but he rejected it because he figured it would have netted him considerably less than $2,000 after Federal and state taxes. Furthermore, he felt that if he had accepted the increase it probably would have made some of the stockholders and employees mad. And, he reasoned, it wasn't worth it for only $2,000.

The reporter suggested to Mr. C that in view of the fact that taxes take so much of their income, why not pay executives less and help them reduce their tax bills? Here's what Mr. C is reported to have said about that:

"Just as profits are the measuring stick which judge the efficiency of management, the salary received by a member of management is the standard by which he is judged not only by others but in his own estimation. It is also the most practical method of rewarding ability. Also, high executive salaries are an energizer to inspire those down the line to equip themselves for the higher jobs."

They'd better not let the junior executives read about the tough time the top men have getting along on those big salaries or nobody will want the job when the old man dies.

The tip-off as to what is behind the series of stories is found in the final paragraph of the interview with Mr. C. When he was asked if he could see any chance for improvement in his financial position here is what he said:

"At my age (he's in his middle sixties) nothing can help my financial position except lower taxes."

All of the stories brought out the large slice of income which went for taxes, and pointed to it as the source of most of the financial difficulties of the men interviewed. Well, they should all be a lot happier when Congress passes Mr. Knutson's tax bill reducing the personal income tax by 20 per cent.

But at a time when all year-end reports show that we have never been so prosperous, there is some logic on the side of those who feel that government expenses should be reduced and the public debt paid off or at least partially funded, before taxes are cut. Tax cuts at this time will only add to inflationary forces already putting serious strains on our economy.

CALORIES

(Continued from page 61)

Food	Amount	Calories
Beets	½ cup	45
Broccoli	1 cup	40
Cabbage	1 cup	25
Carrots	1 cup	65
Celery	6 stalks	15
Corn—canned	½ cup	100
" fresh	1 ear	60
Cucumber	12 slices	10
Lettuce	1 large head	50
Peas—canned	½ cup	55
" —fresh	½ cup	75
Potatoes—baked	1 medium	100
" —boiled	2 small	100
" —fried	4 slices	100
" —chips	¼ cup	100
" —sweet	1 small	150
Spinach	1 cup	40
Tomatoes—canned	1 cup	50
" —raw	1	35
Desserts
Cake—chocolate	Average slice	350
" —pound	" "	175
" —sponge	" "	100
Cookies—ginger	1	50
" —chocolate	1	125
Ice Cream—
plain vanilla	½ cup	100
chocolate	½ cup	250
chocolate sundae	½ cup	400
Pie—all fruit pies	one-sixth of pie	350
Candy—
average 5-cent bar	1	400
average chocolate	1	100

Well, there's a partial calorie list for you and here's good luck and good will pour to you.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

C O N S T I T U T I O N

of the

Milwaukee County District Council #48

American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes

A.F. of L. - C.I.O

Amended
6/28/57

CONSTITUTION

of the

Milwaukee County District Council #48 of A.F.S.C. and M.E. Local Unions.

ARTICLE I

Name and Headquarters

Section 1: The name of this organization shall be Milwaukee County District Council #48 of A.F.S.C. and M.E. Local Unions.

ARTICLE II

Affiliations

This Council shall be affiliated with the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes, The Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, the Milwaukee Federated Trades Council, State CIO and County CIO.

ARTICLE III

Objects and Methods

Section 1: The objects of this organization shall be, in general, the objects of the A.F.S.C. and M.E. and:

a. To unite the locals of A.F.S.C. and M.E. in Milwaukee County for mutual welfare, protection and advancement.

b. To work for the establishment and maintenance of fair wages, hours, working conditions and civil service classifications.

c. To coordinate legislative programs of the A.F.S.C. and M.E. local unions in Milwaukee County

d. To represent local unions before state and local legislative bodies and to arrange for appearance on behalf of local unions before councils, commissions and committees.

e. To assist member locals with organization problems, publicity, and promotional work in general.

f. To foster and promote a better understanding between public employes, officials, and the public.

Section 2: The methods of obtaining the objectives of this council, shall be by giving a full measure of support to the A.F.S.C. and M.E., by petitioning, by creating and fostering sentiment favorable to proposed reforms, by cooperating with state and local officials, by promoting legislation, by entering into collective bargaining agreements with county commissions and municipal governments employing members of affiliated locals and by other lawful means.

ARTICLE IV

Membership

Section 1: All local unions in Milwaukee County regularly certified or chartered by the A.F.S.C. and M.E. shall affiliate with this council.

Section 2: The application from each local applying for affiliation with this council shall be sent to the secretary of the council. Membership applications received shall be presented by the secretary at the next following meeting of the council executive board.

Section 3: Per capita tax shall be paid to this council by member locals at the rate of not less than One Dollar ($1.00) per month per member. Monthly reports to the council shall be made on the same number of members reported on month to month to the national office of the A.F.S.C. and M.E. by no later than the 15th of the following month.

Section 4: Per capita tax payments are due the first of the month for dues collected the previous month. Locals that fail to pay the monthly per capita tax, any assessment or other indebtedness to the council by the close of business on the fifteenth day of the following month shall be notified promptly by the treasurer, and if at the end of two months, inclusive of the 15 days, a local is still in arrears it shall be suspended from membership, and its members shall forfeit all rights, privileges and benefits.

ARTICLE V

Meetings

Section 1: The council shall meet monthly at such time and place as the delegates may select.

Section 2: A special meeting of this Council may be called by a majority of the member locals of the Council by filing a request therefor with the President, which petition shall name the time and place for the meeting which shall be no sooner than fourteen days subsequent to the date of such filing and the President shall immediately issue a call to the locals.

Section 3: All sovereign power and authority of the organization shall originate in meetings of the council. Delegates to these meetings shall determine matters of policy, and may delegate such authority as they may determine. A meeting of this council shall be the court of last resort for all appeals which may be made by any member from any decision of any body or committee of the Council except as provided in Article X of the constitution of the A.F.S.C. and M.E.

ARTICLE VI

Officers and Committees

Section 1: The officers of this council shall be a president, a vice-president, a secretary, a treasurer, and 13 (thirteen) additional members, and these 17 (seventeen) together shall constitute the executive board of the Council. Not more than two members of the executive board shall be selected from any one local union in any one year. The officers shall be elected and installed at the annual meeting of the council.

Section 2: Nominations for officers shall be made from the floor. Only duly accredited delegates shall be eligible for nomination.

Section 3: Officers shall be elected by secret ballot on a majority vote of the delegates present at the annual meeting of the council. When more than two candidates are nominated for one office and a majority vote is not obtained, the candidate receiving the lowest number of votes shall be dropped until a majority is obtained. The annual meeting shall be held in the month of June.

Section 4: No person shall be eligible for office in this council unless he is a member in good standing of a local union affiliated with the council and he and his local union must continue in good standing to continue in office.

Section 5: Removal from office.

a. Any officer whose leadership and actions are not such as to inspire confidence, keep members active, benefit the members, or serve them as they should be served to maintain and advance the organization, may have charges preferred against him and be tried for removal from office.

b. Any officer of the council may be removed from office when charges preferred against him are sustained by a two-thirds vote of the council, after charges have been preferred in wirting and the officer has been given an opportunity for hearing. This officer shall have the right of appeal to the president of the A.F.S.C. and M.E.

c. Unexcused absence of an officer from two consecutive board meetings shall automatically vacate his office.

Section 6: Vacancies in office shall be filled for the remainder of the unexpired term by a two-thirds vote of the executive board.

Section 7: No elected officer of this council shall be paid any salary or wages for services rendered in his elective capacity, but an elective officer may be selected by the executive board to serve in other capacities as for instance, legislative representative or any office to which he must devote full time for which remuneration may be allowed.

Viewpoint

Section 8: The executive board shall appoint such standing committees as may be required by the by-laws. The president shall appoint such special committees as he may be authorized to do by the executive board of the council.

Section 9: All books, records, and financial accounts of the council shall at all times be open to the inspection of national officers or assigned representatives of the A.F.S.C. and M.E. or any duly authorized representative of any member local union of the council.

~~Section 10: Any and all paid representatives of the council shall be required to make a report of their activities to the executive board.~~

Section ~~11.~~ 10. The executive board shall employ an executive officer with the title of executive director.

ARTICLE VII

Method of Amendment

Section 1:

a. Proposed amendments to this constitution shall be submitted in writing to the executive board at least thirty (30) days prior to the meeting of the council at which a vote is to be taken. The proposed amendments and the recommendations of the executive board shall be submitted to the next meeting of the council. A two-thirds majority vote of the delegates present at that meeting shall be necessary for adoption.

b. Amendments may be submitted from the floor by a two-thirds majority vote of the delegates present, provided that such amendments shall be referred back to the local unions for ratification. A two-thirds majority vote of all local unions will be necessary for such ratification.

Section 2: This constitution and all amendments thereto shall be subject to ratification by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes, AFL-CIO.

BY-LAWS

MILWAUKEE DISTRICT COUNCIL # 48

AFSCME - AFL-CIO

ARTICLE I

Duties of Officers and Committees

Section 1: The president shall act at all times in a manner which will maintain the organization and benefit its members. He shall preside at all meetings of the Council and at all meetings of the executive board, and shall be a member ex-officio of all committees. He shall sign all authorized orders on the treasury and countersign all checks drawn against the funds of the Council. At the conclusion of his term he shall submit a report to the Council regarding the progress and standing of the Council and regarding his official acts during his term of office.

Section 2: The vice-president shall assist in general work among the members to keep the organization active and shall assist the president in giving the Council tone and direction. In the absence of the Council president or in his inability to serve, the vice-president shall preside at all meetings and perform all duties otherwise performed by the president.

Section 3: The secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of the executive board meetings and of the meetings of the Council and shall perform such duties as may be required by the executive board.

Section 4: The treasurer shall receive and take charge of all monies and properties of the Council. He shall deposit all monies so received to the credit of the Council in a bank, or banks, selected by the executive board. All disbursements shall be made by check. All checks must be signed by the treasurer and countersigned by the president. The treasurer shall be responsible for payment of the annual affiliation fee of $5 from the Council to the International Union. The treasurer shall keep an accurate record of receipts and disbursements, and shall render a report thereon at each meeting of the Council. He shall submit his books and records for audit when required by the Council. He shall at the expense of the Council and through the A.F.S.C. and M.E. give a surety bond for an amount to be fixed by the executive board. He shall notify in writing any bank, or banks, wherein Council funds are deposited that the Council empowers the national office to stop withdrawals and take charge of all Council funds when in the judgment of the national office such action is necessary to protect the welfare of the Council or its member locals. A copy of such notice shall be furnished the national office.

Section 5: There shall be a sergeant-at-arms who shall be elected annually by the delegates to the District Council. It shall be his duty to assist the President of the Council in maintaining order and to engage in such other activities as the executive board shall assign to him.

Section 6: Duties of the executive board:

a. The executive board shall be the governing body of this council between meetings of the council. Regular meetings of the board shall be held monthly. Special meetings may be called by the president or upon request of a majority number of board members.

b. All matters affecting the policies, aims, and means of accomplishing the purposes of the Council not specifically provided for in this constitution or by action of the delegates at a meeting of the Council shall be decided by the executive board.

c. A majority of the members of the executive board shall be required for a quorum.

d. The executive board may delegate such authority as is in conformity with this constitution to any employee of this Council whom it may hire. The executive board shall contract and be responsible for the employment of necessary administration officers and shall have the authority to select such officers on the basis of merit and fitness, without regard to race, color, or creed. The board shall also be responsible for such employments, as well as for the establishment and maintenance of council headquarters. The executive director is authorized with approval of the executive board to employ and direct the activities of such additional personnel as may be required to effectively carry on the work of the Council.

e. Expenditures of funds of the Council shall be authorized or approved by the executive board. The board shall require an independent audit of the books of the Council at least once each fiscal year and report thereon shall be made at the annual meeting of the Council with a copy going to the A.F.S.C and M.E. The executive board shall be responsible for the preparation of the monthly operating statement of the transactions of this Council.

Section 7: All legislative programs of member locals of this Council when affecting the general welfare of public employes shall be cleared through the executive board of the Council.

Section 8: The executive board and the District Council meetings shall be conducted in accordance with the procedures set forth in Roberts Rules of Order.

ARTICLE II

Standing Committees

Section 1: There shall be standing committees called:

a. Welfare Committee
b. Recreation Committee
c. Legislative Committee

The president of the District Council shall with the approval of the majority of the executive board have the authority to make appointments to these committees from the total membership of the affiliated locals of the District Council.

The number of appointments to each of these committees shall be limited by the consideration of the scope of the activities of each committee. The appointments are to be made for one year but appointees may be re-appointed.

ARTICLE III

Representation

Section 1: Locals in good standing with a membership of 100 or less shall be entitled to three delegates and three votes. Locals with membership greater than 100 shall be entitled to three delegates and three votes for the first 100 members and an additional delegate and vote for each additional 50 members or fraction thereof at meetings of the Milwaukee County District Council #48 provided that no local shall be entitled to representation in meetings unless all per capita tax payment and other accounts due the A. F. S. C. and M. E. are paid before the opening of the meeting, and provided further that no local union shall be entitled to representation at the meeting unless such local union has obtained a charter or certificate of affiliation from the A. F. S. C. and M. E. at least fifteen days prior to the council meeting, except by special action of the executive board of the council.

Delegates shall be prorated on per capita paid by the local during the previous six months period using the periods beginning January 1st and ending June 30th and beginning July 1st and ending December 31st as the basis.

Section 2: Delegates shall be members in good standing of their respective local unions.

Section 3: No organization or person seceded or expelled from the A.F.S.C. and M.E. or from its local unions, and no local union suspended by this council shall be allowed representation or recognition at the council meetings.

Section 4: No local union shall be represented at meetings of the council by proxy and names of delegates shall be certified by the proper officers of local unions to the secretary of the council.

Section 5: The Milwaukee County District Council #48 shall not be responsible for council delegates' expenses.

Section 6: Each delegate who is a citizen of voting age must be a registered voter and delegates who are not citizens must furnish prcof that they have taken the proper steps to become citizens.

ARTICLE IV

Reinstatement of Suspended Locals

Section 1: Locals suspended for failure to pay per capita tax or for any other reason may be reinstated with the approval of the executive board and the delegates.

Section 2: Locals applying for reinstatement must meet all the conditions of reinstatement set by the executive board and the delegates to the District Council.

Section 3: Locals objecting to a decision of the executive board may appeal to the Int'l executive board but the decision of the District Council shall prevail until it is reversed by the Int'l executive board.

ARTICLE V

Quorum

A quorum for the transaction of business shall consist of delegates from not less than 51% of the member locals entitled to representation at the Council meeting.

1957

UNION PHILOSOPHY

and

THE PROFESSIONAL

By JACK BARBASH★

MUCH of the discussion about white collar workers, professional workers and unions has been obscured by folklore and confused thinking. I believe it is necessary, therefore, to get at some fundamentals about the way people, whether professionals or not, behave in our kind of economic society. Unless we fully understand certain principles, the problem of finding a sensible way of dealing with this problem of professionals in unions will continue to evade us.

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 1: An employee-employer relationship inevitably, and I underscore the word inevitably—generates problems between the employer and employee. The more employees, the more problems, and the more complex are the problems. When the employees are few, it is possible for the employee to settle or resolve

Mr. Barbash

Professor of labor education, University of Wisconsin School for Workers, and member of Workers Education Local 189; formerly, research and education director AFL-CIO Industrial Union department.*

these problems on a face-to-face basis with the employer.

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 2: The character of the work makes little difference as to whether problems exist between the employee and the employer. The sweeper, the milling machine operator, the clerk, the engineer, the social worker, the doctor, the lawyer and the teacher—all of these, if they stand in the relationship of employee to any employer, will inevitably experience feelings of irritation, dissatisfaction, ill treatment, or what have you.

The sweeper doesn't always want to be a sweeper. He wants a better job. The milling machine operator knows a fellow who is doing the same work across the street, in another department, who is getting more money than he is. The clerk sees the fellow in the shop getting higher wages. The engineer is assigned to a job which doesn't comport with his notion of what a professional should be doing. The social worker doesn't think she should be getting less than a sweeper just because she is working for a philanthropic agency. The teacher resents the fact that merit increases are made by the whim of a supervisor.

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 3: It doesn't matter, either, who the employer happens to be, for serious problems to exist. The employer-employee relationship has the same thrust whether the employer is an individual, a corporation, a government, a social agency or a union.

Many people used to think that problems develop only when the employer is a private employer. We now know better. The most striking example is, of course, Soviet Russia. The fact that the employer is the state does not in any way mitigate the problems of working for a living. In the case of Soviet Russia, the problem is even worse. The workers have no one to turn to.

Even in the case of a democratic government, as in Great Britain, nationalization does not, somehow, transform the employer-employee relationship into a romantic idyll. Work is work for whomever you work. And in all candor, working for a public agency doesn't transform the employer-employee relationship into an idyll, either.

To bring the situation closer to home, when the union becomes an employer, we are not suddenly ushered into an era of brotherly love. The employees of the union believe they have to have a union to protect their interests in dealing with the union as employer.

Why? Why should it be that regardless of what kind of work the employees do, who the employer is, the employer-employee relationship must inevitably create serious problems? I am not sure that I have a complete answer to this.

I think I am certain of what the answer is not. It is not the inherent cussedness, cupidity, greed of employers. It is not something in the psychological makeup, the genes, of a person when he becomes a worker. I think part of the answer lies in the way people perceive their interests. And this brings me to:

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 4: I would state Principle Number 4 like this. There are essential differences of interests between those who are employed and those who employ. The employee wants to earn or save more money. The employer wants to get more money out of the business and keep costs down. It is as simple as that. The employer wants greater freedom in running his business. The employee wants greater freedom as an individual.

Who is right? Why, of course, both are right. There is nothing wrong with either position.

There is a good deal of innocent but sometimes malicious mischief inflicted by well-meaning people who say that there are no differences in interests between employer and employee. Anybody who has ever worked for a living, or anybody who has hired others to work for a living or who has supervised others knows this is not true.

Am I preaching the Marxist doctrine of eternal class conflict? No. The difference is that the Marxists believe in a doctrine of eternal conflict until one side vanquishes the other. They do not believe that these conflicts of interests can be resolved into a viable relationship.

I do not believe in an eternal struggle. A society in which one side has vanquished the other is a totalitarian society and it doesn't really matter who vanquishes whom.

On the contrary, I hold that it is possible to find instrumentalities through which these differences in interests can be resolved. The industrial history of the United States is a vivid illustration that it is possible to find a mechanism through which employees and employers can live together in relative peace.

There is really nothing subversive or immoral about this conflict of interest. In fact, this is the whole theory of our constitutional form of government. The constitution rests on the notion that the interests of the legislature representing the people, the judiciary and the executive are different and that this difference in interests is good and can be relied upon through a system of checks and balances to advance the common good. All of history is of an attempt to find a way of resolving conflicting interests.

There is no point in attempting to sweep this problem under the carpet through human relation and communications techniques. There are too many people who obscure the real question by cluttering up the central issue. To be sure, efficient communications can help in focusing attention on the real differences of interest. But it is charlatanism of a high order to hold out the promise that there is some kind of a gimmick which will eliminate the differences of interest. How, then, do you deal with these differences in interest in a sensible way? This brings us to:

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 5: If there is a difference of interest between two parties, neither side can be trusted to protect adequately the interests of the other. There is no such thing in group relationships, where differences in interests are involved, as my knowing better what's good for you than you do for yourself. Even if I do know better you won't believe me.

In political affairs, this means that no man and no special interest groups, no matter how high minded and well intentioned, can be trusted to exercise power without restraint and checks and counterbalancing influences on the exercise of authority.

In employer-employee relationships, the application of this principle means that no employer, no matter how high minded and well intentioned, and no matter how much above narrow self-interest he thinks he is, can adequately deal with his employee's interests on his own power.

And it works the other way, too. No group of employees, no matter how idealistic they are, can adequately protect the employer's interests. I then derive:

PRINCIPLE NUMBER 6: The only practical way to resolve differences in interests between employers and employees is through a mechanism which permits either side to say No and get away with it. Or as an alternative, if both sides say No to each other, which means an impasse has been reached—then there must be some impartial third party who can decide between the parties.

Of course, what I am describing is collective bargaining between a free union and a free employer and the right of the union to strike and the employer to say No. Or as an alternative, the use of some method of impartial arbitration. The collective bargaining process must, of course, be tailored to the special circumstances surrounding each situation.

The institution of collective bargaining carried on by free unions and free management represents one of the greatest social inventions of our time. Collective bargaining is the answer to the forces in our society who say that differences in economic interests can be resolved only by one side vanquishing the other; that is, by a totalitarian system of one color or other.

It is indeed of the gravest import that no totalitarian system tolerates free collective bargaining. By the same token, collective bargaining is an indispensable pillar of modern democracy. Collective bargaining provides a system of due process for the sensible resolution of differences between employers and employees.

I do not want to be understood to say that the answers provided by collective bargaining are always perfect answers, or that the unions which emerge always represent the interests of their constituents in the best possible way. Unions are made up of a cross-section of the American people. I dare say that unions have a share of the social afflictions of the society at large.

But it can be said without effective contradiction that the unions have done a stunning job of improving the working lives of their constituents. They have done it with a high degree of creative adaptation to a rapidly changing economic environment. A strong case can be made that the whole society and the virility of the democratic way of life have benefited from the upsurge of unionism in the United States in the last twenty years or so.

IF ALL OF THE THINGS that I have written herein are really fundamental principles, what's all this noise about white collar workers and unions and professionals and unions? Why are only about 17% of white collar people in free unions, in contrast to the high degree of union organization in mass production industry?

I suggest that our culture has developed an array of myths and pieces of folklore that attempt to deny the applicability of these principles to the white collar worker. Or, to put it another way, so far, many white collar workers and particularly the professionals have been effectively convinced that they are different:

1) That, as one item of folklore goes, the white collar worker has no problems on the job;

2) That with respect to a white collar worker employed by a government nonprofit agency, the government is not really an employer in any real sense of the word;

3) That if there are differences of interest, the white collar worker can depend on the employer, whoever he is, to do the right thing, and

4) That in any case, unions and collective bargaining are fine for manual workers but they won't work for professionals.

For many professionals this folklore is a rationalization—the good reason rather than the real reason. The real reason is, to put it plainly, fear.

What, then, is the job of the professional employees' union? First, the rationalizations have to be dealt with and it is the job of the union to get across to the non-union professional in terms of his own experience that these are, indeed, myths. Second, the union must get across the idea that belonging to the union gives him strength and security.

One thing about the professional worker has been very interesting to me as a student of the labor movement. Despite all the talk about professionals being a separate breed, when professional workers do organize unions, they negotiate agreements which in the main headings do not differ from other kinds of contracts. They concern themselves with the day-to-day grievances of the workers they represent; and professionals strike when they have to.

The element of difference is the shape and pattern which these needs and aspirations take in each individual situation. And, I think, we are beginning to appreciate how to build strong unions of professional workers at the same time that these unions give expression to the diversity of particular goals that particular groups seek.

As a member of the family, in a manner of speaking, I hope you will allow me to write plainly. As I see it, one of the problems of bringing professional workers into unions is the professional himself.

We—and I hope you will let me say we because I, too, think of myself as a professional teacher—we tend to overtalk, overthink, and overintellectualize our problems. This holds true when professionals think about unions.

FLORENCE SYTZ, professor of social casework at Tulane university, produced a classic parody on the procedures of a conference of professionals (in this case, social workers). It follows:

"1) Profess not to have the answer. This lets you out of having any.

"2) Say that we must not move too rapidly. This avoids the necessity of getting started.

"3) Say that the problem can't be separated from all the other problems. Therefore, it can't be solved until all the other problems have been solved.

"4) For every proposal set up an opposite one and conclude that the 'middle ground' (no motion whatever) represents the wisest course of action.

"5) Discover that there are all kinds of 'dangers' in any specific formulation or conclusion.

"6) Appoint a committee.

"7) Wait until an expert can be consulted.

"8) State in conclusion that you have all clarified your thinking. This obscures the fact that nothing has been done.

"9) Point out that the deepest minds have struggled with the same problem. This implies that it does you credit even to have thought of it.

"10) In closing the meeting thank the problem. It has stimulated discussion, opened new vistas, shown us the way, challenged our inventiveness."

The teaching profession is in a unique position to make a major contribution to the growth and development of unions among professional employees. An understanding of group relationships and social processes is an integral part of professional stock in trade. These insights which must be part of the professional's daily job, can be applied to the union as an organization.

The creative qualities which professionals bring to their jobs can also be transferred to the union situation. The challenge which confronts the professional is this: The dignity, status and scientific competence that go with being a professional cannot be fully realized unless, in the first instance, the professional has a measure of economic and personal security on the job; the kind of economic and personal security that can be achieved only through effective union organization.

THE OUT-AND-OUT professional organization cannot do this kind of job for several reasons. First, it is temperamentally incapable of fully understanding the logic of working for a living. So, although it dabbles at economic representation, it shies away from the full implications of the task. Secondly, the professional association tends to contain with it inherently disparate elements, so that its effectiveness as an economic representative of any one element is blunted and dulled.

Only a union which is clearly a union can do the job. It must be a union which is custom-built to meet the special needs of its own constituents but there must be no self-indulging illusion that the economic problems of the professional can be dealt with in any way except through an economic organization and this means a union.

REPRINTED FROM

The AMERICAN TEACHER magazine

December, 1957

MARIE L. CAYLOR, EDITOR

FOR COPIES WRITE

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF TEACHERS, AFL-CIO

CARL J. MEGEL, PRESIDENT

28 E. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Illinois

THE STEWARD

KEY to a Strong Union

American Federation of STATE, COUNTY and MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES
AFL-CIO

American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees,
AFL-CIO

Order additional copies of this pamphlet from:

AFSCME
815 Mt. Vernon Place, N. W.
Washington 1, D. C.

Price: 25c a copy

The Steward . . .
Key to a Strong Union

American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO 1958

Table of Contents

	PAGE
Introduction	3
AFSCME in Action	5
The AFSCME Steward	10
The Steward's Job	11
How to Build the Union	12
How to Settle Grievances	21
Maintain the Working Rules	40
Safety and Accidents	42
Know Labor Laws	45
Steward's Dictionary	52

INTRODUCTION

This manual describes the duties and responsibilities of the union steward and provides suggestions on methods whereby his work may be more effective.

Our International officers and the staff at headquarters in Washington, D. C., combined their experience and their knowledge of the trade union movement in the writing of this manual. Moreover, the experience of many other unions of AFL-CIO was reviewed, especially the work on stewardship of the former Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Our union has undertaken a vast program of evaluation over the past few years to discover from the members themselves what kind of union they want to build and how they want to go about doing it. This evaluation confirms what members of unions in our largest industries have learned—that their stewards were the key to building their strong and powerful unions.

This manual attempts, in addition, to define the principles that derive from the democratic philosophy of American trade unionism. Combined with the experience of veteran AFSCME members, these principles can be applied by our stewards, local officers and representatives in an almost infinite variety of circumstances in the public services.

Finally, this manual was designed as a guide for discussion of stewardship in meetings of stewards and local unions. We hope it will help to solve the problems our members and their officers face in the daily business of making the public services not only a better place to work but a more efficient public function.

Sincerely and fraternally

JOHN P. CALDWELL
International Representative

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Grateful acknowledgement is hereby made to Philadelphia District Council 33, whose officers, stewards and members made possible the photographic illustrations that are contained in this manual. Gratitude also is extended to the city officials of Philadelphia, who gave generously of their time so that the pictures in which they appear could be made.

AFSCME IN ACTION

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees was granted a charter in 1936 by the American Federation of Labor. This new union of state and local government employees emerged out of the great depression of 1932 with the central goal of protecting hard-won civil service rights. One of the leaders of this early group of organizers was Arnold S. Zander, then a civil service examiner in Wisconsin. Brother Zander was elected AFSCME's first president. He has been re-elected to this important post ever since.

Despite the extreme complexity of and variation in state and local government labor relations practices and despite the lack of a Wagner Act to protect the right to existence of this new union, AFSCME has had marked steady and substantial growth. In 1956 following merger of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, AFSCME and the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee merged. Through this merger and subsequent growth of the new organization, membership has grown to more than 200,000.

The governing philosophy of AFSCME is that it is an organization of its members, by its members and for its members. The basic effort of the leaders of AFSCME through the years has been to communicate with the membership and to ask decisions from the membership in connection with the union's policies. AFSCME has won the respect not only of fellow union members in other organizations of labor but also of countless public administrators. AFSCME is the union for public employees.

Structure of AFSCME

The union is directed between biennial conventions by the International Executive Board of 13 members including the International president and the International secretary-treasurer. The Board holds at least two general meetings each year and gives reasonable notice of these meetings to councils and locals which may have problems to bring before it. The Executive Board also may be called into special session by the International president or by a majority of the Board members.

State-wide councils of state employee local unions have been established in many states to combine resources for the effort to win benefits and collective bargaining rights for state employees. Councils are formed when local unions in the particular public services vote to form them. The locals elect delegates to a convention for the purpose of forming, for example, a council of state employee locals. The delegates write and adopt a constitution, which, when approved by the International president, is official. The delegates adopt a financial structure based on a per capita tax and delegate authority to the executive board they elect. Similarly, locals in county and municipal subdivisions have been formed into councils in order to strengthen their bargaining position before state legislators, county boards and city councils and to assist locals in negotiations and organization. Executive boards employ representatives to carry on the day-to-day work of organization, representation and legislative work.

The United States has been divided into regions. Each region is under the general supervision of a regional director, appointed by the president with the approval of the International Executive Board. (See map page 7). Regional directors are under the supervision of the director of organization by authority of the International president.

Union Gains

Over the years AFSCME has vigorously promoted campaigns for the improvement of wages, hours and working conditions of state and local government employees. Among the significant improvements, by which many thousands of public employees achieved a better life, are:

1. Union recognition.
2. Improved wages and salaries.
3. Liberalized and more extensive retirement programs.
4. Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance coverage for public employees.
5. Signed working agreements describing wages, hours and working conditions.
6. Grievance procedure whereby working conditions are constantly improved.
7. Extended civil service legislation and merit systems.
8. Shortened work week and time and one-half for overtime in some jurisdictions.
9. Hospital and surgical insurance coverage with all or part of the premium paid by the employer.
10. Longevity pay.
11. Unemployment compensation to increased numbers of public employees.
12. More liberal sick leave and paid vacations.

The Coming Campaigns

Although AFSCME has a long way to travel before it fully organizes the state, county and city governments employees in the 50 states, more than 3,000 counties and thousands of cities in the U.S.A., the union is firmly established. Its 200,000 members joined because they knew public employees must have an effective organization to represent them. Organization is the primary goal of the union if results are to be achieved.

For almost 20 years industrial workers have been largely organized. They have made great strides forward in wages, fringe benefits and working conditions. Public employees have lagged behind until the differential or "gap" between the two groups has become alarming. Economic studies by the AFSCME Department of Research show that the wage gap between industrial workers and public employees ranges from $57 a month in one state to $118 a month in another. This gap is widening as industrial and construction workers' unions press successfully for increases in wages.

There is no justice when a city-employed grader operator works for $1.50 an hour less than a grader operator in private construction. Hundreds of similar examples might be listed in which, job for job, the public employee works far below his counterpart in private industry. The old "justification" for this unequal treatment was that a public employee works all the year round while workers in private industry suffered frequent lay-off. Studies of the construction industry indicate that annual take-home pay of construction workers is more than $1000 a year over that of the average highway or street department employee.

For AFSCME this widening gap constitutes a great challenge not only to win pay increases equal to those received by all other workers but also to overcome the differential. Your officers and the International Executive Board are proposing policies designed to win the goal of at least equal pay for public employees as compared with industrial workers.

Right to Bargain

The central aim of these policies is to win from state legislatures the right for AFSCME to become the legally elected exclusive bargaining agent for state, county and municipal employees. The National Labor Relations Act gives industrial workers the right to have their union and compels employers to bargain with the union in good faith with the objective of a signed contract covering wages, hours and working conditions. AFSCME maintains that similar rights should be granted to public employees by the state legislatures. The drive to convince the legislators of the justice of this cause will be one of the most important activities of AFSCME for some time to come.

The local union steward and committee member are the basic link in the two-way communication of ideas between AFSCME leadership and the members on how to win these campaigns. The steward is the leader of the union in the department in which he works. His role is to defend the workers' rights on the job. He must keep the members informed on all phases of the union's activities. He must help build the union by recruiting more members to gain bargaining strength. This manual is designed to help the steward to do these many things.

Rights and Duties of Members

AFSCME can be only as powerful and effective as its members want it to be. Participation by an interested and informed membership is the only effective guarantee that the union will achieve success in its undertakings.

A union is defined as a "continuing association of wage earners for the purpose of maintaining and improving wages, hours and conditions of work." It is an institution of human beings who have associated themselves together permanently and who are devoted to promoting the common good.

Each member, when he joins the union, assumes a responsibility of helping the organization to win its goals. Each member has a responsibility with others to determine what the goals will be and how the union proposes to win them.

The decision-making process in AFSCME starts with the local union. Delegates from the locals meet in the various councils and there make decisions affecting many thousands of workers in the wider area of a state or large metropolitan city. Every two years delegates from local unions attend the International Convention, again making decisions on behalf of their members and on behalf of the nation-wide interests of public employees.

The method of governing the union is the method of democracy whereby direct representatives of the people make final decisions. Elected and appointed officials then carry out those decisions. The stewards and committee members perform the vital function of bringing the thoughts, feelings and desires of the members to the attention of their leaders.

The AFSCME Steward

Webster defines "steward" as a guardian, custodian, or administrator. In our union he is all of these.

The steward is the key to a stronger union because he carries the ball for the union where it counts most—on the job, among the members.

It's easy to see why. The steward is on the spot every day to see that fair labor standards are maintained. The union officers can't do this job. The staff at the union office can't do it. You are there and they have to depend on you.

A good steward means a good union to the members he represents. Most workers judge the union by their stewards. When they think of the union, they think of the steward and the kind of job he does.

When a steward is fair and helpful and settles their grievances promptly, the members feel that the union is working for them. If he is enthusiastic about union ideas and programs, the members will take an interest. When the steward does a good job of enforcing standards, they respect his judgment on other union matters.

The powerful enforcement of good working conditions in America's factories stems from the careful selection, training and support of the steward by the members. The solicitous care with which union stewards and grievance committeemen investigate and the militancy with which they fight out grievances of the workers has won the undying loyalty of the rank and file to their union.

You can make the union alive and powerful in your department. The steward holds the key to a stronger local union.

The Steward's Job

There are three parts to a steward's job. First, you must organize the unorganized by signing up prospective members. Second, you've got to protect the workers' rights in the department. This means settling grievances and watching for violations of labor laws, working conditions or the agreement. Third, it's up to you to strengthen the union and build support for its program among the workers you represent. You are the union's leader in the department. You must tell the workers about union activities. You must build loyalty to union goals.

These three jobs aren't really separate. When you settle grievances justly, you strengthen the union. And if you and the union don't have support from the workers to begin with, it will be hard to get fair grievance settlements from supervisors—or a better deal from management.

How to Build the Union

Did you ever think of yourself as one of those leaders of public opinion that the newspapers are always talking about? Well, you are. The members expect you to have more information about the union than they do, and they respect your judgment. They will listen to your opinion on union affairs and departmental problems. They may not always agree, but much of what you say will sink in.

A steward has the opportunity to build support for the union because he can talk to the members and prospective members every day—at lunch, during coffee breaks or on the job. The union counts on you to carry the word about union activities to the members and to encourage them to take part.

Of course, you can't tell the members anything you don't know yourself. A steward should attend union meetings regularly. Make it a point to read The Public Employee magazine published by our International union. Our International and the AFL-CIO publish pamphlets that will help you. When you know what's going on in the union, spread the word around and educate your members.

Build a Team in Your Department

On department problems a steward has to have the backing of the workers he represents. When you are fighting a tough grievance, the whole-hearted support of all the workers will often convince management to see it your way. If a member is afraid to fight his grievance through, moral support from his fellow workers will give him courage. Let your members know what's going on in the department and get them to stick together.

Steward points out an important article in The Public Employee to a member. It is the duty of stewards to keep the members briefed on union affairs at all times.

Remember, you are a democratic leader, not a dictator. You'll soon find yourself without any support if you try to tell the members what to do. Tell them what you think and always explain why. You've got to have a mind of your own, but you've got to be ready to change it too.

A good way to keep your members united is to hold department meetings where you let them know what's cooking. Encourage them to express their opinions. Whenever a situation in the department affects a number of members, be sure to get them together and consult them. Otherwise you may find yourself out on a limb without any support.

Organize the Workers

Every time a new man comes to work in the department you are seeing a potential union member. Maybe he'll be an enthusiastic member; maybe he'll be a griper. You can get him off to a good start if you show a friendly interest as soon as he comes into the department. Introduce yourself and offer to help with any problems he has. Tell him about the union. He'll appreciate your welcome. If possible, have a dues deduction card and membership application card filled out and all ready for him to sign when you first approach him. He may appreciate efficiency.

Unless your union has a union shop contract, it's up to the steward to get a new worker to join the union. One of the most convincing arguments you can use is to explain the benefits the union has brought to the workers since your department was organized—wages, vacations, pensions, seniority protection. Tell him about the union's goals for the future. Don't get tough. Convince him he'll be better off by joining the union, then sign him up.

Where there's a union shop clause, the worker joins the union automatically after a certain number of days. Just joining doesn't necessarily make him a loyal member, however. If you want him to back up the union, you'd better sell him on the union too.

There has been so much newspaper propaganda against the union shop that some workers don't understand the reasons for it. The union's thinking on this question is simple. Everybody benefits from the union. They all get the raises negotiated by the union; all have rights to decent working conditions and the right to use the grievance procedure. Therefore, it's only fair for everyone to belong to the union and help pay for it.

All of us have heard the non-member say, "Why should I join the union and pay dues when I will get it (the benefits) anyhow?" By talking like this, a non-member condemns himself and the members to a weaker union and thus a sub-

Steward hands a new member a piece of literature explaining the function of the union as the member pins on union button. Stewards must make sure new members understand how union functions.

standard wage. A 50 percent union can win only 50 percent results. Here are a few other things he denies himself by refusing to join AFSCME:

1. Job protection through the grievance machinery.
2. The good feeling that comes from belonging to the group.
3. Association with millions of other workers in AFL-CIO in the fight for improved social legislation.
4. Above all, he denies himself a voice in concert with his fellow workers in determining what the working conditions and wages ought to be on the job.

Get Your Members to Meetings

Of course, members ought to support the union by attending union meetings and finding out the union's problems. The membership meeting is the place where the member has his say on union business. It's easier to sit at home and watch TV though, so the steward has to encourage his members to go to meetings.

You can remind them beforehand and tell them what's coming up. If they don't come, try talking about the meeting during lunch the next day so that they'll know they missed something. You may never get all the members in your department to all the meetings, but a steward's job is easier when there is a group of active members who know the score and can help him out. And, of course, you should attend every meeting yourself!

Steward and Business Agent John Milcarek post a meeting notice on the bulletin board. Making sure that members get to meetings is an important job for the steward.

Help Your Members

You can help your members—and strengthen the union at the same time—if you let them know what services and opportunities the union offers them off the job.

Perhaps your local has a credit union. Or a blood bank. Do you run picnics? Other recreational activities? Christmas parties for the kids? Card parties? Discount privileges? Make sure your members—and non-members, too—know about these activities.

Often workers need help on problems that come up outside of their job life. A member's claim for unemployment compensation may have been denied. Perhaps a woman can't find a day nursery that has a place for her child. These off-the-job problems are just as important to the worker as a grievance. Often they turn to the steward for help.

The AFL-CIO Community Services program trains union members to understand laws affecting workers and to know what community agencies do to help people with home and family problems. These people, called "union counsellors," know where to send members for advice. If you have union counsellors on your job, use them. Or better still, become one yourself. For information on how to become a union counsellor write to Leo Perlis, AFL-CIO Community Services Dept., 9 E. 40th St., New York 16, N. Y.

Support COPE

AFSCME members throughout the country have a right and a duty to support COPE, the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education. COPE is the political arm of the 15,000,000 workers affiliated with AFL-CIO through their International unions. COPE promotes election of liberal candidates to public office—federal, state and local. COPE advances legislation in the national Congress and in the state legislatures protecting the legal, economic and social gains of workers and fights politically forces that seek to restrict the rights of labor—rights that are both economic and political.

AFSCME demands for public employees and for this

Steward and member look over COPE literature as the steward goes about collecting member's dollar for the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education.

International union the same rights and privileges to political action that are enjoyed by union members in private industry. However, many AFSCME members vastly exaggerate various restrictions on political activity contained in civil service rules, ordinances and directives.

Leaders of COPE have agreed with President Zander to assign all money collected from AFSCME members for COPE to a special education activities fund. No money collected in AFSCME locals will be used to help finance candidates for political office. No members of AFSCME may be denied the right to contribute to COPE in any state, county, city or other subdivision in the U.S.A.

It matters materially to all unions, in fact to all working people, that liberal, labor-minded legislators, county supervisors, aldermen and congressmen be elected; it is a matter of vital concern to public employees. It is the politicians and appointed public officials in all governing bodies with whom final decision rests concerning wages, hours and conditions of public employees.

A public employee who says, "I cannot be active in politics because I am a public employee," slams in his own face the only door available to him through which he can obtain improvements, so much needed, in wages, hours and conditions.

Because of confusion on the issue of political action by public employees, AFSCME has not provided its share of funds to COPE, yet its members have greater need of favorable legislators than do most workers, especially those in private industry.

The officers and the executive board of AFSCME are extremely anxious for our members to find ways in which to promote the general political aims and education efforts of COPE.

For example: State, county and city election campaigns may be under way simultaneously. There are candidates for the state legislature, the county board and the city council. If city employees feel restrained in connection with the city council election, why can they not be active in the state and county elections? If county employees feel similarly restrained concerning the county board election, why can not they be active in the state and city elections? Similarly, state employees might help the campaign in the county and city of their residence.

The COPE committee of the local union and the steward in departments can work together to devise ways whereby AFSCME members may make a contribution to the work of COPE, especially in its educational effort, and still abide by rules that are the past practice in any particular subdivision of government.

Every steward should work with the COPE committee in his local in an all-out effort to get every member and his family registered to vote at the time the voting registration books are open. The high percentage of union members and their families who are not registered to vote is alarming.

COPE offers an annual citation to all locals which have achieved full registration of their members and checked them against the public records. These are in the form of plaques which can be framed and hung on the walls of meeting rooms. Rules for earning the citations can be obtained from COPE, 815 16th St., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

How to Settle Grievances

The steward's most important job is to settle grievances. If you are a new steward this may look like a tough job to you. Actually it doesn't take the mind of a legal wizard—a little common sense and the courage to stand up for what's right will do the trick.

No steward ever knew all the answers when he first took the job. An effective steward has learned the score by educating himself. Union meetings, union literature and day-to-day experience teach a steward how to do the job. Steward training programs can be established to assist stewards in understanding their jobs.

There are going to be grievances you don't know how to tackle. When this happens, don't be ashamed to ask for advice. Get the facts, then talk it over with the local officers. When you have collectively decided how to handle the grievance, go back and take it up with the supervisor yourself. If you don't settle your own grievances, you'll lose the respect of the members and the supervisors.

Know Your People and Your Department

Working rules, whether bargained with management and written into a contract or whether in civil service regulations or an ordinance, are definitions of what management can and cannot do. An employee grievance is a complaint that management has violated one or more of these rules.

The steward who does not know these rules cannot advise a member whether he has a grievance. He is like a navigator without a compass. Every sentence in a written working agreement was put in there either by management or the union in order to define the rights and duties of employees. You should familiarize yourself in detail with these sentences, but it is not necessary to memorize the working rules. However, you must know where to look for the provisions that apply to any particular grievance.

When you have studied the written rules (from your contract, civil service rules, ordinances, etc.), talk with others about it. Interpretation of the intent of a clause in the rules is often difficult. Successful conclusion of a grievance often depends upon the interpretation you place on the rule or clause and upon your ability to persuade the supervisor that yours is the right interpretation.

A meeting of stewards at Council 33 headquarters in Philadelphia gets a briefing on union policy from Business Agent John Miller. Such meetings keep stewards up to date on union business.

Many local unions conduct regular meetings of the stewards, generally with a chief steward as chairman. The purpose of these meetings may be to develop policy in connection with interpretation of the working rules or to compare notes on grievances from one department to another. You may interpret a rule one way in connection with a member's grievance while others may feel differently about it. The steward body could come to agreement on such a difference of opinion.

There is no substitute for a thorough working knowledge of the working rules although memorizing them is not necessary. What is important is that you know where to find out what you need to know. The local union's files should be kept up to date on past grievances and made available at all times.

Look Over Your Department

You should know the jobs in the department, also what rates of pay go with them. If there is any doubt concerning a job assignment of any individual, find out what is was and the salary attached to it. Be sure you have a copy of the employment list. The date of employment for each employee will establish his seniority. From such a list you can go into action quickly on a grievance.

You can pick up some of this information just by keeping your eyes open as you walk around the department. The employer should provide you with copies of salary and seniority lists. The Research Department at our International headquarters has useful information on rates, earnings, and job classifications. It can also supply you with information on how grievance procedures are handled by other locals.

Know Your People

Any experienced steward can tell you that you have to know the people you represent. Some people will give you the full story on a grievance; others won't. Some workers have a good, steady work record that you can use as an argument when talking to supervisors; others don't. Some workers have home problems that affect their work. If you get to know the people you represent, you can take these differences into account.

What is a Grievance?

Many workers have so much faith in their steward that they bring him all their problems. Every request for help should be handled sympathetically. But you must learn to tell the difference between a legitimate grievance that you can take up with the supervisor and a complaint for which management is not responsible. You can usually decide whether a complaint is a genuine grievance by asking yourself two questions:

1. Did management violate the agreed working rules?

   If the answer is "yes," there is a grievance for certain.

Steward makes sure that member who has come to him with a grievance really has one by checking the working rules. Taking up a "bum beef" does the member no good and hurts the union.

2. Has management treated the member unfairly?

If the answer to this question is "yes," it is probable that there is a grievance. Sometimes this type of grievance is hard to win because of a technicality. In any event, when a member's complaint is lost on technical grounds (the wording of the rules), make a note of it so that rules may be changed during the next bargaining session with management.

You will usually find that a complaint is a real grievance if you will study all of the rules (contract, civil service, etc.). There may be a clause dealing with this particular problem. Beware of making a snap judgment; many a just grievance has been lost because it was not even identified.

Most often a complaint will lodge in the area where neither "yes" nor a "no" can be applied. Suppose the working rules specify that employees must be prepared to work a "reasonable" amount of overtime in an "emergency." Settlement of the grievance hinges around definition of "reasonable" and "emergency." Everything depends, in such a case, on the skill with which the grievance facts are assembled and presented and upon any record in the local union office bearing on past decisions in which "reasonable" and "emergency" have been defined. After all, if the employees feel they have been treated unfairly, their word on this is as good as management's.

Whenever there's a doubt in your mind, take the complaint up with the supervisor. Sometimes you won't know whether it's a grievance until you have obtained further facts from him. A steward is expected to speak for the members and fight for their point of view. You aren't going to win every grievance, but it's up to you to try to get them a square deal.

Don't Take up Phony Grievances

If you are sure the complaint is not a grievance, don't take it up.

A grievance is a complaint against management. So it's not a grievance if two members have a purely personal disagreement. If Jane and Mary can't agree whether the window should be open or shut—that is not a grievance. Be sure that management is responsible for the complaint before you take up any grievance.

A member may think he has a grievance because he does not understand the rules. Perhaps he says he is entitled to vacation pay, for example, when careful reading of the rules shows he has not worked long enough.

Personal disagreements and mistakes in reading or interpreting the rules are not grievances. Don't go to the supervisor with them. You may build up false hope in the employee involved, and the supervisor may decide you do not know what you are doing.

How to Prepare Your Case

When a member comes to you with a complaint, the first thing to do is to get all the facts. Then you can decide whether it's a grievance or not.

Steward takes down all of the facts from the aggrieved members in the course of writing up his grievance report in duplicate. Written reports provide the union with a record of grievances.

The first place to look for facts is from the member himself. Listen to his story patiently—with both ears. Then pin him down with specific questions. Don't be satisfied with glib statements like, "The supervisor picks on me," or "They're giving us too much work." Ask, how often? What dates? How many minutes a day? Have you got proof?

Take notes as you go along. Don't go to management without having all the facts clearly before you.

Sometimes a worker takes it for granted that you understand his job and forgets to give you vital facts. Sometimes he skips the part of the story that might weaken his case. If you are going to win his case, you've got to ask the probing questions that will give you all the facts he knows.

Get ALL The Facts

All the pleading in the world will not convince supervisors like a few hard, cold facts. Once you have heard what the member has to say you've got some of the facts. But you've got to check further.

Perhaps you should compare the job with the classification. Sometimes you'll want to talk to other members—or other shifts—to find out if they are having the same trouble. If the grievance involves seniority, check the seniority list. On a rate grievance you may have to get rates in other departments.

A grievance is like a detective story—you must sift all the evidence before you know who did what.

Study the working rules carefully. Read over the entire section that deals with this type of grievance. There may be a little "if," "and," or "but" in there that will affect your case.

Don't Try to be a Hero

Don't promise the member the moon. If it looks like a legitimate grievance tell him you'll do your best to settle it. But promises like "We're sure to win" may build him up to a big letdown.

On the other hand, you may decide it's not a grievance when you've looked into all the facts. You can't take it up, and you must tell the member so.

This is a time for tact and diplomacy, because the member is bound to be disappointed. Be sure to explain just why his complaint is not a grievance. Show him the rule itself. If you give him the brush-off, he will lose faith in the union.

When you can't convince the member that it's not a grievance, tell him he can talk to the union officers about it. You may be wrong, after all, and it is his democratic right to have a further hearing.

Take the Member With You

A good many unions advise their stewards that whenever possible you should take the member with you to the supervisor. When the aggrieved member is there he knows that you put up a good fight for him, and you build his confidence in the union. He cannot then accuse you of selling him out.

A member may damage his case before a supervisor if you don't prepare him beforehand. Tell him just how you are going to present the case and how the rule applies to it. This gives him assurance that you know what you are doing. If he is angry, point out that nasty cracks at supervisors will hurt his chances of winning.

Stop and Think

Before you see the supervisor, stop and think. Ask yourself:

1. Have I obtained all the facts from the employee?
2. Do I have all the other information I need?
3. Have I checked the working rules?
4. Have I explained the case to the member?

Even if the rules do not require you to fill out a written grievance at this step it's a good idea to write down the main facts of the grievance. Then jot down the questions you want to ask the supervisor and the ideas you want to get across to him. Writing out the grievance will make it clearer in your own mind. Your notes will keep you from forgetting important points when you see the supervisor.

Steward and aggrieved member take up the grievance with the supervisor as the first step of the grievance procedure. In addition to oral argument, steward presents written grievance report.

How to Convince the Supervisor

What's your frame of mind? Calm, cool and collected? Sure of the facts? Then you are ready to visit the supervisor.

Under a good grievance procedure the supervisor and the steward share the responsibility for settling grievances. The two of you are going to have to discuss and settle a lot of knotty problems during the time you are the steward. It helps if you can establish a friendly, but businesslike relationship right at the beginning.

In the grievance procedure the supervisor and the steward are equals. He has the backing of management and you have the backing of the union. When you take up a grievance you are not asking the supervisor for favors. There's no need to bow and scrape. If he is unreasonable you can always push the grievance on up to the next step in the grievance procedure.

On the other hand, you aren't going to get much cooperation if you approach supervisors with a big chip on your shoulder. Often the supervisor can settle grievances in your favor if he feels like it. He won't feel like it if you tell him off every time you go near him.

The supervisor may have information about a grievance that you don't have, no matter how carefully you collected the facts. So ask him calmly just why this grievance happened. Then listen to his answer. Even when you don't agree with his point of view it's good psychology to let him talk and get it off his chest.

When you present your case, give him the facts and tell him how the union wants this grievance settled. If he gives you an argument, don't retreat—stick to your guns and show him that you are right.

IF . . . He Tries to Sidetrack You

Supervisors may try to sidetrack you by leading the discussion off onto some other issue. For example, if you have a grievance involving a member who has been absent several times, the supervisor might finagle you into a discussion of the problems of absenteeism in the department. Or when you are asking a wage raise for a woman member he may bring up the question whether women should work outside the home.

It's best to let him talk himself out. But don't be misled. This is not the point. When he has finished bring him back to the facts of the individual grievance.

IF . . . He Wants to Trade

If the supervisor wants to trade grievances, you take one, he'll take one—tell him no. Trading grievances is not fair to the members involved. Settle each grievance on the justice of the case.

IF . . . He Makes You Mad

When the supervisor makes you mad, control your temper. Few people can think straight when they are angry.

Don't make silly threats. In most cases you are bluffing when you tell a supervisor the members will walk out. Most rules do not permit strikes over grievances, and in any case the grievance has to go through further steps. Grievances must be settled by negotiation and arbitration.

IF . . . The Supervisor Stalls

Ask the supervisor to give you an answer on a grievance right away. This may be impossible. The supervisor may say that he wants to think it over. Many times he has to check with higher management. Delay may be justified, or it may be just a stall.

If the supervisor won't make a decision right away, you should try to set a definite time for the answer. Tell him you'll be in tomorrow, or next Wednesday, or some definite date, to get his decision. But make it soon. The aggrieved member is waiting for an answer.

IF . . . You Win Your Point

Once the supervisor agrees with you on a grievance, don't

After he has made his point, steward loses no time in leaving the supervisor and taking the aggrieved member with him. There's no use belaboring a case after point has been made.

continue to hash it over. It's important to know when to stop talking.

And when you learn that you have won the grievance be sure to tell the member about it. He is waiting anxiously to know how it came out, so go tell him immediately.

IF . . . You Can't Settle

When the supervisor doesn't settle a grievance to your satisfaction, take the case to the next step in the grievance procedure right away. Tell the supervisor you are going to do this.

After the grievance has been taken to the second step, there may be quite a delay before the grievance is finally settled. The member may come to the conclusion that the union has forgotten his case. It's up to the steward to check with the chief steward or local officer from time to time and keep the member informed about union action at higher steps in the grievance procedure.

How to Write Up Grievances

Write the facts of the grievance. This provides the union with a written record of the facts of the grievance and its settlement. Most procedures require the steward to write out a grievance form before he sees the supervisor; sometimes the grievance is written in cases where the supervisor won't settle and you are sending the grievance to the next step. It is far better to write the facts at once.

When you write out a grievance you are putting the facts down while they are still fresh in your mind. Your memory isn't perfect; what's written down doesn't change. The facts on the grievance form are used by other union representatives at higher steps of the grievance procedure. That is why it is important for grievances to be written clearly and accurately. You may want to refer back to a past grievance settlement that you can't quite remember.

What to Put on the Grievance Form

Take a look at the sample grievance form on the next page. (This form is available in quantity from the International union office.)

Be sure and fill out all parts of the grievance form in detail after you have checked the facts. You should insist that the member back up his complaint by signing the grievance form.

You must tell what the grievance is about and what you want management to do. This requires careful thought. You must put down the essential facts without arguing the entire case. To give you an idea how to write up this part of the grievance form, look over the following examples:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY & MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES

AFL-CIO

Grievance Blank

Local Name and Number _____ Date _____

Employee's Name _____

Date of Membership in Union _____

Dues paid up to date _____

Present working title _____

Statement of grievance by member: _____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

_____

Signature of Member _____

Action taken _____

_____

Result _____

_____

_____

F-29A

EXAMPLE:

Nature of Grievance: Seniority violation of civil service.

Mary Barton, with seniority 3-1-57 was laid off July 1, 1957, in accordance with civil service rules. Alice Jones, with seniority 4-15-57, retained her position although least senior in this classification. Both are clerk-typists I and receive the same pay ($1.35).

Grievance based on Civil Service Rule XII, Article 3.

Adjustment Desired: The union requests that Mary Barton be returned to work with pay retroactive to July 1.

EXAMPLE:

Nature of Grievance: Bidding on preferred shift.

James Williams, with seniority 4-1-50, is entitled to the job of operator on the day shift. He bid for transfer from the swing shift 6-1-57 when a vacancy occurred. Joseph Bishop, with seniority 7-1-52, an operator on the graveyard shift, was given the day shift position 6-15-57.

Grievance based on Contract Article VI, Section 1, Paragraphs 1 and 2.

Adjustment Desired: James Williams should be given a day shift position immediately in his classification as operator.

These examples are brief. They give the facts. They ask definite settlement, with back pay when necessary. Don't fill up the grievance form with your arguments. Save them for the meeting with the supervisor.

A completed grievance form should have the following information on it:

1. Who was the worker involved? Job? Shift?
2. What is the grievance about? Transfer? Discrimination? Discharge?
3. When did it happen? Put down the day the grievance began, not just the day you write it out.
4. What clause—or clauses—of the contract or working rules were violated?
5. What does the union want done about it? Be definite. Don't forget to ask for back pay if you want it.

If you use this list to check your own grievances—and if you are careful to be very accurate—you'll soon get the hang of writing grievances correctly.

Higher Steps in the Grievance Procedure

Quick settlement of a grievance at the first step, between the supervisor and the steward, is most desirable. Sometimes, however, the supervisor and steward cannot agree. In such a case, the grievance is then taken to the next step. The procedure will vary from state to state, from city to city and from county to county, but they will be outlined in your own working rules.

Whatever the number of steps in your grievance procedure, the principle will be the same. At each step higher officials of management and the union meet to bring their experience and authority in an effort to settle the dispute. A desirable procedure is as follows:

1. Employee and steward go to the supervisor.
2. Union committee takes up the grievance with personnel director or department head.
3. Union committee and union representative meet with the department director.
4. Union committee and union representative meet with the top management (Civil Service Commission, county board, city board of aldermen).
5. Arbitration.

Steward (left) and Business Agent Ronald Smith (right) take up a grievance with the top officials of Philadelphia General Hospital after it has failed to be resolved at the supervisory level.

Most agreements on grievance procedure set a time table to avoid delay. Occasionally, management will seek to "wear out" a grievance by stalling tactics. A time table prevents this. In the time table, provisions are written permitting the union to take the grievance up a step if a reply is not given within a certain number of days. Similarly, the union must notify management within a certain time if it intends to take a grievance to the next step. You should be familiar with the time table.

What is Arbitration?

While many methods are employed to provide final settlement of grievances, they all boil down to the same principle—arbitration. An outside expert, someone familiar with grievance disputes but who is connected neither with management nor the union, is called in to hear both sides of the dispute.

Should the union be dissatisfied with the outcome of a grievance after its meeting with top management, it may appeal for arbitration and an arbitrator or an arbitration panel is called into being. Many civil service systems maintain arbitration boards, whose decisions on grievances usually are final and binding. In cases where local unions and city councils or county boards, or in some cases, states, have bargained a working agreement or a mutually agreed-upon personnel policy, arbitration as a final and binding way of settling grievances is included.

The steward must realize that no matter what method is used for finally settling the grievance, winning it will depend upon the accuracy of his original investigation and the care with which he recorded the facts. A union representative cannot make a successful presentation of the union's case if the original investigation by the steward was inadequate. Many experienced arbitrators will tell you that unions often lose cases, not because their cause is not a good one, but because they do not have the facts assembled carefully enough.

It should be borne in mind that arbitration is still a relatively new procedure in the public service. Many public administrators still claim that they cannot delegate their constitutional authority to a third party, and therefore refuse to grant the union an arbitration clause. In industry, however, arbitration clauses are included in almost all major contracts. Unions in industry voluntarily give up their right to strike over grievances in return for a voluntary arbitration clause.

Voluntary arbitration which is available to the union if it is not satisfied with management's decision on a grievance must not be confused with compulsory arbitration. Voluntary arbitration procedures are bargained between management and the union to deal strictly with interpretation of existing working rules; compulsory arbitration procedures are legislated and all unsettled differences between management and the union must be brought to arbitration. This could include the substance of the working rules, not alone interpretation.

Compulsory arbitration discourages collective bargaining because management may refuse to bargain on anything and force the union to accept an arbitrator's idea of what wages, hours and working conditions should be. Don't be misled by a management offer of arbitration if he has compulsory arbitration in mind.

Obtaining voluntary arbitration procedures for final settlement of grievances, coming as a result of collective bargaining with management, is one of the major goals of our union. Many locals and councils are currently increasing the pressure on management for the inclusion of arbitration clauses in contracts or working rules.

In Philadelphia, Pa., this is the next to the top step in the grievance procedure. It follows the department head step. From left around the table are Business Agent John Miller; Eli Roc, the city's labor relations consultant; Foster B. Roser, city director of personnel; Louis Wilderman, union attorney; Philip Richmond, union attorney; and Business Agents Charles Santore, Michael Devlin and Robert Willard.

Maintain the Working Rules

Sometimes you will discover a violation of the agreed rules even though the member has not come to you with a complaint. And sometimes the member doesn't want to file a grievance when you point it out to him.

The steward can't ignore these cases. Your job is to see that management lives up to the rules every day in every case. If the employer violates working rules and gets away with it on one occasion, he may try it again some other time. The member who refuses to put in a grievance is not being fair to his fellow members.

When a rule has been violated by management but the member will not back you in processing a grievance, you should talk over the problem with your local officers. If you complain to the supervisor first yourself, you may be tipping your hand to him and at the same time you may weaken your chances of convincing the member to go ahead with the grievance.

Don't Encourage Members to Take up Grievances Alone

A steward should encourage members who have grievances to come directly to him, not the supervisor. A member who does not know the rules thoroughly may let the supervisor talk him out of a just grievance. Or he may agree to a settlement that weakens the agreement and hurts others or sets a bad precedent.

Some employers encourage members to ignore their stewards because they hope to weaken the union. This kind of management thinks that if an employee can settle his grievance directly with the supervisor he will conclude that he doesn't need a union at all.

Most public administrators try to insist upon a procedure that permits employees to talk with supervisors about grievances individually. Usually employees are afraid to do this so they swallow their grievances. The non-member who tries to settle his grievance individually will undermine conditions established by the union membership. The higher the degree of organization of the employees into the union, the less likelihood there will be of individual non-members settling their grievances below standards.

Members who try to "go it alone" in taking up grievances with their superiors get the cold shoulder from the bosses. Without help from union they just can't make arguments stick.

Safety and Accidents

Look around your department for safety hazards. Are the floors slippery? Are the washrooms insanitary? If there are machines, are they guarded? Are electrical appliances safely grounded? Poor safety conditions mean that someday a fellow worker will be injured, his wages lost.

Safety is a serious problem in the public services. While private industry has only five man-days lost per million man-hours worked, public service loses 16 man-days for each million man-hours worked.

State laws on safety and health should be rigidly enforced. When you have looked around your department and see a safety hazard, report it immediately to management.

Because of the seriousness of the accident rate in the public service, the International Executive Board decided during its meeting in November, 1957, in Washington, D. C., to undertake a safety program with out locals and councils. The assistance of the National Safety Council and the U. S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Standards have been offered to our union for development of this program.

If a Worker is Injured

When a worker is injured while he is on the job he is entitled to benefits under a state law called the Workman's Compensation Act. Some diseases caused by job conditions are also covered. Unfortunately, members often don't get all the benefits they are entitled to unless a union representative can advise them on their rights.

In most states the workmen's compensation law is full of loopholes and legal technicalities. Some employers and insurance companies take advantage of this to pay as few benefits as possible. Many employees don't understand the law and let them get away with it.

A safety hazard on the job is pointed out to steward by a member. Now it is the steward's job to get something done about that cracked ladder that could break under a worker's weight.

That's where you come in. Many local unions now have union counsellors, a compensation committee, or some other expert to advise injured members. But these services won't do the job unless the steward tells members about them.

Since every state has its own workmen's compensation law, the benefits are different in each state. In general the laws provide a low weekly cash payment to a worker injured on the job for part of the time he is out of work. They also provide for payment of at least part of his medical expenses.

If a worker is killed, the laws set death benefits in most cases. If he loses a finger, a leg, or some other part of his body, the laws set up a sum of money in compensation. All these benefits are too low to make up to the worker the wages that he has lost.

Whenever there is an accident in the department the steward should advise the injured member to follow these three rules:

1. Report the accident to the employer immediately, no matter how trivial it seems.
2. Don't sign any papers you don't understand. Don't be rushed.
3. See the union for assistance as soon as possible.

For many years your International officers and staff have joined with leaders of unions in private industry in legislative drives to improve workmen's compensation legislation. Inclusion of public employees under workmen's compensation is still far from what it should be, so the fight continues. This is the situation of the public employee with respect to coverage under workmen's compensation:

1. Thirty-eight states cover most public employees. Administrative officers and elected officials are exempted.
2. Seven states cover public employees only in hazardous occupations. These are Maryland, Montana, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, Washington and Wyoming.
3. Four states cover only special groups. These states are Texas, Kansas, Arkansas and Missouri.
4. One state, Alabama, provides no coverage at all for public employees.

Know Labor Laws

The right to organize unions is generally accepted throughout the public services, but there are often exceptions:

Some states deny unionism to state police; some cities deny the right of organization to police officers and firemen. Officials sometimes take reprisals against an individual employee for joining a union and advocating unionism to his fellow employees.

Despite these exceptional circumstances, most public employers assure their employees that they have a right to form a union without interference or intimidation.

The National Labor Relations Act, first known in 1935 as the Wagner Act in honor of the late Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, does not apply to the problems of employees of states, counties, cities and other local political subdivisions.

The International Executive Board at its meeting in Washington, D. C., in November, 1957, decided to undertake a militant campaign in many states to strengthen union-management relations in the public services.

The Board declared that public employees should and must have the same collective bargaining rights as workers in industry. The Board instructed the International officers and staff to press for legislation in a number of states granting public employees the right to genuine recognition and collective bargaining.

For the leaders of AFSCME and for the members of the 50 states, more than 3,000 counties and innumerable cities, establishment of the legal rights of members presents a varied and complex problem.

You should be aware of any law or ordinance in the particular situation affecting the rights of employees to have their union. Laws or ordinances appear in a number of places affecting the right to organization: State legislative enactments on labor relations may contain a sentence referring to public employees, usually exempting them from rights afforded to employees of private business; county ordinances may affect county employees; and in cities there may be a portion of the city charter itself as well as ordinances devoted to the subject of employee rights to organization.

The Right of the Union to Function as a Union

Even though the right to organize a union is assured, definition of how it may function may present the union with severe limitations. For example:

The best place to win settlement of a grievance is between the steward and the member on one hand and the immediate supervisor on the other. The principle here is that justice delayed (by lengthy procedures for a grievance) is often justice denied. Yet in some states, counties and cities where the right to organize a union is solidly assured, stewards are denied the right to represent a member. The rules often state that the individual worker must present his grievance alone to the immediate supervisor for settlement. Only if the individual is dissatisfied with the supervisor's decision may he then be represented by the union at a higher level.

Experience clearly shows that most employees are fearful of taking a grievance to the supervisors by themselves. The result is that they "swallow" their grievances and sometimes quit in disgust. High turnover of employees in public service can often be traced to the large backlog of unsettled grievances.

AFSCME and its officers are not satisfied at all with having a "right" to organize the union without also having the right to have it function as a union. In the effort to win full rights to unionism, the persistence of the stewards in trying to win quick and just settlement of the employee's grievance is of crucial importance.

Employees are able to see and understand an activity which results in improving working conditions and seeing this are attracted to the union. Organization of employees into union membership may come about as a result of effective handling of a grievance far more quickly than from any other more complex activity of the union.

The more you know about how to take up a grievance and the more you are aware of the various legal conditions in your situation affecting the work of the union, the more effective your work will be. With improved grievance procedure, the whole union gains in membership and strength, and the work of the public service will be improved and employees will have a more satisfying work experience.

The Fair Labor Standards Act

This federal law sets a $1 minimum hourly wage and provides that all time worked over 40 hours in a week shall be paid at the rate of time and one half. This good law does not apply to employees of state and local governments, only to workers employed in industries in interstate commerce. Many employees in the public services find jobs there after they have worked in industry, and often they question why laws that covered them before do not cover them in a public employee job. The U. S. Congress may not legislate on matters strictly within the jurisdiction of a state government. Unless the union is able to bargain for time and one-half for overtime, or persuade its state legislature to pass such a law, the usual rule is straight time payment for overtime. In some cases, compensatory time off is the rule.

Social Security Act

This law sets up a national insurance system, financed by contributions from workers and employers, which provides monthly payments in the event of old age or death. The law also provides for unemployment compensation but allows the individual states to decide how it shall be financed and what benefits will be paid.

Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance now protects most workers and self-employed persons in the U.S.A. There are three times when a steward should advise a worker or family to consult the local social security office (to find the address, look up Social Security Administration under U. S. Government in your telephone book):

Retired members in Philadelphia are entertained at a retirement dinner which was held in their honor by District Council 33. Union won the retirement plan from the city.

1. Retirement Age. A male or female worker who has paid into the fund for the required number of quarters is entitled to monthly Old Age and Survivors Insurance benefits at age 65 unless he or she earns more than $1,200 in a year and more than $80 in any month during the year. A female worker may retire at age 62 and receive 80 percent of the full benefit. Wives of retired workers may receive at age 62, 75 percent of the amount payable at age 65.

2. Death. Survivors' benefits are paid to the family of the worker who dies. Monthly payments go to widows with children under 18, to each child under 18, to widows 62 or older and in some cases dependent parents and widowers. For example: A dependent mother of an insured worker who dies leaving no widow, widower or child. The family may also be entitled to a lump sum for burial expenses. These benefits are insurance. A worker does not get them unless he has paid into the social security fund, and the amount he or his family gets depends roughly on his average monthly wage.

3. Disability. Workers who are totally and permanently disabled are entitled to full social security benefits after age 50. This 1956 amendment passed by the 84th Congress represents a new and important form of coverage. It was passed only after strong objections by those forces that have opposed social security legislation from its beginning.

Labor thinks that old age, survivors and disability benefits are too low. A retired worker can now receive from $30 to $108.50 a month. Even this low figure has been reached only because AFL-CIO and other liberal groups have kept up a steady fight in Congress for improvements.

What's more, there is still no social security protection for workers who are sick, although the purpose of the law is to protect a worker's standard of living when income drops through no fault of his own.

Only a few states provide cash sickness benefits for the worker who is ill and cannot work for a time. AFL-CIO has been urging Congress to expand social security to provide workers with insurance benefits, not charity, in times of sickness.

AFSCME joins with all other AFL-CIO unions to press vigorously in the Federal Congress as well as state legislatures for sickness compensation on the same basis as unemployment compensation. Inclusion of public employees in Old Age and Survivors Insurance under the Social Security Act was a major victory of our International union. AFSCME will continue to advocate improvement in unemployment compensation and new laws providing sickness compensation.

Workmen's Compensation

These are the state laws which provide benefits and medical care for workers injured on the job or ill with an occupational disease. But they don't help the worker enough.

When these laws were first passed they provided weekly benefits that were about two-thirds of the average weekly wage. But the laws have not been changed to keep up with the rise in wages and cost of living. The maximum weekly payment in any state is $40. Employers fight any change because it would cost them more money. It seems that federal legislation is needed to raise the level of payments and eliminate unfair practices that deprive workers of their just compensation.

Unemployment Compensation

The 1937 Social Security Act forced the states to provide unemployment benefits. However, the amount of unemployment compensation and the number of weeks you can get it vary from state to state. Each state also sets up certain requirements, often unfair, which a worker must meet in order to get benefits. Since the laws are complicated and tricky, a steward who understands his state law can be of great help to the members. (Get explanations of your own state law from the state employment office.)

The most money that an unemployed worker can receive is $25 to $45 a week, depending on the state. This is the maximum for one person, but some states also pay small additional benefits for dependents.

Obviously, these benefits are not enough. The number of weeks they are paid is too short. Labor is trying to improve state laws and also to convince Congress to pass a federal law setting minimum standards on benefits that the states must live up to.

"Right-to-Work" Laws

There are now 18 states that have passed laws outlawing the union shop, the closed shop or a maintenance-of-membership clause in a union contract. Many of these same laws restrict other union security measures, such as the checkoff of union dues and limit picketing activity.

To make these laws sound appealing the employer groups

This is the final step to which a grievance can travel in the city of Philadelphia—up to the mayor, managing director and the personnel director. From left, around the table are Personnel Director Foster Roser, City Managing Director Donald Wagner, Mayor Richardson Dillworth, Council 33 President William J. McEntee, and Business Agents John Miller and Robert Willard.

behind them call them "right-to-work" laws. This is a phony slogan. A law like this does not guarantee a person a job. All it guarantees is the right to work next to a man who takes all the benefits you and the union fight for, but which he never pays for in the form of union dues.

Recognizing that "free-riders" weaken the union, business groups like the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers are pushing "right-to-work" laws in the state legislatures.

Steward's Dictionary

Arbitration—This is a way of finally settling a grievance. By agreement, a third person, someone not connected either with management or the union, is called in to hear the facts. His decision is binding on both parties.

Bargaining Unit—A group of employees who bargain collectively with their employer. Custom has designated both the industrial type and the craft type of bargaining unit to be appropriate and federal law recognizes both. AFSCME is an industrial union because it takes into membership all public employees in a given jurisdiction and bargains for them. Exclusive bargaining means that one union is recognized as the sole collective bargaining representative for all the workers in the agreed-upon jurisdiction.

Checkoff—Dues deduction by the employer is sometimes called checkoff. The deduction is made periodically from each member's paycheck and the total sent to the union.

Closed Shop—A plant employing only union members. The closed shop is illegal in industries in interstate commerce. It is also illegal in many public employee jurisdictions.

Collective Bargaining—The process of working out a contract or settling grievances between management and employees, with one agency (the union) speaking for all the workers in the bargaining unit.

Company Union—A union dominated by the employer. Such an organization is illegal under federal laws in industries in interstate commerce. In the public services, however, there are many so-called company unions, usually called "associations." (Exception is the Wisconsin State Employee Association which is affiliated with AFSCME.)

Associations are usually dominated by managerial personnel in state and local governments and meet the definition as company unions.

Conciliation or Mediation—A number of states provide a mediation and conciliation service in their departments of labor, and its services are available to our union. When a dispute occurs during bargaining that cannot be settled, either management or the union may call for the services of the mediator. The mediator attempts to bring the parties together and, by "seeing both sides," to provide a new solution acceptable to both parties. State mediators cannot order acceptance of a solution but can only persuade.

Discrimination—Unequal treatment of workers for reasons of race, creed, color or national origin or some other reason not connected with work performance.

Free-Rider—(Free-Loader) An employee who accepts benefits won by the union but who refuses to join the union.

Fringe Benefit—All money benefits in the agreement defining conditions except wages—insurance, health and welfare, medical programs, holidays, vacations and sick leave, for example.

Improvement Factor—An automatic annual increase in pay based on the assumption that increased productivity has brought greater efficiency. New methods and new machines make it possible for each individual worker to produce more.

Local Government—Local government includes all political subdivisions established under a state constitution. These include cities (municipal governments), counties, townships, villages, school districts and special authorities—transit, bridge, sanitary, water, irrigation, improvement and many others.

Maintenance of Membership—Agreement with management that any worker who voluntarily joins the union must remain a member in good standing as a condition of employment.

Open Shop—A place where union membership is not required as a condition of securing or retaining employment.

Scab Shop—A place where the union of employees is not recognized at all by the employers.

Seniority—A worker's length of service with an employer. Seniority applies to promotions, layoffs, recalls, transfers. In case of layoff, the seniority clause usually means that the last person employed is first to be laid off.

Severance Pay—A lump sum payment by the employer to an employee who is laid off permanently through no fault of his own.

Union Security—Agreement with the employer that membership in the union is a condition of employment. There are several ways of stating a union security measure—union shop, modified union shop, maintenance of membership.

Union Shop—A place in which every worker benefitting by collective bargaining must become and remain a member of the union.

A Message

From The President

To Stewards and Members of Committees:

Our local unions are successful to the extent that our members are informed and participate actively in making decisions and taking actions to win their goals.

Our stewards in departments of state and local governments throughout the country are very important members because they represent their fellow employees before management, they keep our members informed of what is going on in the union, and they build membership by recruiting employees into the union.

We will win true collective bargaining with the public employer mainly, and perhaps only, with the active assistance of our stewards. This manual was designed to help our stewards to better perform their most important jobs. We at International headquarters hope this manual will help you in this work.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Arnold S. Zander

Arnold S. Zander, President

American Federation of STATE, COUNTY and MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES

1 PRINTED IN USA

AFL-CIO

The Public Employee

April 1959

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION — AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES—AFL-CIO

What a Public Employees Union Means

(A Message to Our Local Unions)

The field of unionism among state, county and municipal employees is highly complex. Employees work for more than 100,000 different employers, under a patchwork of differing conditions.

Only one union has the know-how to pull together the diverse strands. Only one union can close the gap between public and private employment conditions.

That union, of course, is AFSCME—the union for public employees.

Ours is the union which has worked to replace political patronage by merit systems. We have helped to bring clean government to scores of cities and counties. We have won civil service, social security and retirement benefits for thousands of public employees. AFSCME is making collective bargaining an accepted practice in the public service.

There is sheer logic in the fact of one union for state and local government employees, just as it is logical for there to be one union for steelworkers, one union for newspapermen, one union for teachers and one for fire fighters.

The logic is so overwhelming that time is on our side. Others may try to enter this field of organization. They will come and they will go. But AFSCME will continue in its position as the union for state, county, municipal and civic employees.

That is why each local union should strengthen its ranks today and strive for the 100 percent unionism that will bring greater benefits to our members.

Yes, time is on our side, but we must not wait idly. We must build our union now. Every member an organizer!

Arnold R. Zander

The Public Employee

Official Publication of

The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees
Affiliated with The American Federation of Labor—Congress of Industrial Organizations

Arnold S. Zander.....Editor and Manager

Tom Moore McBride.....Managing Editor

Published monthly except August, by The American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFL-CIO) at 810 Rhode Island Ave., N. E., Washington 18, D. C. Address all correspondence for publication to 815 Mt. Vernon Pl., N. W., Washington 1, D. C. Subscription rate: $2 a year. Second class postage paid at Washington, D. C.

POSTMASTER: Please return Form 3579 to Public Employee, 815 Mount Vernon Pl., N. W., Washington 1, D. C.

Volume 24 | April, 1959 | Number 4

Directory of Officers and Staff

Federation Officers

Arnold S. Zander.....International President
Gordon W. Chapman .....International Secretary-Treasurer

Vice Presidents

John Boer, 22 Elk St., New York 7, N. Y.
Louie H. Brauer, 2215 Lucas Ave., Pueblo, Colo.
Al Church, 401 E. 32nd St., Hibbing, Minn.
Steve Clark, 345 Veith Ave., Route 1, Madison 4, Wis.
Neville B. Crippen, 2512 McCarver, Tacoma, Wash.
Otto Hahn, 227 E Street, San Diego 1, Calif.
Leon G. Hay, Rm. 100, County Adm. Bldg., Atlanta 3, Ga.
William J. McEntee, 1520 Parrish St., Philadelphia 30, Pa.
Henry G. Ostholthoff, 747 Sedam St., Cincinnati 4, Ohio
Ambrose Raleigh, 174 Bellevue Ave., Providence, R. I.
George Summers, 352 W. Crescent St., Marquette, Mich.

Regional Directors

Don H. Burns, 313 West 11th St., Willmar, Minn.
Edward P. Dailey, 239 Wychwood Drive, Youngstown, Ohio
Leo Kramer, 30 Pemberton Square, Boston 8, Mass.
James L. McCormack, 1119 Santa Barbara Court, Sacramento 16, Calif.
Adrian L. Mitten, 1704½ Beale Ave., Lansing 10, Mich.
W. A. Rowe, 1228 15th St., Augusta, Ga.
Daniel J. Scannell, 2847 West 8th St., Los Angeles 5, Calif.
Jerry Wurf, 22 Elk St., New York 7, N. Y.

Leo Kramer Named Assistant To President; Lima Moves Up

Two important changes in staff in the New England region have been made—Regional Director Leo Kramer has been transferred to Washington as an administrative assistant to President Zander and Assistant Regional Director George Lima has been made acting regional director.

Brother Lima is well qualified to fill the gap created by Kramer's new assignment, for he directed the region competently while Leo spent a year in Great Britain studying the public employee union movement under a Fulbright grant.

Brother Lima also has studied extensively in the labor field. In 1956 he was granted a scholarship by Harvard University to study labor relations.

Coincidentally, Brother Kramer's shift to Washington on March 30 came on the eighth anniversary of his appointment as New England regional director.

P.E. Highlights

News and Features

More Recognition 3
AFL-CIO Campaign 4
To Keep City Brotherly 6
More Waterfront Jobs 7
Tribute to Our Union 8
Organizing the Organized ... 10
Corpus Christi Organized 16
New Grievance Procedure ... 17
Council Honors Lingo 20
Canal Zone Appeal 20

Departments

What Congress Is Doing 9
Headquarters Building Fund .. 11
The Legislative Front 12
COPE's Poke 19
Our Union Accomplishments . 21
News in Brief 22
AFSCME Vice Presidents 23

More Recognition!

Cincinnati Council Gains Representation Rights for Six More Departments, Wins Another Wage Hike, Fringes

● Cincinnati District Council 51 has successfully gained formal representation rights in six city departments over the past six months and has won another pay increase for city workers.

"Memoranda of Understanding," providing such things as specific recognition, grievance procedure with adequate time for stewards to investigate and process grievances, were signed by department heads and local union bargaining committeemen. They have been concluded in Highway Maintenance, Waste Collection, Municipal Garage and Inspection Lane, Sewage Disposal, Public Utilities and Workhouse.

Other agreements are in the process of negotiation with the Water Works, General Hospital and other city departments.

AGREEMENT: Officials of the Cincinnati Workhouse sign a "memorandum of understanding" for 1959 with officials of Cincinnati Workhouse Employees Local 898. Seated from left are Captain Lobek; Workhouse Superintendent George Studt, and Local 898 President Bernard Kemper. Standing from left: Al Bilik, business representative, District Council 51; Ollie Cohorn and Eugene Poole, members of Local 898's bargaining committee.

ACCORDING to agreement wages and overall fringe benefits are separately negotiated annually, directly with the city manager and the personnel director. Departmental agreements cover specific working conditions.

The pay increase won by the council was the fifth in as many consecutive years. The agreement this year called for a 3 percent raise on the first $4,500 of salary and 2 percent on the remainder to a maximum increase of $240 a year. Further provided was a minimum increase of $100 a year.

These wage increases now bring the going minimum wage for any classification in the city service, including the General Hospital, to $1.42 an hour. The minimum rate for laborer is now $1.93 an hour and for truck driver, $2.25 an hour.

The Council also reached an agreement with the city management, subject to city council approval, establishing an unemployment compensation plan in the event of lay-off of regular full-time employees.

The bargaining committee included District Council President Bill Horstman, International Vice President Henry Ostholthoff, Walter Carruthers, Bob Welsh, Woody Eldridge, Bill Richard, Charles Whitehead, Al Fikes, Harry Wilson, Esther Eiselein, Bernard Kemper, and Business Representatives Al Bilik and Joe Bloemer.

CITY PERSONNEL Director W. D. Heisel told delegates to our International convention in Cincinnati last year that the city of Cincinnati recognizes the rights of public employees because our union representatives and officers are willing to work with city officials in improving the service rendered to the public.

He said: "Some governments are inclined to oppose recognition of public employee unions because, they say, 'you can't carry water on both shoulders' —you can't be faithful union members and loyal government employees.

"I maintain that it can be carried on both shoulders if both are going in the same direction. That direction, of course, is service to the public, and in Cincinnati there is no question about where we are going." ●

AFL-CIO Campaign:

'Meet America's Human Needs'

Executive Council Plans Conference On Unemployment, Legislative Action

• The AFL-CIO will throw its full resources into an all-out campaign against chronic unemployment and economic stagnation, the Executive Council decided during its sessions at San Juan, Puerto Rico, last month.

Labor's campaign will embrace a comprehensive legislative program and a large-scale conference to be held in Washington on April 8 to dramatize the desperate plight of millions of unemployed.

The AFL-CIO's program against stagnation and unemployment will have as another of its main pillars a collective bargaining program by affiliated unions geared to substantial wage increases to expand purchasing power in the hands of consumers.

GEORGE MEANY, president of the AFL-CIO, in announcing the Washington conference keyed to the theme "End Unemployment—Meet America's Human Needs," summarized the midwinter Council meeting as "one of the best we've had in a long time." He said the Council had given more thorough study to economic problems facing the nation than ever before because "we're in trouble, the country's in trouble."

The Council declared the conference was designed to dramatize the plight of the jobless and to petition the President and Congress to take immediate, effective steps to get the nation's unemployed back to work.

The Executive Council voted a special assessment of one cent a member per month for the next six months to create a special fund to be used for emergency problems. organizing, contributions and other AFL-CIO programs. Mr. Meany said the assessment will bring in about $750,000 for the six-month period.

The Executive Council called on the free world to adopt a six-point program to save West Berlin's freedom, including a United Nations-supervised plebiscite, United Nations supervision of communications between West Berlin and West Germany, and a special session of the UN General Assembly if negotiations on Germany fail.

AFL-CIO unions, said President Meany, will continue their historic bargaining for shorter hours. A workweek of less than 40 hours is prevalent in many organized industries, he pointed out. The Council's approach, he stressed, is a legislative approach.

The hour provision of the Wage and Hour Act has not been changed since the passage of the law more than two decades ago.

Creation of a national commission to investigate and analyze the price structure, in light of the "naked prejudice" exhibited in an attempt to place the blame for rising prices on organized labor, was urged.

Free labor should not send delegations to Communist or other totalitarian countries, the Council said. The myth that Soviet Russia is "a workers' state" was condemned by the AFL-CIO leaders.

The Executive Council condemned the "brutal program of totalitarian oppression" carried on by the Franco dictatorship in Spain. The AFL-CIO leaders called on the United States government to make known to Franco that continued terror will build opposition to continued American economic aid to Spain.

IN ANOTHER ACTION, the Executive Council pledged the aid of the AFL-CIO in supplying the personnel "capable of assisting in the development of strong African trade unions" and in the promotion of free world labor policies and programs throughout the continent.

The Council called on the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions to expand greatly its African activities and, through the governments of its affiliated members, to press for the end of colonialism on the continent.

The Council called on the United States government to strive to persuade "our European allies" that achievement of independence in the various countries of Africa is essential to the survival of the free world. The Council urged the United States to recognize these new states "speedily."

In regard to housing, the leaders of the AFL-CIO called on Congress to "reject the Administration's turn-back-the-clock proposals" and urged the enactment of the best features of the Sparkman and Rains bills as "the first essential step toward development of the full-scale housing and urban redevelopment program the nation will need to assure prosperity and sustained growth in the years ahead."

THE DOUGLAS-COOPER bill on aid to distressed areas was endorsed. The Council backed a $2 billion federal loan program for community facilities at reasonable interest rates. Such a loan program would help many communities which have encountered financial hardship as a result of expansion in many regions of the United States.

The Administration's concern with inflation was scored as particularly unrealistic inasmuch as a "shockingly large number" of Americans remained "ill-fed, ill-clothed and ill-housed" last year. The Council said more than 40,000,000 Americans were members of families of two or more persons living on incomes of less than $3,000 or were living alone on less than $1,500.

SESSION: The AFL-CIO Executive Council deliberates a point during one of its sessions in San Juan, Puerto Rico. President Meany described the meeting as "one of the best."

While the Executive Council was in session, it was revealed that more than 1,000,000 members have come into AFL-CIO unions in the last three years. This was made known by John Livingston, director of the Department of Organization.

The Department of Organization, he reported, is sponsoring a series of organizing conferences to help state and city bodies as a follow-up to the successful national organizing conference held recently in Washington. •

75 Percent of Our Members Have Union Dues Checked Off

• About 75 percent of our members pay their union dues through the payroll deduction plan, a recent survey by the Department of Research and Service has shown.

The survey revealed that approximately 150,000 members of 873 local unions, or roughly 55 percent of our 1,600 locals, have their union dues deducted from their paychecks.

This is in striking contrast to the situation which existed in 1949 when a similar survey showed that only 33 units of government had approved checkoff of union dues. Since then, more and more locals made payroll deduction of union dues as a "must" issue in their negotiations, recognizing that their staff representatives were spending a disproportionate amount of time collecting dues. This left precious little time to the all-important tasks of organizing and service.

Although locals in 38 states and Canada have negotiated the checkoff, the majority of them, 517, are found in five states. They are Michigan, 156; Wisconsin, 107; Massachusetts, 87; Minnesota, 84, and New York, 83. Among the major cities which have payroll deduction of union dues are New York City, Detroit, Philadelphia, Miami, Milwaukee, Boston, Los Angeles, Cincinnati and Denver.

A further breakdown of the survey report showed that dues deduction has been negotiated by 443 city employee local unions, 301 state employee locals, 107 county employee locals and 18 joint city-county employee locals.

Most units of government provide the dues checkoff service without charge to the local unions, but others assess fees ranging from two cents a deduction on a bi-weekly basis to 25 cents a month per member.

At least 12 states, according to available information, have agreed to dues checkoff, and all of them provide this service without charge. They are Colorado, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah and Wisconsin.

To Keep City Brotherly

Council 33 Aids Philadelphia In Reclaiming Wayward Youth

• District Council 33 and the city of Philadelphia are facing up to the knotty problem of juvenile delinquency, which plagues every major city in the country.

With its Vice President John Miller serving on a special committee, the council is doing its part in a "work" program to keep the minds of eventually some 250 boys from thinking first of mischief and then of crime.

Starting April 1, the first group of 50 boys from the ages of 16 to 18 were put to work in the famed Fairmont Park removing fallen trees, exterminating weeds and maintaining trails.

Philadelphia's juvenile delinquency problem came dramatically to light about a year ago when Oh In Ho, a Korean exchange student, was cruelly murdered by a band of Negro youths on the edge of the University of Pennsylvania campus.

RACISTS sought to make the most of the problem for their sinister purposes, but calmer minds prevailed when it was realized that the brutal crime served to call attention to the problem of juvenile delinquency which is not a matter of race, creed or color.

At the height of the furor a letter came from the Korean boy's parents begging mercy for the hoodlums and appealing for understanding of their problem.

Officials of Philadelphia—which is known as the City of Brotherly Love—and its responsible citizens were deeply disturbed and wrestled with the problem.

It was decided that more playgrounds were not the answer to the problem of keeping youngsters with active minds from straying into the paths leading to crime. The "work" program was given the nod when it was learned that a similar project was proving successful in faraway San Francisco.

AS A Philadelphia church secretary put it, the youngsters want to work, "to do something with their muscles and abilities and be proud of the results."

Council officers were called into consultation with Mayor Richardson Dilworth. Council 33 is the sole bargaining agent for 18,000 city employees, including those who work in the parks.

Like the responsible citizens they are, members of locals affiliated with Council 33 are deeply concerned with the problem, for many of them have children whom they support through their labor.

Once it was determined that the project would not displace regular workers in the city's park system, Council 33 threw its wholehearted support behind the proposal. The touchstone of that support was the appointment of Brother Miller to the special committee.

The initial group of 50 boys was selected jointly by the department of public welfare, the board of education, the juvenile aid division of the police department and municipal court.

During the school year they work 20 hours a week for 10 weeks. Come the summer vacation, they will work for 10 weeks.

BROTHER Miller serves on the committee directing the program with representatives of the four agencies already mentioned, who select the youths, and of the Fairmont Park Commission and the department of recreation.

The boys are taken to and from Fairmont Park in school buses. They are provided with a lunch of sandwiches, milk and fruit. There is an overall supervisor and five leaders, one for each 10 boys.

As a result of a broadcast by the ever-alert AFL-CIO commentator Edward P. Morgan, a Quaker in San Francisco reported the successful operation of a "work" plan there and other advice doubtless flowed into the Philadelphia city fathers which led them to decide on the program.

THE boys are paid 50 cents an hour for helping to keep the famed park beautiful so that they realize that their efforts are not unrewarded.

The cost of the project will be a small price to pay for the reclamation to society of youths who might otherwise have continued to go astray.

District Council 33, headed by William J. McEntee, who also is an International vice president, is proud to play its part in this project which will help keep Philadelphia worthy of continuing to be called "the City of Brotherly Love." •

175 Members of Congress Respond to Zander Letter

Last month the members of the House of Representatives and U. S. Senate were added to the mailing list for The Public Employee. International President Arnold S. Zander sent a covering letter with an issue of the magazine to each member of the Congress, setting forth our objectives and goals.

The response to President Zander's letter has been most gratifying. To date 46 senators and 129 representatives replied to his letter.

More Waterfront Jobs

Maritime Trades Department, AFL-CIO Strikes Blow Against 'Runaway' Shipping

By Harry E. O'Reilly

Executive Secretary-Treasurer
Maritime Trades Dept., AFL-CIO

• All affiliates of the Maritime Trades Department have good reason to be pleased and proud over the remarkable success of the massive demonstration earlv last month against ships flying the "flags of convenience" of Panama, Liberia, Honduras and Costa Rica.

The subterfuge behind the practice of U. S. shipping operators adopting "runaway" flags to escape decent wages and working standards and their just share of federal taxes is fraught with serious implications that extend beyond the immediate and disastrous effects on American seamen's jobs.

In the current issue of the AFL-CIO Federationist, Harry Pollack, Associate Inter-American Representative, writes:

"Runaway American industries, long accustomed to jump state lines in search of cheap labor, special tax concessions and other benefits, are now eyeing target locations across international boundaries."

Pollack's report deals with the massive "Freeport" being built on Grand Bahama Island, 100 miles northeast of Miami. This project, promoted by American interests, plans to attract U. S. industrial plants to the island.

OBVIOUSLY, all of our affiliates, as well as other unions in the AFL-CIO, have a direct interest in the problem of "foreign runaways."

In the U. S. shipping and shipbuilding industries, the "runaways" to foreign flags already have had a terrible impact.

Almost half of the 2,000 vessels—42 percent to be exact—registered under "runaway" flags are American owned.

More than 15,000 U. S. seamen have been fired from jobs on ships which have transferred to the flags of convenience in the last ten years. In addition, ships built abroad by "runaway" operators and registered under foreign flags have accounted for the loss of thousands of other jobs which normally would have gone to U. S. seamen.

According to some calculations, if the estimated 600 American-owned active vessels now flying Panamanian, Liberian, Honduran and Costa Rican flags were under the U. S. flag, it would mean 30,000 jobs for licensed and unlicensed American seamen.

The "runaways" have exacted a terrible burden of hardship on American seamen and their families.

They have also reduced the U. S. to a fourth-rate maritime power. The tiny, unstable nation of Liberia, which ten years ago had only five ships, has replaced the U. S. as a "maritime power."

In their defense of "runaways," the operators tell us that American-owned ships under foreign flags would be "ready" for service in case of national emergency.

Anyone who swallows that kind of tripe simply doesn't care what he swallows.

COMMON SENSE should tell us—and past experience has proved it a fact—that what we must have in a world crisis is a strong merchant marine flying the American flag and manned by American crewmen.

If we try to settle for less, we'll be writing our own ticket to disaster.

In view of all these facts, on which all our MTD affiliates feel so strongly, the success of the December 1-4 demonstration is gratifying. We have shown that inter-union cooperation can be dramatically effective, and we have given notice we intend to employ that cooperation to protect our American maritime industries and the jobs of maritime workers.

Success of united maritime labor's protest caps a series of encouraging signs that the "runaways" might be running on unsteady legs. These have been:

- A legal victory last May by the Seafarers International Union, in which the National Labor Relations Board ruled that the "runaway" SS Florida was subject to U. S. labor law. The SS Florida was flying a foreign flag, but the Board held that it was an American ship engaged in American commerce and thus subject to the law.
- A ruling by a federal district judge early this month that creation of a "runaway-flag" operation by an American corporation did not absolve owners of their obligations and that seamen can sue such corporations under the Jones Act for injuries. The suit involved a Greek crewman of the Panamanian-flag Marcella.
- The ruling of Judge van Pelt Bryan in refusing "runaways" an injunction against this month's demonstration, in which he suggested proper jurisdiction for the dispute would be the NLRB. This would appear to strengthen the trend set by the above two rulings toward placing NLRB in authority over "runaways."
- An announcement by Costa Rica that registries of all "runaways" under that nation's flag will be cancelled effective December 31. This action involves 122 ships and effects some 810,000 deadweight tons of shipping. •

Tribute to Our Union

Illinois Personnel Supervisor Cites Service to Mentally Ill

● Leslie T. Thornton, supervisor of Personnel Service, Illinois Department of Public Welfare, paid tribute to the cooperativeness of the AFSCME in general and to International Organizer "Tiny" Groeteke in particular in a message read at the installation of officers meeting of Illinois State Research Hospital Employees, Galesburg, Local 1274.

Illness prevented Mr. Thornton from being present to deliver his address. The prepared message was read for him by Dr. Thomas T. Tourlentes, superintendent of Galesburg State Research Hospital.

THE MESSAGE cited the advances in the care of the mentally ill and retarded in the state of Illinois. It said that the major part of the responsibility for the progress could be directly attributed to the employees involved in care and treatment programs.

Mr. Thornton said that he hopes that all employees are genuinely proud of their status and of their part in the State Hospital organization. He suggested that employees' feeling toward their job and position should be frequently analyzed and reviewed.

President Florence Robertson of Local 1274 gave a brief resume of the history and structural organization of the AFSCME. She cited the right to organize as an inalienable right to which public employees are as much entitled as employees in private industry. She also rejected the implied premise that seeking better conditions for their own sake is somehow wicked when it comes to public employees. She said that public employees need financial security as much as any other kind of employee.

INTERNATIONAL Organizer C. "Tiny" Groeteke administered the oath of office and installed the new officers of the local. They are Mrs. Robertson, president; Mrs. Lucille Wolfe, first vice president; Mrs. Sylvia Eaves, second vice president; Arthur Trammell, third vice president; Mrs. Erma Shaw, secretary; Mrs. Gertrude Houston, treasurer; Mrs. Maxine Alstedt, Mrs. Mary Farquer, Mrs. Lois Stacker, Maurice Lyons, Leonard Russell and Edwin Wagoner, members of the executive board; Mrs. Mildred Oakes, Dorence Woolsey and Mrs. Adelaide Carrigan, trustees.

Service awards pins for four years of uninterrupted dues-paying membership were awarded to Mrs. Edna Davis, Mrs. Erma Shaw, Mrs. Hortense Middaugh, Mrs. Alice Shreeves and Mrs. Grace Thoureen. Mrs. Thoureen, retiring secretary of the local, was presented with a hand-painted ceramic compact as a token of appreciation for her untiring and constant devotion to the local from the beginning of its organization.

Thirteen new members were initiated at the meeting. This points up the fact that this local grew from an original membership of 13 to more than 300 members in less than a year. ●

OFFICERS: Here are the newly installed officers of Los Angeles City Employees Local 801. Seated from left are Charles Moody, vice-president; Samuel F. Burden, steward, North Central; Eldridge Mallard, steward, Central; A. B. Johnson, trustee; Leonard Perry, trustee, Cleveland Jones, steward, Valley traffic department; J. C. Maupins, chief steward. Standing from left, C. Hogan, Council 20 representative; Walter Walters; Walter H. Murphy, Council 20 president; William Irvin, secretary-treasurer; Daniel Scannell, regional director; James Couch, Jr., secretary of Local 801; Richard Baisden, U.C.L.A. administrator, and C. P. Pierre, president of Local 801.

What the Congress Is Doing

By Gordon E. Brewer
Civil Service Counsel

• Congress is proceeding slowly during this session, with the majority of the work being done in committees rather than taking the form of concrete legislative action on specific bills. AFSCME, of course, shares with the labor movement general interest in a large number of bills which have been introduced thus far during the session.

It is our feeling here in Washington that the Forand Bill, H. R. 4700, is of most interest to AFSCME members throughout the country. The passage of this bill would affect every member of our union who will some day draw social security benefits. The Forand Bill, if passed, will pay in full for 60 days of hospital care for all persons eligible for or drawing old age and survivors insurance benefits. It will also pay for skilled nursing home care following hospitalization and for surgical services. The cost of these services would come from the trust fund, to which all of us covered by social security have contributed.

ENACTMENT of the Forand Bill would permit hospitals to follow patterns now being used under government and private plans in calculating reasonable costs for these services. Passage would not permit any administering agency to interfere with hospital administration or the private practice of medicine. The bill will increase contribution rates by one-quarter of one percent by employers and employees so that the trust fund will be continued on a sound basis.

These health benefits are badly needed because most aged persons have low incomes. Medical costs are continuing to rise and commercial insurance either is not available or is far too expensive for people beyond age 65. Even though you may not be covered by social security benefits this proposal will benefit you, since it will help 15,000,000 Americans, will relieve hospitals and assistance agencies and permit unions and Blue Cross to increase other protection for persons still at work.

Each and every union member should write at once to the Hon. Wilbur Mills, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C., urging prompt hearings on the Forand Bill. At the same time, you should write to your own representative and U. S. senator, urging that they take all appropriate steps to secure the passage of H. R. 4700.

AMONG other proposals with which we should be familiar is the Karsten-Machrowicz Bill, H. R. 3547, and the Kennedy-Case Bill, S. 791, which would provide for federal minimum unemployment compensation standards needed to increase the amount and duration of weekly benefits. Hearings on this proposal will commence before the House Ways and Means Committee on April 7.

Again, members are urged to write to the committee and their individual congressmen and senators, asking for favorable action on this bill. At the present time, state employees are covered in eight different states; some city employees in ten states, county employees in four states, and other political subdivision employees in six states. Proposals to extend this coverage to state and local government employees are pending in a number of state legislatures.

Committee hearings have been completed in the Senate on the Kennedy-Ervin Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, S. 505. At the present time, unions such as ours will be covered by the reporting provisions of the bill, but employers such as the state and subordinate political subdivisions will not be covered. •

President Zander Will Be Featured Speaker At Social Welfare Conference 1707 Meeting

Prof. Seymour Martin Lipset, professor of sociolgy at the University of California, Berkeley, will share the platform with International President Arnold S. Zander at a meeting sponsored by Community and Social Agency Employees Local 1707 at the National Conference on Social Welfare at San Francisco.

This is the first time that there will be an associate group meeting for AFSCME members—and others who are interested—at an annual meeting of NCSW. The meeting will be held from 4 p. m. to 5:30 p. m., Thursday, May 28.

The subject of the two speakers will be "The Professional and the Union." An outstanding sociologist who has also made studies in the labor field, Prof. Lipset has the distinction of having been chosen to deliver an Eduard C. Lindeman lecture at a session of the main meeting.

Some 5,000 delegates are expected to attend the conference, a number of them from 50 AFSCME locals which have social workers as members. For the third successive year, there will be an AFSCME booth at the conference.

Organizing the Organized

Five Locals in Madison, Wisconsin, Vote To Form Single Organization to Build Union

• "Organizing the organized," a new concept in our union, was brought into being when five Madison, Wis., public employee unions voted to form a single organization to meet the needs of 298 city employees.

The new organization will be known as Madison Civil Service Employees Local 60. It absorbs Madison Board of Education Employees Local 710, Madison Clerical and Administrative Employees Local 520, Madison City Employees Park Department Local 60, Madison City Employees Local 480, and Madison Traffic Engineers Department Local 1573.

These five locals had been going along for years, each taking its own course toward solving its own problems, except on special occasions when they felt compelled to act together. Even then they frequently went off in five different directions, which often weakened the labor front in such important matters as bargaining and negotiating policy. Frequently one or two locals would suffer unfair treatment under this system. Something had to be done.

CONSOLIDATION: Gordon Brewer, AFSCME Civil Service Counsel, presents a charter to the newly consolidated Madison public employees local at a meeting where five locals voted to become one. From left, Roland Annen, temporary sergeant-at-arms; Jean Greenway, temporary secretary; George Behrnd, temporary treasurer; Frank Dvorak, temporary president, and Brother Brewer.

THE NEW PROGRAM promises to give a tremendous boost to our organizational work, both at the Council level and at the local level. It should help to build a stronger and more secure public employee union movement throughout the state.

The merger was approved at a meeting at the Labor Temple in Madison by the general membership of all five locals.

Mayor Ivan Nestingen of Madison spoke in favor of consolidation. He pointed out the advantages of a coordinated approach to bargaining with the City Council.

He praised the groups for promoting good public relations for organized labor and added: "Organized labor in city government has always been a reasonable organization." He pointed to recent elections which, he said, seem to presage a more favorable attitude toward the labor movement.

GORDON BREWER, the AFSCME Civil Service Counsel, told the group: "The labor movement favors merger. The goal is to avoid misunderstanding and dissension by providing the most effective method of collective bargaining."

Marvin Brickson, president of the Madison Federation of Labor, said that unity has always been the beginning of any labor organization. "One organization," he said, "provides a better bargaining policy."

Robert J. Oberbeck, executive director of Wisconsin County and Municipal Council 40, assured the members that no individual or group identity would be lost in the larger organization.

New by-laws adopted by the new organization provide for equality of distribution among the five parent groups in the election of officers. The president, secretary, treasurer and sergeant at arms are to be elected from the entire membership with not more than one of these officers coming from one department. Six groups—the park department, Board of Education custodial employees, water department, traffic engineers, administrative and clerical employees, and the street department—are to be represented by two vice presidents each elected from among their members. A first vice president will be elected from and by the vice presidents. The officers, except the sergeant at arms, will make up the executive board.

Election of permanent officers has been announced for the first general meeting of the new organization. Temporary officers have been named. They are Frank Dvorak (water dept.), president; Jean Greenway (clerical and administrative), secretary; George Behrnd (park dept.), treasurer; Roland Annen (traffic engineers), sergeant at arms.

Headquarters Building Fund

All Utah Locals Qualify for 100 Percent Citations; Denver Local 158 Tops Month with $1,324 in Cash

• All local unions in Utah have now contributed or pledged to contribute 100 percent to AFSCME's Building Booster Fund and are entitled to 100 percent citations.

This means that every local in the state has contributed or pledged to contribute $2 for every member.

Denver, Colo., City Employees Local 158 also has earned a 100 percent citation. Its 662 members paid their entire pledge of $1,324 in a lump sum, for one of the largest single contributions to date. Their contribution gives them top honors among contributors to the Building Booster Fund for the month.

Fund collections for the month ending March 16 totalled $2,398.10. This permitted the International to make a payment of $2,400 on the mortgage, thus saving $7.50 a month interest. Over the life of the mortgage, this means a savings of $1,147.50 in interest. This brings the total interest savings to $15,783.30.

THUS FAR we have paid $31,800 on the mortgage from the Fund. More pledges and more payments will mean a faster reduction of the principle and a greater saving in interest.

What the public employees of the state of Utah have done can be duplicated by public employees in every state. It should be a matter of state pride to know that the organized public employees of your state have done their part to purchase a building that will belong to all.

The contribution of Utah State Employees Service, Salt Lake City, Local 1089 completed the picture for Utah. Local 1089 is not a large group. It has only 22 members, but their loyalty to the union should serve as an inspiration for others who have not yet made a 100 percent contribution. If all our locals would step up their campaigns we could retire the mortgage on the Public Employee Union Building in short order. This would make it possible for us to turn our funds to improving and expanding our service to our members.

FOUR OTHER locals qualified as various types of Fund Builders during this past month.

Bridgeport, Conn., Bridge and Maintenance Employees Local 182 qualified as an Advance Builder by contributing $100 for 50 bricks.

Illinois State Employees, Jacksonville, Local 38 purchased 21 bricks to honor their oldest member, Edith Scribner. One brick was purchased for each year of her membership.

Washington State Administrative Employees, Olympia, Local 1466 contributed $41.

Detroit Public Library Employees Local 1259 qualified as a Security Builder by donating $25 for 12½ bricks. •

CITATION: International Vice President Leon G. Hay presents a citation for a 100 percent membership contribution to the AFSCME Building Fund to Fulton County Employees Local 368. From left, Dorothy Cremin, recording secretary; Charlie Helen Baldwin, board member-at-large; Jewell Elliott, president; Dorothy Smith, sergeant-at-arms; Leon G. Hay; Myrtie Zack O'Shields, treasurer; Lusu Hall, board member-at-large; Nannie McMichael, vice president, and Carolyn Garrison, corresponding secretary.

N. Y. Council's March on Albany Was Standout Means of Dramatizing Program on Legislation

• Members of 45 New York state public employee locals from the tip of Long Island to the Niagara frontier, from Staten Island to the Canadian border, joined in a march on Albany in protest against the shocking wage and working conditions imposed on state employees.

While our locals and councils throughout the country were busy plugging the legislation that has been introduced in their behalf, the march on Albany was the most dramatic means used to express the legislative needs of public employees.

The march, organized by New York State Employees Council 50, was led by Bill Di Donna, his wife and 13 of their 15 children, all of whom carried placards demanding support for the union's program. Brother Di Donna is a member of New York State Department of Public Works Employees, Saratoga County, Local 1108. He is a highway laborer and is stationed at the eastern terminus of the Erie Canal in Schenectady.

THE DEMONSTRATION was in support of a three-point basic legislative program aimed at providing basic security and justice for state employees. The program demands a $950 across-the-board salary increase, state paid life insurance and equal pay for equal work.

Council President William Ruff pointed out that thousands of state workers have had no increase in take-home pay for years. The government's own statistics prove that New York state wages lag behind private industry by an average of $950 a year. With the cost of living constantly rising, state employees find it almost impossible to provide for their families.

This is the reason, he said, that the turnover among state employees is extremely high—as much as 50 percent in many state institutions. The state loses many capable and dedicated people because of inadequate wages.

In support of the union's across-the-board increase de-

MARCH: Stretching as far as the camera's eye reaches are more than 400 members of New York State Employees Council 50 going up the steps to the state capitol at Albany to press for their legislative program which is highlighted by a request of a $950 a year increase for all state employees. At the right is Council President William F. Russ.

mands, International Organizer Jean Couturier cited the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics' report that the average family needs about $4,400 a year to meet today's cost of living. The median salary for New York state employees, he noted, is about $3,400 a year.

He also noted that the loss of an employee and the training of a new one to replace him costs the state about $500. This money might more profitably be put to increasing salaries and thus encouraging valuable trained employees to remain in the service of the state, he said.

THE UNION'S demand for state paid life insurance amounting to $5.000 for each employee is based on the practice of the five states surrounding New York. Union spokesmen pointed out that insurance of this kind would cost the individual employee $260 a year, but the state could provide coverage, because of its group purchasing power, for $60 or $70 a year for each employee. The difference, in effect, would constitute a salary increase of $200 a year.

Union officials charged that the basic salary structure has become a mockery in present practice among state agencies. Employees promoted to higher positions sometimes actually suffer a loss in pay amounting to several hundreds of dollars. Many employees, as a result, actually refuse promotions. In many cases, newly appointed employees receive more pay than those appointed to the same position a year before. Because of regulations, new employees who entered state service since 1954 can never earn as much as employees hired before 1954. These employees, filling identical positions, doing identical work, must always work next to employees who are earning as much as $500 a year more.

State employees expressed their demands for justice in conferences with legislators held in Albany after the march. Council 50 is sponsoring a letter-writing campaign in support of bills introduced into the legislature to correct the abuses of which the union is complaining. ●

FILMING: Interest in the march of New York State Employees Council 50 on the state capital was so great that it was filmed. Council President William F. Russ is the second from the right in the foreground. In the center foreground bearing placards spelling out "My Daddy Wants a Raise" are 15 of the 17-member family of William DiDonna, Schenectady, maintenance worker employed by the state highway department at $2,990 a year.

THROUGHOUT the nation, AFSCME councils are more active on the state legislative front than ever before.

Council representatives are working against tremendous odds. The political atmosphere was poisoned by the announcement of the Teamsters—expelled from the AFL-CIO for unethical practices—of their intention to organize policemen. Enemies of organized labor were quick to seize upon this announcement as a pretext to introduce bills designed to cripple the functioning of AFSCME.

In addition to fighting off these anti-labor moves, the councils are pressing the passage of bills authorizing the organization of public employees and collective bargaining for them, and providing other benefits for them.

In at least two states, Tennessee and Arkansas, bills aimed at AFSCME failed to pass, thanks to the effectiveness of the legislative leg work of AFSCME representatives assisted by the organized labor movement.

The measure was killed in Tennessee, when the Senate voted 23 to 2 to table it. In Arkansas the legislature adjourned without acting on the bill. While the Arkansas proposal would not have prohibited the organization of public employees, it would have barred them from bargaining collectively and from striking.

The Tennessee measure was even more vicious, for it would have outlawed the organization of public employees. A similar measure has been introduced in North Carolina, its fate undetermined as The Public Employee went to press. The Indiana senate passed and sent to the house a bill to prohibit any union from organizing or attempting to organize any police department.

BUT the political skies are not overcast everywhere. In Wisconsin, Democrats and Republicans were vying to restore vacation cuts to state employees made in 1957. In the Republican-controlled state senate, a bill has been approved by a committee and reported to the floor. A similar Democrat-sponsored measure has passed the Democrat-controlled house and has been sent to the senate.

In New Jersey two bills passed by the state assembly would permit state, county, municipal and school district employees to collect cash compensation for up to six months of accumulated sick leave when they retire.

(Continued on page 14)

In Ohio a retirement bill has been introduced which would relieve public employees of the obligation to pay $3 a year for administrative costs of the Public Employees Retirement System.

In Arkansas, Governor Faubus vetoed a bill which would have required labor unions to register with the state and make them liable for suit in state courts. Governor Faubus said that the measure was unnecessary, would be "discriminatory" and would "impair good relations between management and labor."

In Montana, an amendment to "right to work" legislation was passed by the house and sent to the senate. This amendment would prevent Montana legislatures from passing laws abridging the rights of unions to organize and be duly chosen by a majority as the sole representative of the entire group. The measure also would guarantee the right to bargain collectively and the right of a duly elected bargaining agent to represent everyone covered under the contract being negotiated.

Following is a report of progress on legislation state by state:

CONFERENCE: AFSCME officials confer with John E. Finnegan, Massachusetts director of personnel and standardization. Seated with Mr. Finnegan is Marjorie Mueller, AFSCME research director. Standing from left are John Bercury, International Organizer; Jeanne Dyer, regional office manager; Edward J. Doherty, president of Mass. Department of Public Works Employees Local 780, and Howard E. Doyle, state council legislative agent. Mrs. Mueller testified for a bill to extend social security to Massachusetts public employees.

California

Governor "Pat" Brown called for the passage of legislation to "strengthen the integrity of the collective bargaining process." His specific recommendations were to outlaw bribes to union officials, set up safeguards on union meetings and elections, provide for recalling officers for misconduct, prevent loans by unions to their officers, require the filing of financial statements by union officers and management consultants, and to govern the relationship between locals and their parent organizations.

Colorado

The Colorado Union of Public Employees was making a determined effort to obtain passage of a bill establishing the right of public employees to organize and bargain by issuing a bulletin explaining the measure in detail.

Connecticut

The following bills affecting public employees were introduced:

Permitting state employees to be covered by the State Labor Relations Act in regard to unfair labor practices, etc.

Recognizing public employees and their right to organize.

Allowing bona fide grievance procedure under collective bargaining contracts.

Salary increases for state employees in recognition of the cost of living rise.

Giving state employees political voice, the right to run for elective office and to participate in political rallies and caucuses.

Eliminating split shifts which force employees to do 11 hours' duty with only eight hours' pay.

Permitting clerical workers in many agencies to work a 35-hour week.

Idaho

The house rejected a bill which would have put all state and local government employees under the unemployment compensation program.

Maine

Hearings have been held on a bill to extend social security to public employees, which was introduced at the request of AFSCME.

Massachusetts

A bill was introduced to extend social security to state employees. Marjorie Mueller, AFSCME research director, testified for the measure.

A bill, supported by organized labor, would create a special panel of three Superior Court justices to sit on all labor dispute cases.

Michigan

Council 7 helped to defeat a House joint resolution that would have placed a measure concerning the State Civil Service Commission on a state-wide ballot. Had the resolution passed and the voters approved, the measure would have had the effect of ham-stringing the commission and halving its budget.

A bill was introduced to amend the state fair employment practices act to forbid refusal to hire a person because of age.

Minnesota

A bill to create a Division of Health Service for state employees, previously heard and discussed, was brought up again and referred to a subcommittee.

A bill providing state-paid group insurance for state employees was introduced.

The director of civil service recommended a four percent salary increase for each employee to meet the higher cost-of-living index figure recently announced in accordance with a previous agreement. An appropriation bill will be required to meet the cost of the increase.

Missouri

Bills affecting public employees that have been introduced include:

Extending unemployment compensation to public employees.

Increasing benefits under the workmen's compensation act and extending its coverage to state employees.

Enabling cities of 40,000 to 450,000 population to establish retirement systems.

Lightening the work load of employees of state mental institutions.

Providing credit in the state retirement system for employment with the Missouri State Employment Service while it was operated by the federal government.

Establishing a 40-hour week in the state highway department, with overtime to be paid to all maintenance men working more than nine hours a day or 44 hours a week.

Creating an incentive system for state employees.

Institutional Employees Local 410 of St. Louis and St. Louis County oppose a bill to dismiss from the job and bar forever from state employment any state employee who either exercises his privilege under the fifth amendment of the U. S. Constitution, or who fails to appear in any court of record in which he is scheduled to appear.

New Mexico

A bill for a personnel system and job classifications of state employees was passed by the senate and sent to the house. This would set up a series of examinations for job applicants, but hiring would not be totally dependent on scores made in the tests. The tests would provide a roster of possible employees. The measure also would prevent supervisors from dismissing more than 30 percent of their staffs in any one month. Similar bills failed to pass in 1955 and 1957.

Oklahoma

Introduced in the house were bills to authorize the governor to extend civil service to agencies now uncovered, and to enable the establishment of retirement systems in cities with populations of between 100,000 and 240,000.

Oregon

A bill to repeal the state's controversial 1953 anti-picketing law, passed by the senate, has been sent to the house where approval was regarded as virtually certain.

Another proposal would grant a $25 a month across-the-board salary increase to state employees.

Rejected by the senate labor and industry committee was a bill which would have extended unemployment compensation coverage to employees of non-profit charitable organizations, such as hospitals, churches and private schools.

Pennsylvania

A dozen bills were introduced and others were being prepared to implement the legislative program of Council 26. These include measures to provide civil service for all state employees, coverage of all public employees by the Pennsylvania Labor Relations Act, and a union dues checkoff for state employees.

South Carolina

A licensing measure aimed at curbing the Teamsters union, but actually affecting all unions, has been introduced. It would require licensing of any paid membership solicitor of any organization which requires dues or makes assessments on its members. Applicants for licenses would be required to file a detailed history of their organizations, plus their personal history for the past 10 years and present three personal references. Licensing boards would be empowered to refuse permits "for just reason" and "for the peace and good order of citizens of the state."

Texas

A proposal was introduced to define state policy to be that public employees' rights to employment should not be denied or abridged because of union membership or nonmembership. It also would require political subdivisions to bargain with public employees' organizations.

Utah

A bill was introduced to spell out union and collective bargaining rights of public employees, specifically permitting state and local employees to organize and negotiate.

Washington

A bill to create a merit system for county employees was killed in a house committee.

Wisconsin

Hearings were held on bills to give state employees two days off for each holiday worked, but one day off if the holiday falls on the employee's regular day off or on Saturday, and to pay them time and one half after 40 hours a week.

"Even though your wife has answered the 64 thousand dollar question, I hope you'll decide to stay on."

San Bernardino Member Runs for City Attorney

• Ralph Prince, a member of San Bernardino Employees Local 122 is currently waging a campaign for the office of city attorney of San Bernardino, Calif., which has a population of more than 83,000.

Brother Prince, formerly on the staff of the County Counsel, has been on the staff of the District Attorney's office for several years. He is a member of both the California and San Bernardino County Bar Associations.

Local 122 sponsored a workshop for county employees on February 12 at the Arrowhead Springs Hotel. Recommendations were formulated to be presented to the general membership for approval at a later date. In order to cover the variety of topics scheduled, six discussion groups were assigned specific topics.

Three morning workshops covered the hiring of a business agent, the development of an educational program and salary and fringe benefit problems. Harry Friedman, Welfare Department, led the first group with the assistance of Reva McKinney, Recorder's Office, and John Lawrence, County Counsel's Office. The education program discussion was led by Betty Eason, Welfare, with the assistance of Ruby Wicker, Public Works; Frank La Pinta, Welfare, and Doug Davis, former editor of the Union Employee. The third morning discussion group was directed by Robert Mitton, Building and Safety, and Ernest Hofheins, Welfare.

The afternoon sessions were devoted to discussion of proposed by-laws, especially those pertaining to elections, filling of vacancies on the executive committee, business procedures, the hiring of a business agent and policies relating to the newspaper. John Lawrence and Harry Schwarte, County Clerk's office, led these discussions. A group discussion of business procedures was led by Janet Martz, Assessor's office, Ruby Wicker and Frank La Pinta. A sixth discussion involved health and welfare problems. •

Corpus Christi Organized, Plans Wage Drive

• Plans are being made to negotiate for higher minimum wages for Corpus Christi, Texas, municipal employees, according to W. A. "Shorty" Rowe, AFSCME regional director.

Brother Rowe, speaking at charter installation ceremonies of newly-organized Corpus Christi Municipal Employees Local 1619, assured the 120 men attending the meeting that the local will work to better their conditions and that of their community.

Prefacing his wage-raising announcement, Brother Rowe said that a $1.02 minimum wage for city workers is "$40 a week short of the average paid in major industrial plants" in the area. In the light of this, he said, local union officials plan to seek a hearing before the City Council as soon as possible.

Oscar Reyna, district vice president of the Texas AFL-CIO, presented the charter to the new organization. Brother Rowe installed E. A. "Cowboy" Hemphill as president, O. L. Tingle as treasurer and an executive board composed of Joe Tijerino, F. R. Salazar, A. Lopez and Tony Flores.

CHARTER: Oscar Reyna, district vice president, Texas AFL-CIO, presents the charter to the new municipal employees local at Corpus Christi. From left are Brother Reyna; President E. A. Hemphill; A. Lopez; Regional Director W. A. Rowe; F. R. Salazar, and Joe Tijerino, members of the board, and J. D. Givens, International Organizer.

International Organizers J. D. Givens and Don McCullar are aiding in organizational work during the next weeks. •

Response to Offer of Low-Cost Homes and Lots in Florida Is Sizeable; Union Will Follow Through With Information

Within a week after the appearance of the March issue of the PUBLIC EMPLOYEE, more than 200 inquiries were received relative to an offer of low-cost homes and lots in Florida to AFSCME members. More are pouring in.

The offer was made to the International union by a reputable builder known to AFSCME. Located in the citrus belt along the St. Johns River near Sanford, Fla., the site would provide waterfront and regular lots, developed streets, sewers and recreational facilities, and is ideal for vacations or retirement. Although land values have soared in recent years, the land offered to AFSCME members would be sold at prices below the level the general public must pay.

Because of the response, the International will be able to follow through on this, and soon will provide further information to those who made inquiry. It is hoped that others will take advantage of the offer, for the greater the response, the more service AFSCME may be able to provide for our members in the project.

Other members who think they might be interested, without making any commitment whatsoever, should fill in the coupon below and mail it immediately to:

Housing
THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE
815 Mount Vernon Place, N. W.
Washington 1, D. C.

Name ..... Local .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ....., State .....

'How to Run Union Meeting' Available

All a chairman needs to know to conduct a successful meeting is contained in a revised and tastefully illustrated 64-page booklet on "How to Run a Union Meeting," which has been issued by the AFL-CIO Department of Education. Containing a wealth of knowledge on parliamentary law, the booklet may be obtained for 25 cents a copy from the Department of Publications, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, 815 Mt. Vernon Place, N. W., Washington 1, D. C.

The booklet has been out of print for nearly two years and many of our members have been placing orders for it. They may now reorder with assurance of getting their copies promptly.

Hospital Local Pledges Fight For Patients

• "We are going to work for the patients at Western State Hospital (Staunton, Va.), going to fight for them and going to do everything in our power to make their surroundings better."

That's what Secretary E. L. Mitchell told a meeting of Western State Hospital Employees Local 539, which recently marked its first anniversary.

Typical of the constructive attitude of the local is its sponsorship of a recent in-person performance of television artists for the enjoyment of the patients. Local 539 also is pressing for improvement of the working conditions of the hospital employees.

Arrangements were being made to send a delegation of the local to Richmond to discuss better conditions with Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr. Local 539's program includes proper recognition and a 40-hour week. The year-old union is working with the labor movement in Virginia, having sent a delegation to the recent convention of the State Federation of Labor and Industrial Union Council, AFL-CIO, at Roanoke. •

New Grievance Procedure

Michigan State Highway Department Also Recognizes Employees' Rights

ACHIEVEMENT: A five-step grievance procedure for Michigan State Highway Department employees is set forth in the document being signed by John C. Makie, department director. From the left, seated, are: Frederick E. Tripp, the department's director of administration; Paul Staley, chairman of Michigan Council 7's State Highway Department Policy Committee and president of Michigan State Capitol Employees Local 1034; Makie; Robert C. Grosvenor, Council director; standing, Charles J. Wilderspin, International organizer; Oliver Hatch, Policy Committee vice chairman and secretary-treasurer of Michigan State Highway Department Employees Local 1340, District 7; John P. Caldwell, International education director, and Lyman Rathbun, Policy Committee secretary.

• Several months of negotiations have gained the State Highway Department Policy Committee of Michigan Council 7 a five-step grievance procedure and full recognition of the right of the union to participate in it.

The steps involve the employee's immediate supervisor, the district supervisor or section chief, the division chief, the highway commissioner and finally the civil service commission.

The department's policy to deal though the union is set forth in a policy letter from Highway Commissioner John C. Makie to International Organizer Charles J. Wilderspin.

"The experience in private industry," Makie wrote, "has shown that many problems can be resolved very quickly by using a grievance procedure. Trained union stewards can play an effective part in assisting the employee to define his grievances and in making certain that his case is properly and fully presented to management.

"The total job of the Michigan State Highway Department can best be accomplished when the employees and management of the department are working closely together."

MAKIE said that this goal "can best be accomplished through such organization as your union's State Highway Department Policy Committee."

"I have previously stated," the highway commissioner said, "that every employee in the Michigan State Highway Department is free to join the union if he chooses to do so. I have always believed in organized labor and have supported it down through the years in a number of its programs." •

Somerville, Mass., Local Hits 100% Membership Goal

Somerville, Mass., Welfare Department Employees Local 274 has reached a goal of 100 percent membership. All 55 employees of the Somerville Welfare Department are now members of Local 274.

The local was chartered on March 29, 1945, with ten members. Since that time great progress has been won through hard work and persuasive bargaining.

Good will established by local members has paid off in many ways. Such advantages as three-week vacations with pay, salary increases, increase in allowable sick leave and an agreement with the Somerville Board of Public Welfare have been gained over the 14 years the local has been in existence.

Salvatore A. Biondo, president of Local 274, is particularly proud of the record of service made by the members of his organization, and of the good relations that exist between the union and the public.

Local 261 Cooks Don't Want to Be Janitors as Well

Employees of Michigan Veterans Facility Employees Local 261 are complaining about a new ruling at the institution that in effect makes the cooks janitors as well.

According to an old practice, the cooks closed shop 15 minutes ahead of the end of their shift in order to give them time to clean their kitchens. The new ruling requires cooks to work right up to quitting time and then clean up the kitchen on their own time without additional compensation. When complaints were made, the supervision told them, "A lot of people are out of work."

Local officials regard this as a thinly-veiled threat. Plans are being made to lodge a formal complaint.

Support the Building Booster Fund

AFSCME Shop Cards Now Available To Locals Which Will Display Them

The AFSCME Shop Card which is reproduced on the back cover of this issue of THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE is available for all local unions which wish to display one in their offices, shops or meeting rooms.

The only charge will be for lettering the name of the local in the designated space—a matter of about $2.

The Shop Card was designed for our International Union by the AFL-CIO's Union Label and Service Trades Department, and is officially registered with that department.

Orders should be sent to the Publications Department, AFSCME, 815 Mt. Vernon Pl., N. W., Washington 1, D. C., with the full name of the local union, as it is to be imprinted on the card.

Michigan Council Wins Back Pay, Sick Leave for Members

● Michigan State Council 7 won resounding victories for two union members when the state Civil Service Commission handed down decisions which resulted in reinstatement with back pay amounting to $800 for one and clarification of sick pay regulations for the other.

Mrs. Florence Robinson, a member of Coldwater State Home and Training School Employees Local 1345, was dismissed last December on the charge that she had permitted one patient to abuse another physically while she was performing her duty as an attendant nurse. Hospital authorities admitted that later testimony from eye witnesses was in conflict with previous testimony, but the authorities preferred to rest their case on the transcripts of the earlier reports.

The Hearing Board found that the two witnesses introduced by the hospital were unable to present any facts that would prove that Mrs. Robinson deliberately encouraged or negligently allowed one patient to beat another, or even that she was aware of this happening. The board ordered her reinstated and granted her back pay amounting to $800. She was represented by Council 7 Organizer Holden Cook.

IN THE SECOND case, Mrs. Nellie Salmonson, through a representative, appealed the denial of her right to use sick leave for the care of a grandchild who was ill. She said that because of other illness in the family, she was the only person able to care for the grandchild. She also furnished financial assistance for the family.

Mrs. Salmonson applied for sick leave to cover 80 hours used for the care of her grandchild, but was told that this could not be done. She also used an annual leave day to cover the first day of the second pay period. Eight annual leave days were taken from her and the two remaining days used were counted as lost time, for which a deduction was made from her check.

In her appeal to the board, Mrs. Salmonson asked that her ten days be charged against sick leave, her annual leave days restored to her, and the deduction, for which she did not sign, returned.

The Hearing Board found that "an employee is entitled to use accumulated sick leave credit for necessary absence from work to care for any person to whom a legal or moral duty is owed for financial or physical care, as long as the employee is not abusing the privilege by assuming the primary duty of another relative, or assuming the total duty that might be properly shared by other relatives."

The board granted the employee's request and ordered the deducted pay returned.

Mrs. Salmonson is a member of Kalamazoo Hospital Local 652. ●

Response of Southern Workers To AFSCME Organizing Cited

• The AFSCME is "encouraged by the response of Southern workers," in spite of obstacles to organization of public employees set up by certain state and local governments.

This was affirmed by International President Arnold S. Zander in an article appearing in the February issue of The Municipal South.

The article, entitled "A Union Grows in Dixie," reviews the progress and aims of the public employees' union in its efforts to "advance the social, economic and general welfare of public employees" and to "cooperate in giving efficient government service, extend and uphold the principle of merit and fitness in public employment . . . and assist in the recruitment into public jobs of trained and spirited young people interested in embarking upon public service as a career."

In 1958 alone, President Zander reports, AFSCME membership increased by 20 percent in the South, despite restrictions enacted by some municipalities against the rights of public employees. He says that he is confident that such restrictions violate the U. S. Constitution.

Brother Zander predicts that agreements between public employees' organizations and public employers will increase as officials recognize the advantages to the community of collective bargaining and satisfied employees. •

"Coffee break!"

SYMBOLIC: Three members of the Sparta, Wis., State School Local 186 proudly display the cake with the AFSCME emblem that was one of the features of a party for the youngsters given by the local. The cake was baked and decorated by Chef Edward Krowkowski of Sparta. An orchestra was provided for dancing. Members who helped to organize the party included, from left, Mrs. Eugene Hiles, Mrs. Dorothy Kownick and Miss Margaret Marx.

Six Local 546 Members Rescue Boy from Cave-in

• Quick action by six members of Clark County, Wis., Highway Employees Local 546 was credited with saving the life of 10-year-old Griffith Lowe of Waukesha, a Milwaukee suburb, when he was trapped in a huge pile of sand and salt.

His rescuers were Earl Darling, Tony Hantke, John Apfel, Bobby Free, Paul Ahlers and John Bryan, president of the local.

Griffith and his nine-year-old brother Jeffrey, who were visiting their grandmother at Neillsville, Wis., dug a "cave" under a retaining wall and a pile of sand and salt near the county garage. When Griffith crawled into the hole, the cave collapsed, burying him completely.

Jeffrey ran for help and met Darling who immediately began digging for the boy. Continuing his search for additional rescuers, he found the five other members of the local in the garage and they responded to his pleas. •

AFL-CIO Offers Scholarships for Members' Children

The AFL-CIO is offering four-year merit scholarships for college to sons and daughters of AFL-CIO members who are now either second semester juniors or first semester seniors in high school.

Those who wish to qualify for a scholarship must arrange to take the Merit Scholarship examination at their local high schools.

If the local high school principal cannot make the examination available, arrangements can be made for students to take the examination individually. This may be done by writing to the National Merit Scholarship Corporation, 1580 Sherman Avenue, Evanston, Ill.

These examinations are the competition for the 1960 scholarships.

California Council 20 Honors Ed. F. Lingo

• A number of speakers lauded the successful efforts of Ed F. Lingo of the AFL-CIO California-Nevada regional office in organizing public employees in the Los Angeles area, at a dinner in his honor held recently by Southern California District Council 20.

The event was the Council's 1958 awards dinner, at which Lingo was presented with a Lord Elgin watch for his efforts which covered a two-year period.

During this time most of Lingo's efforts were devoted to assisting International Organizer Hugh MacColl in strengthening or setting up locals. Typical of the success of their endeavors has been the growth of Long Beach City and County Employees Local 112 from 35 to 400 members in the past year.

Brother MacColl lauded Lingo for his devotion to honest, effective and democratic trade unionism. Other speakers who had words of high praise for Lingo included International Vice President Otto Hahn, Regional Director Daniel J. Scannell, Council President Walter Murphy and Assistant AFL-CIO Regional Director Irwin DeShetler. •

AWARD: AFSCME Regional Director Daniel J. Scannell (left) congratulates Ed F. Lingo of the AFL-CIO regional office on receiving the award at the 1958 awards dinner of Southern California District Council 20 for his assistance in organizing public employees in the Los Angeles area. Council President Walter Murphy (second from the left) and Assistant AFL-CIO Regional Director Irwin DeShetler beam their approval. AFSCME Vice President Otto Hahn does not appear in the photo, but was one of the speakers.

Canal Zone Locals Appeal For Equality in Pay Scales

• A committee from Locals 900 and 907, AFSCME, AFL-CIO, representing employees of the Panama Canal Company, Canal Zone Government and civilian employees of the Canal Zone Armed Forces, urged that the new Canal Zone Single Wage Scale and Merit System be modified to bring wages closer to Civil Service scales and to give non-U. S. citizens more equal opportunity.

The appeal was made in a meeting with a committee from Washington headed by Rocco Siciliano, special assistant to President Eisenhower, and including Joseph E. Winslow, assistant to Mr. Siciliano; Warren Irons, executive director of the Civil Service Commission, and Robert H. Willey, deputy chief of staff of personnel of the Army.

The Siciliano committee visited the Canal Zone to investigate personnel issues of the area for the President. The union committee, headed by Bill Sinclair, International organizer; Harold Rerrie, chairman of Local 900, and Victor M. Franco, vice president of Local 907, endorsed the Canal Zone Merit System as a sound basis from which to start, but offered several suggestions for consideration.

NOTING that the Canal Zone Merit System must conform generally to policies, principles and standards established by or in accordance with the Civil Service Act, the locals recommended that all jobs under the new system should be paid for at rates equal to those provided under the Civil Service Act. The compensation of lower level jobs is at rates based on conditions prevailing in Panama. The superior standards of the Civil Service Act are used as the yardstick to qualify for jobs. This disparity was called inequitable by the committee.

It was noted that all U. S. Rate employees of the Canal Zone received a minimum wage increase of 10 percent to meet the rise in the cost of living, but Canal Zone Rate employees received no increase.

The union committee also urged that the difference in base pay between security positions and other Canal Zone Rate Positions be modified.

IT ALSO WAS suggested that in the conversion of jobs held by Canal Zone Rate employees of the Armed Forces, equal in every way except pay rates to U. S. Rate employees, to the Canal Zone Merit System, the jobs should be slotted into the equivalent grade and step level that they held under the old system.

The committee, while endorsing a proposed promotion policy, asked that full credit for experience and training acquired while in service or otherwise, for which there is no formal measure, should be given in addition to passing a qualifying examination. This, the union committee said, would give non-U. S. citizen employees a fairer opportunity for employment and traning than has been given them in the past. •

WHAT OUR UNION HAS ACCOMPLISHED

COLORADO

Pueblo Water Works Employees Local 1045, which obtained its first working agreement with the Pueblo Water Board last September, won as of Jan. 1 a 2.147 percent cost-of-living increase and $2,000 life insurance, with all but 50 cents of its monthly premium paid by the board. Some 90 percent of the water works employees belong to the local, which held a Christmas party for 300 persons which so impressed the board that it decided to pay for the event annually.

IOWA

Davenport, Iowa, Police Department Employees Local 1436 has won check-off of union dues, three weeks of paid vacation and a clothing allowance for its members. The wage committee of the Davenport Police Department and the Davenport City Council granted these demands after negotiations with union officials led by International Organizer C. "Tiny" Groeteke.

MINNESOTA

The non-instructional employees of Independent School District No. 697, Eveleth, Minnesota, voted 39 to 2 to name the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees their representative for collective bargaining purposes.

The consent election was conducted by the State Labor Conciliator on February 18, 1959.

NEW YORK

Troy, N. Y., City Employees Local 858 has succeeded in negotiating a blanket raise of $200 a year, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1959, for city employees. This increase represents a wage adjustment of .096c an hour. Officers of the local are Daniel A. De Deo, president and secretary; Joseph Riggione, vice president; William Malone, treasurer.

OHIO

Thanks to the work of Barberton, Ohio, City Employees Local 265, all school employees, non-teaching personnel as well as teachers, have received a 5 percent wage increase. The local is now working to secure fringe benefits, hospitalization, medical and life coverage for school system employees.

WASHINGTON

Pay raises ranging from $17.25 to $61.75 a month were won for Clark County road employees by Clark County and Municipal Employees Local 307 in negotiations with county authorities. Some adjustments in wage classifications also were obtained.

WISCONSIN

The campaign to promote payroll deduction of union dues for members of Wisconsin State Tax Commission Employees Local 91, Milwaukee, has been successful. Officials of the Commission have agreed to the plan.

Local 91 also has launched a vigorous campaign to enroll new members.

Please include the name and number of your local.

Sign of the Times

Sign in a New York subway: ECIDUJERP—spelled backward that's PREJUDICE.

Either way, it doesn't make sense.

Union Playing Card Discount Offered

You may now obtain your own union playing cards at a 15 percent discount if you order in lots of 50 decks or more.

These playing cards with a picture of our International headquarters building on their backs are of the highest grade. Normally they would sell for $1.50 on trains and in hotels, but our regular price is $1 a deck. On orders of 50 or more decks, the price is reduced to 85 cents per deck.

On individual orders, please send cash. Local union officers may be billed if ordering in quantity for their locals.

CHECK: H. L. McCrorie, international organizer, presents a check for $500 to Mrs. Hazel Newman Shaw, widow of Henry Shaw who died in November, 1958. On the left is Mr. C. P. Shaw, brother of the deceased. Brother Shaw died after the Charlotte city council had ordered Charlotte, N. C., Area Law Enforcement Officers Local 1492 to disband. The life insurance benefit was paid despite the city's attempt to put the local union out of business. Legal action by the union is now pending in the North Carolina courts.

NEWS IN BRIEF from all over

INSTALLATION: President J. O. Moore of Atlanta, Ga., Labor Council, AFL-CIO, recently installed F. T. Farran as president of Fulton County Courthouse Employees Local 315, Atlanta, and other officers. Brother Farran succeeded Leon G. Hay, who is an International vice president. Other officers installed are: John W. Walton, secretary treasurer; O. C. Puckett, first vice president; Mrs. Grace Alvarez, second vice president; Mrs. Lillian Austin, third vice president, and William B. Kimble, sergeant at arms.

ELECTION: Balboa, Panama Canal Railroad and Federal Employees Local 900 conducted general elections in February. The following officers were elected for one year terms: Harold W. Rerrie, president; Saturnin Mauge, vice president; Peter Alexis, Atlantic region vice president; Philip Walker, Pacific region vice president; Reginald Callender, executive secretary; Sylvester Callender, treasurer; George Rowland, Atlantic region secretary; Mola Alphonse, Pacific region secretary; Charles Edwards, Richard Chilcott and Florence Thomas, local union trustees.

DRIVE: An organizing campaign of Kenosha County, Wis., Courthouse Employees Local 990 is off to a flying start. June Baysinger was appointed treasurer at the January meeting, succeeding Karen Ricci. Other officers are Dominick Meo, president; Marjorie Chambers, vice president and Jean Carboni, secretary.

DINNER: Assemblyman Edwin C. Rohl and several members of the road and bridge committee of Pierce County Board joined some 150 members of Pierce County, Wis., Highway Department Employees Local 556 and their wives at the annual family get-together of the local held at Ellsworth recently. Joe Magnuson showed colored slides taken during his recent trip to Europe. Mrs. Charles Meehans was in charge of cooking a chicken and ham dinner. Officers of the local are Milton Johnson, president; Edwin Larson, vice president, and Warner Hudson, secretary treasurer.

ELECTIONS: Maybury, Mich., T. B. Sanatorium Employees Local 209 has held elections. The following officers were elected: Herbert G. Smith, president; Frances Coppage, first vice president; John Hyrb, second vice president; Ivanona Bradfor, recording secretary; Howard Moyer, treasurer; William Clyde Wendover, sergeant at arms; Silas Harrison, trustee.

CONVALESCENT: AFSCME Education Director John P. Caldwell, who was stricken with an infection of the sac which contains the heart a month ago, is convalescing at Northwestern University Hospital in Minneapolis. He is expected to be recovered sufficiently to go home early in April. His voluminous mail has been helpful.

SUBSCRIPTION: Detroit Water Board Employees Local 207 is now subscribing to the Detroit Labor News, the official organ of the Wayne County AFL-CIO. President James Manning and the officers of the local said that they hope to use a column in the paper to help to stimulate enough pressure to get their members and other city employees a much-needed pay raise.

RE-ELECTION: George J. Levine, president of State Insurance Fund Employees, New York City, Local 382, has been re-elected employee representative to the Review Board which determines appeals from service ratings in the State Insurance Fund. The Fund is a carrier of workmen's compensation operated by the state of New York. Brother Levine, a principal compensation claims examiner, is active in community affairs.

No 'Yoicks' From 'Tiny'

International Organizer, C. "Tiny" Groeteke, does not ride to the hounds, wearing the traditional red coat and yelling, "Yoicks," when he goes fox hunting.

He has his trusty car.

Driving near his home in a Springfield, Ill., suburb on a recent night, Tiny felt a sudden bump. "Gee," he thought, "I must have hit a dog." Eager to apply first aid, Brother Groeteke jumped from his car to discover that he had killed a large red fox, for which there is a bounty of $2.

Tiny cut off the animal's ears and gave them to his nine-year-old son Richard, who collected $2 from County Clerk Joe Thoman of Sangamon County (of which Springfield is the county seat). Richard added $8 to the bounty to make a $10 contribution to the March of Dimes.

Tally-ho, Tiny.

CHARTERED: Charles R. Smith (left) and James Leary (right), regional and assistant regional directors for the AFL-CIO in the Montana-Idaho area, present the AFSCME charter to the officers of Pocatello, Idaho, City Employees Local 1631. Examining their charter are Arthur W. Ricks, treasurer; C. J. Rainey, president, and Donald O. Davis, secretary. Smith told more than 30 members of the new local at the charter presentation that they are "pioneers," who would prompt other city employees in southeastern Idaho to follow their example.

AFSCME VICE PRESIDENTS

HENRY G. OSTHOLTHOFF JOINED A UNION AT THE AGE OF 17, THANKS TO THE URGING OF HIS FATHER, WHO OWNED AND OPERATED THE CARRIAGE AND WAGON FACTORY WHERE HE WAS FIRST EMPLOYED AS A BLACKSMITH'S HELPER. HENRY WORKED TEN HOURS A DAY, SIX DAYS A WEEK FOR A DOLLAR A DAY IN THOSE DAYS.

HE WAS BORN ON WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY, 1897, IN THE HEART OF CINCINNATI. IN 1917 YOUNG HENRY ENTERED THE ARMY AND SERVED IN THE MOTOR TRANSPORT CORPS. HIS EXPERIENCE THERE LED HIM TO BECOME AN AUTOMECHANIC, A TRADE WHICH HE HAS FOLLOWED EVER SINCE.

HENRY G. OSTHOLTHOFF

IN 1934 BROTHER OSTHOLTHOFF BEGAN WORK FOR THE CITY OF CINCINNATI AS AN AUTOMOTIVE REPAIRMAN. THREE YEARS LATER HE WAS AMONG THE EMPLOYEES WHO ORGANIZED AND AFFILIATED WITH THE MACHINIST'S UNION. HE BECAME ACTIVE AND WAS ELECTED PRESIDENT OF HIS GARAGE LOCAL. LATER HE BECAME PRESIDENT OF THE MACHINISTS' DISTRICT COUNCIL. HE HELD THESE POSITIONS UNTIL 1943, WHEN THE LOCAL AFTER CONSULTATION WITH THE IAM DECIDED THAT AFFILIATION WITH AFSCME WOULD SERVE THEIR INTERESTS.

THEY RECEIVED A CHARTER AS MUNICIPAL GARAGE AND SAFETY LANE EMPLOYEES LOCAL 190. BROTHER OSTHOLTHOFF WAS ELECTED PRESIDENT OF THE LOCAL AND HAS SERVED IN VARIOUS OFFICES EVER SINCE.

WHEN, IN 1945, DISTRICT COUNCIL 51 WAS CHARTERED, HE SERVED AS ITS VICE PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY. OVER THE YEARS HE HAS WATCHED THE COUNCIL GROW FROM 500 MEMBERS TO 4,000.

HE HAS SERVED FOUR TWO-YEAR TERMS ON THE INTERNATIONAL BOARD, IS PRESIDENT OF OHIO LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL 8, SECRETARY OF DISTRICT COUNCIL 51 AND VICE PRESIDENT OF LOCAL 190.

MARIO DEMARCO

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

We Are

ORGANIZED

Forestville City and County

Employees Local 2500

American Federation of

State, County and Municipal Employees

AFL-CIO

the Union for Publ[illegible] [illegible]nployees

AFFILIATED WITH THE UNION LABEL & SERVIC[illegible] [illegible]PT., AFL-CIO

Printed on Union Made [illegible]

Like to have a union shop card like this for your local? Details on page 18.

'Fraternal' Ties to AFL-CIO

Teamster 'Raids' In State Charged By Employe Union

By ELLIOTT MARANISS

The leader of an AFL-CIO union of public employes charged in Madison today that several AFL-CIO central labor bodies are giving tacit support to extensive raiding operations by the Teamsters against his union.

This explosive charge was made by Robert J. Oberbeck, executive director of the Wisconsin Council of County and Municipal Employes, AFL-CIO. The Council with offices in Madison, is an affiliate of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes.

Oberbeck said his union had lost locals to the Teamsters in Green Bay, Oshkosh and Manitowoc.

"They are attempting to raid us in Superior, Wausau, Fond du Lac and Eau Claire," he added.

In several of these cities, Oberbeck said, the Teamsters are being aided by the continuing relationships with AFL-CIO central labor bodies.

Robert J. Oberbeck

Teamster locals in many Wisconsin cities, he said, are still permitted to send representatives to meetings of AFL-CIO central labor bodies as "fraternal" or "social" delegates.

This arrangement, he added, is in quiet defiance of a national AFL-CIO directive that its affiliates sever all ties with the Teamsters Union, which has been ex-

(Continued on Page 10, Col. 1)

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

'Fraternal' Ties to AFL-CIO

Teamster 'Raids' In State Charged By Employe Union

(Continued from Page 1)

pelled from the AFL-CIO on charges of corrupt leadership.

Emmet E. Terry, president of Teamsters Joint Council No. 39, with headquarters in Milwaukee, denied that his union is "raiding" locals of public employees.

He said that in several Wisconsin cities, public employes who had formerly belonged to the AFL-CIO union, had asked to be chartered by the Teamsters because their former union "wasn't doing a thing for them."

"We're not particularly anxious to organize public employes, especially if they belong to unions which are doing an effective job," Terry said.

In other cities, such as Wausau and Fond du Lac, Terry said, the AFL-CIO union did not appear on the scene until after the Teamsters started a drive to sign up unorganized workers.

"Any time any workers come to us and ask to be organized we will do it," Terry asserted. "That's not raiding. That's just good trade unionism."

✦ ✦ ✦

Oberbeck's public airing of the "fraternal" relationship between some AFL-CIO central bodies and the Teamsters seems certain to kick up a storm.

He said he was reluctant to make a public issue of this relationship, but that he was left with "no choice."

"Our union is suffering because of this," he said. "In many cities in Wisconsin the Teamsters still have an important voice in the center labor bodies. They have managed to enlist the support of some of these bodies in their operations against us."

In other places, he added, the Teamsters have "neutralized" the support which the central labor bodies "might have given to our own organizing or holding operations."

✦ ✦ ✦

Oberbeck called the situation "intolerable." He said that a "disgraceful situation" in Wausau, where the Teamsters reportedly enlisted the active support of the president and secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO central labor body against his union was "the last straw."

Oberbeck said the "fraternal" or "social" delegate set-up was devised because of "fear of the power of the Teamsters", particularly by building trades unions of the AFL-CIO.

Another hold the Teamsters have over the central labor bodies, he continued, is the money they have invested in labor temple associations. In some cases, he said, is was Teamster money which swung the financing for the construction of new temples.

In several cities, such as Kenosha, Wausau, Fond du Lac, Oshkosh, Superior and Green Bay, he said, the Teamsters still have their offices in the central labor temple.

✦ ✦ ✦

Oberbeck said in Superior his AFL-CIO union some time ago had become the bargaining agent for two locals of city employes which at one time had been part of the Teamsters. He said the members had petitioned to become part of the AFL-CIO, and ing his appointment, but he did put in a phone call to the president of the Wausau federation urging him to support Oberbeck's union.

When Oberbeck appeared at the meeting he found a Teamster "social delegate" in attendance. Oberbeck was distressed with this but nevertheless made his appeal for help. After some discussion, the assembled delegates voted their official support to the organizing drive of Oberbeck's union.

At this point, the Teamster business agent walked out of the meeting "in a huff."

✦ ✦ ✦

When the meeting ended, Oberbeck was besieged by several delegates, who berated him for pushing his appeal to the point where it caused the rift with the Teamsters.

They were alarmed that the Teamsters would now withdraw a pledge of $21,000 toward the building of a new temple for the federation in Wausau.

Proceeding on the support voted at the meeting, Oberbeck sent a letter to all the municipal workers in Wausau, informing them of that action.

Some time later these same employes received a second mailing. This was from the Teamsters, and it contradicted Oberbeck's assertion that the central labor body had given support to the county and municipal workers' union.

✦ ✦ ✦

What particularly alarmed Oberbeck about this letter was the fact that it was signed not only by Teamster officials but also by the president and secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO central labor body in Wausau, both of whom were present when that body voted its support to Oberbeck's union.

Oberbeck said the help of all the AFL-CIO unions in the Wausau area was desperately needed by the County and Municipal Workers.

"Since we started organizing there, some 16 Wausau city employes, many with long seniority, had been fired," he said.

Oberbeck added that his union had filed protests with the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board and with the mayor of Wausau. So far, he said, the mayor has refused to transmit the union's protest to the City Council.

✦ ✦ ✦

Terry, however, offered a somewhat different version of the Wausau affair.

He said that Local 446 of the General Drivers and Helpers Union of the Teamsters, started the drive to organize those employes on April 15, 1959, "weeks before any other labor organization."

He said the only previous effort by the AFL-CIO union was "about two years ago, when it held a meeting attended by about 10 people."

After this meeting, Terry said, the AFL-CIO union left Wausau and "did not return until two years later, when these employes became interested in joining Local 446."

✦ ✦ ✦

He said that by May 25, 1959,

Kenosha, Wausau, Fond du Lac, Oshkosh, Superior and Green Bay, he said, the Teamsters still have their offices in the central labor temple.

✦ ✦ ✦

Oberbeck said in Superior his AFL-CIO union some time ago had become the bargaining agent for two locals of city employes which at one time had been part of the Teamsters. He said the members had petitioned to become part of the AFL-CIO, and had been accepted and chartered.

The Teamsters, he said, then started a drive to get the locals back. Oberbeck said he appeared before the central labor body in Superior in an effort to enlist its support in holding the locals.

✦ ✦ ✦

"What they did," he continued, "was to call in the business agent of the Teamsters Union, who was a 'social' delegate to the central body, and ask him to 'do something' about the situation,

The central labor body officers did nothing further in behalf of the AFL-CIO union, he said. Even worse, Oberbeck added, they allowed the Teamsters Union to continue as a "social" member while it stepped up its efforts to regain the two locals from the AFL-CIO union.

The comment by Terry of the Teamsters on this report was: "Who's raiding who?"

✦ ✦ ✦

"The Wausau story, however," Oberbeck added, "is even more sordid."

He summarized the Wausau situation as follows:

In January, of this year the County and Municipal Employes Union started a drive to organize employes of the Board of Public Works in Wausau. The union at one time had a local there but it had been disbanded. In May, the Teamsters also started a drive to organize the same workers.

Oberbeck made plans to appear at a meeting of the Wausau Central Labor Federation, AFL-CIO, to ask for its help. At the same time he appealed for help to the office of Charles Heymanns, regional director of the AFL-CIO, with offices in Milwaukee.

Heymanns promised to come to Wausau to appear at the meeting with Oberbeck. Other business prevented Heymanns from keep-any other labor organization."

He said the only previous effort by the AFL-CIO union was "about two years ago, when it held a meeting attended by about 10 people."

After this meeting, Terry said, the AFL-CIO union left Wausau and "did not return until two years later, when these employes became interested in joining Local 446."

✦ ✦ ✦

He said that by May 25, 1959, Local 446 had more than 100 signed applications from the workers, who included drivers and helpers of garbage trucks, and sanitation, sewerage, street, and park employes.

He said Local 446 had asked the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board to conduct a "courtesy" election, by secret ballot among the public employes, that the AFL-CIO union was also invited to appear on the ballot, but that it refused to do.

This election, incidentally, has not yet been held, because permission has not been granted by the Wausau City Council.

✦ ✦ ✦

In Green Bay, Oberbeck charged his union lost an entire local of school employes to the Teamsters because of "intimidation'" by a Teamsters official who was also a member of the Green Bay school board.

"This man," Oberbeck asserted, "called in the leaders of the union and told them tthe school board would not negotiate with them unless they pulled out of our union.

"The next thing we knew they had been chartered by the Teamsters."

In Green Bay, he said, Teamsters are "fraternal delegates" to the AFL-CIO central labor body.

✦ ✦ ✦

Terry, on the other hand, denied that the Teamsters got the Green Bay local through "intimidation."

"It was simply a case of the old union disintegrating because nothing was done for the members", he said.

✦ ✦ ✦

Oberbeck said the president of his parent union, Arnold Zander, of Washington, has protested to George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, about the actions of the central labor bodies in continuing relations with the Teamsters.

A directive of the AFL-CIO to all central bodies, issued in 1957, ordered them to break off dealings with the Teamsters. Implementation of this directive, however, has proceeded even more slowly than an earlier directive ordering the former separate bodies of the AFL and the CIO to merge into single units.

In Madison, the Madison Federation of Labor, has never completely severed its ties with the Teamsters. By official resolution of the Federation, the Teamsters have been "welcomed as fraternal delegates" to Federation meetings.

Fraternal delegates pay no dues and have no vote. They may, however, speak on the floor and take part in the deliberations. In Madison, the new Labor Temple was built with no financial help from the Teamsters.

In justification of their position, the leaders of many Wisconsin central labor bodies assert that Wisconsin Teamsters are different from thosein other states.

The Union for Public Employees

E. V. a

As amended in Convention
Denver, Colorado
April 27-May 1, 1964

Constitution

of the American Federation of STATE, COUNTY and MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES

Affiliated with

THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR and CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

Wisconsin Administrative Code

RULES OF PERSONNEL BOARD

1964

CIVIL SERVICE RULES ARE THE STATE EMPLOYEES' WORKING AGREEMENT

Save This Copy For Reference

WSEA

PERS 1

Pers 1.01 DEFINITIONS. In these rules:

(1) "Appointing Officer" means the officer, commission, board or body, having the power of appointment, or election to, or removal from, subordinate positions in any office, department, commission, board or institution. An appointing officer may delegate the power of appointment to subordinate officers providing such delegated authority is in writing and a copy is filed with the Director of Personnel.

(2) "Board" means the State Personnel Board.

(3) "Bureau" means Bureau of Personnel.

(4) "Department" means any officer whose office is created by constitution or statute, or any agency so created, except legislative and judicial officers and agencies and offices and agencies created within departments as here defined.

(5) "Director" means Director of Personnel.

(6) "Employe" means any person holding a subordinate position subject to appointment, removal, promotion or reduction by any appointing officer.

PERS 2

Pers 2.01 DEFINITION.

The listing of classes in effect as identified by class titles in the bureau's Classification and Compensation Plan For Positions In The Classified Service and as described in class specifications shall constitute the classification plan for all positions in the classified service. For the purpose of these rules, class and classification are synonymous.

Pers 2.02 REVISION OF THE CLASSIFICATION PLAN.

The Director shall submit to the Board requests for amendments to or revision of the classification plan to meet the needs of the various state agencies. These shall include the creation of new classes, abolishment of existing classes, and changes in concept of classes, which result in changes in allocation patterns, changes in the allocation of positions or changes in the kind or level of qualifications. The Board may approve such requests after taking into consideration the recommendations of the Director. Such action shall be recorded in the minutes of the Board.

Pers 2.03 CLASS TITLES.

(1) The title of a class shall be the official title of every position allocated to that class and shall be used in all reports, payrolls, and in all estimates requesting the appropriation of money for personal services.

(2) Any title, other than the official title, desired by the appointing officer may be used to designate any position for purposes of internal administration and in other connections not involving the personnel processes covered by the law or these rules.

(3) When the unique character and qualifications of one or more positions in a class requires the use of subtitles, all personnel transactions shall be based on the classification and subtitle. Recruitment, examination and use of the employment list will be set up for the class and subtitle. The payroll title of appointees, and subsequent personnel actions such as transfer or layoff will also be based on class and subtitle.

Pers 2.04 CLASS SPECIFICATIONS.

(1) Definition. Class specifications shall consist of three major parts: Title; Position standards; and Qualification standards.

(a) Class titles shall be used as described in Pers. 2.03.

(b) Position standards shall include any or all of the following: subtitles, areas of specialization, definition, nature, character and examples of work performed; allocation patterns, standards and factors; and such other information to facilitate allocation of positions to the appropriate classification. These position standards are descriptive and not restrictive, and they shall not be construed to limit or modify the power of the appointing officer to assign tasks or direct or control the work of employes under his supervision. The use of particular examples shall not be held to exclude others not mentioned that are of a similar kind or level, and are not to imply that all those mentioned must be performed by all persons whose positions are so classified.

(c) Qualifications standards shall contain a description of the desirable knowledges, skills, abilities, educational requirements, training requirements, experience requirements or any such other credentials which a person should possess to insure reasonable prospects of success in the position, area of specialization, subtitle, or class as described in the position standards. These standards shall be considered basic guidelines and shall not preclude more definitive nor more general statements in recruitment announcements, providing that the kind and level of qualifications are not decreased.

(2) Force and Effect of Class Specifications and Their Various Parts.

(a) The position standards part of the specifications shall be the basic authority for the allocation of positions to a class and the qualification standards shall be the source of authority for all phases of the selection process for any class or position therein.

(b) Qualifications commonly required of incumbents of positions of different classes, such as acceptable physical condition, freedom from disabling defects, United States citizenship, and residence within the state of Wisconsin except as otherwise provided in the law or rules, honesty, sobriety, and industry, shall be implied as qualification requirements for all classes even though they are not specifically mentioned in the specifications.

PERS 3

Pers 3.01 ESTABLISHING, ABOLISHING OR DISCONTINUING A POSITION.

(1) Establishing a Position.

(a) If an appointing officer has made budgetary provisions for a new position in his department and desires to fill the position, he shall make formal request, describe the duties and responsibilities of the position and provide other pertinent information requested by the director.

(b) The director shall then allocate the position to the appropriate class and enter it on the departmental establishment list.

(2) Abolishing Or Discontinuing A Position.

(a) The director shall remove a position from the department's establishment list upon recommendation of the appointing officer.

(b) Any position vacant for one year shall be dropped from the departmental establishment list unless the appointing officer gives reasons acceptable to the director for retaining it.

Pers 3.02 ALLOCATION, REALLOCATION; DEFINITIONS.

(1) Allocation. The initial assignment of a position to the appropriate class in the classification plan by the director as provided in subsection 16.105(1m), Wis. Stats.

(2) Reallocation. The assignment of a position to a different class in the classification plan by the director as provided in subsection 16.105 (1m), Wis. Stats. based upon:

(a) Changes in the duties and responsibilities of a position. (Referred to as a reclassification).

(b) A change in concept of the class or series.

(c) The creation of new classes.

(d) Abolishment of existing classes.

(e) The reappraisal of the level of the class in terms of the total service.

(f) Selected classifications where the levels are differentiated by attainment of specified training and experience.

(g) The reassignment of a class to a different salary range.

(h) Any other circumstances covered by subsection 16.105 (1m), Wis. Stats.

Pers 3.03 REALLOCATION OF POSITIONS.

(1) Appointing officers shall give notice in writing to the director of material changes of a permanent nature in the duties and responsibilities of positions. If the facts warrant, the director shall reclassify or otherwise reallocate the position. Normally, filled positions will not be reclassified until the incumbents have carried the responsibilities for a period of at least 6 months.

(2) A competitive promotional examination may be required to fill a position reclassified or otherwise reallocated to a higher level when the director determines that the position should have originally been filled by promotion.

(3) The director may initiate classification surveys as may be required to meet the needs of the service. Positions covered by such surveys shall be reallocated by the director to the appropriate classification whenever he finds such action warranted.

(4) A competitive examination is required to fill certain reallocated positions. See section Pers. 7.03.

(5) Whenever the director determines that positions are overclassified, appropriate action shall be taken as follows:

(a) If the incumbent of such position does not have permanent status in the position, the position shall be immediately reallocated to the proper classification.

(b) If the incumbent has permanent status in the position and his present salary is the same or less than the maximum of the salary range for the proper classification, the position shall immediately be reallocated to such proper classification.

(c) If the incumbent has permanent status in the position and his present salary is above the maximum of the salary range for the proper classification, the reallocation of his position shall be held in abeyance for one calendar year and no salary increases shall be given the incumbent during this period. Upon the expiration of the one year period the position shall be reallocated to the proper classification and the incumbent's salary adjusted to the maximum of the salary range for such proper classification.

(d) In any such action, every effort shall be made by the appointing officer and the bureau to transfer the employe to a position for which he is qualified. Any such employe, with approval of the director, shall be placed on the appropriate employment lists.

Pers 3.04 REALLOCATION APPEALS.

Whenever a position is reclassified or otherwise reallocated, the appointing officer and the incumbent shall be notified in writing. If the employe or appointing officer believes the classification action to be incorrect on the basis that the class specification on which the action was based does not adequately reflect the duties and responsibilities of the position, he shall, upon written request, be entitled to an appeal from such action provided that a notice of such appeal is received by the board not more than 10 calendar days after receipt of notice of such action. The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to subsection 16.05 (1), Wis. Stats. within the time limitations consistent with section Pers 23.02.

PERS 4

Pers 4.01 DEFINITION.

The compensation plan in effect as identified in the Classification and Compensation Plan For Positions In The Classified Service published by the bureau composed of the various salary schedules, rates and ranges as approved pursuant to subsection 16.105 (4), Wis. Stats. together with amendments and revisions shall constitute the official compensation plan for all positions in the classified service.

Pers 4.02 AMENDMENTS TO THE COMPENSATION PLAN

(1) Creation of a new class in the classification plan provided in section Pers 2.02 and the subsequent assignment of this class to an existing salary schedule and range shall, before becoming effective, be approved by the board after taking into consideration the recommendation of the director.

(2) For the reassignment of a class to a different salary range see subsection 16.105 (4), Wis. Stats.

PERS 5

Pers 5.01 BEGINNING SALARY.

(1) Initial Rate To Be Paid.

(a) The lowest or initial rate in the salary range shall be the rate payable to any person on first appointment to a position in the class except as otherwise provided.

(b) When economic and employment conditions make it exceedingly difficult to fill vacancies in a given class at the initial rate, the board may approve a higher rate in the range after taking into consideration the recommendation of the director.

(c) Where unique special professional training and experience are required to fill a specified vacancy, the board after taking into consideration the recommendation of the director at the request of the employing department may approve a rate above the minimum for recruiting and hiring.

(2) For salary on promotion, reclassification, transfer, reinstatement, demotion and for trainees and Intern Classes see chapters Pers 14, 15, 16, 17, and 20 respectively.

Pers 5.02 FULL-TIME AND PART-TIME SERVICE

Rates prescribed in the compensation plan for permanent and seasonal positions are the rates authorized for full-time employment. When employment regularly equals or exceeds half-time on a daily, weekly or monthly basis, the proportionate part of the rate shall be paid. When employment is less than half-time on a daily, weekly or monthly basis the rate paid shall be according to the salary schedule for limited term employment.

Pers 5.03 SALARY INCREASES.

(1) A probationary increase of one step shall be granted pursuant to subsection 16.105 (2)(d), Wis. Stats. effective at the beginning of the pay period following completion of the first 6 months of the probationary period.

(2) Merit increases, see subsections 16.105 (2)(c) and (e), 16.25 and 20.931, Wis. Stats.

(a) Scope. In accordance with subsection 16.105 (2)-(c) 2 Wis. Stats., the Bureau shall develop a guide to assist departments in the equitable distribution of merit increases.

(b) Policy. To establish a system of employe evaluation through performance standards to aid in assuring that merit increases should be based on meritorious service and provide justification to the employe for either the award or denial of merit increases.

(c) Application. Each department shall adopt a plan for the distribution of merit increases to accomplish the legislative intent and the policy expressed in this rule. The plan thus adopted may be the guide drawn up by the Bureau or it may be one drafted by the given department to fit its own needs and circumstances.

(d) Reporting. Appointing officers shall report to the Director their plan for granting merit increases, including method and procedures, and furnish any supplementary forms or related information as the Director may require for his evaluation and presentation to the Board on the operation of the state's merit increase program.

(3) Salary increases or decreases resulting from position reallocation or reclassification shall normally be effective at the beginning of the pay period following completion of the transaction.

(4) Except for action in accordance with subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats., or to correct an error, no salary increases or decreases shall be retroactive.

(5) When a position is reallocated pursuant to Pers. 3.02 (2)(a) and (f) to a classification in a salary range with a higher maximum, the incumbent who holds that position and is authorized to perform the duties of the class to which the position is reallocated, shall receive a salary increase to the minimum of the new class or a one step increase, whichever is greater.

(6) Where applicable, salary adjustments resulting from personnel transactions that have the same effective date shall be made and occur in the following order:

1 reallocation
2 reclassification
3 probationary increase
4 promotional increase
5 merit increase

Pers 5.04 BASIC SALARY.

The term basic salary means the salary rate excluding any overtime or other additional compensation.

Pers 5.05 INJURY WHILE ON HAZARDOUS DUTY.

Certain employes injured while performing hazardous duties as defined in section 16.31, Wis. Stats., and who are unable to work may continue to receive their full monthly salary for not to exceed 3 months. Claim shall be made by the employe or his representative to his appointing officer on forms provided by the bureau. Within 10 calendar days after receipt of the claim the appointing officer shall notify the employe and the director in writing of his decision to authorize or deny the claim. The employe may appeal the decision of the appointing officer to the board within 10 calendar days after receipt of the appointing officer's decision.

Pers 5.06 EFFECT OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

(1) During the period an employe is absent from work due to injury from state employment and is awaiting a determination under chapter 102, Wis. Stats., the employe personally or through his representative may elect to:

(a) Use sick leave credits to cover loss of earnings, or await payment of workmen's compensation, or

(b) Use vacation credits to cover loss of earnings until eligibility for workmen's compensation is determined.

(2) The employe shall give written notification to the employing department of the elected manner of payment for such absence before the end of the pay period in which the absence occurs.

(3) In instances where vacation credits have been used to cover an absence which is later found compensable, the appointing officer shall, if requested by the employe, provide leave without pay on a day for day basis, with such leave to be taken in accordance with subsection Pers 18.02 (6).

(4) If the employe elects to await workmen's compensation and the claim is later found non-compensable, sick leave and vacation credits may be used for the absence.

Pers 5.07 MAINTENANCE ALLOWANCE.

Where full or part maintenance such as laundry, meals, lodging or quarters is furnished for the employe or the employe and his family, the employe shall be charged for the value of the allowance as established by the bureau based upon recommendation made by the employing departments. Any exception to this policy shall require the approval of the director. The bureau shall review these rates as required.

Pers 5.08 COMPENSATION FROM OTHER SOURCES.

Regardless of the source of funds, all compensation for services in a given position shall be combined to the end that the total compensation of any employe for any period shall not exceed the amount payable at the rate prescribed for the class of position concerned.

Pers 5.09 OVERTIME.

(1) Definition Of Overtime. Time that an employe is compensated for working in the capacity of his own classification in the same department in excess of required working hours pursuant to subsection 16.275 (7), Wis. Stats. and these rules.

(2) Policy On Overtime.

(a) It is the policy of the state to reduce to a minimum the necessity for overtime work.

(b) Compensation for overtime work shall normally be by compensatory time off.

(c) Overtime shall be compensated as provided in the state's compensation plan.

(d) Overtime work that is to be paid for in cash or by compensatory time off shall normally be on an hour for hour basis.

(e) All overtime payments shall be separately recorded on the payroll.

(f) Where compensatory time off is granted for overtime work it shall be taken within 6 calendar months after it has been earned.

(g) Any additional salary shall cease to be payable without the right of appeal whenever the employe's scheduled hours of work are reduced to the normal level.

(h) All overtime work for either compensatory time off or for cash payment must be authorized by the appointing officer. For classes in salary Schedule 1, range 12, and above, and classes in Schedules 4 and 5, approval of the Director is also required for overtime that is compensated by cash payment.

Pers 5.10 ADDITIONAL EMPLOYMENT.

(1) Definition. Additional employment is of 2 types:

(a) Employment in the same employing unit but in a different class of position than that of the employe's regular position.

(b) Employment in a different employing unit of the same department or in a different department in the same or different class of position than that of the employe's regular position.

(2) Policy on Additional Employment. The policy on additional employment shall be consistent, where applicable, with that expressed on overtime.

(3) Processing. Additional employment shall be processed as limited term employment and subject to the provisions of chapter Pers 10.

Pers 5.11 DEVIATIONS.

(1) Definition. Where the conditions of employment cannot be fulfilled by adhering to the standard work week provided in subsection 16.275 (7), Wis. Stats.

(2) Compensation For Deviation Work Weeks. Compensation for such work weeks shall be as provided for in the state's compensation plan.

(3) Approval Required. Requests for deviation work weeks shall be submitted by the appointing officer to the Department of Administration, attn. Bureau of Personnel, for the director's prior approval. Such requests shall define the extent and duration of the deviation, and contain a recommendation as to pay for the additional time required, and personnel by name and classification who will be included. Before submitting such requests the appointing officer shall make the necessary budgetary provisions.

(4) Reporting and Recording Pay For Deviation Work Weeks.

(a) Approval is for the length of the period specified and if on continuous basis shall coincide with the fiscal year.

(b) Any additional pay authorized for deviation work weeks shall be separately recorded on the payroll.

(c) Any additional salary shall cease to be payable without the right of appeal whenever the employe's scheduled hours of work are reduced to the standard basis of employment.

Pers 5.12 SUPERVISORY PAY; RESPONSIBILITY PAY

Supervisory pay as provided in the teacher's salary schedule and responsibility pay as provided in the physician's salary schedule shall be separately recorded by the director and by the employing department, and shall cease to be payable, without the right of appeal whenever the supervisory duties or program responsibilities cease.

Pers 5.13 PAY FOR JURY DUTY.

See subsection 16.275 (5), Wis. Stats.

Pers 5.14 AUDIT OF RECORDS.

As provided in subsection 16.05 (3) and section 16.26, Wis. Stats. the director shall have access to all records kept by departments relating to personnel and employment processes.

Pers 5.15 EMPLOYMENT INTERVIEW TRAVEL EXPENSES.

As provided by subsection 20.940 (3), Wis. Stats. an applicant who is eligible for selection for employment may be reimbursed for all or part of his actual and necessary travel expenses incurred in connection with an employment interview by the employing department provided:

(1) The position is of a professional or technical nature, and

(2) A critical shortage exists of persons eligible for selection, and

(3) Prior authorization for such reimbursement has been obtained from the director.

Pers 5.16 TOTAL REMUNERATION.

The rates of pay prescribed shall be deemed to include pay in every form EXCEPT: approved overtime; lawful reimbursement for necessary expenses authorized and incurred incident to the employment; special equipment; clothing; or services considered necessary for performance of the job.

PERS 6

Pers 6.01 POLICY.

To insure employment of the best qualified persons to serve the state, recruitment shall be conducted to attract the highest caliber of persons available and examinations shall be administered to determine the merit and fitness of these persons.

Pers 6.02 DELEGATION OF RECRUITMENT.

In exceptional cases the director may delegate authority for recruitment to appointing officers. Publicity and advertising materials used in such delegated recruitment shall be subject to prior approval by the director.

Pers 6.03 DESIGNATION OF LOCAL EXAMINERS.

The director may designate local examiners pursuant to subsection 16.10 (2), Wis. Stats.

Pers 6.04 ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXAMINATIONS.

(1) Scope of Announcements. Examination announcements shall include the following information: class title; salary information; nature of the work to be performed; training and experience; time, place and manner of filing application; special requirements, if any; and other pertinent information consistent with these rules. Announcements of open competitive examinations shall specify when competition is open to nonresidents. Announcements shall precede all examinations.

(2) Insufficient Number of Qualified Applicants. In the event that a sufficient number of qualified applicants fail to apply for an examination or to qualify after the examination, the director may reannounce the examination, extend the date for filing of applications, or if necessary cancel the examination.

(3) An employment list for a high level, administrative or professional class shall be used for all vacancies in the class, except that in broad, general classifications, the director may authorize new recruitment and examination to fill a subsequent vacancy in that class when substantial differences in geographic location, program emphasis or other recognized employment considerations could be expected to attract new applicants who may be best qualified for the position. Eligibles on the existing employment list shall be notified so they may, if they are interested, compete for the position.

Pers 6.05 SUBSTITUTION FOR FORMAL EDUCATION.

When formal academic training is a qualification requirement, equivalent training and experience may be substituted; except that such substitution shall not be permitted where formal training is required for license or registration to practice or to establish recognized status in a profession or to meet standards set up by agencies making grants-in-aid or otherwise contributing to state programs.

Pers 6.06 COMPOSITION OF EXAMINATIONS.

(1) Open Competitive. Any examination may include a written test, an oral test, ratings of training and experience, a performance test, a medical or physical test or any combination of these and other tests as authorized by the director.

(2) Competitive Promotional. A promotional examination may also include promotional potential ratings in addition to tests and ratings as indicated in subsection Pers. 6.06 (1) and shall include seniority ratings computed as indicated in chapter Pers 19. If a promotional potential rating is to be used as part of a competitive promotional examination, the determination shall be made prior to the written, oral, review of training and experience examination, whichever occurs first.

Pers 6.07 NOTICE OF EXAMINATION RATINGS.

Each person competing in any examination shall be given written notice of the final results.

Pers 6.08 REVIEW OF EXAMINATION RESULTS.

Any examinee, or his duly authorized representative, shall be permitted to review the results of his examination at the bureau during regular office hours and the method by which such results were determined, upon written request filed in person or by his representative. However, an examinee may not review his examination papers during a 30 day period immediately preceding the date on which he is to write an examination for the same or a closely related class; and no review of results is permitted until the examination is completed. Reports on character and of other investigations by the bureau shall be kept confidential.

Pers 6.09 ANONYMITY OF COMPETITORS AND SECURITY OF EXAMINATION MATERIAL.

The director shall use appropriate means to insure that examination papers are not identified until the grading of the written examination is complete and to insure that unauthorized persons do not have access to examinations at any time.

PERS 7

Pers 7.01 ESTABLISHMENT OF EMPLOYMENT LISTS.

For positions involving unskilled or semi-skilled labor, or domestic or custodial work when the character or place of work makes it impracticable to conduct state-wide competitive examinations to set up lists from which to supply the needs of the service, the director may use such procedures as he determines to be practical and appropriate in order to maintain employment lists by localities.

Pers 7.02 EXAMINATION OF APPLICANTS.

Applicants may be examined singly or in groups, at periodic intervals at the place of employment or elsewhere, after passing an appropriate test or submitting satisfactory evidence of their qualifications; or referred by the Wisconsin State Employment Service or an established city or county merit system agency in this state; or evaluated by such variation or combination of the foregoing or by other suitable methods as will assure selection solely on the basis of merit and fitness.

Pers 7.03 EMPLOYE INELIGIBLE TO CONTINUE IN POSITION.

(1) Any employe appointed under this chapter who is later found to be performing work characteristic of positions not included under this chapter shall be ineligible to continue in the position. Such incumbent shall be transferred to a position for which he is eligible or he shall be dropped from the payroll.

(2) Any such employe whose position is reallocated or reclassified to a position in a different class having a greater salary range maximum shall be eligible to compete in any open competitive or promotional examination held to fill this position. The transaction by which an employe appointed to the reallocated or reclassified position following such competitive examination shall be deemed a promotion as covered in chapter Pers 14.

PERS 8

Pers 8.01 DESIGNATION BY DIRECTOR.

The director shall designate positions and employment in the classified service as permanent, seasonal, limited term or sessional.

Pers 8.02 KINDS OF EMPLOYMENT.

Generally the characteristics of each kind of position and employment are:

(1) Permanent. Authorized positions of continuous duration that require the services of an employe half-time or more on a daily, weekly or monthly basis. In addition, employment in school year positions shall be designated as permanent.

(2) Seasonal.

(a) Criteria. Authorized positions that meet the following criteria: where the need for such positions may be reasonably anticipated; which recur yearly or more often; where employment in such positions would normally lead to a career through successive reinstatements; and which require the services of an employe half-time or more on a daily, weekly or monthly basis. See chapter Pers 9.

(b) Limitation. Employment of any person on a seasonal basis shall not exceed 11 months in any 12 month period.

(c) Exception. The director may designate positions which recur and are of extremely short duration and lack career possibilities as limited term.

(3) Limited Term. Positions where the nature and condition of employment do not lead to a career and where the use of normal procedures for recruitment and examination are not practicable. See chapter Pers 10.

(4) Sessional. Positions in the legislature as provided in the rules of each house or in the joint rules and positions in the legislative reference bureau, the duration of which is closely related to the duration of the legislative session, shall be designated as sessional.

Pers 8.03 DEFINITION OF APPOINTMENT.

An appointment is the action of an appointing officer to fill a position in his department in accordance with provisions of the law and these rules.

Pers 8.04 TYPES OF APPOINTMENT.

(1) In addition to appointments by promotion (see chapter Pers 14), transfer (see chapter Pers 15), reinstatement (see chapter Pers 16), demotion (see chapter Pers 17) and original appointments (see below) there are the following types of appointment:

(a) Provisional appointment as provided in subsection 16.20 (1), Wis. Stats.

(b) Emergency appointment as provided in subsection 16.20 (2), Wis. Stats.

(c) Exceptional appointment as provided in subsection 16.17 (4), Wis. Stats.

(d) Appointment to a limited term position as provided in subsection 16.20 (3), Wis. Stats. and in chapter Pers 10.

(2) Original appointment, definition. All appointments to positions that are not by promotion, demotion, transfer, or reinstatement as defined in appropriate chapters of these rules.

(3) An employe who has reinstatement eligibility other than from layoff (see chapter Pers 16) and who also has eligibility for original appointment in the same class, may be appointed on either basis at the discretion of the appointing officer, and such determination shall be reported to the director at the time of appointment.

Pers 8.05 LIMITATION OF TYPES OF APPOINTMENT.

(1) Length of Provisional and Emergency Appointment. A provisional appointment shall not exceed 30 work days. An emergency appointment shall not exceed 20 work days.

(2) Length of Limited Term Appointment. See chapter Pers 10.

(3) Successive Provisional and Emergency Appointments Prohibited. In no case shall successive provisional or successive emergency appointments be made in the same employing unit. The employe must be off the payroll for one complete calendar month before the emergency or provisional appointment may be repeated in the same employing unit.

Pers 806 STATUS OF EMPLOYE ON PROVISIONAL, EMERGENCY OR LIMITED TERM APPOINTMENT.

(1) No tenure accrues from any provisional, emergency or limited term appointment.

(2) Time served on any such appointment shall not be counted as part of any probationary period.

(3) No vacation or sick leave is earned on any such appointment.

(4) Employes serving on any such appointment shall not be considered eligible to compete in promotional examinations.

Pers 8.07 LIMITATION ON MULTIPLE APPOINTMENTS.

Except as provided in sec. 20.904 Wis. Stats. relating to cooperation of functions between departments, an employe shall not be appointed to more than the equivalent of one full-time permanent position (excluding over-time, deviation work week, or other variations in that one position). The combination of permanent positions and limited term positions held by an employe shall not exceed the equivalent of one full-time permanent position, plus work on a limited term basis totaling less than half-time on a daily, weekly, or monthly basis. However, an employe may work in excess of the half-time rate for 3 months in any 12 month period, but in no case shall the total Limited Term Employment time be in excess of Pers 10.08.

PERS 9

Pers 9.01 POLICY ON SEASONAL EMPLOYMENT.

It is the policy of the state to consider employes of seasonal positions as career employes of the state during the course of employment and to provide, subject to the limitations and fluctuations of the seasonal cycles, a reasonable guarantee of successive reinstatements to these positions during the following seasons.

Pers 9.02 LIMITATION.

When the nature and conditions of employment in a seasonal position approaches year-round full-time employment (more than 11 months in any 12 month period) the appointing officer shall request establishment of a permanent position and abolish the seasonal position. An employe occupying such abolished seasonal position shall be transferred to a new position providing such employe could have been considered for appointment to a permanent position from the register if a register existed at the time he was appointed to the seasonal position. If said register is beyond three year extension period, the person occupying such abolished seasonal position shall establish eligibility by noncompetitive examination.

Pers 9.03 SEASONAL STATUS.

The probationary period of an employe appointed to a seasonal position shall be for a period of 6 consecutive months. Upon satisfactory completion of the probationary period the employe shall have seasonal status.

(1) This status requires reinstatement of this employe to the same or similar positions within the department during succeeding seasons subject to section 16.24, Wis. Stats. provided the employe continues to render satisfactory services during his employment and his conduct and capacity after he has been separated merit such reinstatement. The seasonal status of any employe, however, shall have no bearing on the duration of the seasonal period.

(2) See subsection Pers 16.02 (2) for reinstatement to other departments.

(3) An employe who has completed a probationary period in a seasonal position and is subsequently appointed to a permanent position in the same classification in the same department shall not be required to serve a new probationary period in the permanent position.

Pers 9.04 REINSTATEMENT OF SEASONAL EMPLOYES WITHOUT SEASONAL STATUS.

Seasonal employes in seasonal positions the duration of which is less than 6 months in a single season may be reinstated to the same or similar positions at the discretion of the appointing officer.

Pers 9.05 SENIORITY.

See chapter Pers 19.

Pers 9.06 LEAVES OF ABSENCE, VACATION, SICK LEAVE

See chapter Pers 18.

PERS 10

Pers 10.01 GENERAL APPLICATION.

(1) Statutory References. See subsections 16.105 (2) (bn), 16.20 (3), and 16.24 (2), Wis. Stats.

(2) No tenure accrues in this kind of employment. See chapter Pers 8.

Pers 10.02 PROHIBITIONS ON THE USE OF LIMITED TERM EMPLOYMENT.

(1) Policy. Limited term employment shall not be used to fill vacancies in permanent or seasonal positions in the classified service; however, in exceptional instances the director may authorize the use of limited term employment to fill vacancies in permanent or seasonal positions where the vacancy is of short duration.

(2) Each such case will be determined on its own merits, and the director may, at any time, terminate the authorization for such limited term employment.

Pers 10.03 APPROVAL BY DIRECTOR.

(1) Except when specifically otherwise authorized by the director, prior approval is required for the use of limited term employment including titles, salaries, durations, procedures, records, etc.

(2) Authorization for use shall be based upon the nature of employment with due consideration given by the director to current labor market conditions, probable duration of employment, the need for formal examination procedures and other pertinent circumstances.

Pers 10.04 PROCEDURES AND RECORDS.

Procedures for recruitment, examination, compensation and record-keeping covering limited term employment may be abbreviated to provide only those minimum processes and records consistent with expediting employment and safeguarding public interests.

Pers 10.05 TITLES AND SALARIES.

(1) Wherever possible classification titles in the limited term employment and state fair salary schedule shall be used for these employments.

(2) No salary increases shall be allowed for this kind of employment except those approved by the director for economic adjustment for comparable work on a permanent basis or for a distinctly different duty assignment.

Pers 10.06 DEFINITION AND DURATION OF CATEGORIES.

Within limited term employment as a kind of employment as covered in chapter Pers 8 are the following categories:

(1) Short-Term. Employment in a position of less than 6 successive calendar months duration which does not recur at regular intervals.

(a) Included in this category are those positions excluded by subsection Pers 8.02 (2)(c).

(b) Casual employment in positions that occur, terminate and recur at irregular intervals and for varying periods of time is also included in this category but shall be designated as short-term recurring. Employment in such positions may extend beyond the 6 successive calendar months duration limit but the total accumulation of time worked in any calendar year shall be subject to section Pers 10.08 for time computation.

(2) Project. Employment in a planned undertaking which is not a regular and continuing function of the department and which has an established probable date of termination.

(3) Part-Time. Employment in any position where the time worked is less than half-time on a daily, weekly or monthly basis.

(4) Student. Employment at the University of Wisconsin, one of the state colleges, or a state educational institution of a student of such university, college or institution who is currently enrolled or who will enroll at the next session.

Pers 10.07 RENEWALS, EXTENSIONS, CHANGE OF CATEGORIES AND CLASSIFICATION.

Renewal of employment, extension of time duration, change in category or classification for any employe on a limited term employment shall not be permitted except for unusual unforseeable circumstances. Justification is required for any such renewal, extension, change in category or classification and each case will be determined on its own merits.

Pers 10.08 MAXIMUM WORK DURATIONS.

The total time worked in any department by a limited term employe on a short-term, short term recurring or part-time basis shall not exceed the equivalent of 6 work months of employment in any 12 month period.

Pers 10.09 CHANGE IN STATUS BETWEEN LIMITED TERM AND SEASONAL OR PERMANENT.

(1) When a limited term employe approved under subsection Pers 10.06 (3) works in excess of part-time for a period of 3 successive payroll periods, and such work time is expected to continue to be in excess of part-time, the appointing officer shall request establishment of a new permanent or seasonal position. The employe shall qualify for appointment to the new position through regular procedure.

(2) When a permanent or seasonal employe, except those affected by action taken in accordance with subsection 16.29 (4), Wis. Stats., works less than half-time in a permanent or seasonal position (see subsection Pers 8.02 (1) and 8.02 (2) respectively) for 3 successive calendar months and such work time is expected to continue at this rate, the employe shall become a limited term employe.

(3) Any vacation or sick leave an employe has earned prior to his change to limited term status shall be available for use pursuant to chapter Pers 18.

PERS 11

Pers 11.01 ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF LISTS.

(1) The director shall establish and maintain employment lists (also called employment registers) needed to fill positions in the classified service.

(2) Employment lists shall be by class title and sub-title as established in specifications within the classification plan and shall be used by all departments except where the law, a rule or the director specifically provides otherwise.

(3) Names may be added by order of rank to employment lists when, in the judgment of the director, the needs of the service will be benefited by such integrated lists, and such fact is specified by examination announcement.

Pers 11.02 TYPES OF LISTS.

(1) Open Competitive. Established from competition open to all qualified applicants within and outside the service.

(2) Promotional. Established from competition limited to qualified employes in the classified service. See section Pers 11.05.

(3) Reinstatement. Made up of names of those eligible for reinstatement. See chapter Pers 16.

Pers 11.03 EMPLOYING UNITS

Each department shall normally be considered a unit for purposes of promotion, transfer, reinstatement or layoff. However, the board, upon application of the appointing officer and after taking into consideration the recommendation of the director, may recognize established functional, organizational, or geographical units within the department for such actions.

Pers 11.04 TERM OF ELIGIBILITY ON AN EMPLOYMENT LIST.

(1) Open Competitive and Promotional Lists. Eligibility is limited to 6 months from the date of the list or from the date of eligibility of each individual in the case of an integrated list. A list may be extended by the director for a period not to exceed 3 years from the date of the list, provided that a subsequent list for the same class is not in effect which contains sufficient names available for certification.

(2) Reinstatement Lists. Eligibility on reinstatement lists is for a 12 month period from date of separation. Such eligibility may be extended by the director for a period not to exceed 3 years from date of separation.

Pers 11.05 PROMOTIONAL LISTS.

(1) Service-Wide. A list established from competition open to all qualified state employes.

(2) Restricted. A list established for a department or an employing unit by selecting names of the departmental or employing unit employes by order of rank from a service-wide list.

(3) Departmental. A list established from competition limited to a department or an employing unit whenever position requirements do not indicate service-wide competition to be feasible.

Pers 11.06 REMOVAL OF NAMES FROM LISTS.

(1) In addition to the reasons given in subsection 16.13 (1), Wis. Stats., the director may remove a name from a list under any of the following circumstances:

(a) Appointment. When a person is appointed, his name shall be removed from the list, but may be reactivated on such list upon written request.

(b) Failure to respond to inquiry. When a person does not respond within 5 work days to an inquiry relative to availability for employment.

(c) Unable to locate. When a person cannot be located by reasonable means.

(d) Non-selection after three certifications. See subsection 16.18 (1), Wis. Stats.

(e) Termination from state service. Upon termination a person's name shall be removed from any promotional lists.

(2) Names may be reactivated on the lists whenever information is received by the director which nullifies the reason for removal.

Pers 11.07 STATEMENT OF AVAILABILITY.

It shall be the responsibility of an eligible to inform the director of any change in his availability or the conditions under which he will accept employment.

PERS 12

Pers 12.01 ACTION BY APPOINTING OFFICER.

When an appointing officer wishes to fill a vacancy, he shall submit a request to the director on the prescribed form.

Pers 12.02 ACTION BY THE DIRECTOR.

(1) The director shall certify eligibles or authorize appointment by other means as provided in the law and rules. Except for persons who are on reinstatement lists from layoff (See section Pers 16.02), employment lists shall normally be used in the following order of preference, subject to the discretion of the director: (a) promotional, (b) open competitive. The director shall place on file reasons for exceptions from this order of preference. The director may submit the names of persons interested in transfer or reinstatement (other than from layoff) along with or in lieu of a certification.

(2) Whenever in extraordinary circumstances an appointing officer demonstrates a clear need for special qualifications, such as specialized training or pertinent prior experience, and such request is approved by the director pursuant to subsection 16.13 (1), Wis. Stats., selective certification may be made of persons having those qualifications, even though in so doing other persons on the list with higher ratings but without such special qualifications may not be certified to that particular vacancy. In such cases, the qualifications of the eligibles on the list shall be reviewed for possession of the special qualifications beginning with the highest ranking eligible and continuing until certification can be made. This provision shall not be used in any way to circumvent the merit principle, and the director shall report bimonthly to the board on application of selective certification.

Pers 12.03 USE OF RELATED LISTS.

(1) Lacking a complete certification, the appointing officer may request additional names to complete the certification. Additional names may be certified and shall be considered in rank order following those originally certified.

(2) The director may certify additional names from lists of related higher or parallel classes to fill out an incomplete certification, or may make a complete certification from lists of related higher or parallel classes when no list exists for the class requested. This is provided that the examinations for the higher or parallel classes have measured the capability of eligibles to perform the work of the class for which certification is to be made. If such related lists are not available, a new list may be established from which to obtain the necessary names.

Pers 12.04 STATEMENT OF AVAILABILITY OF APPLICANT

See section Pers 11.07.

Pers 12.05 TERMINATION OF A CERTIFICATION

Certification from a list must be made prior to the expiration date of the list, and eligibility for appointment from such certification shall not extend more than 30 calendar days beyond the expiration date, unless the list has been extended.

PERS 13

Pers 13.01 DEFINITION AND POLICY STATEMENT.

The probationary period is an integral part of the examination process, applicable in situations as outlined in the law and in these rules, and shall be used to closely observe the work of appointees and determine whether they will be able to effectively carry out their duties and responsibilities. At any time during a probationary period that an employe does not demonstrate the necessary capabilities, he shall be removed from the position by the appointing officer.

Pers 13.02 DURATION.

All probationary periods are for 6 months duration, except:

(1) In the case of trainees, the probationary period shall be the total length of the training period, and

(2) In the case of intern classes, the probationary period shall be the length of the intern program, and

(3) In the cases where longer probationary periods are authorized in accord with subsection 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats.

(4) In cases of reinstatement and transfer, the duration of probationary periods shall be at the discretion of appointing officers, but in no case to exceed 6 months.

Pers 13.03 WHEN PROBATIONARY PERIOD REQUIRED.

(1) Original appointments to permanent or seasonal positions.

(2) Appointment by promotion to permanent or seasonal positions.

(3) For the duration that an employee is holding a position classified as trainee.

(4) Appointment of a trainee to a permanent position in the objective class.

(5) When an employe's position is reclassified pursuant to Pers 3.02 (2)(a) and (f) during the time the employe is serving a probationary period for an original or promotional appointment, he shall be required to serve a new probationary period starting with the effective date of the reclassification action. The employe shall receive a salary increase pursuant to 16.105 (2)(d) Wis. Stats. effective at the beginning of the pay period following completion of the new probationary period.

Pers 13.04 WHEN PROBATIONARY PERIOD PERMISSIVE.

(1) At the discretion of the appointing officer a probationary period may or may not be required in the following cases when movement is to a different employing unit in the same department or to a different department:

(a) Transfer (See chapter Pers 15).

(b) Reinstatement (See chapter Pers 16).

Note: A probationary period shall not be required for reinstatement under section 16.24, Wis. Stats.

(c) Voluntary demotion (See chapter Pers 17).

(2) The appointing officer shall specify upon appointment and report to the bureau his determination to require an employe to serve such probationary period. He shall likewise give written notice to the employe of his determination.

(3) The appointing officer shall have authority to terminate these probationary periods at any time. He shall notify the Director and the employe of his determination to terminate such employe's probationary period.

Pers 13.05 LAPSES IN EMPLOYMENT.

(1) One Month Lapse. If an employe has lapses in employment not exceeding one month due to: (a) injury arising from state employment and covered by workmen's compensation act, or (b) for another reason approved by the appointing officer, the appointing officer shall determine whether the probationary period is to be extended to cover such absence.

(2) More Than One Month Lapse. If an employe has such lapse of employment totaling more than one month, the probationary period shall be extended by the length of the lapsed time, except that up to one month may be waived by the appointing officer.

(3) Layoff. If an employe is laid off due to lack of work or funds during a probationary period, and is later reappointed from the same employment list to a position in the same department, the time served shall be carried over and applied as part of the probationary period for the second appointment. In cases where the second appointment is to a different department, the time served may be carried over at the discretion of the new appointing officer. Determination of any such carry-over shall be specified at the time of the second appointment and reported to the bureau. The appointing officer shall also give written notice to the employe of his determination.

(4) Resignation. If an employe resigns during a probationary period, and is later reappointed from the same employment list to a position in the same or a different department, the time served shall not be carried over.

Pers 13.06 LATERAL MOVEMENTS.

(1) Definition. Lateral movements for the purpose of this section include any movement (in the nature of a transfer) to a permanent or seasonal position in the same salary schedule range and in the same or a closely related class, while the employe is serving a probationary period. The probationary period time served prior to such a movement shall be, may be, or shall not be carried over and applied to the new probationary period as follows:

(a) Within an employing unit. Shall be carried over.

(b) Between employing units of same department. May be carried over.

(c) Between departments. Shall not be carried over when movement is from a probationary period resulting from an original appointment or promotion; may be carried over when movement is from a probationary period resulting from transfer.

(2) In any of the above cases where time served may be carried over, it shall be at the discretion of the appointing officer. Determination of any such carry-over shall be specified upon appointment and reported to the bureau. The appointing officer shall also give written notice to the employe of his determination.

(3) When such a movement is made to a position in an unrelated class, there shall be no carry-over of probationary period and such appointment shall be treated as an original appointment.

Pers 13.07 TIME NOT COUNTED.

Time served in limited term employment or on an emergency or provisional appointment shall not be counted as a part of any probationary period.

Pers 13.08 DISMISSAL.

(1) Action by Appointing Officer. At any time during a probationary period, the appointing officer shall dismiss an employe whose conduct or competency does not merit his continuance in the position. See subsections 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats., Pers 14.03 (1), Pers 15.04 (2), and Pers 20.03 (5)(a) for rights of employes who are on probationary periods for certain transactions.

(2) Dismissal Notice Required. When a dismissal is to be effected, the appointing officer shall immediately notify in writing the person to be dismissed of the reasons for dismissal and the date on which dismissal is to occur, and send a copy of such notice to the director. Any employe who is dismissed while on a probationary period under the provisions of subsections Pers 14.03 (1), Pers 15.04 (2), or Pers 20.03 (5)(a), shall also be notified whether or not he is to be restored to his former position and salary.

(3) Reactivation of Name on Employment Lists. See subsection 16.22 (3), Wis. Stats.

Pers 13.09 PROGRESS REPORTS.

At such times during a probationary period and in such manner as the director may require, the appointing officer shall report to the director his judgment as to the employe's willingness and ability to effectively perform the work of the position, and as to his suitability and dependability.

Pers 13.10 SUCCESSFUL COMPLETION.

If the performance of an employe on a probationary period has been satisfactory, the appointing officer shall notify the employe and the director in writing that the employe will receive a permanent appointment. Permanent status begins when an employe reports for work (unless on approved leave) on the first work day following completion of the probationary period. No employe shall be denied permanent status after successfully completing a probationary period because an appointing officer fails to submit notice of the permanent appointment.

Pers 13.11 EXTENDED PROBATIONARY PERIODS.

Extended probationary periods as provided for in subsection 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats. shall be applied on a class basis. The determination of the need for an extended probationary period shall be made by the director after taking into consideration the recommendation of the employing department no later than the time the certification request is submitted to the bureau. The recruitment announcements shall inform all applicants of the extended probationary period. At any time after the first 6 months of such probationary period has been served by an employe, the appointing officer may terminate the probationary period, provided the appointing officer notifies in writing both the employe and the director one month prior to the effective date of such action.

PERS 14

Pers 14.01 DEFINITION.

Promotion is the movement of an employe with permanent status from a position in one class to a position in a different class having a greater salary range maximum as specified by subsection 16.19, Wis. Stats.

Pers 14.02 EXCLUSIONS.

(1) The appointment of an employe to a position in a higher classification while the employe is serving a probationary period on an original or promotional appointment shall be considered as a new original appointment or new promotional appointment respectively.

(2) The appointment of an employe with former permanent status who returns to state service after a break in service not covered by leave to a position in a higher classification shall be considered as an original appointment.

(3) For provisions relating to the appointment of persons or employes to positions classified as trainee see chapter Pers 20.

Pers 14.03 KINDS OF PROMOTION; STATUS AND RIGHTS.

(1) For Promotion Within The Same Department. In accordance with subsection 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats., the employe shall be required to serve a probationary period. At any time during this period the appointing officer may remove and restore the employe to his former position or a similar position and salary without the right of appeal. Any other removal, suspension without pay, or discharge during the probationary period shall be subject to subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats.

(2) For Promotion Between Departments. In accordance with subsection 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats., the employe shall be required to serve a probationary period. At any time during this period the appointing officer may dismiss the promoted employe. See subsection 16.22 (3), Wis. Stats. for provisions relating to reinstatement eligibility of an employe so dismissed.

Pers 14.04 SALARY ON PROMOTION.

In this section new range and step refer to the salary schedule range and step amount in such range for the class to which an employe is promoted.

(1) Immediate Increase. An employe's present salary rate shall be increased to the minimum of the new range if his present step is one step or more below the minimum of the new range. If an employe's present rate is less than one step below the minimum of the new range or is above the minimum of the new range, his present rate shall be increased by an amount equal to one step.

(2) Salary After Six Months. Upon completion of the first 6 months of the probationary period the promoted employe shall receive an increase of one step, subject to the limitations of subsection 16.105 (2)(b), Wis. Stats.

PERS 15

Pers 15.01 DEFINITION.

A transfer is the movement of an employe with permanent status from one position to another position in the same salary schedule range.

Pers 15.02 LATERAL MOVEMENT WHILE ON PROBATIONARY PERIODS.

See section Pers 13.06.

Pers 15.03 APPROVAL BY DIRECTOR.

All transfers into or within a department except reassignments to different positions in the same class in the same employing unit require prior approval by the director.

Pers 15.04 KINDS OF TRANSFER; STATUS AND RIGHTS.

(1) Transfer Between Departments. An employe who transfers between departments may be required to serve a probationary period at the discretion of the appointing officer. If during this period his services are found to be unsatisfactory he may be separated at the discretion of the appointing officer without the right of appeal. See subsection 16.22 (3), Wis. Stats. for provisions relating to reinstatement eligibility of an employe so dismissed.

(2) Transfer Between Different Employing Units of the same department may be required to serve a probationary period at the discretion of the appointing officer.

(a) If the appointing officer does not require a probationary period the employe retains permanent status previously acquired.

(b) If a probationary period is required, the appointing officer may restore the employe to his previous position or similar position and salary at any time during this period. Any other removal, suspension without pay, or discharge during the probationary period shall be subject to subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats.

(3) Transfer Within the Same Employing Unit. An employe who transfers to a position in a different class within the same employing unit or an employe who transfers to a position in the same class (reassignment) shall not be required to serve a probationary period. In the latter case the transfer does not require approval of the director.

Pers 15.05 SALARY ON TRANSFER.

When an employe transfers the rate paid may be any rate within the salary schedule range which is not greater than the last rate received in his former position. In any transfers where an employe is required to serve a probationary period, completion of such probationary period shall not make the employe eligible to receive a salary increase as provided in subsection 16.105 (2)(d), Wis. Stats.

PERS 16

Pers 16.01 DEFINITION.

Reinstatement is the restoration without competition of an employe or former employe to a position in the same or a closely related class in which he was previously employed. Reinstatement applies to permanent and legislative employes as covered in subsection 16.23 (2), Wis. Stats.; employes who enter military service as covered in subsection 16.276 (1)(b), Wis. Stats.; and for seasonal employes as provided in chapter Pers 9.

Pers 16.02 TYPES AND CONDITIONS OF REINSTATEMENT.

(1) Layoffs Have Priority. An employe who has been laid off or demoted in lieu of layoff shall be reinstated when a vacancy for which he is qualified occurs in the department from which he was laid off, according to the inverse order of the layoff. The appointing officer shall notify each person laid off that he may establish reinstatement eligibility through the bureau within one year from the date of layoff, and that he may request that his eligibility be extended for one year intervals not to exceed 3 years from date of layoff.

(2) Permissive Reinstatement. An employe who has been separated from state service without misconduct or delinquency, or who has accepted a voluntary demotion for personal reasons, may establish reinstatement eligibility for employment in any department subject to approval of the director, provided that:

(a) The individual or an appointing officer requests reinstatement within one year (a legislative employe 2 years) from date of separation; or

(b) An appointing officer requests an individual's reinstatement after the first year and within 3 years from date of separation; and approval is given pursuant to subsection 16.17 (2), Wis. Stats.

(3) Reinstatement by Personnel Board or Court Action.

See section 16.24, Wis. Stats. A probationary period shall not be required for such reinstatement.

(4) Non-Completion of Probationary Period Upon Promotion. See subsections 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats. and Pers 14.03 (1).

Pers 16.03 KINDS OF REINSTATEMENT; STATUS AND RIGHTS.

(1) Reinstatement to Different Department. An employe who is reinstated to a department other than the one from which he earned reinstatement rights may be required to serve a probationary period at the discretion of the appointing officer. If not required to serve a probationary period the employe resumes permanent status immediately. If required to serve a probationary period and during such period the employe's services are found to be unsatisfactory he may be separated without the right of appeal at the discretion of the appointing officer.

(2) Reinstatement to a Different Employing Unit of the Same Department. An employe who is reinstated to a different employing unit in the same department from which he earned reinstatement rights may be required to serve a probationary period at the discretion of the appointing officer. If not required to serve a probationary period the employe resumes permanent status immediately. If required to serve a probationary period and during such period the employe's services are found to be unsatisfactory he may be separated without the right of appeal at the discretion of the appointing officer.

(3) Reinstatement to the Same Employing Unit. An employe shall not be required to serve a probationary period when reinstated to the same employing unit that he left. Such an employe resumes permanent status immediately.

Pers 16.04 DISMISSAL DURING PROBATIONARY PERIOD.

The name of an employe who is dismissed from a probationary period following reinstatement may at the discretion of the director be returned to the reinstatement list.

Pers 16.05 SALARY ON REINSTATEMENT.

(1) When an employe is reinstated, the salary may be:

(a) At any rate within the salary schedule range of the class reinstated to, which is not greater than the rate received upon separation (plus intervening service-wide salary adjustments), or

(b) At the minimum of the salary schedule range if the minimum exceeds the rate last received, or

(c) In the case of employes restored following military service see section 16.276, Wis. Stats.

(2) In any reinstatement where an employe is required to serve a probationary period, completion of such probationary period shall not make the employe eligible to receive a salary increase of provided in subsection 16.105 (2)(d), Wis. Stats.

Pers 16.06 SENIORITY.

See chapter Pers 19.

PERS 17

Pers 17.01 DEFINITION.

A demotion is the movement of an employe with permanent status from a position in one class to a position in another class that has a lower salary range maximum.

Pers 17.02 EXCLUSIONS.

(1) The appointment of an employe to a position in a lower classification while the employe is serving a probationary period on an original appointment shall be considered as a new original appointment.

(2) The appointment of an employe with former permanent status to a position in a lower classification following a break in service not covered by leave shall be considered as an original appointment except when such return shall be considered as a reinstatement. See chapter Pers 16.

(3) The reduction in the classification of a position held by an employe with permanent status that does not involve movement of the employe to a different position is considered a reclassification. See chapter Pers 3.

(4) The action by which a promoted employe is restored to his previous position and salary as provided in subsection Pers 14.03 (1) is not considered a demotion. See chapter Pers 16.

(5) Salary reduction that does not involve a change in positions or class is not considered a demotion. See subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats.

Pers 17.03 REPORT OF APPOINTING OFFICER; APPROVAL BY DIRECTOR.

(1) All demotions shall be reported to the director in accordance with subsections 16.24 (1) and 16.25 (1), Wis. Stats.

(2) Approval of the director is required to determine the eligibility of the employe to perform the duties of the position in the class to which he is demoted.

Pers 17.04 KINDS OF DEMOTION; STATUS AND RIGHTS.

(1) Involuntary Demotion Within a Department. An appointing officer may demote an employe for disciplinary purposes as provided in subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats. or as a result of reduction in force in lieu of laying him off.

(a) In either case: the demotion may be made to any position within the department regardless of employing unit; and the employe may appeal the demotion within 10 calendar days of the effective date of such action.

(b) An employe demoted for disciplinary purposes does not retain permanent status previously acquired in the higher class of position, nor does he retain reinstatement eligibility to the higher class of position. He does acquire permanent status and tenure rights in the class of position to which he is demoted. No probationary period shall be required for an employe demoted for disciplinary purposes.

(c) An employe demoted in lieu of layoff retains permanent status previously acquired in the higher class of position. For provisions relating to the reinstatement of an employe so demoted, see chapter Pers 16. No probationary period shall be required for an employe demoted in lieu of layoff.

(2) Voluntary Demotion Within a Department. An employe with approval of the appointing officer may accept a voluntary demotion within the department either to a position in the same employing unit, or to a position in a different employing unit. Acceptance of such voluntary demotion shall be furnished the director in writing by the employe.

(a) In either case, tenure rights to the previously held position are not retained.

(b) If the demotion is to a position in the same employing unit, an employe retains permanent status previously acquired and a probationary period for employment in the lower class of position shall not be required.

(c) If the demotion is to a position in a different employing unit, the employe may be required to serve a probationary period at the discretion of the appointing officer. If during such period the services of the employe are found to be unsatisfactory, he may be separated without the right of appeal. If the employe is not required to serve a probationary period, he retains permanent status previously acquired.

(d) For provisions relating to the return of an employe to his former class of position, see chapter Pers 16.

(3) Voluntary Demotion Between Departments. An employe may move to a position in a lower classification in a different department as a voluntary action either for personal reasons or in lieu of being laid off.

(a) In either case, the employe may be required to serve a probationary period at the discretion of the appointing officer, and if during this period the employe's services are found to be unsatisfactory, he may be separated without the right of appeal. If the employe is not required to serve a probationary period, he retains permanent status previously acquired.

(b) For provisions relating to the return of an employe to his former class of position, see chapter Pers 16.

Pers 17.05 SALARY ON DEMOTION.

When an employe is demoted the rate paid may be any rate within the salary schedule range for the class to which he is demoted which is not greater than the last rate received immediately prior to is demotion. In any demotion where an employe is required to serve a probationary period, completion of such probationary period shall not make the employe eligible to receive a salary increase as provided in subsection 16.105 (2)(d), Wis. Stats.

PERS 18

Pers 18.01 DEFINITION.

Leave of absence means absence from employment with the approval of the appointing officer in accordance with the appropriate statutory provision or rule. Throughout these rules month means a calendar month or the period from a given date in one month through the date preceding the given date in the following month.

Pers 18.02 VACATION.

(1) Employes Who Earn Vacation. All classified employes shall earn vacation except:

(a) Emergency employes.

(b) Provisional employes.

(c) Limited term employes.

(d) Employes who do not qualify under subsection 16.275 (1)(e), Wis. Stats.

Vacation may not be earned subsequent to an employe's last actual work day if immediately followed by termination.

(2) Continuous Service. Continuous service shall include all the time the employe has been in continuous employment status in a permanent, seasonal, sessional, or unclassified position. The continuous service of an employe eligible for a vacation shall not be considered interrupted if he:

(a) Was absent for not more than 30 consecutive calendar days.

(b) Was on an approved leave of absence.

(c) Left the service for any reason except to take other employment and is reemployed within 3 years, employment by any other political subdivision of this state shall not be construed as other employment.

(d) Was absent on military leave.

(e) Was absent due to injury or illness arising from state employment and covered by the workmen's compensation act.

(3) Computing Years of Service. In determining the number of full years of service completed, credit shall be given for all time in employment status in a permanent, seasonal, sessional, or unclassified position. Any absence of more than 30 calendar days except for military leave and absence due to injury or illness arising out of state employment and covered by the workmen's compensation act shall not be counted. Only the most recent period of continuous service may be counted in determining an employe's length of service.

(4) Eligibility. After completion of the first six months in a permanent or seasonal position pursuant to subsection 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats., or after the first six months of employment as a trainee unless covered under subsection Pers 18.04 (3), employes shall be granted noncumulative vacation based on accumulated continuous state service as follows:

(a) Regular Employes.

1. Persons who were employed on January 1, 1959, or whose absence on that date is covered under subsection Pers 18.02 (2), and were employed prior to January 1, 1958, at the rate of 3 weeks for a full year's service and, based on his accumulated continuous state service, at the rate of 4 weeks after 20 full years of service.

(2) Persons, except those provided for in subsection Pers 18.02 (4)(a)(1) above, based upon accumulated continuous state service, at the rate of 2 weeks each year for a full year of service during the first five years of service; three weeks each year for a full year of service during the next fifteen years of service; four weeks each year for a full year of service after 20 years of service.

(b) School year employes. Employes who are regularly employed on a school year basis for less than 12 months out of a year but who are employed 6 or more months in continuous service in the employing department shall be granted prorata vacation consistent with subsection Pers 18.02 (4)(a). Such continuous service need not be in a single year.

(c) Seasonal employes. Employes who are regularly employed for less than 12 months out of a year but who are employed 6 or more months in continuous service in the employing department shall be granted prorata vacation consistent with subsection Pers 18.02 (4)(a). Such continuous service need not be in a single calendar year.

(5) Computing Vacation.

(a) Vacation credits in any given year shall not be earned for any period of absence without pay except that for administraitve purposes any approved leave or leaves of absence totaling 30 calendar days or less in a calendar year may be disregarded.

(b) Vacation for employes covered in subsection Pers 18.02 (4)(a) 2. shall be prorated during the fifth year of employment at the rate of 2 or 3 weeks respectively.

(c) Vacation for employes covered in subsections Pers 18.02 (4)(a) 1. and Pers 18.02 (a) 2. shall be prorated during the twentieth year of employment at the rate of 3 or 4 weeks respectively.

(d) Upon termination of employment vacation shall be prorated.

(e) The following table prorates vacation to the nearest ¼ day on the basis of an employe's vacation rate for the fractional part of a month worked:

VACATION DAYS EARNED FOR FRACTIONAL PART OF A MONTH

BEGINNING EMPLOYE

Beginning Date of Month	Days Earned 2 weeks	3 weeks	4 weeks
1 - 5	10/12	15/12	20/12
6 - 10	8/12	12/12	16/12
11 - 15	6/12	9/12	12/12
16 - 20	4/12	6/12	8/12
21 - 25	2/12	3/12	4/12
26 - 31	0	0	0

ENDING EMPLOYE

Beginning Date of Month	Days Earned 2 weeks	3 weeks	4 weeks
1 - 5	0	0	0
6 - 10	2/12	3/12	4/12
11 - 15	4/12	6/12	8/12
16 - 20	6/12	9/12	12/12
21 - 25	8/12	12/12	16/12
26 - 31	10/12	15/12	20/12

After computing in twelfths the total vacation earned, divide by 12 to determine full days and apply the remaining fraction to the following schedule:

Remaining Fractions	Vacation Credit Conversion
1/12	0
2/12, 3/12 or 4/12	¼ Day
5/12, 6/12 or 7/12	½ Day
8/12, 9/12 or 10/12	¾ Day
11/12	1 Day

(6) When Vacation May Be Taken. In determining vacation schedules the appointing officer shall respect the wishes of the eligible employes as to the time of taking their vacation insofar as the needs of the service will permit. Vacation allowance shall be taken during the vacation year except that employes who are required by their appointing officer to defer all or a part of their vacation for a given vacation period may be permitted to take it within the first 6 months of the ensuing vacation year.

Pers 18.03 SICK LEAVE.

(1) Employes Who Earn Sick Leave. All classified employes shall earn sick leave except:

(a) Emergency employes.

(b) Provisional employes.

(c) Limited term employes.

(2) Accrual of Sick Leave.

(a) Sick leave shall accrue at the rate of one day of sick leave for each calendar month of service. Sick leave allowance shall be accumulated in the employe's base sick leave account until a maximum of 60 days has accrued.

(b) Sick leave credits in any given year shall not be earned for any period of absence without pay or time otherwise not worked or paid for except that for administrative purposes any approved absence or absences totaling 30 calendar days or less in a calendar year may be disregarded.

(c) Unused sick leave in excess of 60 days shall accumulate in the employe's reserve sick leave account. No sick leave shall accrue in the reserve account unless the 60 day maximum is maintained in the base account.

(d) Sick leave shall not be used until it has been accrued.

(3) Use of Sick Leave. The normal use of sick leave shall be charged to the base account. In the event of extended illness sick leave taken shall be charged to the base account until that is exhausted. Sick leave in the reserve account may be used only upon recommendation of the employe's appointing officer and with the approval of the commissioner of administration and the director.

(4) Eligibility for Sick Leave.

(a) Each permanent classified employe, employe serving his probationary period and seasonal employe who has earned sick leave credits shall be eligible for sick leave for any period of absence from employment which is due to his illness, bodily injury, exposure to contagious disease, attendance upon members of his immediate family (employe's parents, wife, husband, children, brother, sister or another member of the immediate household) where employe's presence is required or death in the immediate family of the employe or his spouse. The department has the duty to require that the employe make other arrangements, within a reasonable period of time, for the attendance upon children or other persons in his care.

(b) An appointing officer may require a medical certificate to justify the granting of sick leave.

(5) Effect of Termination of Employment. Previously accumulated sick leave shall not be terminated by absence on approved leave as provided in these rules. Separation from the service by resignation, retirement, or for cause as provided in section 16.24, Wis. Stats. shall cancel all unused accumulated sick leave allowance. Whenever a permanent employe is laid off due to lack of work or funds, any unused accumulated sick leave allowance shall continue in effect, if he is rehired by any department within one year.

(6) Table For Prorating Sick Leave.

BEGINNING EMPLOYE

Beginning Date	Days Earned
1 - 8	1
9 - 23	½
24 - 31	0

ENDING EMPLOYE

Ending Date	Days Earned
1 - 8	0
9 - 23	½
24 - 31	1

Pers 18.04 OTHER PROVISIONS RELATING TO VACATION AND SICK LEAVE.

(1) Vacation or Sick Leave on Holidays. In the event that a holiday falls on a regular work day within the week or weeks taken as vacation or sick leave, such holiday shall not be charged as vacation or sick leave. For any day on which work is suspended, such suspension shall not be construed to extend any vacation or sick leave to an employe in such status at the time.

(2) Transfer of Credits. Whenever an employe eligible for vacation or sick leave separates from the service of one employing unit of the state and accepts, by certification or transfer, service in a classified position in another employing unit of the state, obligation for any accumulated and unused vacation and sick leave allowance shall be assumed by the new employing unit.

(3) Effect of Classification Changes. Promotion, demotion or change in classification of the position held by an employe shall not cause him to forfeit or lose his earned vacation or sick leave rights or privileges.

(4) Effect of Change in Status. See subsection Pers 10.09 (3).

Pers 18.05 LEAVE WITHOUT PAY.

(1) When Granted.

(a) Administrative leave. Leave without pay for a period not to exceed one month may be granted by the appointing officer.

(b) Formal leave. Application for a leave in excess of one month shall be filed by the employe on forms supplied by the bureau. A classified employe may be allowed a leave of absence without pay for a period not to exceed one year. Such leave is subject to the recommendation of the appointing officer and the approval of the director before becoming effective. Such leave shall be granted only when it will not result in prejudice to the interests of the state as an employer beyond any benefits to be realized upon the employe's return to the service. Leave without pay may be granted for: educational purposes where direct or indirect benefit accrues to the service; purposes of working for a limited period in other employment where the experience would afford a direct benefit in the performance of his work for the state upon his return; maternity cases and exceptional personal reasons other than those mentioned above. Failure to return on or before the expiration of such leave or upon the cancellation or revocation thereof by the director shall be considered as separation from the service, and the nature of the separation action shall be determined on the merits of the case unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the appointing officer and the director that failure to report was excusable. Leave of absence because of illness or for educational purposes may be extended up to 2 years on a year to year basis on the recommendation of the appointing officer and the approval of the director.

(c) Summer leave. Classified employes whose services are not required at institutions during a summer recess shall be considered to be on leave of absence without pay.

(2) Rights Upon Return From Leave Of Absence. A properly executed leave of absence without pay shall accord the employe the right to be returned to his position or one of like nature on the expiration thereof or sooner if agreeable to the appointing officer, except that if the position has been abolished through legislation or material reorganization of the department, the employe shall be given consideration for any other position of similar grade and class which in the opinion of the director does not require qualifications substantially higher than or different from those of the position previously held, and if there be no such position, the layoff provisions of the law and these rules shall apply. If it is found necessary to fill the position during the interim, the new employe shall vacate the position upon the return of the absent employe subject to layoff, transfer, or demotion rights earned under the law and these rules. Such leaves without pay shall not operate to interrupt the seniority or salary advancement consideration, or cancel accumulated sick leave of the absent employe. Holidays or other non-work days immediately preceding the employe's return to duty, shall be counted as part of such absence.

(3) Absence Without Leave. Any absence of an employe that is not authorized under these rules shall be considered as an absence without leave. Such absence may be considered as a resignation or may be grounds for disciplinary action. Any employe who is separated from the service on the basis of absence without leave may thereby be deemed to have forfeited his reinstatement eligibility.

Pers 18.06 LEAVE WITH PAY, INJURY.

Continuing salaries to certain employes unable to work due to injuries incurred in line of duty in hazardous employments. See sections 16.31, Wis. Stats. and Pers 5.05. Each period of absence shall be subject to the approval of the appointing officer and he may require the employe to submit a medical certificate to cover each such period.

Pers 18.07 HOLIDAYS.

Legal Holidays. January 1; May 30; July 4; the first Monday in September; the fourth Thursday in November or the day appointed by the Governor as a day of thanksgiving; December 25; the day following if January 1, May 30, July 4 or December 25 falls on Sunday; afternoon on Good Friday; the afternoons of December 24 and 31. In order to carry out the intent of subsection 16.275 (6)(a) and (an), Wis. Stats., to grant employes 7½ days annually for holidays, an employe shall be granted equivalent compensatory time off when:

(1) The employe is required to work on a holiday or

(2) A holiday falls on his regularly scheduled day off. When such compensatory time off shall be granted is discretionary with the appointing officer, and he may permit such time to be anticipated and used on the same basis as vacation. The appointing officer in determining schedules for such time off shall respect the wishes of the eligible employes as to the time of taking such time off insofar as the needs of the service will permit. See subsection Pers 18.02 (6).

Pers 18.08 MILITARY SERVICE.

(1) National Guard, State Guard, Reserve Corps. Attendance at duly ordered military and naval schools, field camps of instruction and naval exercises. See subsection 16.275 (4), Wis. Stats.

(2) Active Service. See section 16.276, Wis. Stats.

Pers 18.09 CIVILIAN SERVICE.

Service during a period officially proclaimed to be a national emergency or limited national emergency. See subsections 16.276 (1) and 16.276 (2)(b), Wis. Stats.

Pers 18.10 JURY SERVICE.

See subsection 16.275 (5), Wis. Stats.

Pers 18.11 UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE.

Employes in the classified service appointed to positions in the unclassified service. See section 16.274, Wis. Stats.

Pers. 18.12 WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Relation to the use of sick leave and vacation. See section Pers 5.06.

PERS 19

Pers 19.01 DEFINITION.

Seniority is an employe's total applicable service at any level with the state, applied as a factor in determining rank in promotions and layoffs.

Pers 19.02 LIMITATIONS AND INCLUSIONS.

(1) Applicable Service For Computation.

(a) All permanent employment in the classified service.

(b) All seasonal employment in the classified service which has resulted in consecutive seasonal reinstatements, and seasonal employment followed by permanent employment within the reinstatement period of 3 years.

(c) Time of military leave; or leave while serving in an unclassified position as provided in section 16.274, Wis. Stats.

(d) Employment during a probationary period, provided permanent status has resulted.

(2) Non-Applicable Service.

(a) Employment in a limited term position or while serving an emergency or provisional appointment.

(b) Employment in an unclassified position except as provided in section 16.274, Wis. Stats.

(c) Time spent on leaves other than military leave, except when in the judgment of the director the leaves are of direct benefit to state service.

PERS 20

Pers 20.01 DEFINITION OF STATE TRAINING PROGRAMS.

State Training Programs include all formal and informal, off-the-job and on-the-job developmental activities and devices that are conducted as part of, or associated with state employment, which increase the knowledge, skill and general competency of employes, and which aid in establishing favorable employe attitudes and work habits.

Pers 20.02 TRAINING POLICY.

Recognizing that training is an integral part of the management process, the director, in order to implement the state training policy as set forth in subsection 16.21 (1), Wis. Stats., shall assist operating agencies by promoting, formulating, conducting, coordinating and assisting in state training programs to the end that transaction of the state's business will be performed effectively, efficiently, and with the greatest economy to the state through satisfied employes.

Pers 20.03 TRAINEE CLASSIFICATION.

(1) Use of Trainee Classification. The director may authorize the use of the trainee classification when:

(a) Qualified applicants are not available for the objective classification, or

(b) Filling the position as a trainee will be more appropriate than appointment in the objective classification, or

(c) Special conditions exist as part of the provisions for the use of gifts, grants, bequests, or other devices from individuals, partnerships, associations, or corporations for providing employes with the training and/or experience to meet the qualifications of the objective classification.

(2) Trainee Salary Range. The salary range for a position classified as trainee shall be subject to the approval of the director.

(a) The minimum of such range shall be comparable to the minimum salaries of classifications having similar qualifications.

(b) The maximum of such range shall not exceed the minimum salary of the objective classification for which the employe is being trained.

(3) Salary of a Trainee. The starting salary rate and salary increases during the training program shall be subject to the approval of the director. Appointment may be made at that point in the salary range commensurate with previous training and/or experience.

(4) Salary of a Permanent Employe Appointed As Trainee. This subsection applies to the salary of an employe appointed to fill a vacancy in a trainee position either in the same department or in a different department. The term step as used in this subsection refers to the salary step amount in the salary schedule range from which the employe moves when appointed to the trainee position.

(a) When the employe's present salary rate is above the maximum of the trainee salary range, his rate in the trainee salary range shall be at the maximum of such range.

(b) When the employe's present salary rate is less than one step below the minimum of the trainee salary range, or is above the minimum but less than the maximum of such range, his present rate shall be increased by an amount equal to one step, or determined in accordance with subsection Pers 20.03 (3), whichever is higher.

(c) When the employe's present rate is more than one step below the minimum of the trainee salary range, his present rate shall be increased to the minimum of the trainee salary range, or determined in accordance with subsection Pers 20.03 (3).

(5) Status And Rights. A trainee shall be on a probationary period for the duration of his training program as provided in subsection 16.22 (5), Wis. Stats.

(a) However, the appointment of a permanent employe to a trainee position within the department shall, as provided in subsection 16.22 (1), Wis. Stats., be deemed a change in job status, and shall not affect the permanent status and rights previously acquired within such department. At any time during the probationary period the appointing officer may remove and restore the employe to his former position and salary without the right of appeal. Any other removal, suspension without pay, or discharge during the probationary period shall be subject to subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats. Upon successful completion of the training program the trainee shall assume the class title of the objective classification. He shall serve a probationary period in the objective classification.

(b) A permanent employe appointed to a trainee position in another department, or a person entering a trainee position on an original appointment, may be separated without the right of appeal, at the discretion of the appointing officer, at any time prior to achieving permanent status in the objective class. Upon successful completion of the training program the trainee shall assume the class title of the objective classification. He shall serve a probationary period in the objective classification.

(c) The appointment of an employe who has qualified at the objective classification following completion of the training program shall not be considered a promotion for salary purposes provided in subsection 16.105 (2) (dx), Wis. Stats., and the initial rate to be paid in the objective class shall be the minimum of the salary range for such class. However, if an employe earned a higher rate of pay in a class in which he had permanent status immediately prior to entry in the training program, the appointing officer may set the employe's salary at any rate in the salary range for the objective class, not to exceed his previously earned rate. Determination of this rate shall be made at time of appointment in the objective class and reported to the director. In cases where the objective class for which the employe is being trained is in the same or lower salary range than the class of the employe's position in which he had permanent status immediately prior to entry in the training program, no probationary increase shall be given upon completion of the probationary period.

(6) Approval and Reporting. No person shall be appointed to a trainee position prior to approval of the written training program by the director. The written training agreement shall be submitted to the director at the time of appoinment.

Pers 20.04 PERFORMANCE DEVELOPMENT.

A task and performance review shall be made at least once each year by the appointing officer for and with each permanent classified employe for the purpose of helping each employe maintain and surpass minimum performance standards of all the tasks of his position.

PERS 21

Pers 21.01 SUBMISSION OF RESIGNATION.

Every effort shall be made by an appointing officer to obtain a written resignation from a permanent employe who voluntarily leaves the service. Such resignation shall contain the reasons therefore and be submitted in duplicate to the appointing officer not less than 15 calendar days prior to the effective date. The appointing officer will retain the original of such resignation and shall transmit the duplicate to the bureau. Except for extenuating circumstances, failure of an employe to submit such resignation shall result in forfeiture of reinstatement eligibility.

Pers 21.02 WRITTEN RESIGNATION NOT REQUIRED.

Separation of emergency, provisional, limited term or seasonal employes from the service at the end of such employment period shall be deemed to constitute normal or automatic separations and therefore need not be accompanied by written resignations.

PERS 22

Pers 22.01 PURPOSE.

This layoff procedure adopted pursuant to subsection 16.24 (2), Wis. Stats., is intended to give due consideration to the 2 essential factors which should determine a permanent employe's right to be retained in the service—length of service and efficiency, considered in such a way as to be fair to all employes and to retain for the state service its most effective and efficient personnel.

Pers 22.02 LIMITATIONS.

A permanent employe in the classified service shall not be laid off from any position while any limited term, emergency, provisional or probationary employe is continued in a position of the same class or equivalent class in the department or other layoff unit involved.

Pers 22.03 LAYOFF BY DEPARTMENTS.

The normal layoff procedure shall be by departments, provided, however, the board, upon the application of the appointing officer and after taking into consideration the recommendation of the director, may authorize the use of well established functional, organizational, or geographical units within the employing department.

Pers 22.04 PROCEDURE FOR MAKING LAYOFFS.

(1) Seniority and Efficiency. Whenever it becomes necessary for an appointing officer to lay off an employe in the classified service as a result of shortage or stoppage of work or funds, functional reorganizations, or the abolishing of a position, he shall do so by classes in accordance with seniority and efficiency, except where a reduction in force involves all employes in an employing unit.

(2) Assignment of Seniority Credit. The seniority credit of all employes in the class and organization unit in which layoff is to be made shall be computed on the basis of length of service as set forth in subsection Pers 19.02 (1). A seniority ranking of all such employes shall be made accordingly, with any resulting tie cases to be ranked (relative to each other) according to their total length of service in the class.

(3) Number Considered for Layoff. Within the total number of employes in the given class and layoff unit, the group considered for layoff shall consist of those with the lowest seniority ranking, as follows: That group shall number 3 employes, where only one employe is being laid off. In all other cases, that group shall number double the number of positions to be vacated; except that it shall include no greater number of employes with 5 or more years of seniority credit (under Pers 19.02 (1)) than is necessary to consider for layoff 2 more employes than there are positions to be vacated.

(4) Ranking By Performance. All employes in the group thus to be considered for layoff shall be ranked by the appointing officer according to their relative performance in the given class and unit. Such ranking shall be based on recent and comparable standards of performance.

(5) Resulting Layoffs. The relative performance ranking of all employes within the group thus considered shall determine which employes are laid off, so that the most efficient employes will be retained.

Pers 22.05 DEMOTION IN LIEU OF SEPARATION.

In the event that the services of a permanent employe are about to be terminated in a given class as a result of reduction in force, such employe shall be entitled to a position in the same department in a lower class in the series or to transfer to a class in another series in which his training and experience as a state employe have qualified him, provided that the order of layoff as set forth in the law and these rules permits.

Pers 22.06 REDUCTION IN PAY OR POSITION.

The appointing officer may, in lieu of layoff, demote or reduce an employe in pay or position.

Pers 22.07 WRITTEN NOTICE PRIOR TO LAYOFF.

Any employe affected by such layoff or reduction in pay or position shall be given written notice, not less than 15 calendar days prior to the effecitve date thereof, and upon written request, filed within 10 calendar days from the effective date of the action, shall be entitled to an appeal from such action to the board.

Pers 22.08 REINSTATEMENT OF PROMOTED OR TRANSFERRED EMPLOYES.

If an employe, promoted or transferred from one appointing officer to another, is laid off due to lack of work or funds while serving a probationary period in the new position, he may be reinstated to the position he vacated, or one of like nature, under the first appointing officer if such position is available.

PERS 23

Pers 23.01 PROVISIONS.

Disciplinary action against a permanent employe by an appointing officer or his authorized representative shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats. The appointing officer or his authorized representative shall at the time of such action supply the employe involved a statement in writing as provided in subsection 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats. setting forth his reason therefore, the time limitations thereof, and the employe's right of appeal. A copy of such notice to the employe shall be filed with the director within 5 calendar days of the effective date thereof.

Pers 23.02 RIGHT OF APPEAL.

When disciplinary action has been taken against a permanent employe in accordance with section Pers 23.01 above and the employe appeals in writing to the board within 10 calendar days of the effective date of such action, the board shall hold a public hearing thereon within 20 calendar days after the receipt of such appeal. Written notice of such hearing shall be given by the director to the person making the appeal and to the appointing officer. If conditions over which the board, the appellant, or the defending department has no control make it impossible to complete the hearing before the expiration of 30 calendar days, the board may continue the same until it is prepared to make final decision as required in subsection 16.24 (1)(b), Wis. Stats.

Pers 23.03

Appointing authority may suspend an employe from duty with pay, for an indefinite period of time, pending investigation and trial of alleged charges against such employe.

PERS 24

Pers 24.01 POLICY STATEMENT.

In order to provide a guide for employes and administrators in the formation of a responsible, loyal and efficient public service, the board may after a public hearing adopt a code of ethics applicable to all employes of the classified service.

Pers 24.02 DEPARTMENTAL SUPPLEMENTS.

Appointing officers may adopt supplementary provisions to the code relating to their department. Such supplements and revisions shall be filed with the board before becoming effective.

Pers 24.03 FORCE AND EFFECT.

The contents of the statewide code and departmental supplements shall be made known to all classified employes by their appointing officer. A disregard for the provisions of any such code may be considered as a basis for disciplinary action.

PERS 25

Pers 25.01 ESTABLISHMENT OF PROCEDURE.

Recognizing the value of a formal grievance procedure in a sound management program, each department shall, as required by the director, establish a written grievance procedure. Such procedure shall meet standards established by the director and approved by the board.

Pers 25.02 LIMITATION OF APPLICATION.

Grievance procedures established as provided in this section will not be used in lieu of procedures established elsewhere for actions described in subsections 16.05 (1) or 16.24 (1), Wis. Stats.

PERS 26

Pers 26.01 SCOPE.

The director shall prescribe such standards as may be necessary to carry out the policy expressed in section 16.01, Wis. Stats. for the development and promotion of sound personnel management programs, including, but not limited by enumeration, such areas as employment, absences, training, and performance rating.

Pers 26.02 DEPARTMENTS TO COOPERATE.

Appointing officers shall provide such information and assistance as the director may require for review and evaluation of the state's personnel management and merit system programs.

PERS 27

Pers 27.01 ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION.

The classification titled "Wisconsin Career Candidate" is established pursuant to Section 16.32, Wis. Stats., and these rules whereby college seniors and recent graduates are recruited and examined to establish eligibility for certification from the "Wisconsin Career Candidate" list for entry professional classes in the state classified service.

Under provisions of 16.32 (6) the director shall explore and implement the broad use of a variety of personnel and selection processes to develop an increasingly effective college recruitment and selection program.

Pers 27.02 PROVISIONS.

In accordance with the purpose expressed above and with the legislative intent expressed in Section 16.32, Wis. Stats., the use of this procedure shall be subject to the following provisions:

(1) Scope. The director shall establish and maintain a Wisconsin Career Candidate employment list. Such list may be used to certify eligibles for appointments to the classified service in those positions or classifications as designated by the director.

(2) Eligibility. The competitive examinations shall be free and open to all seniors and recent graduates of our institutions of higher learning as well as from other sources, and who are citizens of the United States regardless of residence.

(3) Examinations. To insure the employment of young men and women with sound academic background, a strong desire to acquire knowledge, an aptitude for the public service, and a strong interest in government, examinations for eligibility shall be administered to determine the merit and fitness of these persons. Such examinations shall be conducted annually not later than March 1 at convenient sites including college campuses in Wisconsin and at such other times as required to fill the needs of the service.

(4) Certifications. To insure employment of Wisconsin Career Candidates certification and selection may be made from among any applicants who have attained eligibility. In those classifications which require specialized training selective certification may be made from among those eligibles who possess the special qualifications. The director shall establish ranking or category procedures to meet the needs of effective certification in specific classifications.

(5) Appointments. Appointment from the Wisconsin Career Candidate list to a position in the classified service shall be considered as an appointment made in accordance with the provisions of subsection 16.18 (2), Wis. Stats. Career service immediately following appointment shall conform with all provisions of Sections 16.01 to 16.30 Wis. Stats. and rules of the Personnel Board.

BY-LAWS 1-13-64

University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee Local Number 82,
Wisconsin State, County and Municipal Employees

This local shall be governed by the suggested constitution for local unions as prescribed by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO. The following laws shall be employed to implement the constitution.

Article 1
Name

The name of this organization shall be: University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Local Number 82 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO.

Article II
Officers

Section 1. The officers of this local shall be a president, a vice president, a secretary, a treasurer and three executive board members. These seven members shall constitute the executive board of the local.

Section 2. Nominations: Nominations shall be made at the regular April meeting of the local. Any member may nominate any other member in good standing and otherwise eligible to hold office in this local. Nominations shall be made in conformance with the regular rules of order for all meetings and the final authority shall be "Roberts Rules of Order." No member shall be considered nominated unless or until he has given his consent to be nominated for office in this local.

Section 3. Eligibility: Any member considered for nomination to an office in this local must have been a member in good standing for one year prior to the nominating meeting.

Section 4. Election: After the nominations have been made at the regular April meeting, a ballot containing all the names of those nominated shall be made up. Nominees shall then be elected and installed at the regular May meeting. Voting shall be by secret ballot. In the event of a mail election, ballots will be mailed to all eligible members two weeks prior to the May meeting and will be received by the local up to the time of the regular May meeting. They will then be opened in the presence of all members attending the meeting, counted and tabulated. Those nominees receiving a majority of the votes will be considered elected.

Section 5. Installation: Officers shall be installed at the regular May meetingof the local.

Section 6. Terms of office: The terms of all officers shall be one year except that the trustees (three members) shall be elected as follows: One trustee for three years, one trustee for two years, and one trustee for one year. After the first year one trustee shall be elected for a three year term each year as the other terms expire.

Article III
Meetings

Section 1. Meetings, Regular: Regular meetings shall be held monthly. Time and place of the meetings shall be set by the local.

Section 2. Special meetings: Special meetings may be called subject to the provisions of the constitution.

Section 3. Executive Board Meetings: Executive Board meetings shall be at the call of the president or at such times as seem expedient to a majority of the members of the board.

Article IV
Membership and Dues

Section 1. New Members: New members may be accepted at the time of employment. Upom request of a member who has been dismissed on or before the end of his probationary period, the initiation fee and dues paid to the date of termination shall be refunded. However, any member who voluntarily terminates his employment on or before the end of the probationary period shall not be entitled to a refund of such initiation fee and dues."

Section 2. Dues: The dues to this local union shall not be less than the minimum as provided in the International Constitution. The local union may set the dues at a higher rate provided proper notice is given to the members prior to the meeting at which a vote is to be taken on the increase. A two thirds vote of those present and voting shall be required before such dues increase can be adopted.

Section 3. Initiation Fees and Reinstatement: Initiation fees and reinstatement fees shall be not less than $3.00. One ($1.00) of this amount will be paid to the member signing up the new member. $1.50 of the reinstatement or initiation fee shall go to the International Union as provided in the constitution, and the remainder shall be deposited in the local treasury.

Article V
Fiscal and Financial

Section 1. Depository and Signing Checks: The funds of this local shall be deposited in a bank authorized by the local. All checks shall be signed by the treasurer and countersigned by the president. In the absence of the president, the secretary shall be authorized to countersign checks.

Section 2. Audit: The books and financial records of this local shall be audited by the trustees as provided in the constitution.

Section 3. Salaries and Expenses: Salaries to officers and expenses of the local union must be approved by the local, except that per capita taxes and other fixed expenses of the organization shall be paid as provided in the constitution. The payment to a retiring member shall be $20.00. Upon illness of a member, a get well card will be sent. If the member uses up all his sick leave and is still unable to return to work, a voluntary contribution will be taken up. (By union members only). Upon the death of a member or his/her spouse, a gift or gratuity of $7.50 shall be paid if the amountin the treasurery permits.

Article VI
Quorum

Section 1. Quorum: The quorum for any regular meeting or special meeting shall be seven (7) members.

Section 2. Quorum: The quorum for board meetings shall be a majority of the executive board members.

Article VII
Committees

Section 1. Standing and Special Committees: The president shall appoint standing and special committees subject to the approval of the executive board and/or local union.

Section 2. Grievance Committees: The executive board shall constitute the grievance committee of the local union. Grievances shall be processed in accordance with article VIII of these by-laws.

Section 3. Stewards: Stewards may be appointed by the president of the local union with the approval of the executive board. The individuals appointed stewards must give their consent to act as stewards.

Section 4. Members of working units may elect stewards to represent them. Stewards shall be approved by the Executive Board.

Article VIII
Grievances

Section 1. Grievances: Any member shall be entitled to assistance in settlement of employee problems or grievances. He shall first present it to the president of the local. The steward or the president, or a board member designated by the president, shall assist an aggrieved member in any discussion with the immediate supervisor. If a satisfactory settlement is not reached at the primary step, then the grievance shall be reduced to writing and presented to the grievance committee for consideration and action. In the handling of all grievances the committee shall follow established lines of authority and procedures of the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

Section 2. Group Grievances: Group grievances must be reduced to writing signed by the aggrieved members and presented to the grievance committee (Executive Board). The committee shall consider such grievances and take whatever action is necessary or advisable, being sure to follow established lines of authority in attempting to reach solutions; except that if a grievance is of sufficient magnitude, it may be taken directly to the superintendent for settlement.

Section 3. Assistance from the council (WSEA): Any grievance or personnel problem which must be taken beyond the superintendent, and/or department head, may be submitted to the Wisconsin State Employees Association for settlement provided that the local union and/or the executive board authorize such action. This does not preclude representatives of the WSEA from assisting with the settlement of a problem if it is necessary to have discussions with the superintendent or department head.

For grievances toward supervisors, regular procedures will be followed.

Article IX
Amendments to By-Laws

Section 1. Amendments to these by-laws may be made at a regularly scheduled meeting by a majority of the members present, provided that thirty days notice is given to the membership prior to the meeting at which such amendments are to be acted upon.

Amendment Number I

The first time a member resigns from the local and he applies for reinstatement he forfeits the right of presenting a grievance until he is in good standing for six months. The second time he does this he forfeits the right for 1 year and one year thereafter every time he resings his membership.

CONSTITUTION
and
BY-LAWS

THE WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

Wisconsin State Employees Council #24

American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees

(AFL - CIO)

As Amended in Convention

September, 1964

CONSTITUTION
of the
WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I - NAME

The name of this association shall be the Wisconsin State Employees Association (Wisconsin State Employees Council #24).

ARTICLE II - OBJECTS AND METHODS

Section 1. Objects. The objects of this association shall be:

a) To co-ordinate the activities and statewide legislative programs of state employee local unions of the AFSCME.
b) To co-operate in giving efficient service to the state.
c) To promote efficiency in public service generally.
d) To extend and uphold the principle of merit and fitness in public employment.
e) To foster and promote continued co-operation between state departments to the end that overlapping and duplication of service and effort may be reduced to a minimum.
f) To advance the general, social, and economic welfare of the employees of the state.
g) To promote organization of workers generally and of public employees in particular.
h) To convey to the people of this state the spirit and the conviction of the value of state service.

Section 2. Methods. The methods of obtaining the objects shall be by petitioning, by creating and fostering sentiment favorable to proposed reforms, by co-operating with state officials, by promoting legislation, and by other lawful means.

ARTICLE III - AFFILIATION

Section 1. This association shall be affiliated with the AFSCME as a state council of state employees locals.

ARTICLE IV - MEMBERSHIP AND PER CAPITA TAX

Section 1. Membership. Any local union of the AFSCME composed exclusively of state employees shall be eligible to membership.

Section 2. Per capita tax. Per capita tax due the association from each member local union shall be ninety cents per month per member.

Section 3. Per capita tax - When payable. Per capita tax from member locals shall be payable not later than the fifteenth day of the following month. Locals failing to pay the per capita tax for more than six months shall be suspended from membership, and may be reinstated only on the payment of all arrears or upon such conditions as the executive board of the Association shall determine. Per capita tax to the Association shall be paid on the basis of the monthly units of dues received by the local during the month.

Section 4. Application for Membership. Application for membership shall be made on the prescribed application form adopted by the association.

Section 5. Action on Application. Membership applications received shall be presented by the recording secretary at any meeting of the executive board which is duly authorized to accept, defer, or reject any application subject to appeal to the convention.

ARTICLE V - CONVENTION

Section 1. How Formed. The convention of the association shall be formed by delegates from the member locals. A quorum for the transaction of business shall consist of delegates from not less than one-third of the member locals in good standing.

Section 2. Meetings, Regular. The convention shall meet annually at 9:00 A. M. on a Saturday in September, to be selected by the executive board, and remain in session until the business of the convention shall have been completed.

Section 3. Meetings, Special. Special meetings may be held at the call of the executive board. One-third or more member locals may at any time require a special meeting by filing a petition therefor with the president, which petition shall name a date for the meeting which shall be no sooner than fourteen days subsequent to the date of so filing, and the president shall issue the call to all member locals.

Section 4. Delegates, How Selected. Votes. Delegates to the convention shall be members of their locals in good standing. Delegates shall be elected by their respective locals and shall receive a majority of the votes of all members present at the meeting. The basis of voting representation in conventions shall be determined from the average per capita tax paid to the Wisconsin State Employees Association by each local thereof for the year from the first day of July to the last day of June inclusive preceding the convention. Locals shall be entitled to delegates and votes on the basis of membership as follows: 100 or less, two delegates and two votes; 101 to 200, three delegates and three votes; 201 to 350, four delegates and four votes; 351 to 550, five delegates and five votes; 551 to 800, six delegates and six votes; 801 to 1200, seven delegates and seven votes, and over 1200, eight delegates and eight votes. No local shall be entitled to representation in the convention unless all per capita tax due the association as of sixty days prior to the convention be paid in full before the opening of the convention. No local shall be represented in conventions by proxy. A delegate must be a resident member of the local he or she represents; provided, that two or more locals may unite in sending a delegate to the convention, such delegate to be a member in good standing of one of such locals. He or she shall be entitled to the vote to which the locals he represents are entitled in accordance with this section, provided, that no delegate shall represent more than three locals.

Section 5. Powers and Duties. All sovereign powers and authority of the association shall originate in the convention. It shall determine all matters of policy and may delegate such authority as it may determine.

Section 6. Any member in good standing of any member local in good standing of the association shall have the right to be heard at any meeting of the convention on being recognized by the chair.

Section 7. Expenses of Delegates. The association shall not be responsible for expenses of delegates to conventions of the association.

ARTICLE VI - OFFICERS

Section 1. Election of Officers. The officers of this association shall be a president, a first vice-president, a second vice-president, and a third vice-president, a treasurer, a recording secretary, and three trustees. These officers shall constitute the executive board. These officers, except the trustees, shall be elected and installed at the regular annual meeting of the convention. Trustees shall be elected for a term of three years each at the regular annual meeting of the convention, except that at the first election of trustees one shall be elected for a term of three years, one shall be elected for a term of two years, and one for a term of one year. Not more than one member from a local shall have membership on the executive board. Members of the executive board by virtue of their office shall be entitled to a voice without vote in the convention unless they are elected delegates. Nothing herein shall deprive the president of his prerogative to cast the deciding vote in case of a tie vote.

Section 2. Nominations. Nominations of officers may be made by a nominating committee appointed as are other convention committees. Nominations may also be offered from the floor.

Section 3. Election. a) Officers shall be elected by secret ballot on a majority vote of the delegates present at the regular annual meeting of the convention. When more than two candidates are nominated for one office and a majority vote is not obtained, the candidate receiving the lowest number of votes shall be dropped until a majority vote is obtained. In the event there is but one candidate nominated for office such candidate may be elected by acclamation. b) Delegates to conventions of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees and the Wisconsin State AFL-CIO, shall be elected by the convention of the association immediately preceding the AFSCME and Wisconsin State AFL-CIO conventions in the years in which conventions are held.

Section 4. Eligibility for Office. No member shall be eligible for office unless he is an employee of the State of Wisconsin and unless he shall have been a member in good standing of his local for at least one year next preceding his election. To retain such eligibility he and his local union must continue in good standing.

Section 5. Filling of Vacancies. Vacancies in office shall be filled by a majority vote of the executive board. Such appointees shall serve until their successors shall have been elected by the convention next following their appointment and shall qualify.

Section 6. Expenses. Expenses incurred by officers and committees of this association must be authorized or approved by the executive board.

Section 7. Pay to Officers. No elected officer of this association shall be paid any salary or wages for service rendered in his elective capacity, but such officer may be selected by the executive board to serve in other capacities for which compensation may be allowed.

ARTICLE VII - DUTIES OF OFFICERS AND COMMITTEES

Section 1. Duties of the President. The president shall preside at all meetings of the executive board and at all meetings of the convention, and shall be a member ex-officio of all committees. He shall sign all authorized orders on the treasurer and counter-sign all checks drawn against the funds of the association. At the conclusion of his term he shall submit a report to the association regarding the progress and standing of the association and regarding his official acts during his term of office.

Section 2. Duties of First Vice-President. In the absence of the president or his inability to serve, the first vice-president shall preside at all meetings and perform all duties otherwise performed by the president.

Section 3. Duties of the Treasurer. The treasurer shall receive and take charge of all money, property, and securities of the association. He shall deposit all money so received to the credit of the association in a bank or banks selected by the executive board. All disbursements shall be made by check. All checks must be signed by the treasurer and countersigned by the president. The treasurer shall keep an accurate record of receipts and disbursements and shall publish a semi-annual report thereon. He shall submit his books and records for audit when required by the association. He shall at the expense of the association and through the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees give a surety bond for an amount to be fixed by the executive board.

Section 4. Duties of Recording Secretary. The recording secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of the executive board and the meetings of the convention, and shall perform such duties as may be required by the officers of the association.

Section 5. Duties of the Executive Board. The executive board shall be the governing body of this association when the convention is not in session. All matters affecting the policies, aims, and means of accomplishing the purposes of this association not specifically provided for in this constitution or by action of the convention at a regular or special meeting shall be decided by the executive board, which shall meet at the call of the president or at such times as seem expedient to a majority of the members thereof. Except as may be directed by the convention, the executive board shall appoint standing committees as specified herein. The executive board shall provide for the editing and management of an official publication to be known as the Wisconsin State Employee which shall be the official organ of this organization, and may allot such funds as it deems necessary from the treasury of the association for this purpose. The concurrence of a majority of the executive board present at any meeting of the board shall be necessary for the transaction of business. A majority of the members of the board shall constitute a quorum.

Section 6. Annual Audit. The executive board shall as of April 1 of each year authorize the preparation of an annual audit of all accounts of the Association and the Magazine by a certified public accountant to be selected by the board. Such audit report shall be sent to each member local and shall be submitted to the next regular convention of the Association. Additional audits may be made by order of the executive board of the convention.

Section 7. Duties of Special Committees. Special and standing committees shall perform such duties as are assigned to them.

Section 8. Local Officers' Meeting. The executive board shall convene a meeting of the officers of member locals at 9:00 A. M. on a Saturday in April of each year. The purpose of such meeting shall be to discuss problems of mutual interest that may arise between conventions and to advise the executive board thereon. The function of such local officers' meetings shall be advisory only. Expenses of local officers attending such meetings shall be borne by the local they represent.

Section 9. Executive Secretary may countersign. In the absence of the president, the executive secretary may countersign checks drawn against the funds of the association.

ARTICLE VIII - REVENUES

Section 1. Source of Revenue. The chief source of revenue of this association shall be per capita tax as provided in Article IV, Section 2.

Section 2. Special Assessments Restricted. No special assessments on member locals shall be levied except by a two-thirds vote of the convention and shall not exceed in number one in any one year. No vote shall be taken on any special assessment unless it shall have been presented at the meeting immediately prior to the one at which the special assessment is to be voted upon. Any special assessment shall be used solely for the promotion of the welfare of the association.

ARTICLE IX - AMENDMENTS

Section 1. This constitution may be amended by either of the two following methods:

a) Proposed amendments to this constitution shall be submitted in writing to the executive board at least thirty days prior to the regular or special meeting of the convention at which a vote is to be taken. The proposed amendments and the recommendations of the executive board shall be submitted to the convention. A majority of the delegates present at the convention shall be necessary for adoption.

b) A proposed amendment which is not submitted to the executive board at least 30 days prior to the convening of the regular or special convention may be initiated on the floor of the convention upon the consent of a majority of the delegates present at the convention. Such an amendment, however, shall require a two-thirds vote of the delegates present for passage.

Section 2. This constitution and by-laws and all amendments thereto shall be subject to ratification by the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees.

BY-LAWS

ARTICLE I - STANDING RULES OF THE CONVENTION

Section 1. The order of business at any regular or special meeting of the convention shall be:

1. Report of committee on credentials
2. Appointment of committees
3. Report of committee on rules and order of business
4. Report of executive board
5. Reports of regular committees
6. Unfinished business
7. New business
8. Good and welfare
9. Adjournment

Section 2. The following standing committees shall be appointed by the executive board:

1. Legislation
2. Adjustment

Section 3. All matters not specifically covered by these rules shall be regulated by Roberts Rules of Order (Revised).

ARTICLE II - AMENDMENTS

These by-laws may be amended by a majority vote of members present at any regular or special meeting of the convention, provided that the proposed amendments shall have been submitted to the executive board ten days prior to the date of the meeting.

* * * * *

FACT FINDING UNDER WISCONSIN LAW - TAKEN FROM A STUDY OF PUBLIC EMPLOYEE ORGANIZATIONS

The University of Wisconsin
University Extension
Madison, Wisconsin

$1.00

FACT FINDING UNDER WISCONSIN LAW

James L. Stern
Professor of Economics and Labor Education

and

Edward Krinsky
Research Assistant, Department of Economics

The University of Wisconsin
University Extension
Madison, Wisconsin
1965

65-008 $1.00

Material from this booklet may be reprinted, with proper credit given, to the University of Wisconsin.

Additional copies are available from the Bookstore, University Extension, 432 North Lake Street, Madison, Wisconsin, 53706.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
1. Introduction.	1
2. Table I - Index of Fact Finding Cases.	3
3. Table II - Summary of Issues, Recommendations and Settlements.	5
4. Table III - Time Taken to Resolve Impasses. . .	11
5. Table IV - Cost of Fact Finding.	14
6. Digests --
#1 - Town of Preble vs. Local #75, Teamsters	15
#2 - City of DePere vs. Local #678, AFSCME. .	17
#3 - Shawano County vs. Local #1520, AFSCME.	21
#4 - City of Racine vs. Local #321, Fire-fighters	25
#5 - Pierce County vs. Local #556, AFSCME. . .	27
#6 - City of New Berlin vs. Local #647, AFSCME	29
#7 - Barron County vs. Local #518, AFSCME. . .	32
#8 - City of Portage vs. Local #695, Teamsters	35
#9 - Green County vs. Local #226, AFSCME. . .	40
#10 - City of Eau Claire vs. Local #696, AFT. .	44
#11 - City of Watertown vs. Local #695, Teamsters	48
#12 - City of South Milwaukee vs. Local #883, AFSCME.	50
#13 - Racine County vs. Deputy Sheriff's Assn. .	55
#14 - Wood County vs. Local #344, AFSCME. . . .	57
#15 - Wood County vs. Local #344, AFSCME. . . .	59
#16 - City of Eau Claire vs. Local #284, AFSCME; Local #487, Firefighters; Professional Policemen's Assn.	61
#17 - City of Appleton vs. Local #563, Teamster	65
#18 - City of Milwaukee vs. Garbage Collection Laborers, Independent; District Council 48

TABLE OF CONTENTS - Cont'd

AFSCME; Firefighters, Local #215;
Professional Policemen's Protective Ass.. . . 67

#19 - City of Janesville vs. Janesville Education Association. 71

#20 - City of Portage vs. Local #695 Teamsters. . . 35

INTRODUCTION AND ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The State of Wisconsin passed legislation in 1959 and 1961 that gave municipal employees the "right to be represented by labor organizations. . . in conferences and negotiations. . .on questions of wages, hours and conditions of employment."[1] The 1961 amendments gave the Wisconsin Employment Board (WERB) jurisdiction over the administration of the legislation. WERB responsibilities include the duty to establish the appropriate bargaining unit, to conduct representation elections, to mediate disputes, to prohibit unfair labor practices and to initiate fact finding procedures.

The Wisconsin fact-finding procedure provides for the appointment by the WERB of a fact finder to make written recommendations to the parties when they are deadlocked over the terms of a new agreement. These recommendations are not binding upon the parties. The portions of the statute that are relevant to the fact-finding procedure are quoted below.

> (e) Fact finding. Fact finding may be initiated in the following circumstances: 1. If after a reasonable period of negotiation the parties are deadlocked, either party or the parties jointly may initiate fact finding; 2. Where an employer or union fails or refuses to meet and negotiate in good faith at reasonable times in a bona fide effort to arrive at a settlement.
>
> (f) Same. Upon receipt of a petition to initiate fact finding, the board shall make an investigation and determine whether or not the condition set forth in par. (e) 1 or 2 has been met and shall certify the results of said investigation. If the certification requires that fact finding be initiated, the board shall appoint from a panel established by the board a qualified disinterested person to function as a fact finder.

---

1 Chapter 111.70, Sub-Chapter IV, Right of Public Employes to Organize or Join Labor Organizations and Relating to Bargaining in Municipal Employment.

(g) Same. The person appointed as fact finder may establish dates and place of hearings which shall be where feasible in the jurisdiction of the municipality involved. He shall conduct said hearings pursuant to rules established by the board. Upon request, the board shall issue subpoenas for hearings conducted by the fact finder. The fact finder may administer oaths. Upon completion of the hearings, he shall make written findings of fact and recommendations for solution of the dispute and shall cause the same to be served on the municipal employer and the union.

2. Fact finding cases. Only labor unions which have been certified as representative of the employes in the collective bargaining unit or which the employer has recognized as the representative of said employes shall be proper parties in initiating fact finding proceedings. Cost of fact finding proceedings shall be divided equally between said labor organization and the employer.[2]

Twenty fact finding reports were published prior to the April, 1965 date of this analysis. Each of these cases has been digested and several summary tables have been prepared. The detailed digest covers the major contentions of the parties, the rationale for solution chosen by the fact finder, the recommendations of the fact finder and the final settlement agreed upon by the parties. Table I is an index of the fact finding cases showing the names of the participating parties and the fact finders along with the date of the fact finding report. Table II contains a summary of the issues, fact finder's recommendations and settlements in each of the cases. Table III shows the amount of time taken to resolve each impasse. Table IV lists the fact finder's fee and the cost of the transcript.

The digest and tables were prepared by Edward Krinsky under my direction as a part of a study of Collective Bargaining by Public Employees in Wisconsin. Support of this research project by the Graduate School is gratefully acknowledged.

May, 1965

James L. Stern
Professor of Economics and Labor Education

---

[2] Ibid, Section (4)

Table I - Index of Fact Finding Cases

DIGEST	EMPLOYER	UNION	FACT FINDER	DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT
No. 1	Town of Preble	Local #75 Teamsters	R. C. Seitz	October 15, 1962
No. 2	City of DePere	Local #678 AFSCME	D. B. Johnson	June 1, 1963
No. 3	Shawano County	Local #1520 AFSCME	E. L. Wingert	October 1, 1963
No. 4	City of Racine	Local #321 Fire Fighters	P. G. Marshall	October 23, 1963
No. 5	Pierce County	Local #556 AFSCME	D. B. Johnson	February 20, 1964
No. 6	City of New Berlin	Local #647 AFSCME	R. C. Seitz	February 25, 1964
No. 7	Barron County	Local #518 AFSCME	D. B. Johnson	March 1, 1964
No. 8 and No. 20	City of Portage	Local #695 Teamsters	R. J. Mueller G. Haferbecker	March 31, 1964 March 16, 1965
No. 9	Green County	Local #226 AFSCME	R. J. Mueller	April 15, 1964
No. 10	City of Eau Claire	Local #696 WFT	E. L. Wingert	May 22, 1964
No. 11	City of Watertown	Local #695 Teamsters	P. G. Marshall	July 20, 1964
No. 12	City of South Milwaukee	Local #883 AFSCME	T. P. Whelan	August 29, 1964
No. 13	Racine County	Deputy Sheriff's Association	R. C. Seitz	September 4, 1964
No. 14	Wood County	Local #334 AFSCME	R. J. Mueller	October 10, 1964

DIGEST	EMPLOYER	UNION	FACT FINDER	DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT
No. 15	Wood County	Local #334 AFSCME	R. J. Mueller	October 10, 1964
No. 16	City of Eau Claire	Local #284 AFSCME; Local #487 Fire Fighters; Professional Policeman's Assn.	D. B. Johnson	November 9, 1964
No. 17	City of Appleton	Local #563 Teamsters	P. G. Marshall	November 20, 1964
No. 18	City of Milwaukee	Garbage Collection Laborers Independent; District Council 48 AFSCME; Fire Fighters Assn.; Policemen's Protective Assn.	N. P. Feinsinger Chm) E. L. Wingert T. C. Seitz	December 14, 1964
No. 19	City of Janesville	Janesville Education Assn.	R. C. Seitz	February 3, 1965
No. 20	(See No. 8)

Table II - Summary of Issues, Recommendations and Settlements

NUMBER	MAJOR ISSUE	FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION	REASON FOR RECOMMENDATION	RESULT OF FACT FINDING
1	Request for 7¢ hour wage increase, effective 4/1/62	Granted	Ability of Employer to pay	Recommendation accepted
2	1) Request for 42½ to 40 hours reduction	1) Deferred	1) Further exploration necessary	1) Employer refused to consider the matter
	2) Request for 7¢ hour wage increase	2) Granted	2) Wage comparisons show it to to be warranted	2) Employer refused to consider the matter
	3) Request by Employer to eliminate Sick Leave Provision	3) Denied	3) Operating policy can be modified without eliminating the provision	3) Provision was maintained
3	1) Request for 20¢ hour wage increase	1) 15¢ hour wage increase	1) Ability of Employer to pay	1) 12¢ hour increase
	2) Request for 50 to 45 hours reduction	2) Granted	2) Hours comparisons show it to be warranted	2) Recommendation accepted in 2 steps
	3) Request for Employer-paid Hospital insurance	3) Deferred	3) Granting request would give preferred status to these employees vis-a-vis others employed by the County	3) No action taken
	4) Request for impartial arbitration of unresolved grievances	4) Granted	4) Essential to good labor relations	4) No action taken
	5) Request for written contract	5) Granted	5) Essential to good labor relations	5) Recommendation accepted
4	Request for 67 to 56 hours reduction	Granted	Hours comparisons show it to be warranted	Reduction to 63 hours agreed to in following year's negotiations

Table II - Summary of Issues, Recommendations and Settlements - Cont'd

NUMBER	MAJOR ISSUE	FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION	REASON FOR RECOMMENDATION	RESULT OF FACT FINDING
5	Request for 20¢ hour wage increase	10¢ hour wage increase	Wage comparisons show it to be warranted	Recommendation accepted after employees went on strike
6	1) Request for guaranteed wage	1) Deferred	1) Need for further evaluation of ability to pay	1) Employer refused to consider the matter
	2) Request for more information about reasons for discharge of two employees	2) Granted	2) Union has rights to the information as exclusive bargaining agent	2) Employer refused to consider the matter
7	Request for 20¢ hour wage increase	8¢ hour wage increase	Wage comparisons show it to be warranted	Recommendation accepted
8	1) Request for 10¢ hour wage increase	1) 8¢ hour wage increase	1) Wage comparisons show it to be warranted	1) Employer put into effect its original 5¢ offer
	2) Request for fully-paid hospital-surgical insurance	2) Suggested city pay cost of coverage for employees only	2) Prevailing practice in private industry equals or exceeds this amount	2) Employer refused to consider the matter
A N D
20	1) Request for 8¢ hour wage increase	1) 5¢ hour wage increase	1) Wage comparisons show it to be warranted	1) Employer refused to consider the matter
	2) Request for fully-paid single employee hospital insurance	2) Granted	2) Accepted practice of a great many municipalities; currently being paid for Portage teachers	2) Employer refused to consider the matter
9	1) Request for 25¢ hour wage increase	12¢ hour wage increase	1) Ability of Employer to pay; close differential between hourly and salaried employees	1) Employer did not change its original 5¢ offer

Table II - Summary of Issues, Recommendations and Settlements - Cont'd

NUMBER	MAJOR ISSUE	FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION	REASON FOR RECOMMENDATION	RESULT OF FACT FINDING
9 (cont'd)
	2) Request that Employer pay health insurance through a different carrier	2) Denied	2) Present plan adequate and not substantially different from alternative plan	Recommendation accepted
10	1) Request for $100 increase for teachers with no college degree	1) Granted for those with 14 years service	1) Bring salaries to within 1% of 12-city median	Recommendation accepted
	2) Request for increase of $100 to minimum and $285 to maximum for teachers with Bachelors degree	2) Increase minimum $100; increase maximum $210	2) Bring salaries to within 1% of 12-city median	2) Minimum increased $300; maximum increased $150
	3) Request for increase of $225 to minimum and $480 to maximum for teachers with Masters degree	3) Increase minimum $175; increase maximum $405	3) Bring salaries to within 1% of 12-city median	3) Minimum increased $300; maximum increased $655
	4) Request for increase of $200 for teachers with dependents	4) $100 increase	4) Bring salaries to within 1% of 12-city median	4) No increase granted
	5) Request for Employer payment of Hospital and Surgical insurance of $119 for family, and $36 for individual insurance	5) Employer should pay $75 for family and nothing for single insurance	5) Bring salaries to within 1% of 12-city median	5) Employer refused to assume any additional payments
	6) Request for $100 annual increase for those with 10 years of service	6) Granted; also, give additional $50 for 20 years	6) Experience should be rewarded	6) No increases granted
	7) Request for retroactivity to beginning of the year	7) Granted	7) January 1, has been customary salary adjustment date in Eau Claire	7) No retroactivity. Increases to be effective 8/1/64. Agreement for $200 across-the-board increase effective 1/1/65

Table II - Summary of Issues, Recommendations and Settlements - Cont'd

NUMBER	MAJOR ISSUE	FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION	REASON FOR RECOMMENDATION	RESULT OF FACT FINDING
11	Request for 15¢ hour wage increase	8¢ hour wage increase retroactive to 1/1/64	Wage comparisons show it to be warranted	No increase granted for 1964. However, 11¢ hour increase for 1965 granted
12	1) Request for 20¢ hour wage increase	1) 7¢/hour wage increase, retroactive to 1/1/64	1) Wage comparisons show it to be warranted	1) Recommendation accepted
	2) Request to restore cost of living formula	2) Denied	2) Both sides agreed earlier to give up the formula	2) Employer refused to consider the matter
	3) Request that Employer increase life insurance coverage	3) Granted; Coverage should be increased from $3000 to $5000 effective 1/1/65	3) Employer had made the offer at one point, in good faith	3) Recommendation accepted
	4) Request that workmen's compensation provision be reduced to writing	4) Granted	4) Prevailing practice in private industry	4) Recommendation accepted
13	Request for wage increases of: $30 for those with less than 1 year service; $17 for those with more than 3 years service	$10 for less than 1 year; $17 for more than 3 years. Also, institute a plan linking wages to educational attainment	Higher wages are needed to attract better-educated recruits	$25 across-the-board increase effective 1/1/65
14	Request for wage increase of $10 for one employee and $30 for four others	Entire request granted, retroactive to 1/1/64	Wage comparisons show it to be warranted	No retroactivity, Increase of $20 for three employees and $35 for one other for November, December, 1964, making all five salaries equal. Across-the-board raise of $16 for 1965

Table - Summary of Issues, Recommendations and Settlements - Cont'd

NUMBER	MAJOR ISSUE	FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION	REASON FOR RECOMMENDATION	RESULT OF FACT FINDING
15	Request for re-employment of discharged employee	Denied	Discharge warranted on basis of employee's total work performance	Recommendation accepted
16	Request for following increases: a) across-the-board wages b) additional increase for firemen c) longevity payments d) length of vacation	Increase totaling 4.3% but excluding item b)	Total is equal to amount warranted by President's guideposts and cost of living index	Employer agreed to the percentage recommended but not the fact finder's allocation of it
17	1) Request for 10¢ hour wage increase	1) 7¢ hour	1) Wage Comparisons show it to be warranted	1) Recommendation accepted
	2) The increase should be retroactive to 1/1/64	2) Granted	2) No reasons for not granting it.	2) Recommendation accepted
18	Large number of requests. Only those indicated in next column were considered important enough to warrant immediate attention	1) Establish Labor Peace Agency		1) Pending
		2) Establish Study Committees		2) Pending
		3) Establish negotiations schedule		3) Recommendation accepted
		4) Have permanent City negotiator		4) Personnel Director and Staff handle City's negotiations
		5) Have closed bargaining sessions in early stages of the bargaining		5) City Attorney ruled that all sessions must be open
		6) Have written one year contract with a reopener provision		6) Written one year agreements with AFSCME and Police
		7) Develop new arbitration and grievance procedure		7) Included in AFSCME contract
		8) City should absorb full single-person insurance, and 1/2 of family insurance in December, 1964 only.		8) Recommendation accepted

Table II - Summary of Issues, Recommendations and Settlements - Cont'd

NUMBER	MAJOR ISSUE	FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION	REASON FOR RECOMMENDATION	RESULT OF FACT FINDING
18 Cont'd		9) Have written seniority practices for Garbage Collectors		9) Pending
		10) Break police out of overall wage classifications		10) Recommendation accepted
		11) Give Fire Fighters 56 hour week by July 1, 1965		11) Recommendation accepted
		12) Give Fire Fighters 10¢ weekend shift differential		12) Pending
19	1) Request for increase of yearly increment of $25	1) $20 increase	1) End salary deterioration. Also, ability of employer to pay	1) Employer agreed to a $10 increment for Bachelors teachers; $5 for Masters teachers
	2) Request for increase of $250 to base of Masters degree teachers	2) Increase base $250	2) End salary deterioration. Also, ability of employer to pay	2) Recommendation accepted
	3) Request for pay for extracurricular duties	3) Granted	3) Improve teacher morale	3) Increased pay was granted only for duty at home football games

Table III - Time Taken to Resolve Impasses

Digest	Petition For Fact Finding	Fact Finding Hearing	Fact Finder's Report	Agreement Reached on	Elapsed Time	Additional Comments
No. 1	6/29/62	9/10/62	10/15/62	11/62	5 mos.	Negotiations began prior to 3/62
No. 2	3/21/63	5/1/63	6/1/63	effective 1/64	9 mos.*	Negotiations began in 9/62. Parties agreed to a stipulation requesting non-binding arbitration in 1/63. After further discussion Union initiated fact finding.
No. 3	2/18/63	9/5/63	10/1/63	1/12/65	23 mos.	Negotiations began in 10/62. Delay between petition and fact finding was caused by Employer - challenge to WERB jurisdiction in Circuit Court.
No. 4	11/26/62	6/11/63	10/23/63	effective 1/64	14 mos.*	Delay between petition and fact finding was caused by Employer - challenge to WERB jurisdiction.
No. 5	9/9/63	1/16/64	2/20/64	5/1/64	8 mos.	Negotiations began in 2/63. 10-day strike before agreement.
No. 6	10/4/63	1/17/64	2/25/64	None		Negotiations began in 8/63
No. 7	9/20/63	2/6/64	3/2/64	4/23/64	7 mos.	Negotiations began in 7/63. Delay between petition and fact finding caused by Employer-challenge to WERB jurisdiction.

Table III - Time Taken to Resolve Impasses - Cont'd

Digest	Petition For Fact Finding	Fact Finding Hearing	Fact Finder's Report	Agreement Reached on	Elapsed Time	Additional Comments
No.8	1/13/64	2/3/64	3/31/64	None		Parties negotiated between 2/63 and 11/63 when impasse occurred.
No. 20	1/8/65	2/5/65	3/16/65	None		Parties negotiated during 1964 including two sessions with a WERB mediator
No. 9	10/28/63	2/17/64	4/15/64	None		Negotiations began in 5/63
No. 10	11/11/63	1/9/64	5/22/64	6/64	7 mos.	Negotiations took place for several months prior to petition
No. 11	11/11/63	2/11/64	7/20/64	11/64	12 mos.	Negotiations began in 8/63
No. 12	10/28/63	4/15/64 5/4/64 5/20/64	8/29/64	10/64	12 mos.	Informal hearing with fact finder 1/13/64. Preparation of briefs from then until 4/15/64 hearing.
No. 13	1/27/64	4/9/64 7/29/64	9/4/64	11/64	10 mos.
No. 14	4/17/64	7/24/64	10/10/64	11/64	7 mos.	Negotiations began in 11/63
No. 15	5/21/64	7/24/64	10/10/64	11/64	6 mos.	Case consolidated with # 14 and schedule determined by it.
No. 16	9/15/64	10/19/64	11/9/64	12/9/64	3 mos.	Three Unions petitioned on 9/15/64. WERB consolidated the disputes and just one fact finding took place.
No. 17	1/13/64	9/3/64	11/20/64	12/19/64	11 mos.	Negotiations began in 10/63

Table III - Time Taken to Resolve Impasse - Cont'd

Digest	Petition For Fact Finding	Fact Finding Hearing	Fact Finder's Report	Agreement Reached on	Elapsed Time	Additional Comments
No. 18	11/20/63 - 11/21/63	12/16/63 2/11/64 2/18/64 3/10-11/64 7/15-16/64	12/14/64	5/7/65	18 mos.	Formal negotiations began 10/1/63. Agreement reached with only two of four organizations
No. 19	10/26/64	12/18/64	2/3/65	3/9/65	5 mos.	Negotiations began in 5/64.
No. 20	See No. 8

Table IV - Cost of Fact Finding

(in ascending order of total cost)

	(1) Fact Finder's Fee	(2) Cost of Transcript 1/	(3) Total of (1) + (2) 2/
	273.00	34.12	307.12
	300.00	59.40	359.40
	324.00	65.40	389.40
	325.00	67.80	392.80
	n/a	n/a	400.00
	329.00	79.60	408.60
	350.00	107.30	457.30
	348.00	123.90	471.90
	402.00	103.00	505.00
	556.12	none	556.12
	565.54	150.60	716.14
	550.00	177.30	727.30
	1133.88	426.40	1560.28
	1595.00	103.15	1698.15
	1550.00	494.00	2044.00
	2104.20	173.50	2277.70
	10162.04	2100.10	12262.04
Median	$ 402.00	$115.60	$505.00

1/ This figure represents the cost of two copies of the transcript and the recorder's appearance fee.

2/ This figure represents only the sum of (1) and (2). It does not include legal fees in cases where outside lawyers were used nor does it include "lost time" costs or "miscellaneous" expenses. Our data from four or five cases indicate that the cost of an outside lawyer for fact finding is $200 - $300. Miscellaneous expenses seem to be below $100.

Fact Finding
Digest # 1

EMPLOYER: Town of Preble

UNION: Drivers, Warehouse & Dairy Employees Union, Local #75, International Brotherhood of Teamsters

FACT FINDER: Reynolds C. Seitz

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: October 15, 1962

MAJOR ISSUE: Wages. The Union requested a 7¢ per hour wage increase

BACKGROUND: The Union was recognized as exclusive bargaining agent for the employees of the Preble Street Department. The one year contract expired in March, 1962. Negotiations for the new contract reached a stalemate. The Union requested 7¢; the Employer offered no increase.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union based its request for a wage increase on a comparison of wages paid in Preble with those paid for similar work in DePere, Green Bay and Brown County. It also compared Preble wages with wages paid for the same type of work by general contractors in the area. The Union claimed that its intention was not to specify wage rates for each job classification but rather to make sure that wages paid in Preble did not fall further behind those paid in comparable areas.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer did not question the accuracy of the wage data presented by the Union. Rather, it challenged the validity of a comparison of Preble, with its population of 12,000, with the larger areas used by the Union. The Employer submitted data which it claimed drew valid comparisons with areas similar to Preble.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The Fact Finder did not use the wage comparisons submitted by either party. They did not provide him with a conclusive picture of what wages should be. Instead, he considered the question of "ability to pay."

> It appears to me that whenever a governmental body is involved in negotiations with a Union on the matter of increase in wages, it is peculiarly pertinent to inquire into the ability to pay. This is even more true than in connection with negotiations between industry and labor.

He suggested that the evaluation of ability to pay requires an investigation of the tax base to evaluate the possibility of raising taxes if present rates are not adequate. In the issue at hand he suggested that wages paid to Street Department employees be compared with other wages paid in Preble to see if a wage increase would be "shocking" to the Town. The Fact Finder noted that the Employer did not deny its "ability to pay." Also, he cited the fact that 65 to 75 per cent of Preble's population earn their wages in industry in Green Bay. Thus the living standard in the Town is geared to the higher-paying metropolitan area.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that the Employer pay the 7¢ per hour increase requested by the Union, effective April 1, 1962.

> If ability to pay is not a material factor, and if the Street Department Workers are not put in an unrealistically high income category as compared to other Preble townspeople, I cannot but feel that the Union request that the Town of Preble not fall further behind the area's standard is a reasonable request.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The fact finder's recommendation was accepted. A one-year contract was signed which called for a 7¢ increase effective April 1, 1962.

Fact Finding
Digest #2

EMPLOYER: City of DePere

UNION: DePere City Employees Union, Local #678

American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: David B. Johnson

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: June 1, 1963

BACKGROUND: The Union was recognized as the exclusive bargaining agent for a unit consisting primarily of workers in the Street & Sanitation Departments. Its one year contract expired December 31, 1962. The parties requested fact finding after numerous negotiations for a new contract failed to resolve the outstanding issues.

MAJOR ISSUE: 1) Hours reduction and wages

The Union requested a reduction in weekly hours from 42½ to 40 without loss of takehome pay.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union submitted data to show a differential between wages paid in employment in DePere and Green Bay. It claimed that the comparison was unfavorable to DePere's employees and that a major portion of the differential could be removed by a reduction in hours of work. It justified the comparison with Green Bay on the basis that DePere and Green Bay are in the same labor market.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer challenged the validity of using Green Bay as the basis for a comparison of working conditions. It asserted that a reduction in hours would have the same effect as an increase in wages and would necessitate an increase in the tax rate.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder stated that there had not been enough investigation of the effect of the proposed reduction of working hours. He suggested that there be further negotiations on this issue. He offered the following reason for this decision:

> It behooves Government, whether national, state or local, to be a model employer and to adopt employment conditions which reflect the best of prevailing practices . . . It would not appear to be the function of a fact finder to be creative in the sense that he recommends what might involve basic changes in staffing and operation of existing functions. Such results, if they are to come about, should stem from agreement between the parties who will have to live with them.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The issue of hours reduction should be deferred pending further investigation and negotiation, "although adoption of a 40 hour work week is a desirable long-term objective."

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer refused to accept the fact finder's recommendation. No change was made in the hours of work.

MAJOR ISSUE: 2) Wages

The Union requested an increase of 7¢ per hour in wages (in addition to the reduction in hours).

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union presented wage comparisons with Green Bay and other major cities and their suburbs. It claimed that these comparisons indicated that a 7¢ wage increase was reasonable; the wage increase, along with the reduction in working hours, would close the DePere-Green Bay wage differential.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: Again the Employer denied the validity of a comparison with Green Bay. The Employer stated that DePere already had the highest tax rate of an Green Bay suburb. A wage increase would not only require an increase in taxes but would bring requests for wage increases from workers outside of the bargaining unit. The Employer asserted that while the cost of living had risen by about 20 per cent. To justify its position further, the Employer offered data on wages from cities which it considered to be comparable with DePere, and it pointed to "certain errors, inconsistencies, and incomplete items" in the Union's presentation.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder noted that the data presented by both parties were inconclusive. He pointed to the need for criteria other than wage comparisons for use in evaluating the merits of a wage increase. He stated that his decision was based on the Preble Fact Finding Case (Digest No.1), on pay increases in Kaukauna, and on data in Labor Force Trends published by the Wisconsin Industrial Commission. In recommending a wage increase, the fact finder said:

> . . . taxpayers must recognize that it is unfair to maintain static tax rates by denying municipal employees the improvements in their earnings which are being extended to others in the community and to similar employees in other communities.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The 7¢ wage increase should be granted.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer refused to accept the fact finder's recommendation. No wage increase was granted.

MAJOR ISSUE: 3) Sick leave policy

The Employer sought to remove the phrase, "or to members of his immediate family," from the existing sick leave clause which read, "Accumulated sick leave credits may be used for sickness or accident to the employee or to members of his immediate family."

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union contended that the clause should be maintained. It denied the allegations made by the Employer.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer alleged that employees were abusing the sick leave policy by staying home too often when the extent of illness in the family did not warrant it.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder decided that no conclusive evidence had been presented by the Employer to back up its allegations. He thought that sickness in the family which warrants the employee's absence should be certified by a doctor.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder recommended that the sick leave clause be maintained with the understanding that a doctor's certificate be required for family-caused absence as is the case when the employee himself is sick.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer maintained the sick leave clause in the form recommended by the fact finder.

Fact Finding
Digest # 3

EMPLOYER: Shawano County Highway Department

UNION: Shawano County Highway Employees Union, Local 1520, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: E. L. Wingert

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: October 1, 1963

BACKGROUND: The Union made its request for a change in working conditions in October, 1962. The Fact Finding proceedings were delayed by the Employer. The Employer challenged the Fact Finding authority of the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board in light of the existence of the Shawano County Fact Finding Commission. The WERB ruled that this Commission was inadequate; its ruling was upheld in Circuit Court.[1]

MAJOR ISSUE: 1) Wages

The Union requested an hourly wage increase of 20¢. The Employer made no offer.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER AND UNION: With respect to wages and the other issues in the dispute each party presented data on wages, hours and working conditions which compared Shawano with other areas. Each contended that its data justified its bargaining position.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder was not satisfied with the comparisons presented by either party. Instead, he selected nine counties for the purpose of comparison and he found that Shawano's wages were 19¢ below the average. /He said that if comparisons were to be made, they were more valid when made with other counties than with cities, towns, or private employment within the county./ The fact finder also took note of a general wage increase of 7¢ per hour in January, 1963, which was granted to toher Shawano County employees. He said:

> It has not been shown that the added cost of the recommendation for settlement made in this report would be beyond the reasonable ability of the County to pay, or that such costs would create hardship or impose an undue burden on the taxpayers.

While nobody likes to pay taxes, that alone is hardly a persuasive reason why employees on essential work should be kept on sub-standard wages.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: An increase in wages of 15¢ per hour should be granted. If possible, 7¢ of the increase should be made retroactive to January 1, 1963 to be in accord with the wage increase granted to other County employees at that time.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: An increase of 12¢ per hour was granted effective January 1, 1964.

MAJOR ISSUE: 2) Hours Reduction

The Union requested that there be a reduction in hours of work from 50 to 45 per week.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: In considering the effects of a reduction in hours, the fact finder examined budgets, the tax base, manpower requirements amount of overtime worked and other factors. He noted that the employer provided steady work in all seasons with no lay-offs during slack periods; this policy had been adequate to retain an experienced work force with very little turnover. The fact finder cited the fact that the 40 hour work week is standard in private industry but that 45 hours, though still a long work week would be in line with most of the counties compared with Shawano. He conjectured that the reduction might be beneficial to the County which might then be able to get along with somewhat fewer total hours of work per year and eliminate the need to pay for slack time.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder recommended that the work week be reduced to 45 hours. The recommended 15¢ wage increase (see Major Issue No. 1) thus takes on the following meaning: 13¢ of the increase covers the cost of maintaining take home pay when hours are reduced. The additional 2¢ is an actual increase. The fact finder stated that to grant further money for wage increases would be to ask too much of the Employer at this time.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer recognized the desirability of shorter hours. Effective January 1, 1965, hours were reduced to 45 the year-round. Thus, the 12¢ wage increase which was granted had the following meaning: 10¢ covered the cost of maintaining take home pay when hours were reduced. 2¢ was a wage increase. The hours reduction was in two steps: First, from 8 months @ 50 hours and 4 months @ 45 hours to 8 months @ 45 hours and 4 months @ 47½ hours effective January 1, 1964; Second, to 45 hours as noted above.

MAJOR ISSUE: 3) Insurance

The Union requested that the Employer pay 50 per cent of hospital and surgical insurance payments for married workers.

FACT FINDER's RATIONALE: The fact finder thought that the requested plan would place employees of the Highway Department in a preferred position compared with other County employees.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder said: Health insurance payments by the county are desirable but are not recommended at this time. The county should be given "reasonable additional time to consider the advisability of contributing to the cost of hospital and surgical insurance for all of its employees."

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: There has been nothing further done on this matter.

MAJOR ISSUE: 4) Grievances

The Union requested a grievance procedure with impartial arbitration as the final step.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder noted the need for an "expeditious and satisfactory grievance procedure" in the hands of impartial third persons. Grievances in Shawano County are handled by the County Board; there is no civil service protection for County employees.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that a procedure be introduced with impartial arbitration. It should provide:

> ". . . . for the presentation and disposition of complaints about the interpretation and application of the County-Union agreement (whether in ordinance or contract form), alleged violations thereof, abuses of discretion by supervisors in the treatment of employees, and about working conditions; but not including dissatisfaction with the provisions of the County-Union agreement or proposals to change it; nor with the management of highway work in matters left within the exclusive function of management; and that such grievance procedures provide for impartial binding arbitration as a final step."

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The employer refused to agree to a grievance procedure with impartial binding arbitration as a final step.

MAJOR ISSUE: 5) Contract

The Union requested a written contract.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder said: "A collective bargaining agreement is a business transaction and should be dealt with in a business-like way."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that a written contract be introduced.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: A written contract was entered into on January 12, 1965.

---

[1] The County made revisions in its local fact finding procedure and for a second time the WERB ruled that the procedure was inadequate. In both rulings the WERB cited the lack of provision for impartiality on the local commission.

Fact Finding
Digest # 4

EMPLOYER: City of Racine

UNION: Racine Fire Fighters Local #321, AFL-CIO

Fact Finder: Philip G. Marshall

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: October 23, 1963

BACKGROUND: The Union requested Fact Finding. The Wisconsin Employment Relations Board granted the request after it had conducted a hearing. The WERB then denied a request from the Employer to conduct a rehearing on the matter. The Union's request for changes in working conditions were made in November, 1962 but were not considered in the 1963 budget.

MAJOR ISSUE: Hours reduction

The Union requested that there be a reduction in hours of work from 67 to 56 per week.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union presented a 76-page document of statistical data about working conditions to support its request that hours be reduced. In reference to this document the Fact Finder said,

> It was difficult of analysis largely because of the format chosen. . .a minute analysis of all types of working conditions; but as to the hours worked per week, no breakdown is made so that one could with reasonable diligence make comparisons with cities of like size and geographic location.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer claimed that the WERB did not have jurisdiction in the dispute. It claimed that the Union's request for changes in November, 1962, came too late for incorporation in the 1963 budget. Negotiations had not begun yet for the 1964 budget. Thus the Employer claimed that it was acting in accordance with the City's budget-making procedures. The City Attorney said:

> The purpose of Section 111.70 is to encourage collective bargaining. . .not to supplant such bargaining by fiat. This attempt to place the WERB or its Fact Finder on one side of the table before bargaining has even begun is contrary to the spirit if not the letter of the law.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The Fact Finder used statistics in Municipal Year Book and Municipal Fire Administration to compare Racine's hours with practices in other Wisconsin cities and in municipalities in other states. He noted a gradual downward-trend in hours with 56 hours per week predominating at the present time. The Fact Finder made his decision according to the following line of reasoning:

> In general, the function of a fact finder in making recommendations for the settlement of the issues in dispute is to serve as an extension of the collective bargaining process. . . .His sole function is to supply such government officials as well as the collective bargaining representatives of government employees, with a prediction of the probable results of free collective bargaining defined by the fact finder as, bargaining with the right to strike on the issues involved, in the form of recommendations.

In addition, the fact finder cited the reduction of hours in Kenosha which he considered as part of the same labor market as Racine. He dismissed the Employer's argument on the basis of the WERB decision which denied the Employer a rehearing.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that the reduction in hours from 67 to 56 per week be made without reduction in take-home pay.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: No agreement was reached for 1963. The Employer granted a reduction in hours from 67 to 63 as a part of the agreement reached for 1964. At the same time an increase in wages and fringe benefits was granted to all city employees.

Fact Finding
Digest # 5

EMPLOYER: Pierce County Highway Department

UNION: Pierce County Highway Department Employees, Local 556, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: David B. Johnson

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: February 20, 1964

MAJOR ISSUE: Wages. The Union requested an increase in wages of 20¢ per hour. The Employer offered a 5¢ per hour increase.

BACKGROUND: There was disagreement on many issues; the impasse was reached on the question of wages. There had been a 10 per cent increase in wages in 1961. Since then the work week had been reduced from 55 to 50 hours with further reduction to 45 hours during the winter.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union contended that there should have been a wage increase in 1963. It challenged the Employer's contention that the 1961 agreement (unwritten and made before the Union had certification as exclusive bargaining agent) had been negotiated to cover a three year period. Also, it claimed that the five hour work reduction, although desireable, had resulted in a loss of take-home pay.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer stated that the 1961 agreement was a three year agreement. As another argument against increasing wages, the Employer cited the fact that in 1962 the employees had been brought into the State retirement plan. It claimed that this would cost a million and a half dollars for funding past service benefits.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder said, "The heart of this dispute is the take-home pay of the employees." He commended the Employer for its plan by which weekly hours were reduced from 55 to 50 (it was done over a long period in order to spread the effects of the change, but he noted that the result had been a reduction in employees' take-home pay over the 34-month period of the reduction. The fact finder doubted that the hours reduction had resulted in reduced productivity and therefore there was no justification for a reduction in weekly wages. He said:

> Thus although the County does not agree with their view, the Union is not irrational when it points out that despite their extra five hours of leisure each week employees should not now be earning less money than in 1961...County governments are exploiting employees when they maintain long work weeks without premium pay, and taxpayers should recognize that they are being subsidized by public employees when these employees accept such conditions.

The fact finder made his own wage data comparisons and found that "an increase larger than the five cents granted by the County is warranted."

With respect to the retirement plan, the fact finder noted that the state carries a substantial burden of the cost involved.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that in addition to the 5¢ per hour offered by the Employer there should be an increase of another 5¢ per hour. The increase should be retroactive to January, 1964. He noted that retroactivity to January, 1963 was warranted but he recognized the difficulty that this would cause in budgeting and therefore did not make this recommendation.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer refused to accept the recommendation. The Union then went out on strike. After a week, the employer offered the 10¢ raise recommended by the fact finder to be effective March 1, 1964, rather than January 1, 1964 as the fact finder had suggested. The Union accepted this offer and ended the strike.

Fact Finding
Digest #6

EMPLOYER: City of New Berlin

UNION: New Berlin City Employees, Local #647, American Federation of State County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: Reynolds C. Seitz

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: February 25, 1964

BACKGROUND: The Union was recognized by the Employer as the exclusive bargaining agent for highway employees. The Employer made unilateral changes in the work week; it eliminated the 45-hour guaranteed work week (which had been in effect from an agreement with the previous bargaining group) and substituted a 40-hour week with an increase in hourly wages and provision for overtime paid at time-and-a-half rates. There was no written contract. A secondary issue was that two employees had been fired. The reason given as, "for cause".

MAJOR ISSUE: 1) Hours of Work

The Union requested that a 45-hour guaranteed work week be reinstated.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer claimed that by reducing the hours of work per week and increasing the hourly wage rate and the opportunities for overtime work it had increased the takehome pay of its employees. The Employer noted that only one municipality in its area has a guaranteed work week.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union presented wage data which showed that an increase in takehome pay resulted only because ten of the twelve months of 1963 were worked under the old 45-hour guarantee; takehome pay over a full year for work under the new plan would be lower, regardless of opportunities for overtime work and a higher hourly wage rate.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder did not base his arguments on whether or not other municipalities had guaranteed wages. He cited "ability to pay" as the major consideration. He then offered his views on the desirability of guaranteed employment. He said:

> When conditions reasonable suggest it employers should be willing to specify a guaranteed work week. I recognize the difficulty of guaranteeing hours under the conditions of uncertainty that exist in many industrial situations. The difficulty does not seem apparent for a municipal employer in a situation that involves about 18 employees. Particularly does this seem true against a background of experience with a 45 hour guaranteed work week. The fact that the City at one time offered a 40 hour guaranteed week indicates little concern on its part that there would be any appreciable periods of time when men were getting paid for doing nothing.

The fact finder continued:

> For reasons I have stated I find that the plan which the City substituted for the 45 hour guaranteed work week and the hourly rates prior to the change gave at best so small an increase as to be utterly unrealistic. And, as the Union pointed out, if the employees had not worked for 10 months under the 45 hour per week guarantee there is doubt that there would have been even the extremely modest increase in yearly total previously mentioned.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder said: "I conclude that the Union can press for a guaranteed work week but not for one of more than 40 hours". He recommended that the parties continue negotiations as he felt that, "...there was not enough information on tax potential, industry in the community, property values and standard of living to enable me to move the hourly figure that would be appropriate." The fact finder said that the intent of fact finding is "to encourage the parties to come to an agreement," and rather than prolong the proceedings until more information is submitted he decided to leave the issues to the parties in the hope that his guidelines would encourage them to arrive at an equitable contract.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer refused to accept the fact finder's recommendation.

MAJOR ISSUE: 2) Dismissal of Employees

The Union protested the dismissal of two employees for "cause".

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union charged that the Employer refused to give it information about the reasons for dismissing the two employees. The Union claimed that as the bargaining agent, it was entitled to have this information.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer claimed that there was no contract and thus no specific grievance procedure. In any case, it claimed that hiring and firing were management functions exclusively.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder stressed the importance of maintaining adequate records about incidents and of issuing clear warnings. "Cause", he said, requires definite proof and not reliance on hearsay testimony. The fact finder agreed with the Union that it has "a right to certain specific detailed information from the city as to the reason for the discharge of employees who are part of the bargaining unit."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder recommended that the Employer provide more information about the discharges. "I find here that . . . the City did not accord the "due process" which arbitrators and courts insist upon."

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer refused to accept the Fact Finder's recommendation. The Employer asserted that the fact finder exceeded his authority in respect to the hearing and in regard to the recommendations. In view of the Employer's refusal to even discuss these matters, the Union chose to disband.

Fact Finding
Digest #7

EMPLOYER: Barron County Highway Department

UNION: Barron County Highway Employees, Local #518, American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: David B. Johnson

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: March 1, 1964

BACKGROUND: The Union was recognized by the Employer as bargaining agent. There was a written agreement in 1962 which was automatically renewed in 1963. The Union requested fact finding after negotiations for the 1964 agreement failed. The Wisconsin Employment Relations Board appointed the fact finder after it rejected the County's own fact finding procedures.

MAJOR ISSUE: Wages

The Union requested an increase of 20¢ per hour and an additional 10¢ per hour for "patrolmen and patrolmen's helpers". The Employer proposed a 5¢ increase and an additional 5¢ per hour for "patrolmen".

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union presented comparative wage data from other counties to support its request for a wage increase. In addition, it cited the rise in the cost of living in Barron and in the rest of the country. Also, it asserted that the shrinkage in the Barron Highway Department work force in the last decade was an indication that productivity in the County had risen.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer, too, presented wage data comparisons from other counties in support of its claim that Barron's wages are above average. It asserted that the County is agricultural and that its economic base does not warrant greater expenditures for wages than it has offered. It cited the bad years for farms in the County in 1962 and 1963 as evidence of inability to pay.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder was not satisfied with the wage comparisons presented by the parties. He did use, as the basis for his decision, an eight-county comparison which was part of the Employer's presentation. This comparison with all of the Counties in Barron's highway district showed that Barron's wages are 8.3¢ below the average. The fact finder also made use of 1963 national-pattern and midwest-area-pattern statistics from the Bureau of National Affairs. He noted that the main problem in the dispute was an absence of agreed-upon criteria by which to judge the merits of a wage increase. He cited the "self-defeating" nature of a routine resort to wage comparisons and gave the following hypothetical example:

> If all eight counties know that wage disputes are to be resolved on the basis of comparisons with one another, they have a strong incentive to hold rates down. If wage decisions in some of the counties are made unilaterally because the employees are not organized, that result is assured. If this later causes employees in all the counties to organize, the tendency will be for the bargaining to cover the whole eight county area. This will require some "outside reference for wage comparisons or the adoption of other criteria.

The fact finder recognized the importance of considering the cost of living and productivity but noted the difficulty of applying these factors "with enough precision to serve as a basis for settlement". He concluded by saying that he ". . . believes that these parties should begin immediately to seek a basis for judging future adjustments in wages, hours, and other employment conditions."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder said: "In the meantime, although neither party may be satisfied with it, the $.08 herein recommended should provide an acceptable basis for resolving this dispute." He recommended no special additional increase for "patrolmen".

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer accepted the recommendation in full and granted an 8¢ increase retroactive to the beginning of the contract date (January 1, 1964). No special increase was given to patrolmen.

Fact Finding
Digest #8 and #20

EMPLOYER: City of Portage

UNION: Drivers, Salesman, Warehousemen, Milk Processors, Cannery, Dairy Employees and Helpers Union, Local #695

FACT FINDER: Robert J. Mueller; Gordon Haferbecker

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: March 31, 1964; March 16, 1965

BACKGROUND: The Union was certified as the exclusive bargaining agent for the employees of the Public Works Department in 1962. Negotiations for the 1964 contract reached an impasse over two issues: wages and insurance. The impasse remained after the fact finder gave the parties his recommendations. After several unsuccessful attempts to negotiate, and two unsuccessful attempts by the WERB to mediate, the Union petitioned for fact finding; a second fact finding took place and once again no agreement was reached.

MAJOR ISSUE: (1) Wages

The Union requested an hourly wage increase of 10¢. After the first fact finding was refused, the Union demanded 16¢ but later reduced its demand to 8% coupled with single employee hospitalization insurance. The Employer offered and put into effect a 5¢ per hour increase.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union contended that the offer of 5¢ was less than the average wage increase to employees doing comparable work in other cities. The Union presented data which showed a 14¢ per hour average increase for workers in other Wisconsin municipalities with the same population as Portage. It examined contiguous counties and found the average increase to be 9.9¢ per hour. In addition the Union claimed that these workers deserved more than the 5¢ offered by the city because their many skills facilitated their assignment on an interchangeable basis. The Union also objected to the Employer's insistence on comparing the wages paid to its workers to "common labor" wages in other employments.

CONTENTION OF THE EMPLOYER: The Employer based its argument on "ability to pay"; it said that the overall cost of the wage increase and the insurance is prohibitive and would necessitate an increase in taxes which would make the city less attractive to industry. It felt that these 15 workers could not be given a wage increase without a similar increase for the other 41 City employees. The Employer claimed that City wage rates are 33¢ higher on the average than wage rates in local industry and that City wages compare very favorably with those paid to workers in Wisconsin municipalities of similar population size. The Employer stated that the workers in the bargaining unit are not skilled, are well paid and have year-round security. The Employer noted that it does not lay-off workers in slack seasons. During the second fact finding, the Employer cited declining productivity in the Public Works Department as an additional reason for not granting an increase in 1965.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The first fact finder discounted comparisons with other areas because they were based solely on similar population size. He stressed the necessity of considering wage and price trends at the national, state and county level (in ascending order of importance). He found that a comparison of wages in Portage with wages for similar work in Columbia County (Portage is in Columbia County) was unfavorable to the City. A primary factor in the fact finder's decision was the impact of the higher wage level of Dane County upon living costs in Portage as well as the depressing effect on wages paid in Portage because of the availability of workers from the low wage and low living cost area of Marquette County to the north of Portage. The fact finder noted that this situation tended to squeeze Portage residents who worked in Portage. They faced higher living costs caused by the expenditures of Portage residents who worked for higher wages in the adjoining southern county. Yet, they were paid lower wages because of the competition in the labor market from workers commuting from the lower cost area to the north of Portage. These considerations were regarded by the fact finder as more important than the Employer's data on Portage wage levels, the possibility of a tax increase, and the effect of taxation on attraction of industry. These latter factors, he said, were "further removed from the basic issue of the wage rate determination."

The second fact finder suggested that the Employer compare its common-labor employees only with those in cities which, like Portage, do not differentiate among their street workers according to task when establishing pay classifications, but instead have just one common-labor category. Such comparisons, and comparisons of Portage common-labor wages with pay scales for more skilled classifications in other cities (small truck drivers, garbage collectors, etc.) show that the Employer could have given a higher rate in 1964 "without being out of line with comparable cities...," especially when it is noted that "Portage makes no contribution to hospital insurance as most communities apparently do."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The first fact finder recommended that the employees should be granted an 8¢ per hour increase for 1964. This will not close the City-County wage differential but will prevent it from widening. The second fact finder recommended a 5¢ increase for 1965.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer ignored the recommendations. Prior to the 1964 Fact Finding the Employer unilaterally gave a 5¢ increase; the Employer refused to increase this amount and refused to grant any increase for 1965. The Employer then refused to implement the recommendations of the second fact finder.

MAJOR ISSUE: (2) Insurance

The Union felt that the existing health insurance plan was unsatisfactory. The employees had group insurance but the Employer made no contribution to it. The Union requested that the Employer provide fully-paid family hospital and surgical insurance. In July, 1964 the Union said that it would accept single-employee insurance coupled with the 8¢ wage increase--the city offer at that time was for 5¢ and no insurance, or 2¢ and single-employee insurance.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union cited the fact that many local private contracts include insurance coverage for the employees. It challenged the Employer's cost figures as too high. In the second fact finding, the Union showed that its comparisons with truck drivers in other municipal employment in Wisconsin revealed that in only two cities was no employer contribution made toward hospitalization insurance.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer said that the cost of insurance for all employees would be equivalent to a ½ mill tax increase. A low tax base is an essential item for attracting new industry to the City.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The first fact finder said, "Employer paid insurance for employees is included in the great majority of collective bargaining agreements today. It also affords the employer an opportunity to give its employees a greater benefit than the actual cost thereof." The second fact finder noted that Portage pays the insurance premiums of its teachers.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The first fact finder recommended, "that the City give very serious consideration to implementing single employee hospital and surgical insurance coverage." The second fact finder recommended that the Employer provide the single employee coverage for street employees.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer took no action on the insurance question after the first fact finding and refused to change its position after the second fact finding.

Fact Finding
Digest #9

EMPLOYER: Green County Highway Department

UNION: Green County Municipal Employees, Local #226, AFSCME, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: Robert J. Mueller

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: April 15, 1964

BACKGROUND: The Employer accepted a pay plan in 1960 recommended by the State Bureau of Personnel which called for wage increments of 6-8 per cent in 1961 and 5 per cent in 1962 and 1963. In October, 1962, the Union was certified as exclusive bargaining representative for employees of the Highway Department. Negotiations began in May, 1963, and became deadlocked subsequently over wages and insurance. The Employer put into effect a 5 cent increase in 1964 even though the Union had rejected this amount as inadequate.

MAJOR ISSUE: (1) Wages

The Union requested a 25¢ per hour increase; the Employer offered and put into effect a 5 cent increase.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union used total assessed valuation in various counties as a standard by which to demonstrate the Employer's ability to pay a higher wage. The Union also claimed that highway workers were falling behind workers in manufacturing, workers of the Wisconsin Road Builders Association, workers in contiguous counties, and other employees of Green County.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer wished to continue its use of advice from the Bureau of Personnel because the County Board realized that its (the Board's) members were "primarily farmers who were not experienced or expert bargainers...because they wanted to be fair in the treatment of their employees." Because of disagreements which occurred with the Union the Board requested a new Personnel Survey. The Board contended that it was fair to continue to use the 1960 survey until such time as the new results were published.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder said:

> The evidence reveals that the recommended increases of 5 cents per hour for 1962 and 1963 fell short of average increases that actually prevailed in industry and elsewhere ...For the county to stand on the figures...in view of actual facts and averages that existed in those particular years is not realistic nor reasonable.

The Fact finder stated that sufficient evidence had been presented by the Union to indicate that the County was indeed able to pay higher wages. He further said that the annual wage improvements were small to begin with and even smaller when increases in the cost of living were considered. The fact finder calculated that, if figured on a dollars per hour basis, the differential between wages paid to salaried County employees working a 40 hour week and hourly-paid highway employees working a 47½ hour week was 12¢ per hour over the three years 1962-1964.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: A wage increase of 7¢ per hour over and above the 5¢ offered by the Employer should be put into effect. The fact finder commented as follows:

> This would constitute a 12¢ wage increase for 1964 and would bring hourly employees to the same relative position with the salaried Green County employees. It is not possible to go back to 1962 and 1963 to pick up the difference wherein the salaried employees received a larger increase for each of the two years, but it seems reasonable that the equalizing increase of 12 cents can and should be implemented as of January 1, 1964.

RESULTS OF FACT FINDING: The Employer refused to grant more than its initial offer of 5¢ per hour.

MAJOR ISSUE: (2) Insurance

The Employer offered to pay the employee's share (not for dependents) of the plan in effect for all other County employees. The Union requested another insurance carrier claiming it to be the preference of the highway employees.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union contended that the Employer should be obliged to bargain concerning the most desirable insurance coverage. It should not be allowed to unilaterally determine the insurance plan.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer claimed that the institution of the insurance plan had not been the result of a Union request but rather had been a suggestion by the Employer. The insurance, costing approximately 3 cents per hour per employee, had been obtained for all County employees and had been given to the lowest bidder based on specifications submitted by the County's insurance committee.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder said:

> Aside from what the legal duties to bargain may be, the evidence reveals that the insurance plan that is presently in effect by the County is not substantially different or lacking in any material respect from the plan proposed by the Union. In fact the County plan includes major medical whereas the proposed Union plan does not.

The fact finder recognized that the dispute was over the attitudes of the parties and not the merits of the insurance plans.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that the Union accept the Employer's plan and he suggested that an additional 3¢ be added to the package to cover the increase of insurance coverage by the Employer. He did not address the question of the obligation to bargain about insurance. He said:

> It would also appear fair and equitable that the employees who have been paying their own insurance should be reimbursed retroactive to January 1, 1964 in an amount equal to the sum attributable to the total paid for insurance per employee by the employer for other employees during such corresponding period.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer's plan was accepted. Those employees who had been paying for their own insurance were reimbursed. The additional 3¢ cost to the Employer was accepted.

Fact Finding
Digest # 10

EMPLOYER: Board of Education, Eau Claire

UNION: Eau Claire Federation of Teachers Local 696, AFT, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: E. L. Wingert

DATE OF FACT FINDER's REPORT: May 22, 1964

BACKGROUND: The Union is bargaining representative for all teachers in the school district. The parties were unable to reach agreement on terms for the 1963 contract. The Employer's final offer to the Union before it submitted its budget to the City Council just partially met Union demands and was rejected. The Union requested fact finding to resolve the deadlock.

CONTENTION OF UNION: On all of the issues considered below, the Union took the position that Eau Claire teachers should be receiving at least the median pay scales received by teachers in twelve comparable cities. (These cities were agreed upon by the parties as a just basis for comparison.)

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer maintained that as a public body responsible to all of the people it is bound to consider the wishes of the community, and that the City Council in approving its budget must weigh the competing demands of other city-financed activities. The Board and the Council must have discretion in determining the amount of money to be raised by taxation and the way to spend it. That determination should be approved by the Fact Finder unless he finds it "unreasonable or arbitrary."

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder said that salaries of Eau Claire teachers were below both the 12-city median and average salaries "for comparable experience and academic degrees." In the absence of contrary evidence he assumed that duties, responsibilities, work load, and performance of Eau Claire teachers met the 12-city median standard. "It is not shown that the financial ability of the taxpayers to meet median salary costs is below median level." The Employer's last offer "went about half way toward the objective of reaching the 12-city median." The fact finder estimated that the recommended increases would bring salaries to within one per cent of the median in most scales and steps. Another factor, he noted, was that non-teaching employees of the city had received a 2 percent improvement in 1964 yet "when discovery of unanticipated school aids (which the Employer had underestimated) presented a choice between reducing school taxes or increasing teachers' salaries for 1964, the Board of Education and the City Council chose to reduce taxes."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder made the following recommendations: "The recommended increases (below) should be placed in effect immediately or . . . in no event later than September 1, 1964. . . . That the increases be paid retroactively from January 1, 1964, as soon as and to the full extent that such payment can lawfully be financed by the school district." The settlement should remain in effect until January 1, 1964.

MAJOR ISSUES 1 - 6

The six major issues, the recommendations and the results are summarized in the following table:

	Increase needed for 12-City Median	Increase requested by Unions	Increase offered by Employer	Fact Finders recommended increases	Increase granted in Final Agreement
1. Teachers with no college degree	n.a.	$100	$100 if 14 yrs. experience	$100 if 14 yrs. experience	$100 if 14 yrs. experience
2. Teachers with Bachelors Degree
Minimum	100	100	100	100	300
Maximum	285	285	150	210	150
3. Teachers with Masters Degree
Minimum	225	225	150	175	300
Maximum	480	480	200	405	655
4. Teachers with dependents	100	200	-0-	100	-0-
5. Employer payments for Hospital & Surgical Insurance
Family	n.a.	119	-0-	75	-0-
Individual	n.a.	36	-0-	-0-	-0-
6. Length of Service Increment
10 years	n.a.	100	-0-	100	-0-
20 years	n.a.	-0-	-0-	50	-0-

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The increases were not made retroactive. Instead, they were put into effect as of August 1, 1964. In addition it was agreed that there be an across-the-board increase of two hundred dollars effective January 1, 1965.

Fact Finding
Digest #11

EMPLOYER: City of Watertown

UNION: Local 695, Teamsters

FACT FINDER: Philip G. Marshall

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: July 20, 1964

BACKGROUND: The Union was certified as exclusive bargaining representative for the Street, Park, Sanitation and Maintenance Departments employees. The 1963 collective bargaining agreement expired on December 31, 1963. It contained a provision for meetings beginning in August, 1963, to negotiate the 1964 agreement; all issues were resolved thereunder except for the Union request for a 15¢ per hour across-the-board increase.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union claimed that regardless of the criteria used, the relative position of Watertown employees has suffered by the failure of the Employer to grant a 1964 wage increase. On the basis of the comparative wage data it offered, the Union felt that its 15¢ request was justified. This, it claimed, was even more evident when information on 1964 agreements in other localities was added to the data.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer argued that the 1964 negotiations on other issues resulted in financial benefits to the employees despite there being no general wage increase. Furthermore, general wage increases should occur every OTHER year to allow for capital improvements in off years. Also, statistical data comparisons with similar cities revealed that no increase in wages was warranted.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder reasoned as follows: The city's narrow sample is too restrictive to be truly objective. The Union's sample approaches objectivity. The median rate should be used to modify the effects of occasional excessive rates within job categories. Even this approach ". . .must be leavened by giving some weight to other criteria, such as the cost of living factor (negligible in this case) and that more nebulous and subjective guide line to be found in any arbitrator's or fact finder's judgment of the area to which free collective bargaining would have carried the parties absent the interference of a third party."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that an 8 cent per hour across-the-board increase retroactive to January 1, 1964 be granted. The median figure would warrant a 9 cent increase for the lowest of the three classifications considered. The 8 cent figure recognizes the adjustments that the city has made on current wages which amounts to an estimated 1 cent per hour.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer ignored the fact finder's recommendations. However, in November, 1964, an agreement was reached for 1965 whereby an 11 cent per hour increase was granted.

Fact Finding
Digest # 12

EMPLOYER: City of South Milwaukee

UNION: Local 883, AFSCME, AFL-CIO

FACT FINDER: Thomas P. Whelan

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: August 29, 1964

BACKGROUND: The Union was certified in August, 1963 as exclusive bargaining representative for various employees of the Public Works Department, Water Department, School Board and Vocational School. During the next three months the Union made requests to the City Civil Service Commission; counterproposals were offered which were thoroughly discussed at a number of meetings. Fact finding was requested by the Union in October, 1963, to resolve eight outstanding issues.

MAJOR ISSUE (1) WAGES

The Union requested a 20¢/hour general wage; the Employer offered no increase.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER AND UNION: Each side presented tables showing comparisons of wage rates in the job classifications in question with similar rates in comparable cities. The different cities selected for inclusion in their comparisons led the parties to different conclusions with respect to a wage increase. Also, the Employer argued that since the deadlock had occurred in October, 1963, no wage agreement data in other cities for 1964 should be considered. Further, the Employer contended that fringe benefits should be included in any determination of worker compensation because they are inseparable from wage rates.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder based his decision on his view that fact finding is to serve as an extension of the collective bargaining process. Thus, he felt, it is relevant to look at 1964 wage settlements, especially since information on many effective in 1964 was available to the parties at the time of the deadlock. The fact finder carefully evaluated the parties' statistical presentation; he favored the greater objectivity of the union presentation. He relied on a comparison of median wage figures within job classifications as the basis for his wage increase conclusions. Also, although he agreed with the Employer that fringe benefits were relevant, there was no evidence of superior fringe benefits being paid by the Employer which would preclude a wage increase.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder recommended that there be a general wage increase of seven cents per hour to the employees in the bargaining unit, effective January 1, 1964.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The seven cent increase was granted, retroactive to January 1, 1964.

MAJOR ISSUE (2) Cost of Living Formula

The Union proposed to restore the cost of living formula which had been in use until the parties agreed to freeze it effective January, 1963.

BACKGROUND: From 1957-1963 the parties used a cost of living formula computed from the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Consumer Price Index. The Employer's practice was to add the increase warranted by the cost of living formula to the base rate for the following year.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union claimed that while the index was in use the increases gained from it were given by the Employer in place of any general wage increases; at best only a small general increase was given. The Union also claimed that the freeze was only to be in effect for the year 1963. It asserted that by freezing the index for 1963 it suffered a 2¢ loss which was not made up by other increases.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer felt that the restoration of the formula would involve an overall wage increase which could not be justified on the basis of the wage data presented in support of Issue I. Furthermore, the Employer argued, the Union had agreed to freeze the index permanently.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder stated that the language of the agreement does not support the Union's contention. "Obviously, for good and sufficient reasons the Union bargained away the cost of living. Obviously this was done to gain some other economic advantage. The parties appear to have in good faith agreed to the freeze."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder recommended that the cost of living formula remain frozen.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The index remained frozen.

MAJOR ISSUE (3) Life Insurance

BACKGROUND: The Employer pays the full cost of three thousand dollars of life insurance per employee. The Union made two proposals for increasing the coverage, one involving shared payment of premiums and the other involving total payment by the Employer. The Employer rejected both proposals although at one point in the negotiations it agreed to accept the second proposal but later withdrew.

CONTENTION OF UNION: While recognizing the liberal benefits paid by the Employer, the Union felt that its insurance benefits were inferior to those received by city employees in Milwaukee.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer claimed that in comparison with other communities, its life insurance benefits were very liberal and it presented figures to show this.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder noted that the original Employer-offer, although subsequently withdrawn, was made in good faith; its very occurrence indicated that the Employer had recognized that a life insurance adjustment should be made.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that, life insurance be increased to $5,000 per employee (the plan accepted at one point by the Employer), effective January 1, 1965, with full cost borne by the Employer.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The recommendation was accepted.

MAJOR ISSUE (4) Workmen's Compensation Agreement

BACKGROUND: There is an oral workmen's compensation policy which has been in effect for a number of years.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union contended that the workmen's compensation policy is an agreement and therefore should be reduced to writing under the provisions of Section 111.70.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer felt that the policy needed no clarification and that it should only be a subject of bargaining when changes are contemplated.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder noted that written terms of agreement are a common standard in private industry. He said that oral agreements are not satisfactory especially where the Employer periodically changes its personnel as is the case with governing bodies. The other terms and conditions of employment have been reduced to written ordinances. "Reduction to writing of the particular oral arrangement in question herein makes for certainty and stability, is convenient for reference, helps to avoid possible dispute and gives assurance to those who may benefit thereunder."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that the oral agreement be reduced to writing.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The recommendation was accepted.

OTHER ISSUES: The fact finder made the following recommendations on the four remaining issues.

1) The classifications of "brush chipper" and the rates of pay for "operator" and "feeder" should be reviewed through existing civil service practices.

2) There should be an increase of allowable accumulated sick leave from 60 to 90 days, effective January 1, 1964.

3) The Union should reconsider and withdraw its classiciation proposal.

4) The Civil Service Commission proposal on classification of School Board custodians should be accepted.

All four recommendations were accepted.

- - -

Note: The agreement for 1964 based on the fact finder's recommendation was made in September, 1964. In October, 1964 an agreement was reached for 1965 which called for a 7¢ per hour wage increase and a number of other items.

Fact Finding
Digest # 13

EMPLOYER: Racine County

UNION: Deputy Sheriffs' Association, Racine County

FACT FINDER: Reynolds C. Seitz

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: September 4, 1964

MAJOR ISSUE: Wage Increases for Deputy Sheriffs

BACKGROUND: Negotiations reached a deadlock over the issue of wage increase. The Association asked for increases as shown in the table below. The Employer offered no increases.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Association supported its request with comparative statistics for numerous groups, e.g. the State Highway Patrol, the city of Racine Police Department. Also, it stressed the responsibilities of a good, modern police fore, and the difficulty of recruiting at current pay levels.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer submitted comparisons of its pay scale with those for deputy sheriffs in a number of selected counties to show that its pay scale was not out of line. Also, it demonstrated the improvements made in the pay scale each year since 1958.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder said that the Association had made a good case for a wage adjustment. "Certainly the work which members of the Sheriffs' Department do is on a very high plane of social usefulness when compared with other workers in Racine County who are receiving higher wages." Higher salaries are needed to attract better-educated recruits. Additional education should also be stressed for current employees. However, though the deputies do merit a substantial increase, their salaries should be kept below those offered to college-trained elementary and secondary school teachers.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that deputy sheriffs take on their own time "additional educational training aimed at developing the qualities. . .desirable in a police officer." A plan should be bargained on in which there should be increments annually for years of service combined with educational credits contrary to the current plan in which the pay is the same for all of those with more than three year service. The recommendations are shown in the following table:

Service	(1) Present Level	(2) Union Request	(3) Difference between (2) and (1)	(4) Recommendation	(5) Result
0-1 year	$452/month	$484	+$32	+$10	$25
1-2	492	n.a.	n.a.	0	$25
3+ years	497	514	+ 17	+ 17	$25

RESULT OF FACT FINDING; There was no official acceptance of the fact finder's recommendations but shortly thereafter a $25 across-the-board increase in wages was granted and an educational program was begun.

Fact Finding
Digest # 14

EMPLOYER: Wood County

UNION: Local #344, AFSCME

FACT FINDER: Robert J. Mueller

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: October 10, 1964

MAJOR ISSUE: Wages for five custodial employees.

BACKGROUND: After numerous negotiating sessions the parties reached a deadlock on the issue of wages for custodial employees who work at the County Courthouse. They agreed on the wages of one employee but differed by from $10 to $15 monthly on the wages of four others.

CONTENTION OF UNION: In addition to its presentation of comparable occupational wage rates in Wood County and in Wisconsin generally, the Union based its claims for an increase on a) the responsibility given to these employees, b) the fact that they often work without supervision, and c) the notion that they should be paid wages greater than or equal to the wage rates of common labor in the area.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: In support of its offer, the Employer presented the wage rates of other janitorial positions in private employment. It claimed that on a percentage-increase basis its offer was higher than increases granted other County employees. Also, the janitors in question were offered stable year-round employment and vacation and sick leave benefits. Finally, the Employer noted that this was a first contract with the Union and that the County had to keep operating costs at a reasonable level to satisfy the taxpayers. The Employer questioned the validity of some of the comparisons made by the Union.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder chose three occupations which he found most relevant for comparison. He showed that the monthly rates of these groups were higher than those requested by the Union. He stated that a substantial increase was thus warranted despite the position taken by the County Board which he described as follows: ". . .the county is fully aware of the existing discrepancies and rate differential. . .While giving consideration to the taxpayer in attempting to minimize rising tax costs, the Board has strived to balance the conflicting considerations and in so doing, their offer was in excess of the normal percentage increase in the area. . . which indicates that the Board recognizes the wage gap and is sincere in trying to rectify it. . ."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The employees in question should receive the full increase requested by the Union. The fact finder requested that the Board ". . .give consideration to the fact that the proposed rates are still somewhat lower than those received by three other custodial groups. . .who are paid by tax dollars. . .I would suggest that a very substantial increase at one step would do much to avoid future disputes of the magnitude involved herein."

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The parties agreed to an increase for November and December, 1964 which brought the salaries of the five employees to the same level. The wage increases were: $0, $20, $20, $20, $35. The Union had requested $10, $30, $30, $30, $30. For 1965 the wages of all five employees were increased by an additional $16.

Fact Finding
Digest # 15

EMPLOYER: Wood County

UNION: Local #344, AFSCME

FACT FINDER: Robert J. Mueller

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: October 10, 1964

MAJOR ISSUE: Discharge of one employee at the County Hospital

BACKGROUND: The employee, who had been at the hospital since 1960, became upset when received a warning notice concerning the performance of his duties. He stayed home on this account despite prior warning that if he did so he would be discharged. Subsequently he was discharged. There was a contract in effect at this time which contained an article of Employee's Rules, including grounds for discharge.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union claimed that the matter should be decided on the question of whether or not the employee's absence was in violation of the sick leave provision of the contract. It claimed that the employer predicated the discharge on this provision at the time of discharge. Further, the employee's overall record was satisfactory, and he had received only two warning notices within the year, not the three required for dismissal.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer stated that the employee's work was unsatisfactory on numerous occasions. Also, two months previously he was given his progress rating which incorporated oral reprimands and thus served as a third written warning. The employee disobeyed the last warning by not reporting to work as scheduled; failure to do so was a justification for discharge.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder based the recommendation on more than the facts of the particular incident leading to the discharge. He considered the total performance record of the employee. "The total evidence revealed that the employee resented and did not constructively accept instructions or criticism from his supervisor." He made no efforts to improve his performance. Also, the employee made no effort to get medical substantiation of his state of upset between the time of warning and his scheduled work time sixteen hours later.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The discharge should be upheld.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The discharge remained in effect. In addition, however, the hospital board replaced the superintendent.

* * *

Note: This case is a grievance arbitration case and is the first that was settled under the fact finding procedure. The case was handled at the same hearing held in Wood County for the preceding case (Digest # 14).

Fact Finding
Digest # 16

EMPLOYER: City of Eau Claire

UNION: Local 284, AFSCME: Local #487, IAFF: Eau Claire Professional Policemen's Association. All three were represented by Local #284.

FACT FINDER: David B. Johnson

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: November 9, 1964

BACKGROUND: All of the above named Unions are recognized by the Employer as certified bargaining units. All employees received a 2 per cent pay increase for 1964. Also in 1964 an additional 5 per cent over a two year period ('64-65) was given to police demonstrating professional proficiency. Moreover, the work week of firemen was reduced from 67 to 63 hours, and firemen classified as "drivers" were granted an additional $5.00 per month.

When the 1965 deadlock was reached the position of the parties was as follows: The firemen requested $30 per month across the board; an increase in longevity payments whereby an additional 1% of base pay would be received after 12 years, making a total of 6%, and another 3% after 16 years making a total of 9%; 3 weeks of vacation after 10 years; 6 months of sick leave, and payment on retirement of 1/2 of accrued but unused sick leave.

The policemen requested a 5% increase across the board in addition to the already scheduled 2-1/2% increase negotiated the previous year.

The public works employees requested a one step (5%) increase across the board; the same longevity request as described above for firemen; provision for 4 weeks of vacation by adding one day per year to each man's vacation beginning the 15th year of service; and the addition of Veterans Day and the remaining 1/2 of Good Friday as paid holidays.

The Employer in all cases offered 2-1/2 per cent across the board. On receipt of the fact finding petitions the WERB issued an order consolidating the proceedings and appointing a fact finder to hear the three cases simulultaneously.

During the hearing before the fact finder the unions jointly amended their requests to include the following items: five per cent additional increase for police and public works employees; seven and a half per cent increase for firefighters; a one per cent increase in longevity payments after twelve years, making a total of six per cent, and the addition of a three per cent longevity payment after sixteen years, making a total of nine per cent; and finally, provision for a fourth week of vacation by adding one day per year to each man's vacation, beginning with the fifteenth year of service. The Employer continued to offer a 2-1/2 per cent increase to all three units.

In past bargaining the Employer had always applied percentage increases, but as the fact finder noted, no fixed criteria were evident for use in judging what the adjustments should be.

CONTENTION OF UNIONS: The Unions based their requests on the fact that there had been prosperous economic conditions in Eau Claire and in the nation; also the size of some private industry collective bargaining settlements (notably in the auto and construction industries) warranted an increase larger than the increase the Employer had offered. The Unions introduced numerous wage comparisons including one showing pay for public employees in seven comparable Wisconsin cities showing midpoints of pay ranges. The fact finder said of the union presentation: "All this material suffered from lack of analytical comment and explanation of how it applies to this dispute."

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer stressed that the wage increase which it offered, plus already-agreed-upon adjustments in police pay, step increases, and longevity increases, amounted to 3.8 per cent and approximated the Guideposts advocated by the national government for non-inflationary increases. The Employer also submitted comparative wage data including a comparison of maximum pay rates with ten Wisconsin cities with similar population to Eau Claire. It argued that though the midpoints of ranges were used by the unions, the maximums were the relevant statistics because in Eau Claire 95 per cent of public works employees, 86 per cent of policemen and 87 per cent of firemen were at the top of their ranges. The fact finder said, ". . .the comparisons introduced by the City, which show maximums without longevity increases, are more meaningful comparisons." In short, the Employer argued that its wage scales and fringe benefits compared favorably with similar-sized cities in Wisconsin and with local business and industry, and that its conditions of work were attractive to prospective employees in the community.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The Employer's figures are more persuasive than the Unions' and show that it has been generous in its treatment of its employees. Moreover, "comparisons of compensation and other employment conditions with cities of comparable size in Wisconsin are generally favorable to Eau Claire." Noting that the Employer claimed that its offer met and even surpassed the Guideposts, the fact finder said that the Guideposts. . ." are particularly pertinent in their application to negotiations involving public employees, since these employees are precluded from striking to enforce their views on what their employment conditions ought to be." However, the fact finder differed with the Employer in interpreting the Guideposts. He suggested that the items agreed to as part of the bargaining in previous years, which are to be routinely carried out in the current year, should not be included in the percentage-increase figure used to compare the current value with the Guideposts. He estimated that the value of the Employer's offer was only 3.0 per cent and not 3.8 per cent. The fact finder also recommended that the Employer should offer an additional 1.3 per cent bringing the total offer to 4.3 per cent; this is equal to the sum of the Guideposts (3.2) and the change in the cost of living over the past year (1.1). He stated that this additional 1.3 per cent should be used for longevity increases. He said, "Almost half of the employees have over twelve years of service. . .a man's alternatives (particularly among policemen and firemen) are not great when he has invested that much time in specialized employment of this kind. The employees desire it, and it seems fitting that extra increases should go to the senior employees." Also, he noted that Eau Claire's longevity plan (at least for policemen and firemen) was not as liberal as "some four of the other cities with which the City has made comparison."

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: A 4.3 per cent package was put into effect. However, the Employer redistributed the package. 3.3 per cent was allocated for a general wage increase (2.5 was recommended). The additional .5 per cent to patrolmen and sergeants was granted. The remaining .5 per cent was put into the longevity program (where 1.3 was recommended). The settlement terms were made by the Employer unilaterally. No negotiations occurred after release of the fact finder's report.

Fact Finding
Digest # 17

EMPLOYER: City of Appleton

UNION: Teamsters Local #563

FACT FINDER: Phillip Marshall

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: November 20, 1964

BACKGROUND: The fact finding procedure was invoked after the parties had reached a deadlock on 14 issues. Twelve of these were settled satisfactorily during the fact finding hearing; the two remaining were the general wage issue and the matter of retroactivity of the settlement. The Union, representing Public Works Department employees, requested a 10¢ per hour raise; the Employer offered nothing.

CONTENTION OF UNION: The Union presented data for other cities which, it claimed, was justification for a wage increase. Also, it cited considerably higher wages paid by the Employer to outside contractors performing similar work. Further, it pointed out that the School employees in Appleton had received a 3% increase for 1964, while the employees in the unit in question had not received a general increase. Finally the Union cited the rising cost of living, the Employer's ability to pay, and the increase in labor efficiency and productivity.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer presented similar wage data in support of its case. It said that the 3% increase to the Board of Education employees was given to right a basic inequity. The Employer attributed the rise in productivity in the Public Works Department to more efficient equipment rather than labor, and it claimed that over the years its wage increases were substantially greater than would have resulted from use of a cost of living index.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder said that the comparative wage data submitted by the parties were inconclusive. They did show, however, that if no increase was given "relationships which had existed in prior years" (between Appleton and the other cities in the Fox River Valley) would be disturbed. The increase recommended herein, he said, is "the most frequently occurring increase granted to employees in both manufacturing and non-manufacturing in private industry as well as employees in public employment. . .a mean settlement reached in negotiations in other cities or voluntarily granted by other municipalities to their employees. . ./and/ the most frequently occurring increase granted in related communities and industry within the Fox River Valley." The fact finder also said that no compelling reasons had been given for not making the settlement retroactive to the contract date.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATION: The fact finder recommended that there be an increase of 3%, or 7¢ per hour paid retroactively to January 1, 1964.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: An agreement was reached on December 19, 1964 which gave the Street Department employees (and all other city employees) a 7¢ increase retroactive to January 1, 1964.

Fact Finding
Digest # 18

EMPLOYER: City of Milwaukee

UNION: City of Milwaukee Garbage Collection Independent; Milwaukee District Countil 48, AFSCME; Milwaukee Fire Fighters Association Local 215; Professional Policemen's Protective Association.

FACT FINDER: Panel of Reynolds C. Seitz, Emmert L. Wingert, Nathan P. Feinsinger (chm.)

DATE OF FACT FINDERS' REPORT: December 14, 1964

BACKGROUND: Negotiations for the 1964 contract began October 1, 1963. A bar to serious negotiations was eliminated when the Employer agreed that one representative of each bargaining unit would be paid his regular base salary for time spent in conferences and negotiations during working hours.

The Employer's first and subsequent offers were rejected after considerable negotiation. Although no settlement was reached the Employer included a provision for a 3% general wage increase in the proposed budget which had to be submitted by November 10. The Employer then refused a union proposal for mediation because the statutory deadline for budget adoption (Nov. 20) had been reached.

The parties then resorted to fact finding. Formal hearings and informal conferences were held between the period of December, 1963 and November, 1964.

NOTE: In departing from our usual format, we are presenting here just the major recommendations of the Panel. The contentions of the parties involved were contained in the documents (more than 1000 pages) which they presented to the Panel.

FACT FINDERS' RECOMMENDATIONS: To expedite matters in making recommendations on the scores of unsettled issues, the Panel "confined its efforts first to those demands which are clearly supported by the record and which should be granted, therefore in whole or in part; second, to those demands which seem to have sufficient possibility of merit not to be dismissed out of hand."

The Panel first recommended that a "City of Milwaukee Labor Peace Agency" be established to give due regard to the public interest in instances when an impasse is reached in public employee bargaining. The Agency should be related to the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board" only to the extent required by law, or for informal assistance and advice." The Agency should: assist in converting informal agreements to contracts; furnish an observer to the negotiations; draft a "stipulation" in the event of an impasse, which will clarify the issues and prevent the injection of "new issues" in the future; serve as a helpful go-between between the parties and the fact finder; assist in carrying out the fact finder's recommendations; and, furnish "public members" for "Study Committees." Study Committees should be established to consider issues which arise but which are so numerous as to bar consideration by the Agency as a whole.

The Panel further recommended a timetable for negotiations which would begin on February 1, of the year preceding the date of the contract. Also, it urged the appointment of a permanent negotiator by the Employer to handle the negotiations until they were at a stage in which the issues could be considered by the City Labor Policy Committee as a whole.

The Panel weighed the merits of Milwaukee's Anti-Secrecy Statute against the intent of the Legislature to foster realistic collective bargaining through Sec. 111.70 of the State Statutes. It recommended that bargaining should be open to the public only after the City Negotiator has turned the proceedings over to the Labor Policy Committee in the later stages.

On the matter of a written contract, the Panel recommended that all finally-agreed-upon terms or conditions of employment should be reduced to writing edcept for matters which by law must be handled by Ordinance or Resolution. Such a contract should be in effect for a period of two years, "which will provide that on thirty days' notice prior to the end of the first year, a party may reopen all or any part of the contract, and that, in the absence of such notice, the contract shall automatically be renewed for another year." The Panel urged the parties to negotiate a new grievance and arbitration procedure in order to end the current practice by which the City Service Commission is placed in a position of both "advocate and judge."

In light of the late date for consideration of the 1964 contract (November, 1964), the Panel felt that all effort should be put toward reaching a general wage adjustment for 1965. It recommended that with the following exceptions, all demands for 1964 be dismissed, remanded to a Study Committee, or remanded to the parties for further discussion:

First, for the month of December, 1964, the Employer should absorb the full cost of single-person Blue-Cross Blue-Shield insurance, as well as one half of the employees' contribution for family insurance (the parties had already agreed on a plan for gradual full payment of insurance premiums by the Employer in 1965).

Second, the Employer should grant the Garbage Collectors' request for a written statement of seniority practices with respect to assignments during snow removal emergencies.

Third, the Employer should grant the request of the Police to be "broken out" of the overall classification system "to concentrate on their own special problems in future collective bargaining negotiations."

Fourth, the fifty-six hour work week should be instituted for Firefighters no later than July 1, 1965 with overtime pay for hours over fifty-six after that date if the recommendation is not followed.

Finally, the Panel recommended that Firefighters should receive the ten cent weekend shift differential given to other employees for regularly scheduled non overtime weekend work provided that this does not give the Firefighters a larger amount than the others because of their peculiar schedule. The Panel also recommended that a lump sum settlement be negotiated for shift differential for 1964.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: As of May, 1965, the results of the Fact Finding were as follows: Neither a Labor Peace Agency nor Study Committees had been established. A negotiations timetable had been put into effect. The City's negotiations were still being handled by the City Personnel Director and his staff. The City Attorney had ruled that all bargaining sessions must be "open" to the public. A one year contract, had been signed on May 7, 1965 with District #48, AFSCME, and it included an arbitration and grievance procedure. An agreement on all issues had been reached with the Policemen but not with the Firefighters or Garbage Collectors. The Employer had agreed to the recommendation to meet insurance costs for December, 1964. Policemen had been separated from the overall wage classification and Firefighters given the 56 hour week as recommended. No differential had been given to the Firefighters for weekend shifts.

Fact Finding
Digest # 19

EMPLOYER: Janesville Board of Education

UNION: Janesville Education Association

FACT FINDER: Reynolds C. Seitz

DATE OF FACT FINDER'S REPORT: February 3, 1965

BACKGROUND: An impasse developed in contract negotiations for 1965 between the Association and the School Board over three issues, all concerning pay to classroom teachers. The parties requested fact finding at the end of November, 1964.

MAJOR ISSUE 1) Size of salary increments

The Association requested a yearly increment of $25. The Employer offered a $5 increment.

MAJOR ISSUE 2) Base pay for teachers with Masters degree

The Association requested a $250 increase. The Employer offered $200.

CONTENTION OF UNION OF UNION: The Association argued that since 1959, Janesville teachers' salaries have deteriorated when compared with other Wisconsin cities. The Employer's 1965 proposal is lower than the median percentage increase in other cities. Also, in Janesville the maximum possible increases over base starting salaries are lower than they were in 1959. The Association claimed that Janesville's fringe benefits are below the median; also, percentage differentials between Masters and Bachelors teachers have been allowed to narrow. As additional evidence, the Association sought to demonstrate the Employer's ability to pay its requests.

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer based its offer on: inter-city wage comparisons, intra-city comparisons and total city budget needs. It demonstrated that the teachers had received regular, reasonable salary increases. In addition, the Employer claimed that, barring unexpected income, it would have to raise taxes to meet the Association's requests.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder stressed the increasingly important role of the teacher in society. He used a study done in 1963 at Northwestern University which demonstrated that teachers' salaries fall below those paid in other occupations where the employee is a college graduate. He felt that the data presented by the parties demonstrated the Employer's ability to pay. With respect to taxes, the fact finder said: "True, this may increase the tax rate but if there is fairness in increasing teachers' salaries, the City may have to face up to an increase." He noted "a clear picture of salary deterioration," and felt that his recommendation would halt the downward trend without making Janesville "the teacher showplace of Wisconsin." In making his recommendation $5 less than that requested by the Association, he allowed for "some miscalculations or [his] assumptions."

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The salary increment should be $20 per year. The total increase for Masters degree base pay should be $250.

RESULT OF FACT FINDING: The Employer agreed to an increment of $10 for Bachelors teachers but granted only $5 to Masters teachers. The $250 Masters degree base recommended by the fact finder was accepted.

MAJOR ISSUE 3) Extra pay for extracurricular duties after 6:00 p.m. and on Saturdays.

CONTENTION OF UNION: In addition to factors noted above, the Association pointed to the growing responsibilities of teachers. The fact finder took note of this contention when he said "the demands made on them to stage or police sporting or social events have reached a point where the teacher feels that the demand is a considerable imposition."

CONTENTION OF EMPLOYER: The Employer took the position that the duties in dispute are part of the contractual obligation of teachers. Furthermore, extra pay is not commonly granted for such duties.

FACT FINDER'S RATIONALE: The fact finder agreed with the Association's position. He noted that the teacher does not work an 8 hour day or a 40 hour week because to do good work requires many hours of outside preparation. He said: "It is legally true that teachers have to accept the assignment but. . .nothing is more detrimental to morale than to force teachers to accept extra-curricular after hours assignments." Such work should go to those interested, who should be paid accordingly for assuming the duties.

FACT FINDER'S RECOMMENDATIONS: The fact finder recommended that the Employer accept the after-hours salary schedule drawn up by the Association.

RESULTS OF FACT FINDING: The Employer granted extra pay for duty at home football games but refused to consider pay for all duties after 6:00 and on Saturdays.

* * *

Note: The Association asked its members to voluntarily hold their contracts until the deadline to demonstrate dissatisfaction with the settlement and with the Employer's unwillingness to accept the fact finder's recommendations.

Know

July 1956

Your GOVERNMENTS

The STATE of Wisconsin

— ALL POWERS not delegated to the federal government by the United States Constitution are reserved to the states or to the people.

— THE WISCONSIN CONSTITUTION adopted in 1848 provides the framework of state government and enumerates the powers it may exercise and those it may not.

— THE STATE creates subordinate units of government to help carry out state functions and to administer local affairs.

— THE STATE, like national and local governments, has agencies for making rules, carrying them out, and for interpreting them. These are the legislative, executive and judicial functions of government.

University of Wisconsin — EXTENSION SERVICE
COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE, MADISON

The STATE of Wisconsin

by Ruth Baumann and Bruce L. Cartter*

WHAT IS THE STATE OF WISCONSIN?

WISCONSIN is part of the American federal system. More than a century ago a great stream of pioneers moved westward across the United States. By 1836 there were enough settlers in Wisconsin so that a separate territorial government was needed within the Michigan Territory. Some years later, they petitioned Congress for statehood, and in 1848 Wisconsin adopted its own constitution and was admitted as the 30th state in the Union. Although the national government is supreme, the state possesses all powers not delegated to the federal government.

In addition to having organized government, the state of Wisconsin has 56,000 square miles of land and lakes, and over three and one-half million people at the last count. Its geographical features, its climate, rainfall, water supply, soils, minerals, and forests provide a wealth of resources. Its people, rich in a variety of cultural heritages, continue to pioneer in many fields of endeavor. These are its resources. "Government" aids in harnessing these resources for many purposes. In the Constitution of the state of Wisconsin, the preamble states these purposes: "We, the people of Wisconsin, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, in order to secure its blessings, form a more perfect government, insure domestic tranquility and promote the general welfare, do establish this constitution."

"We, the people of Wisconsin" also wanted to secure for each person certain inherent rights. Even though these rights had been guaranteed in the first ten amendments of the national constitution, the people wanted to be sure that the state government as well as the national government might not take away our liberties. So these rights were again declared in Article I of our state constitution.

Having stated the purposes of government, and having secured the rights of the people, the constitution next sets forth the framework of government. It provides for legislative, executive and judicial branches. It describes the organization, powers, and functions of each branch. Through the agencies set up, the policies and rules under which we live are made, carried out, and interpreted.

---

*This circular is produced through joint efforts of Ruth Baumann of the Bureau of Government, University Extension and Bruce L. Cartter of the Agricultural Extension Service, both of the University of Wisconsin.

To help the state carry on its activities and to provide the local services which people need, the legislature is given the power to establish local governments — counties and towns, cities and villages. The legislature also determines what these local units may and may not do.

One might say, "This is so simple. Why is it that state government has grown so big? Why do we pay so much in taxes?" Read again the preamble to our constitution which states the purposes of our government. Then consider that at the time it was written there were only 210,546 people in the state. Now there are over 3,600,000, living much closer together. Make allowance, also for the tremendous advances in the development of power, machinery, and transportation which have made possible both the utilization and waste of our natural resources. As we explore our ever-changing economy, it becomes clear that at each session of the state legislature our representatives face an increasing number of complicated problems. What they do in making laws is to interpret the state constitution. As conditions change each legislature decides policy for the wisest use of our resources in meeting the purposes of government.

WHO DECIDES WHAT THE STATE GOVERNMENT DOES?

We do! We, the voters, elect the state's legislators. It is in the legislature that the principles of representative democracy find their most concrete expression. The main task of the legislature is to decide policy. It does this with guidance and assistance from the governor and the other state agencies. The legislature reflects our views and opinions in the laws it enacts, in the way it raises and spends public funds, by participating in making appointments, and by making studies and investigations of state activities. For example, in Chapter 59 of the Wisconsin Statutes, the legislature specifies in detail just how counties and county governments are to be set up and operated, what officers the county shall have and their duties. In other chapters it sets forth in detail the way in which these officers shall be elected. It prescribes in detail who and what property, income and corporations shall be taxed, how the taxes shall be administered, and penalties for violating the laws.

In some states the governor and the courts overshadow the legislature in importance, but not in Wisconsin. The legislature here is still the "power house" of state government.

Wisconsin's legislature consists of two houses, an assembly with 100 members elected for two-year terms, and a senate of 33 members elected for four-year terms. The legislature itself lays out the districts from which members are elected.

The members of the assembly are apportioned among the assembly districts of the state, and each district is entitled to elect one member of the assembly every two years.

One senator is elected from each of the 33 senatorial districts. Senators will be elected in odd-numbered districts in 1958 and in the even-numbered districts in 1956 for four-year terms.

Candidates for the state legislature are nominated in the September primary the first Tuesday after the first Monday of the even-numbered years and are elected in the general election the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, of the same year.

The legislature meets at the State Capitol in regular session in January of each odd-numbered year and customarily considers hundreds of bills. The sessions usually last about six months. The governor may call special sessions.

The importance of the Wisconsin legislature in making policy to carry out the purposes of government should emphasize in every citizen's mind the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. In electing these important representatives each voter is making a decision which affects the welfare of all of the people of Wisconsin. But the citizen's concern with policy and law-making does not end when election day is past. There are a number of points in the law-making process where we and our neighbors may see to it that our points of view are considered by the entire legislature.

THE VOTERS

THE STATE LEGISLATURE

1. A group of citizens wants a new law or to change an existing law. They* see their legislator who promises to introduce a bill. Other bills come from legislative committees and state departments.
2. An assemblyman or senator, with the aid of the legislative reference service, drafts a bill and submits it to the assembly or senate. The bill receives its first reading.
3. The bill is referred to the proper committee.
4. A public hearing* is scheduled and held on the bill.
5. The committee reports its recommendations to the house or senate.
6. The bill is put on the calendar.
7. Amendments are considered and when all amendments are incorporated into the bill, it is reported back to the senate* or house*.
8. The bill is either passed or killed.
9. If passed, the bill is sent to the other house and goes through the same process.
10. When the bill has been passed by both the senate and assembly, it is sent to the governor.*
11. The governor may sign the bill, or veto it within six days.
12. If the governor signs the bill, it is deposited with the secretary of state and it becomes law upon publication.
13. If the governor vetoes the bill, it is returned to the house in which it began, and it is reconsidered.* If both houses over-ride the veto by a two-thirds vote, the bill becomes law.

* At these points the citizen may present his views.

HOW DOES THE LEGISLATURE MAKE POLICY?

Laws passed by the legislature are statements of policy. Legislators, however, are not the only people who influence policy. In the process of law-making any citizen may express his views and influence policy. Chiefly one does this by membership in groups where specific issues are discussed and stands taken. Perhaps the most important of these is membership in a political party. Political parties put into a systematized statement rather general stands on a wide variety of issues. For example, each of our major political parties writes an agricultural plank into its platform. As members of a party, we usually go along with the party's stand. A farm organization, of which we may be members also, may support either party's plank on agriculture; or it may take a stand to favor neither.

The legislator's personal opinion may be influenced not only by his party's stand on agricultural issues, but also by the arguments of various groups such as farm organizations, labor unions, parent-teacher associations, organizations of public officials, manufacturers and trade associations, and so on. So there are many forces at work which influence public opinion and the legislator. Here are the formal steps in making a law. The points at which we as citizens may influence the law are marked with a star.

HOW ARE THE STATE'S LAWS CARRIED OUT

Laws in themselves are of no effect unless officials are elected or appointed to carry them out. The governor is the chief executive officer. The lieutenant governor becomes the chief executive upon the death or retirement of the governor. Other elective administrators who are responsible directly to the voters are the attorney general, the secretary of state and the state treasurer. They are elected at the same time as members of the legislature, for two-year terms. One elective administrator, the superintendent of public instruction, has a four-year term. He is elected in the non-partisan elections at the same time and in the same manner as members of the supreme court, the first Tuesday in April.

The Governor, the State's Chief Executive Officer. Article V of the state constitution provides that the governor shall be the chief executive officer of the state. He heads a $420 million-a-year business for which job he receives a salary set by the legislature of $18,000 a year. The governor's direct powers are not as great as in many states; but the public, the legislature, and the department heads generally look to him for leadership. Through his annual message, his budget recommendations, and special messages he can guide the work of the legislature. From time to time he may make statements on policy and meet informally with legislators. His power to veto bills is an important one.

The fifty-five state administrative agencies which carry out the state programs have been created by the legislatures over the years. The governor, however, aids in directing the departments.

Department heads generally accept his guidance in interpreting particular phases of programs laid down by the legislature. The governor has an important role in the budget process in determining the extent of each department's program; and the governor, moreover, with or without the consent of the senate (as specified by law) appoints the heads of all departments.

STATE ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCIES
(Total — 55)

The Heads of These Agencies Appointed by the Governor (a total of 26)	The Heads of These Agencies Appointed by the Governor With Senate Confirmation (a total of 29)
Some Typical Ones Are:	Some Typical Ones Are:
Adjutant General	Aeronautics Commission
Engineering, Bureau of	Agriculture, Department of
Purchases, Bureau of	Banking, Department of
Civil Defense, Office of	Conservation, Department
Human Rights, Commission on	Highway Department
Retirement Fund	Industrial Commission
Vocational & Adult Education, Board of	Motor Vehicle Department
Free Library Commission	Public Service Commission
Pharmacy, Board of	Public Welfare, Department of Soil Conservation Committee	Taxation, Department of
Grain and Warehouse Commission	University of Wisconsin
	Veterans Affairs, Department of

The governor's role in the budget process is an important one, for it is through efficient fiscal management that governmental programs are carried out. The governor's role, that of the departments, and the legislature may be described simply as follows:

Governor

THE BUDGET PROCESS

1. Departments estimate needs and revenues for a two-year period.
2. Director of budget and accounts reviews these requests and then submits the budget to the governor-elect.
3. Governor-elect holds public hearings where department heads present their budgets.
4. Governor prepares biennial state budget report and executive budget bills for submission to a joint session of the assembly and senate before February first.
5. Executive budget bills are sent to the joint finance committee, and the committee makes recommendations to the senate and assembly.
6. Meantime, numerous separate appropriation bills with or without means of raising necessary revenue, may be introduced into either the senate or assembly, by individual legislators.
7. The legislature votes and approves the adjusted executive budget and separate appropriation bills.
8. The governor has a line-item veto in the case of appropriation bills. This means he may veto separate items.
9. Each department must submit to the department of budget and accounts each quarter of the biennium an estimate of moneys drawn against its budget. The director of budget and accounts has power to withhold requested funds.
10. If departments run short of funds before the end of the biennium, the emergency board passes on requests for additional funds.

WHAT ARE THE DUTIES OF THE OTHER ELECTIVE ADMINISTRATORS

The Lieutenant Governor presides over the state senate for which duty he receives $10,000 per term. He steps into the governorship if the chief executive dies or retires. His salary is supplemented by the $25-a-day he receives when he serves as governor.

The Secretary of State is the chief records clerk of Wisconsin. He is the custodian of the great seal of the state and is required to counter-sign and place this seal upon all official acts of the governor. Further, he is the central election officer of the state. This office licenses out-of-state corporations and accepts papers from Wisconsin corporations. The Secretary of State also issues and records city charters, village corporation and town organization papers. He would become acting governor if both the governor and lieutenant governor were out of office or away from Wisconsin. His salary is $10,000 a year.

The Attorney General is the state's chief law enforcement officer. He represents the state in all civil actions in which it is a party, in both state and federal courts and before the Wisconsin and United States Supreme Courts. He also represents the state in all criminal actions in the supreme court. He is the attorney for the various state deparmtents. An important duty is to provide official opinions on questions of law to guide state and local officials. His salary is $15,000.

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction heads the department which exercises general supervision over all elementary and secondary schools and certain special schools, certifies public school teachers, and administers the system of state aids for education and transportation. The superintendent is also a member of the university and state college boards of regents. His salary is $15,000 per year and he is elected for a four-year term.

The State Treasurer is the custodian of all state funds; but he has little to say about their disposition. For example, among his duties is the distribution of the normal income tax collections to counties, towns, cities and villages according to the directions specified in the statutes. The important thing to remember is that he is a custodian of state funds. His salary is $10,000 a year.

State Senators are repeated here merely because they have the power to confirm or reject many of the governor's appointments. (A legislator gets $200 a month for the duration of his term, plus mileage for a round trip each week between his home and Madison while the legislature is in session.)

WHO INTERPRETS AND APPLIES THE LAWS?

The Constitution of the state of Wisconsin, Article VII, Section 2, sets up a court system to provide justice for the people of the state: "The judicial power of this state, both as to matters of law and equity, shall be vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, courts of probate, and in justices of the peace." These courts are the constitutional courts. In addition, by the authority given in the Constitution, the legislature has established statutory courts: superior, municipal, civil, district, small claims, police, juvenile and domestic relations. The kinds of cases these statutory courts may hear vary according to the law which establishes each one.

The Supreme Court. The Supreme Court consists of seven justices elected by the people for ten-year terms. Justices are elected in the April elections, but no more than one may be elected in any one year. All judicial elections are nonpartisan, with party designations or slogans being prohibited. The statutory salary of the justices is $14,000 per year, and the chief justice receives an additional $500.

The supreme court is the final authority on the constitution of the state. It is the highest judicial tribunal for any action begun in the lower courts, except in cases when a question under the Federal Constitution is raised. In those cases the appeal is to the Supreme Court of the United States. The state Supreme Court hears and decides from 250 to 300 appeals each year from the circuit, county and other courts, and about 20 applications for the exercise of its original jurisdiction.

The Circuit Courts. Circuit Courts are the principal trial courts of the state. Wisconsin is divided into 22 judicial circuits. The Dane County circuit has two branches, and the Milwaukee County circuit has 10 branches, so there are actually 32 circuit judges. Circuit judges are elected in the April preceding the January in which their six-year terms commence. The circuit courts have original jurisdiction in most matters, but they also hear appeals in certain cases from justice, municipal, and some special courts.

The County Courts. Each county in the state has a county court presided over by a judge elected in the county. These courts handle matters dealing with the estates of deceased persons. In about a dozen counties the county judge handles the aid for dependent children, and in about 40 counties he serves also as juvenile court judge. The old age assistance law operates under these courts. By law, 47 county courts may hear criminal and civil cases.

Justice Courts. These are the most numerous courts in the state. The justice of the peace holds court in the city, town, or village in which he is elected. He may hear cases involving $200 or less, or criminal cases for which the punishment is not more than six months nor the fine more than $200.

HOW DOES THE STATE "MAKE ENDS MEET?"

The legislature, like the family, tries to "make ends meet." We frequently forget, however, that the state's population is still growing and we are living closer together. At the same time we constantly are raising our standards as to what is a good education, good health, a good highway. More services and better quality services cost more money. Then too, new inventions and discoveries call for continuous changes in the services that people ask of state government. To mention only one example, the development of atomic power may necessitate state licensing and regulation of this new source of energy.

Some of the state's services (like the building of highways) may be financed in part from licenses and fees paid by those who receive the service. Others, like education and welfare, cannot be supported out of income that the state departments receive for some of their services. In those cases all of the state's taxpayers share the cost.

The family is accustomed to budgeting and saving for a rainy day. In an emergency, or for a long-term investment, the family can borrow so long as its credit is good. The state of Wisconsin, however, is not in the same position, for Article VIII of the state constitution says that the public debt shall never exceed $100,000.

The budget process has been discussed as a sharing of responsibility between the governor and the administrative departments. It is the legislature, however, that is responsible for levying the taxes and appropriating the money to pay the state's bills. As stockholders in the state's 420 million-dollar-a-year business we will want to understand for what purposes that money is spent and from what sources it comes.

How the State's Income Is Spent. In 1954-55 highways, education, taxes shared with local governments, and welfare accounted for over 88 per cent of all state expenditures. This left only 12 percent for all other costs of government. Here is a summary of how the state's money was spent.

Purpose	Amount	%
Highways	$92,874,513	24.18
Education	87,713,832	22.84
Taxes shared with local governments	80,946,876	21.08

Purpose	Amount	%
Welfare	$ 71,332,554	18.57
National resources	12,937,064	3.37
General government	8,626,681	2.25
Protection of person & property	8,693,948	2.26
Employee retirement fund	12,178,192	3.17
Health	4,725,875	1.23
Agency distributions	2,805,919	.73
Veterans	1,226,816	.32
Subtotal	384,067,270	100.00
*Transfers to other funds	38,448,003
Total expenditures	$422,515,273

*For Example: This includes money set aside for specific purposes such as the state's contribution to the Social Security and Retirement Fund, and the money that is set aside for state buildings.

Where the State's Money Comes From. Over the past four years about 60 percent of the total revenues of the state have come from taxes. The second largest source of revenue has been federal aids, amounting to 13-15 per cent of the total revenue. Licenses, which provide about 8½ per cent of the revenue, are the third most profitable source of funds. Contributions made by the employees and employers to retirement and other funds account for roughly 4 per cent of the revenue.

Since the major source of state revenue is taxes, let's see which ones bring in the most money. About one-half of total state taxes collected in the fiscal year 1954 came from individual and corporation income taxes. The gasoline tax brought in nearly 18 per cent. The special sales taxes (on liquor, beer, cigarettes and oleomargarine) brought in about the same amount as the public utility tax, just about 10 per cent.

State Tax Revenues*
1954-55

	Amount	%
Income	$ 120,277,861	53.1
Gasoline	40,372,376	17.8
Special Sales Tax	22,760,913	10.0
Public Utility	26,373,809	11.6
Miscellaneous	7,268,362	3.2
Inheritance & Gift	7,648,586	3.4

*Since state tax collections account for only $227,502,310 of total state revenues, it should be borne in mind that the additional revenues (about 40% of the total) come from federal aids, licenses, retirement contributions, investment income and so on.

AN ILLUSTRATION OF HOW THE STATE'S WORK GETS DONE

When one considers the relatively small handful of elective and appointive top officials who are responsible for carrying out the tremendous volume of laws in the statute book, there is good reason to ask, "Just how does the state's work get done?" Over 50 state agencies are charged with carrying out specific laws. Excluding legislative and court employees, the state administrative agencies as of July 1955 employed about 13,500 persons on a regular basis to perform a great variety of tasks. Perhaps an illustration of one administrative agency's work would make the operation of government more meaningful to us. Since the state department of agriculture carries out laws which affect both consumers and producers of agriculture products, let us use this agency to show more clearly just how its work is accomplished. Our illustration can be simplified by limiting the discussion to one commodity — milk.

The Wisconsin Department of Agriculture: An Illustration. The department's first function is the administration and enforcement of all agricultural laws and regulations. In addition, the department provides services and assistance to producers and consumers through guidance in production, processing, manufacturing, assembling, grading, advertising, and merchandising of the state's farm products.

Policies of the department are formulated by the Board of Agriculture composed of seven Wisconsin men experienced in farming. Members are appointed by the Governor with the consent of the senate.

The director, as administrative and executive head of the department, is responsible for carrying out department policies and activities. The department's functions are carried out by eight divisions. Each division has several sections, each charged with responsibilities in specific fields of agriculture. The director appoints the heads of the various divisions with the consent of the board of agriculture.

On occasion, the legislature may authorize the appointment of special advisory committees to divisions or sections of the department.

The work of the department is supplemented by the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin, which functions mainly in the fields of agricultural research and education.

ORGANIZATION AND GENERAL FUNCTIONS OF WISCONSIN STATE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE *

* Source: Functions—Organization—Personnel of the Wisconsin State Department of Agriculture, 1954

Take milk, for Example. With this structure and organization in mind, let us see which agencies are concerned with carrying out some of the laws which the legislature has passed in regard to one commodity — milk.

1. In order to carry out certain laws, the department is authorized by the legislature to make rules and regulations about how the law shall be administered. The first question, then, is "how does a regulation come into being?" Let us assume that a new problem has come up throughout the state about a strange disease that is affecting cattle. The Livestock Sanitation Division has the responsibility for the prevention, suppression, control and eradication of communicable diseases among domestic animals. The division would proceed to determine the nature of the disease through its diagnostic service provided in its Disease Control Laboratory. The University might well be asked to conduct necessary research to gain further information on the exact nature of the disease and how it could be brought under control. All findings would be reported to the Livestock Sanitation Advisory Committee which is named by the director of the State Department of Agriculture.

The Advisory Committee might then recommend to the department that a specific regulation be drawn up by the department. However, before the department does this the public must be consulted. The time and place of public hearings is announced so persons or groups of persons may state their positions on the issue. On the basis of the findings, the department may or may not issue an order or regulation. On the other hand, the issue may be of such importance that the department might ask the state legislature for a law to help correct the situation.

Let us assume that the Department issued an order setting forth the new regulation. It would be up to the Enforcement Section of the Livestock Sanitation Division to make inspections to make sure the farmers were complying with the regulation. All required testing and diagnostic service would be done by the Disease Control Laboratory and technicians and veterinarians in the field.

2. The farmer wants to be sure that the feeds for his stock contain the specified ingredients. The Feed and Fertilizer Laboratory of the Plant Industry Division analyzes all commercial feeds sold in Wisconsin and enforces the law for his protection. Where a violation of the law is found through analysis, the Legal Counsel is informed and enforcement action is started.

The Plant Industry Division also gives approval to insecticides, such as those used in fly control.

3. Assuming now that the farmer's herd is disease-free, there is the possibility that there may be unsanitary conditions on the farms, in the processing plant, or in the establishments where milk is sold. The Dairy and Food Division has the responsibility for making and carrying out all the rules and regulations relating to milk (and other food) standards. The Dairy Inspection Section of this Division enforces the rules and regulations by inspecting farms and dairy plants and the Dairy and Food Control Laboratory analyzes milk (and food) for composition, adulteration, extraneous matter and bacteriological quality.

Quality standards, grading, and labeling rules and regulations are also the responsibility of this division.

A Food Standards Advisory Committee (a five-member committee appointed by the Governor) assists the department in the formulation of food standards.

4. Let us further assume that the farmer has a disease-free herd, and that he has met milk production and quality standards. He may have a serious problem in marketing his milk. This is where the services of the Division of Markets come into the picture. In addition to giving advice about marketing milk, and promoting its consumption, this Division supplies daily, weekly and monthly market reports, and provides auditing services at cost to cooperative organizations.

5. In selling his milk to the processor, the farmer may find himself dealing with an unscrupulous operator. The Division of Economic Practices through its dairy plant security program has helped to insure payment to the farmer, and through its Weights and Measures Section has insured him fair weights and measures. Special price and business investigations are carried out also by this division in an effort to see that the Wisconsin farmer is getting a fair deal in comparison to other states.

6. Conditions within the state and throughout the country may make it difficult for the farmer to stay in the milk production business. He might even face the necessity of making decisions about what types of agricultural production he might better engage in. The Agricultural Statistics Division collects, analyzes, interprets and distributes data which show trends and changes in marketing and prices of dairy products, livestock and crops. After studying this information he may make his decisions and lay future plans.

This has been a quick over-view of the way in which the State Department of Agriculture operates in serving the farmer, the processor, the distributor and the consumer. Some of these activities are centered in Madison, but many of them are carried out by employees of the department who travel the length and breadth of the state. General policy is set forth by the state legislature in the statues; this in turn is translated into more detailed policy and regulations by the State Board of Agriculture to be carried out by the director to whom all division heads are responsible. Throughout, the governor aids in guiding, directing and interpreting the programs and the services of the department.

THE SOLUTION OF PUBLIC PROBLEMS REQUIRES TEAMWORK

Remember that the state's work may be carried out and supplemented either by the cities and the counties or in cooperation with the counties, or in cooperation with the counties and the federal government. The county extension work illustrates a cooperative program.

County Extension Work Is A Good Illustration of Local-State-Federal Cooperation. There are three important ways in which the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the State of Wisconsin, and the county work together to bring cooperative agricultural and home economics extension work into a county, namely: (1) cooperative financing of the program, (2) joint appointment of the extension agents, and (3) cooperative programming.

The work of the extension agents--county agents, home agents, and 4-H club agents--is supported entirely by public funds from three sources: (1) federal grants-in-aid to the state, (2) state appropriations, and (3) funds appropriated by the county board of supervisors. The federal and state funds are managed by the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin. These funds pay part of the agent's salary and for the services provided by the College of Agriculture in the way of training and supervision of all agents throughout the state. Each county's funds are managed by a County Agricultural Committee. These funds pay the rest of the agent's salary and provide office help, equipment, supplies, and travel expenses.

The extension agent holds a three-way appointment. He (or she) is a member of the University faculty by appointment of the Board of Regents. He holds an appointment as a member of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. And he is a county employee. In practice the College of Agriculture determines whether candidates for county extension positions meet University requirements and recommends persons for consideration of the County Agricultural Committee. The Committee negotiates with candidates and makes its selection. The terms of his employment are set down in a written agreement between the College and the County Agricultural Committee.

The county extension program of work is arrived at through teamwork between the local people who function through a county extension program planning committee, the county agricultural committee, and the county and state extension service. State plans of work are a composite of local and county program needs and interests. These state plans of work are submitted to and approved by the federal extension office of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Responsibility for conducting county extension programs is divided between county extension agents and local leaders chosen by the people themselves. The major functions of the state supervisory and specialist staff are: (1) to locate, work with, and train county extension agents, and (2) to provide educational services requested by the local people themselves.

Neither the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the University, nor the county is "boss" of the cooperative extension work. Each has its own responsibilities and authority as arranged by law and through agreement with others. It is an excellent example of the teamwork that is required to make democracy work.

TEAMWORK IS A PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY

Our governments provide many services cooperatively. Town, village, city, county, state and national governments work together effectively only to the extent that we understand how our federal system works. Governments are not once, twice or thrice removed from people. They are the life blood of our daily activities. What our governments do, and how well they serve the public depends upon each citizen. Our elected representatives speak for the people. The people, in turn, have a responsibility to know enough about the operations of government so that they can understand what laws are needed and why. Only in this way can we keep our governments responsive to our needs and wishes. This involves work.

Wisconsin citizens, both men and women, and their families have never shied away from work. Many of them make an earnest effort to "Know Our Governments." Some who have examined town and county government carefully are taking a more active part in these governments. Experience is a good teacher. Those who "get their feet wet" in government, politics, and organizations which influence public policy not only find the experience rewarding personally, but they understand better the problems that public officials face. They find that the solution of public problems in our democratic federal system requires teamwork—teamwork among citizens and public officials.

May 4, 1960

TO: Members of Extension Egghead Discussion Group

FROM: James A. Schwalbach

Meeting May 10 at 8:00 p.m. at Robert Schacht's home, 1428 Vilas Avenue.

I suggest the publication "Kitsch and U" by Peter E. Siegle as the basis for our discussion at our May meeting. This publication points up the problems which accompany the efforts of a University Extension Division to build an appreciation of "Real" as to "Mass" culture.

AFSCME

Problems

(2nd) Wages — Misclassification directly to Finance Com.
~~Sub~~ Com of City Council

Stating point — Chm. of Civil Serv. Com.
Union presents its case
Finance Com "Arbitrates" not negotiates

(3rd) General wage increases
Union sits with finance com
Conferences with Civil Service Com
Finance Com acts as judge

(1st) grievances — directly handled by local, shop steward & supervisor in the dept.

[Labor Rel. for city of Mich is present politics — "disruptive" tactics — needles etc.]

institute on the public employee union and public officials

june 7-8, 1960

hotel schroeder

milwaukee

BUREAU OF GOVERNMENT
UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION
THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

3 hours
9:-12

PROGRAM

June 7

8:30-9:30 Registration

9:30-10:30 The Emergence of Public Employee Unionism—A picture of the dynamic historical development of public employee unionism and potential trends and developments in this area of governmental administration

10:30-10:45 Break

10:45-11:45 Unionism in Action—Environmental problems related to public employee union organization in a Wisconsin community

12:15-1:30 Luncheon Speech—Who Is a Public Employee?—What factors must be considered in defining what workers fall within the jurisdiction of public employee unions?

2:00-4:15 Panel—Public Employee Unions: Prospects and Challenges

6:30-8:30 Dinner Speech—A Public Official's Perspective on the Philosophy of Unionism

June 8

9:00-11:45 Workshops

10:15-10:30 I. Collective Bargaining Procedures—The decision making and responsibility of each side involved; the public's stake in bargaining procedures of public employee unions also may be examined

II. Public Employee Unions and the Law—Constitutional and legislative actions affecting the unions at local, state, and federal levels

III. Grievance Procedures—This workshop will deal with the grievance procedure itself, and the formal and informal relations existing in grievance situations between public employees and public officials

IV. Inside the Union—A survey of the internal organization of a public employee union—Attention will be given to leadership and the power structure involved

12:15-1:30 Lunch—Luncheon Table Evaluation of the Institute

2:00-3:30 Reports From Workshop Leaders and Presentation of Certificates

SPONSORED BY

Bureau of Government, University Extension Division, The University of Wisconsin

ADMINISTRATION

Conrad A. Elvehjem, Ph.D., D.Sc., President of the University

L.H. Adolfson, Ph.D., Dean, University Extension Division

James R. Donoghue, Ph.D., Director, Bureau of Government

Leo F. Redfern, Ph.D., Assistant Director for Training, Bureau of Government

A. Clarke Hagensick, Assistant Director, Milwaukee Office, University Extension

One of a series on the Education and Training Program for Public Officials by the Bureau of Government.

GENERAL INFORMATION

This is a two-day institute focusing on problems, procedures, and responsibilities involved in the relationship among the public employer, public employee, and the union.

The underlying purposes of this institute are to acquaint public officials with various aspects of the union movement and the rights, responsibilities, and duties of employer, employee, and the union.

Over fifteen instructional hours will be devoted to the history of public employee unionism; problems involved in union organization; legal aspects of the unions; environmental limits; challenges and prospects; collective bargaining procedures; and internal organization.

The enrollment will be limited to 100. A $25 registration fee includes the price of coffee breaks, two luncheons, and a dinner.

Applications for this institute should be sent to:

Bureau of Government, Milwaukee Office
University Extension Division
The University of Wisconsin
606 West Wisconsin Avenue
Milwaukee 3, Wisconsin

ENROLLMENT FORM

Name _____

Address _____

☐ Fee Enclosed ☐ Will Pay at Registration

(Make checks payable to: University Extension Division.) (Additional names and addresses of those wishing to enroll may be attached to this form.)

Bureau of Government, Milwaukee Office
1106 Tower Building
606 West Wisconsin Avenue
Milwaukee 3, Wisconsin

BUREAU OF GOVERNMENT
UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION
THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

Nonprofit Organization
U. S. POSTAGE
PAID
Madison, Wisconsin
Permit No. 658

Mr. Gilbert
Oshkosh
WI 54901

5-60-3600

BUREAU OF GOVERNMENT
404 SOUTH HALL
MADISON 6, WISCONSIN

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
University Extension Division

April 28, 1960

Mr. Emory Via
School For Workers
University of Wisconsin
Madison, Wisconsin

Dear Mr. Via:

Just a note pursuant to our conversation of last week concerning your contribution to our Institute on Public Employee Unions and Public Officials. I was able to locate leaders for all the workshop sessions except the one entitled, "Inside The Union."

As you mentioned over the telephone this topic would not be entirely repugnant to you so I have placed your name on the staff as workshop leader for this session.

I would like to thank you for your very splendid cooperation on this matter.

Sincerely

Leo F. Redfern

Leo F. Redfern
Assistant Director

INSTITUTE ON THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE UNION
AND PUBLIC OFFICIALS

GUEST LECTURERS AND STAFF MEMBERS
June 7, 8, 1960

June 7 Tuesday	9:30-10:30	The Emergence of Public Employee Unions	Dr. Alton Johnson, Ass't. Prof. of Commerce and National Agriculture Extension Center, University of Wisconsin
	10:30-10:45	Coffee Break
	10:45-11:45	Unionism In Action	Mr. Robert Oberbeck, Executive Director, Wisconsin Council of County and Municipal Employees
	12:15-1:30	Lunch and Lecture Who Is A Public Employee?	Mr. Arthur Saltztein, Former Administrative Ass't. to Mayor of Milwaukee
	2:00-4:15	Panel Public Employee Unions: Prospects and Challenges	Mr. Arnold Zander, President of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Washington, D.C. Dr. Henry Hart, Professor of Political Science, University of Wisconsin Mr. Richard Rice, Counsc Affiliated Taxpayers Committee, Milwaukee, Wisconsin
	6:30-8:30	Dinner A Public Official's Perspective On The Philosophy of Unionism	Mr. Frank Zeidler, Former Mayor of Milwaukee
June 8 Wednesday	9:00-11:45	Workshops: 1. Collective Bargaining	Dr. Reed Tripp Professor of Economics University of Wisconsin

10:15-10:30
Coffee Break

Union "dogma"

dual unionism

differentiate from jurisdiction

Does exclusion Taft Berg mightily bar any groups from the political process minority groups —

Zander: in employment relations there is a limitation, not in general

Phil Recommend

(d) "Celebrity a temple of paid publicity"

I'll not retire until 5 or 6 years — wouldn't date due until then —

Zander: Prefer not to go into pol. area — hard in Admin set up — works very well when relations are mutual —

(Reuther: 200 employees jailed for "dressing" Ford (1946?) collected on a vacant lot)

Zander: Responsibility tied to security

	2. Public Employee Unions and The Law	Mr. John Lawton, Counsel for the Wisconsin Council of County and Municipal Employees.
	3. Grievance Procedures	Dr. David Johnson, Assoc. Professor of Economics, University of Wisconsin
	4. Inside The Union	Mr. Emory Via, School For Workers, University of Wisconsin
12:15-1:30	Lunch and Lecture Impact of Public Employee Unions	Mr. John Doyne County Executive Milwaukee County
	Luncheon Table Evaluation of The Institute
2:00-3:30	Workshop Reports

Oberheel's recital of complaints is much like that of any organizing situation — if you accept his facts —
I'd be inclined to do so — Ken discrimination, "intimidation" — overtime case of local pressure —

Lack of citizen groups or Newspaper "interest" — opposition in union demands —

Bettment opposition League of Municipalities } "Management County Boards Assns } Association"

Element of fear — how relate to structure & Mgt. attitude —

Union must want to: Formal Situation — Law / Civil Service
The Pol. Situation
Changing Politics & officers
Internal Unions

Union leader / Reasonable man — cooperation

Can County Bds spend time on personal matters when meets once/mos or once/3 mos —

Bayon
1) Repates
2) Blackboard
chalk, eraser
3) Reporting & Excel

Problem of Mayor — chief ex. in law & practice
His personality is predominant —

Hard to stay — 100% in 10 years — want to be dealt with realistically —

"Public Service"

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN PUBLIC EMPLOYEE UNIONISM*

A. UNIONIZATION: More and more civil servants are organizing their own associations, and those already in existence are growing. Well over 300,000 are members of independent State organizations, and the AFL-CIO affiliate, which includes both state and local employees, numbers about 200,000. Federal groups include hundreds of thousands, with members of postal organizations in the majority. Last year the International (Brotherhood of Teamsters) announced a plan to organize the police throughout the country, and a start was actually made in New York, although it came to naught because of united opposition from the Mayor, the Police Commissioner and the public. Increasingly, organized employees are seeking to transfer to the public service labor relations practices of private industry, including collective bargaining, check off of union dues, and, in extreme cases, the strike.

Both the Chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission and the President's Personnel Adviser urged more attention to improving employee-management relations and consultation with employee leaders.

B. EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS STUDY: In 1946 a special committee of the National Service League after several month's study, issued a report, Employee Organizations In The Public Service, which at once assumed almost the status of a classic document. Convinced that the march of events in the intervening years gave reason for a new report the League made ambitious plans for appointment of a committee to embark on a re-study of the whole problem during 1959-1960. The expected financial support proved unavailable, however, so the decision was made to proceed on a modest basis. Instead of making a new survey of the whole field of public employer-worker relations, the 1946 report will be brought up to date. Perhaps some problems can now be treated more forcefully than was possible in 1946.

* Good Government, Helen Drummond, editor, March 1960, pp. 1-3, Official Publication of the National Civil Service League, 315 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, New York.

4-27-60

Some Suggested Differences Between Types of Unions

Craft Unions	Industrial Unions	Federal, State, County Municipal Unions
1. Numerous small employers	1. Large employers	1. Includes both large and small employing units.
2. Primarily skilled employees	2. Primarily unskilled employees	2. Both skilled and unskilled employees.
3. Multi-employer bargaining	3. Individual Company bargaining	3. Individual employing unit bargaining.
4. Irreplaceable employees	4. Replaceable employees	4. Combination of replaceable and irreplaceable employees.
5. Uniform wage rates	5. Graduated wage rates	5. Graduated wage rates.
6. Individual security through apprenticeship program	6. Individual security through seniority system	6. Individual security through tenure system?
7. Craft jurisdiction	7. Steward system	7. Steward system?
8. Control of labor-saving machinery and work rules	8. Control of speed of work (assembly line)	8. Control of output of work?
9. Simple grievance procedure	9. Complicated grievance procedure	9. Potentially complicated grievance procedure?
10. Small locals	10. Large locals	10. Potentially large locals?

BUREAU OF GOVERNMENT
UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION

INSTITUTE ON THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE UNION AND PUBLIC OFFICIALS
JUNE 7 - 8, 1960
SCHROEDER HOTEL

ROSTER

1. Barj, H. E., Milwaukee Vocational and Adult School, 1015 No. 6th, Milwaukee

2. Bethke, Albert H., President - Milwaukee Government Service League, 125 East Wells Street, Room 230, Milwaukee

3. Buckley, Thomas J., Finance Committee Chairman, City of Hartford, Hartford

4. Budzien, John, Alderman - City of Milwaukee, 200 East Wells Street, Milwaukee

5. Doyne, John L., County Executive - Milwaukee County Civil Service Commission Room 206, Court House, Milwaukee

6. Duszynski, Edwin, Director of Public Works - City of Appleton, Appleton

7. Else, Art - City of Milwaukee, 200 East Wells Street, Milwaukee

8. Falk, H. C., President - Village of Rothschild, Rothschild

9. Garnier, Robert - City of Milwaukee, 200 East Wells Street, Milwaukee

10. Gottlieb, Frederick E., Commissioner - Village of Menomonee Falls, Menomonee Falls

11. Graye, Dirke V. - Motor Vehicle Department, State of Wisconsin, Madison

12. Hause, Laurel W., County Board Chairman - Court House, Waukesha

13. Jury, Don - City Attorney, City of Appleton, Appleton

14. Knoll, Vernon - Bureau of Personnel, State of Wisconsin, Madison

15. Krause, Robert - City of Milwaukee, 200 East Wells Street, Milwaukee

16. Kurtz, A. R., Personnel and Administrative Officer - State Capitol, State Department of Agriculture

17. McMulley, Francis J. - Milwaukee Public Library and Museum, Local #426, Milwaukee

18. Medin, Myron J., Jr. - City Managers Office, City Hall, Fond du Lac

19. Nageli, Norval, Bureau of Street Sanitation, City of Milwaukee, 200 East Wells Street, Milwaukee

20. Ofensend, Allan J. - City Hall, Eau Claire

21. Owens, Lloyd G., Vice Chairman - Waukesha County Board, Rt. 4, Box 118 Oconomowoc

22. Parkinson, George, Director - Milwaukee Vocational and Adult School, 1015 North 6th Street, Milwaukee

23. Priebe, Kenneth - Appleton Street and Sanitation Commission, City of Appleton

24. Provinzano, Angelo - City Service Commission, Milwaukee

25. Reuter, John, Classification and Wage Supervisor, Room 206, Court House Milwaukee

26. Ricking, Merle - Milwaukee Public Library, City of Milwaukee, Milwaukee

27. Romano, Anthony P., Chief Examiner, Room 206 Court House, Milwaukee

28. Schlieve, Robert - Teamsters Local 563, Appleton

29. Schmidt, Harold W. - City of Milwaukee, Council 48; City and County Employees Milwaukee

30. Schneider, Thomas - Appleton Street and Sanitation Commission, City of Appleton

31. Sharpless, Norman - City of Milwaukee, 200 East Wells Street, Milwaukee

32. Scholter, Anthony J. (Mrs) - City Service Commission, City of Milwaukee

33. Simon, Phil - Teamsters Local 75, Green Bay

34. Trindl, Ralph - DPW Personnel Tech. IV, City of Milwaukee

35. Weiss, George, Assistant Supervisor, DPW Garbage Bureau, City of Milwaukee

36. Werner, John G. - City of Milwaukee, Council 48; City and County Employees, Milwaukee

37. Wessing, Rheinhart, Newspaper Reporter - City of Appleton Post Crest, Appleton

38. Zancanaro, John C. - City of Milwaukee, Council 48, City and County Employees, Milwaukee

39. Zill, Robert - Village of Bayside, 9075 North Regent Road, Milwaukee 17

40. Zinos, John C. - City of Milwaukee, Council 48, City and County Employees, Milwaukee

Robt. A Johnson
Bakery & Conf (AFL-CIO)
Disciplined member for Knowing picket line by L-G Standard — Co.
now has filed a case against union.
NLRB

University of Wisconsin
Bureau of Government Education and Training Program

EVALUATION FORM

INSTITUTE ON PUBLIC EMPLOYEE UNIONS AND PUBLIC OFFICIALS
June 7, 8, 1960

Your cooperation in completing this evaluation form will aid us in improving our education and training programs for public officials. Please be candid in your evaluation and comments and please do not sign the form unless you wish to do so. Turn it over to the program coordinator before you leave. Thank you for this assistance.

GENERAL

1. This institute, as a whole, was: ____ extremely informative and useful ____ average in information and usefulness ____ not very informative and useful.

2. In general, the material presented in the institute was:

_____ well balanced and comprehensive _____ of average balance and comprehension _____ quite poor in respect to balance and comprehension

3. Did the treatment of the subject by the techniques employed provide:

_____ nothing new and interesting

_____ a few new and interesting aspects _____ many new and interesting aspects

4. The two-day period for this institute was:

_____ adequate _____ too long

_____ too short

5. Please rank in order of your preference (i.e. 1 - first choice, 2 - second, etc.) the methods used in the institute:

_____lectures _____panel

_____workshops

_____luncheon and dinner talks

SPECIFICS

1. In regard to session one, "The Emergence of Public Employee Unions," I found (check one in each category):

   a. the subject matter was____interesting and new;____interesting but not new; _____ new but not interesting; ____ neither new nor interesting.

   b. the presentation of material was ____very good; _____average: _____poor.

   c. the time was _____too long; _____adequate; _____too short.

2. Inregard to session two, "Unionism In Action", I found:

   a. the subject matter was _____interesting and new; _____interesting but not new; _____new but not interesting; _____ neither interesting nor new.

   b. the presentation of material was _____very good; _____ average; _____poor.

   c. the time was _____too long; _____adequate; _____too short.

3. In regard to session three, "Who Is A Public Employee?", luncheon speech, I found:

   a. the topic was _____interesting and pertinent; ____not interesting but pertinent; _____interesting but not pertinent; _____neither interesting nor pertinent.

   b. the speaker was ____very effective; _____fairly effective; _____ineffective.

   c. the speech was ____too long; ____too short; _____adequate.

4. In regard to session four, "Public Employee Unions: Prospects and Challenges", panel, I found:

   a. the session was ____informative and interesting; ____was informative but not interesting; ____was interesting but not informative; _____was neither informative nor interesting.

   b. the panel members were _____very capable; ____of average capability; _____not very capable.

   c. the time was _____adequate; _____too long; _____too short.

5. In regard to session five, "A Public Official's Perspective On The Philosophy of Unionism", dinner speech, I found:

   a. the subject was ____very interesting and pertinent; _____ not interesting but pertinent; ____pertinent but not interesting; _____neither pertinent nor interesting.

   b. the speaker was _____very effective; _____of average effectiveness; _____ineffective.

   c. the time was _____too long; ____too short; _____adequate.

6. In regard to session six, Workshops, I attended:

   1. _____(name) 2. _____(name)

   In regard to Workshop 1, I found:

   a. the subject matter to be _____very valuable; _____of average value; _____of little value.

   b. the speaker to be ____very competent and interesting; ____ competent but not interesting; _____interesting but not competent; _____neither competent nor interesting.

   c. the time to be ____too short; _____adequate; ____too long.

   In regard to Workshop 2, I found:

   a. the subject matter to be ____very valuable; ____of average value; _____of little value.

   b. the speaker to be ____very competent and interesting; ____ interesting but not competent; ____competent but not interesting; _____neither competent nor interesting.

   c. the time to be ____adequate; _____too short; ____too long.

7. If the institue were to be strengthened, in my opinion the major change should be:

8. General comments (use reverse side if necessary):

5/17/60

FURTHER READINGS CONCERNING PUBLIC
OFFICIALS, PUBLIC EMPLOYEES AND UNIONS

Books

1. Anderson, Arvid, "The State and Labor Relations", Wisconsin Blue Book, (1956 ed.), pp. 136-141.

2. a. Annual Report
   b. Employment Relations Law and Rules
   c. Digest of Employment Relations Board and Court Decisions Employment Relations Board, State Office Building, Madison, Wisconsin.

3. Case, Harry, Personnel Policy In A Public Agency, Harper and Brothers, New York, 1957.

4. Godine , Martin, The Labor Problem In the Public Services, Harvard University Press, 1951.

5. Labor Management Relations In The Bonneville Power Administration, Senate Report 192, Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, 82nd. Congress, 1st. Session, (1951), Washington, D. C., Government Printing Office.

6. Pfiffner, John M. and Presthus, Robert, Public Administration, (4th. ed.), The Ronald Press Company, New York, 1960, Chapter 18.

7. Rhyne, Charles, Labor Unions and Municipal Employee Law, National Institute of Municipal Law Officers, Washington, D. C., 1946.

8. Spero, Sterling, Government As Employer, New York, Remsen Press, 1948.

9. Staff Report, International Association of Chiefs of Police, Police Unions, (Rev. ed.), Washington, D. C., 1958.

10. White, Leonard D., Introduction To The Study of Public Administration, (4th. ed.), The Macmillian Company, New York, 1955, Chapter 27.

11. Wisconsin Blue Book, (1956 ed.), pp. 356-359.

12. Ziskind, David, One Thousand Strikes of Government Employees, Columbia University Press, New York, 1940.

Magazines

1. Cogan, Leo D., "Recent Transformation In Civil Service Whitleyism," Public Personal Review, January 1931, pp. 25-30.

2. "Collective Bargaining In The Public Service - U.S. and Canadian Experience," Public Personnel Review, April, 1958, pp. 160-164.

3. Cornell, H.W., "Civil Service Benchmark Court Decisions," Public Personnel Review, October, 1956, pp. 215-224.

4. Gendron, U.J., "Labor Management Cooperation In Government," Public Personnel Review, January, 1957, pp. 45-47.

5. Johnson, David B., "Some Problems of Cost-Plus Contracts," Public Administration Review, Autumn, 1959, pp. 219-227.

6. Johnson, Eldon, "General Unions In The Public Service," Journal of Politics, Vol. 2, p. 23.

7. Kaplan, H. E., " Concepts of Public Employee Relations," Industrial and Labor Relations Review, January, 1948, pp. 206-230.

8. Kaplan, H. E., "Legal Aspects of Public Employee Relations," Public Personnel Review, January, 1948, pp. 40-43.

9. Picton, Glynn, "Whitley Councils In The Health Service," Journal of Public Administration, Winter, 1957, pp. 359-371.

10. Plunkett, T. J., "Collective Bargaining and The Municipal Personnel Offices," Public Personnel Review, July, 1955, p. 139.

11. White, Leonard D., "Strikes In The Public Service," Public Personnel Review, January, 1949, pp. 3-10

June 1, 1960

Taunton

Sept, '60

Law of labor relations for municipal employment

Official line frequently: Can't legally have Col. Barg. — Col. Agreement — Arbitration in P.A.'s, etc

(Perhaps right if mean as in Pvt. ind, but "they" attempt to take further)

Don't understand what Col Barg is Can't apply normal understand Col. Barg.

Statutorily protected: "Bargain in good faith"

Essential element: Right to strike

Permitted activity in our economy — (legislatively)

Similar activity not permitted in other areas —

Intentional damage of some one else —

Now a mannowing of specific protections

Secondary boycott —

Can't expect strike to be used as general weapon in public employment —

Reason is practical — you have power to paralyze services of community —

This is practical impediment to Col Barg as understood in pvt. ind.

What does Col Barg mean in pub. employment

Not much more than rt. to neg. in good faith

Demands, sit in conference, negotiate

Incredibly mess if current pub. practice applied to pvt. industry

Protestation to Entire Bd, Wah Union Committee, and then take it into stockholders.

Can't shift money from one element of budget to another in pub.

When say can't bargain? — You mean you can't sit down & talk —

Chap 509

You have right to organize
To be represented
Prohibit interference

Some people try to say:
if you have neg. then union must be present
But not required to negotiate

Mike
Takes position that negotiations are required

Legal position of union will go to Court and file an unfair practices if you beg statute guaranteed rt. of union, and if he won't meet, then he is destroying union —

What elements must go back into law —

One party —
Provide facilities for enforcement of law need Admin. Agency — use WERB
The law now is in Chap 111 (part of WERB law)
1) give enforcement powers to keep out of Courts → appeal, mediation
2) Give WERB intervention power
Try to get to negotiate
final step?
3) Require formal hearing, fact finding and recommendation not prepared to do this at this point —
Should they have arbitration power — might involve Const'l questions and litigation —

Lawton

Arbitration: objected to by some lawyers can't delegate powers

"Ancient" law of Wis (Lawton uncovered recently)
Permits delegation to arbitrator in Building
Contracts — to determine quality of construction, etc.

How this been tested?
Used?
Ct. look?

May change thinking on this score
Used to be Arbitration was advisory & then confirmed by Council or Board — would need legislation —
Union doesn't have status of person in ct.

May need a representation device — determine who represents. (Didn't include originally to avoid problems of units — should supervisors,
"officers" etc be in — what if other Unions have other depts (teachers, water works, etc) —

(14) So little experience in labor relations, the municipalities don't understand, don't know authority, resist any relations — ignorance of labor unions & relations —
Can they use labor relations Counsels

Mike doesn't have a labor advisor

Exclusive bargaining can be engaged for practical reasons
But can't get into ct. to throw out
Also applies to agreements — can't enforce in court but can't throw out —

Waupaca County & UPW — ct. would not enforce
"not so learned an opinion, but probably right"

Heard Send in Express

Last 10 years

Ed –
50% increase per student cost
35% increase in # of students

[Support faster than tax base even though other services do not –

People unintentionally create climate of opinion – what's said in barbershops"

Thorndike [were challenged – statistics can be used to]
If a city had a strong regard for human value, and had built

60% – character of people
25 – size of wealth
5 – effectiveness of govt

Essentially good govt depends on character of citizens –

What is the "answer"
if property is only tax

Puerto Rico

2 pieces of legis to aid org. (Passed by both houses, Gov. to sign (Wants AFSCME on Island))

if get 51% of municipality, can get check-off & union shop

Gov. wants aid in housing

AFSCME – can't move in without a base, must have membership

Gov. said welcome – a baba goat.

Convention was a mess

No dues increase (66⅔ support – takes 66⅔%)

65¢ tax – generally

$1.00 tax for new unions (

How does this square with equal treatment provisions of any law covering AFSCME –

Wanted to use IUD money

(condition: only where there is $1.00 tax)

Having on Calif. State Service

Md. State Service

110,000 State employees

New members from Baltimore (1500)

Elements of Strength

Check off

Merit

Referring Loads

Collective Bargaining

10 states bar strikes by law

Union only talking Col. Barg about 10 years –

There are several hundred Col. Barg agreements – Some, unilateral

New Eng. – Town meeting officers, telling Union "You'll have to put your name to it." Bad faith, won't be tested in Cts – What would happen if it were – Delegate Security.

Meany

Not central responsibility to organize last Council meeting was deferred to push organizing result; Analysis by ~~org~~ offices of Org. potential —

I.U.D. — differs on this Should have concerted effort

BSEIU

Had competed — Mr Fitzsimons spent a great deal of money to "take over" AFSCME

Not sure of position of new pres. —

P.S.I.
Public Service Int'l.
One of 17 "trade" internationals
"Congress" every 3 years
Zander is U.S. member of Ex. Com.

$28/1000 members
$5200 for AFSCME
Plus part, legislation costs, to attend meetings
Emergency funds for Int'l.

THE STATE OF WISCONSIN
Office of Attorney General
Madison
(December 30, 1960)

SYNOPSIS OF OPINIONS INVOLVING ANTI-SECRECY LAW

For some time now this office has been receiving requests for interpretation of Wisconsin's Anti-Secrecy Law. Many of such requests have come from private persons. While this office does not ordinarily advise such persons, I have answered many of these requests and explained my views in regard to the proper interpretation of this law because I believe so strongly that there should be no unnecessary secrecy in government. This problem is of such great importance that I have decided to summarize the views which I have expressed on this subject and issue a formal opinion which will be published with our other formal opinions so that it will be available to district attorneys, city attorneys, and attorneys for school boards and other public agencies, who may be called upon to advise public bodies regarding the necessity of conducting public business in open meetings which interested members of the public can freely attend.

The Wisconsin Anti-Secrecy Law is found in sec. 14.90, Wis. Stats. That statute reads as follows:

"14.90 Open meetings of governmental bodies. (1) In recognition of the fact that a representative government of the American type is dependent upon an informed electorate, it is declared to be the policy of the state that the public is entitled to the fullest and most complete information regarding the affairs of government as is compatible with the conduct of governmental affairs and the transaction of governmental business.

"(2) To implement and insure the public policy herein expressed, all meetings of all state and local governing and administrative bodies, boards, commissions, committees and agencies, including municipal and quasi-municipal corporations, unless otherwise expressly provided by law, shall be publicly held and open to all citizens at all times, except as hereinafter provided. No formal action of any kind shall be introduced, deliberated upon or adopted at any closed executive session or closed meeting of any such body.

"(3) Nothing herein contained shall prevent executive or closed sessions for purposes of:

"(a) Deliberating after judicial or quasi-judicial trial or hearing;

"(b) Considering employment, dismissal, promotion, demotion, compensation, licensing or discipline of any public employe or person licensed by a state board or commission or the investigation of charges against such person, unless an open meeting is requested by the employe or person charged, investigated or otherwise under discussion;

"(c) Probation, parole, crime detection and prevention;

"(d) Deliberating or negotiating on the purchasing of public property, the investing of public funds, or conducting other public business which for competitive or bargaining reasons require closed sessions;

"(e) Financial, medical, social or personal histories and disciplinary data which may unduly damage reputations;

"(f) Conferences between any local government or committee thereof, or administrative body, and its attorney concerning the legal rights and duties of such agency with regard to matters within its jurisdiction."

By this statute the Legislature has declared that it is the public policy of this State that the public is entitled to the fullest and most complete information regarding the affairs of government as is compatible with the conduct of governmental affairs and the transaction of governmental business. The statute requires that all meetings of all state and local governing and administrative bodies, boards, commissions, committees and agencies, including municipal and quasi-municipal corporations, unless otherwise expressly provided by law, shall be publicly held and open to all citizens at all times, except as hereinafter provided. No formal action of any kind may be introduced deliberated upon, or adopted at any closed executive session or closed meeting of any such body. There are certain specific exceptions. Public agencies may hold closed meetings in the following situations:

1) The deliberation after hearing or trial by a judge, jury, or administrative agency;

2) Where personnel problems are discussed, unless a public hearing is requested by the employe concerned;

3) Certain areas of crime detection and prevention, and probation and parole matters;

4) Sessions where business matters which for competitive or bargaining purposes require closed session;

5) Deliberations or negotiations on purchasing of public property or investing public funds; and

6) Conferences or information passed between a public agency and its legal counsel.

All meetings of all public agencies must be conducted in public, except where the subject matter falls squarely and clearly within one of the above exceptions. Any doubt whether a matter falls within one of these exceptions should be resolved in favor of open, public meetings. Any public agency, finding it necessary to conduct any business in private, should first make a finding of fact, resolution or statement that matters to be discussed will fall within one or more of these exceptions, before going into executive session. Matters not falling within the exceptions should not be discussed or acted upon until the meeting has been opened to the public.

There is no statutory penalty for violation of the Anti-Secrecy Law. It is merely an admonition to public agencies that they shall conduct their meetings in public so that the public and the press may attend and be informed. In all probability, however, a person improperly denied access to a meeting which should be open to the public could apply to a court for a writ of mandamus to require the public agency to open its meetings to the public.

REGENTS AND FACULTY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

In applying the Anti-Secrecy Law we have given the opinion that the meetings of the Regents of the University of Wisconsin must be open to the public. We have also concluded that the debates of the University faculty on the subject of compulsory ROTC must be open to all and, since the statutes clearly constitute the faculties of the several colleges of the University as the governing bodies of these colleges, it is our opinion that all faculty meetings must be open.

In a recent opinion to the University Board of Regents we said that the exception relating to considering employment, dismissal, compensation of public employees, etc., applies only where a specific employe is being discussed or considered, relevant to one of the items set forth in sec. 14.90 (3) (b), Wis. Stats. This exception does not apply where personnel or management policies are discussed generally. The purpose of the exception is to protect a particular employe who is being considered or discussed and not to protect the public agency involved. We advised that if the Dean of the Medical School had resigned and the only question to be discussed was whether to retain him in employment, then the meeting could be closed to the public, after the board had made the necessary finding or declaration on the record to show that the subject matter would come within the exception. If, on the other hand, the resignation or continued employment of the Dean was merely incidental to the policy problems of the Medical School administration and recruiting, then the meeting should be open to the public. The mere fact that items of public policy or future personnel relations are to be discussed is not a sufficient reason for a secret meeting. It is, in fact, a reason for holding an open meeting.

CITY COUNCIL

Likewise the Anti-Secrecy Law requires the meetings of a city council to be open to the public. This requirement is also specifically made by sec. 62.11 (3) (c), Wis. Stats. It is also our opinion that so-called "informal" meetings of a city council must be open to the public, unless the subject matter thereof falls squarely within the language of one of the exceptions of the Anti-Secrecy Law. Likewise special meetings of a city council must be open to the public. Section 62.11 (2), Wis. Stats., requires that six hours' notice of special meetings be given. Any device to give this notice in such a way that the public and the press are not able to attend would be contrary to the public policy declared by the Legislature in the Anti-Secrecy Law. The City Council of the City of Sheboygan has solved this problem by adopting a rule that notices of a special meeting shall be served upon representatives of the press in the same manner as they are served upon council members. I believe this is a good practice in keeping with the purpose and intent of the Anti-Secrecy Law.

JOINT SEWERAGE DISTRICT

We have expressed the opinion that a joint sewerage district cannot hold secret meetings. Section 144.07 (4) (d), Wis. Stats., provides that the commissioners of a joint sewerage district shall proceed as a common council. As pointed out above, the meetings of a common council are required by sec. 62.11 (3) (c), Wis. Stats., to be open to the public. It follows that meetings of a joint sewerage district are likewise required to be open to the public. Also, the minutes of these meetings are open to public inspection as provided by sec. 18.01 (2), Wis. Stats.

COUNTY BUREAU OF PERSONNEL

We have also considered the following problem: A County Bureau of Personnel had prepared a survey report on salaries and job qualifications. This report was to be discussed at a meeting of the personnel committee. Questions were asked whether such a meeting must be open to the public under sec. 14.90 Wis. Stats., and whether the report itself is a public record under sec. 18.01, Wis. Stats.

As to the first question, it is clear that there is no exception in the law which applies to compensation of public employes. The exception which is most closely related to compensation is the one that appears at sec. 14.90 (3) (b), Wis. Stats.:

> "(b) Considering employment, dismissal, promotion, demotion, compensation, licensing or discipline of any public employe or person licensed by a state board or commission or the investigation of charges against such person, unless an open meeting is requested by the employe or person charged, investigated or otherwise under discussion;"

It is the opinion of this office that the purpose of this section is to protect individual public employes so that reports as to conduct, compensation of an individual, charges against him, etc., can be discussed privately in order that there may be no damage to reputation which could result if unsupported assertions were made in a public meeting.

Our belief that this is the intent of the exception is further fortified by the additional proviso that an open meeting may be requested by the employe or person charged, investigated, or otherwise under discussion. In short, it is our opinion that this exception is a shield, not a sword, and that its purpose is to protect an individual employe and is not to be used for the concealment of information or to prevent employes as a group from knowing what personnel or compensation policies are being considered by the county board of supervisors or its committees.

Under certain circumstances I believe that a municipal board could close the meeting if it were to make a finding of fact that its actions in a closed meeting come squarely within the exception. For example, subsec. (3) (d) of sec. 14.90, Stats., provides that a closed meeting may be held when "conducting other public business which for competitive or bargaining reasons require closed sessions;". In the event the board of supervisors was conducting labor relations negotiations and a report had been submitted to it regarding wage adjustments or inequities and the board wish to give its private consideration to the report prior to a public discussion or bargaining session, it is my opinion that the exception would apply. In any event, we have advised other state and municipal boards that prior to going into a closed session they should in a public meeting make a finding of fact that the matter to be discussed is one that comes within the exception and state the facts that would qualify a closed meeting.

For example, we have given an opinion to the faculty committee of the University of Wisconsin that the meeting held to consider whether intercollegiate boxing was to be abolished must be an open meeting. The faculty committee members informed us that part of the matter to be discussed was the medical history and records of the University boxer who died following an intercollegiate boxing match. The committee was advised that a closed session could be held for the purpose of this discussion but that prior to closing that portion of the meeting it should go on record stating that the medical history of the person involved would be discussed in the closed session.

We also concluded that the survey report prepared by the County Personnel Bureau was a public record under sec. 18.01 (1) and (2), Wis. Stats.

SCHOOL BOARDS AND COMMITTEES

We have also advised that all meetings of a school board and the meetings of its committees must be open to the public, even where preliminary matters are being discussed. Similarly we have said that a meeting to discuss generally the salaries for teachers should be open to the public. The provisions of sec. 14.90 (3) (b), Wis. Stats., which provide that there may be closed executive sessions, refer to individual cases and do not give the right to a public body to close the meeting where salary schedules in general are being discussed.

Very truly yours,

/s/ John W. Reynolds

JOHN W. REYNOLDS
Attorney General

JWR:NSH:AH/jdl/mak

CAPTION:

Under sec. 14.90, Wis. Stats., all meetings of all public agencies must be conducted in public, except where the subject matter falls squarely and clearly within one of the statutory exceptions. Any doubt whether a matter falls within one of these exceptions should be resolved in favor of open, public meetings. Any public agency, finding it necessary to conduct any business in private, should first make a finding of fact, resolution or statement that matters to be discussed will fall within one or more of these exceptions, before going into executive session. No matters, not falling within the exception, should be discussed or acted upon until the meeting has been opened to the public.

Statement of the Board of Ed - Janesville
— Seitz decision

March 5, 1965

The Board of Education is presently required to make a decision -- one which obviously involves differences of opinion and one which not now and possibly never will be defined by clear-cut criteria. As Board members, we become accustomed to pressures applied from all directions. We try our very best to consider impartially the merits of each problem or request, realizing that in the end we alone must carry the responsibility for our decision. According to law, only the Board of Education may make the decision that faces us now.

It has been indicated at one time or another that the differences in contract terms are not really significant and therefore there must be some principle other than the dollars involved in the present deliberations or the matter would have been resolved long ago.

It is possible that the teaching profession strongly feels that as public servants they are at a disadvantage and are generally underpaid by comparison to other professions. Recent activities among educators throughout the country indicate that this thinking is rather universal, and basically Dean Seitz alluded to this same strong belief.

The Janesville Board of Education cannot in all fairness to its electorate use only this premise in establishing its salary schedule. The economic law of supply and demand, and it appears now, unfortunately, the counteracting pressures of organized bargaining units and the taxpaying public, will ultimately provide the yardstick by which Boards of Education will determine teachers' salary schedules.

The Board must make its decision wisely if it wishes to continue to attract and keep high caliber teachers to implement our high quality program. This is still our number one objective. By the same token, we must have complete justification for any actions we do take in order to prevent an over-reaction from any group that may disagree with our decision.

This was only a supporting consideration by the fact finder

"Ability to pay" should not be a factor in the decision. The Board's responsibility is to furnish an educational program to meet the needs in the community and the Board has and will continue to stand ground and fight for this objective when faced with financial difficulties. Adherence to this policy has made the Board both responsible and effective -- should this policy be abandoned then the primary objective of the Board is forfeit.

The law of supply and demand as well as the fact-finding report then brings us back to a comparison of our salary schedule with those of other cities with whom we compete for teachers. This year, as in the past, the Board has made a thorough analysis of the salary schedules of other schools. The salary schedule, however, is actually a base upon which to build. 161 of 380 classroom teachers in our system receive remuneration in addition to that indicated by the schedule. Most Boards, until recently, have deliberately kept the schedule as low as possible to avoid criticism from uninformed taxpayers, using incentives and some additional benefits to entice good people to stay with them.

Now that the issue has come to a head, we feel that we must look at the whole picture and that our salary schedule should be adjusted to reflect more realistically the entire structure of our salary situation.

In examining the salary schedules of 1965-66 for 17 systems other than Janesville, we find, for example, little consistency in the approach being taken on these fringe benefits:

1. One school this year has done away with a $400 dependency factor; another has done away with a $200 dependency factor. Eleven of the 18 systems have no dependency factor at all. This means that their schedule includes an

Post fact-finding unilateral determination on their own favorable arguments ignoring what the F-F finds implied dependency factor. Our dependency allowance is in addition to our schedule.

2. One system has a dependency factor starting at $400 the first year and declining to nothing at the end of the schedule -- cancelling out the increment effect.

3. Sixteen of the 18 systems only pay a portion of the insurance (50%, the single rate, or a flat amount). This means their schedules include amounts sufficient to cover the family rate. Our allowance is in addition to our schedule.

4. The contract year in one system varies from our 38-week contract. I'm sure you would not want us to compare our 38-week contract year schedule with this system.

5. We cannot find any information indicating that competing school systems pay a stipend for attending summer school. Perhaps some do, but I'm sure many don't, so it is only fair to assume that those who do not include a stipend include an amount to take care of this requirement in their schedule. This item is separate and is in addition to our schedule.

6. The system with one of the best looking schedules this year has established a $400 maximum increase per year. Another system has a schedule that will not be reached for two years. Therefore, these schedules do not accurately reflect the current compensation of teachers.

7. We have also noted instances where systems have reserved the right to refuse advancement on the schedule to teachers not coming up to performance standards. It's inevitable that this will happen as increased pressures are brought to bear on the overall schedules.

We have concluded that there are no perfect salary schedules -- each has its strong points -- each has its "fine print". If money alone were the determining factor, there is no question but that the Milwaukee area schools are the place to teach. I suspect that many teachers in our system looked longingly at one of these schedules before deciding to come to Janesville.

Ignores the main thrust of JEA (increments)

We have felt that our offer prior to Fact-Finding would provide attractive increases for most everyone on the staff. Individual increases would range up to $480 or up to an 8.21% increase, with an average increase of $394 or a 6.35% average increase. We do not agree with the Fact-Finder's recommendation that increases should range up to $785 or up to a 9.51% increase with an average increase of $529 or an 8.36% average increase.

We are willing to start as soon as possible to negotiate all aspects of our schedule for the next budget year.

In order to negotiate effectively, both parties must be in a position and frame of mind to give as well as take. We are confident that this attitude will prevail both among representatives of the JEA and the Board.

Threats ?

As a matter of fact, it is timely that we mutually consider everything we are doing. Perhaps we should be on a 40-week year. We should review our "unequal pay for equal work" provisions such as dependency and insurance. Not only should we look at the matter of extra pay for co-curricular activities -- we should carefully examine the activities themselves to be sure we can justify their existence. Not only should we look at the stipend we pay for summer school work -- we should review our present requirements for professional advancement.

We should consider shortening our schedule so that the annual increments can be more comparable with other systems. We should review the feasibility of of going back to a six-period day which we know would effect some economies in instructional costs.

We should consider the possibility of allowing those teachers who may have a personal financial problem to teach an extra hour each day and be paid accordingly.

All of these matters have an effect on our budget and on your salaries and working conditions. They are inter-related with the salary schedule and should be carefully considered in the process of making our schedule not only look more competitive but be more competitive.

In view of all these considerations, the Committee of the Whole has voted to recommend to the Board at its March 9 meeting that the Superintendent be instructed to issue contracts based upon a $200 increase in the base of the bachelor's degree schedule from $4900 to $5100, with increments of $190 for fourteen years as compared with present increments of $180; a $250 increase in the base of the master's degree schedule from $5250 to $5500, with increments of $200 for seventeen years as compared with present increments of $195.

Award

The Committee recommends that $5 per game be paid teachers assigned special duties at the four home senior high football games, and that other after 6:00 p.m. or Saturday assignments be made as equitably as possible by the administration without extra pay.

The Committee recommends that for non-degree teachers in the system the base schedule be increased $200, the increments increased from $155 to $165 and that increments for credits earned between the three-year training and bachelor's degree be increased from $30 to $40.

The Committee recommends also that the maximum increase per teacher of $600 be continued this year.

EV Public Employee Unionism

Labor Appointees vs. Public Unions: Traditional Roles Blur

To analyze labor's expanding role in government affairs, Milwaukee Journal reporters have interviewed scores of public officials and union leaders. Information was provided by reporters Lawrence C. Lohmann, Ralph D. Olive, Edward S. Kerstein, Avery Wittenberger, Patrick Graham and David F. Behrendt. Leon Hughes, who covers labor news, wrote the two part report, which concludes today.

When union leader John C. Zinos starts his annual bargaining for the city sewerage commission's employes this month, his opposite number on the management side will be Jacob F. Friedrick, president of the commission and of the Milwaukee County Labor council.

The negotiation session will illustrate how labor and management lines sometimes become blurred when public employes practice unionism and labor leaders become active in government.

Unionists have been appointed to many public commissions and committees in Milwaukee and the county. Some of the appointments give labor leaders important policy making powers. Some allow them to become civic figures. Others are little more than vanity appointments—designed to flatter the appointee and win support for the politician who picks him.

Little Likelihood of Compromise

In the sewerage commission negotiations, there is no suggestion that the interests of either the taxpayers or the employes will be compromised.

Friedrick is highly respected by many businessmen who have worked with him on public and civic enterprises. He is a long time member of the University of Wisconsin's board of regents and has twice served as its president.

Zinos, director of district council 48 of the State, County and Municipal Employes' union, can be expected to make at least his usual vigorous fight for the union members. This will be the first time that the union has formally negotiated with the commission as the certified bargaining agent.

"We are not going to be as easy on Jake as we were on the city," Zinos said. He chuckled, but he was not exactly joking.

His mention of the city was a reference to the district council's recent contract negotiation with the common council's finance committee. The final negotiation lasted 40 hours and ended with agreement on the city's first written labor contract in history.

Others Represent Management

While he may not be easy on Friedrick, Zinos may find his own job a bit harder because his adversary—a 50 year veteran of unionism—is so familiar with labor's bargaining tactics.

Friedrick is not the only union official who has to put on a management hat occasionally to negotiate with fellow members of AFL-CIO unions.

The vocational school board provides another good example. Its management bargaining team consists of two unionists—President Otto A. Jirikowic, a veteran unionist and retired staff member of the Milwaukee County Labor council, and Ralph E. Bowes, business manager of the carpenters' union district council—and an industrialist, Richard S. Falk, secretary of the Falk Corp.

Because the bargaining team (personnel committee) conducts its business in secret, there is no way of determining how much labor influence is exerted or whether it has a serious bearing on the policies of the board.

Falk, the committee chairman, takes the position that it is no one's business how the committee decides what it will recommend to the full board—so long as the recommendations themselves are made public at a board meeting.

The board has five members, so the personnel committee's recommendations, if unanimous, will naturally prevail. The other board members—Atty. Harold W. Story and Harold S. Vincent, superintendent of Milwaukee public schools—say they cannot effectively oppose the proposals unless they attend all meetings of the committee, in which they have no vote.

In many areas, there is no reason for conflict between the board's two employe and two employer representatives. Both sides have a big stake in vocational education. Their interests in apprenticeship programs probably are about the same.

Joined Forces With State

A year ago, when President Johnson's committee on equal employment opportunity tried to expand its jurisdiction over apprenticeship programs, Wisconsin industry and labor lined up solidly behind the state industrial commission to oppose it.

The government ended up modifying its position enough to satisfy Mathias F. Schimenz, then chairman of the industrial commission and now city building inspector.

Former Mayor Frank Zeidler says that Schimenz's fight for the status quo on apprenticeships strengthened him with the building trade unions, which are sensitive to criticism from civil rights groups.

Zeidler said that was one reason the building trades fought so hard to get the Milwaukee common council to confirm Schimenz's appointment as building inspector.

Jankowski Jendusa

An official of the trade unions gave a very different version. He said Schimenz had lost considerable rank and file labor support by pushing a series of hearings on job discrimination against Negroes. He said he felt that Schimenz was fair in the hearings, but that many union members thought he was too vigorous in pursuit of Negro interests.

"Mayor Maier was responsible for the labor pressure on the Schimenz appointment," the union official said.

"He asked union people to support Matt, and we got help from all who could put pressure on aldermen," he added.

Friedrick, perhaps the mayor's strongest ally in the labor community, led the union forces when they moved on city hall.

Labor Candidate Balked

Harold J. Jankowski, a labor endorsed alderman who refused to be swayed in his opposition, complained that the union leaders were "applying the screws."

Ald. Robert J. Jendusa, on the other hand, switched and backed Schimenz in spite of the fact that labor had refused to endorse Jendusa in his last campaign.

A high union official said Jendusa's change was not an effort to help labor, "for he hadn't forgotten that COPE didn't endorse him."

The unionist said COPE—the labor council's Committee on Political Education—refused to back Jendusa after he "blew up and gave the wrong answers on Negroes and housing" while he was being interviewed by COPE leaders.

"Jendusa didn't want public housing in his ward," the union leader said.

A top city official who asked not to be identified said the mayor had appointed too many "labor goons" to public commissions and committees.

Bowes Jirikowic

Maier vigorously defended his appointments. He said he had picked "labor, business, civic and intellectual leaders willing to work shoulder to shoulder for the good of everyone."

"I have appointed more people from the ranks of labor than any other mayor," he added. "There was not a sufficient balance on the boards and commissions, not adequate representation from the ranks of labor."

He said Milwaukee had "a civic minded labor organization, a reservoir of talent for our city government."

"I have been more than pleased with the type of representation I have gotten," he added.

He said labor had given important support to the community renewal program, the social development commission and the division of economic development.

Maier said he had tried to put at least one labor leader on each board. He denied that he had favored building tradesmen over industrial union people, a charge made occasionally by officials of the former CIO unions.

The Schimenz case was a rare example of overt labor pressure.

On the city's public school board, labor has representatives, but they do not act as a faction. Observers believe that the most prolabor members are Thomas Brennan, Cornelius L. Golightly, Milan Potter and Frederick Mett. Slightly less friendly to labor are Mrs. Elisabeth Holmes, Dr. Edward H. Krause and John Pederson.

Some Hard to Classify

Story considers himself friendly toward labor and probably is in many ways—but not always by labor's own standards.

Walter B. Gerken, who will replace Pederson on the board in July unless a recount now in progress upsets his election, was endorsed by COPE. He is an insurance executive.

The other members are either indifferent toward labor or difficult to classify. On the school board, as elsewhere in the community, labor is not a bloc on matters involving Negro rights. Golightly, Pederson and Mrs. Holmes have backed efforts to break up de facto school segregation.

Potter and Brennan, although liberal in general, have sided with the opposition on that point.

Labor's presence is also evident in the courthouse, although perhaps not as much as in city hall.

Neither County Executive John L. Doyne nor Eugene H. Grobschmidt, county board chairman, is considered especially close to labor, but they are not regarded as unfriendly to the union movement.

Doyne Got Campaign Help

A fund raising event in Doyne's last campaign was headed by Walter J. Burke, district director of the steelworkers' union, who apparently has been elected secretary-treasurer of the United Steelworkers of America, although the election results have not been made official.

Grobschmidt on several occasions has ended up making last minute concessions to employe groups, ignoring recommendations of the county board's personnel committee.

Doyne is so committed to holding the line on tax rates that he is commonly identified with the conservatives in county government when it comes to salary increases and other employe benefits.

He has, however, given labor recognition in the form of appointments to boards and commissions.

The county board has become increasingly aware of unions, especially with the advent of collective bargaining by public employe unions.

No Trouble With Trades

Old timers at the courthouse had no trouble getting along with such unionists as Friedrick and Peter T. Schoemann, national president of the plumbers' union, who formerly headed the Milwaukee Building and Construction Trades council.

The building trades do not have to negotiate with governmental bodies to get their pay increases. Government automatically pays tradesmen the rates they gain in their negotiations with private industry, so there is no impediment to an easy relationship between those unions and government officials.

Schoemann is typical of a sizable group of Milwaukee labor officials who have got along well with their counterparts in industry and have become civic leaders in their own right.

Friedrick and Burke are also of this school, as are Gerald J. Enright, a member of the county civil service commission; Edgar J. (Rex) Fransway, a member of the park commission, and the late Anthony J. King, who served on the museum board and many other public and civic groups.

Conservative by Comparison

John Zancanaro, Schoemann's successor as head of the building trades council, fits into the same category in most respects.

Such unionists are relatively conservative on most social issues, in sharp contrast to the Socialist reformers who came out of the labor movement here half a century ago. They represent highly paid workers who have taken on the trappings and some of the ideas of the middle class.

The public employe unions, on the other hand, are comparatively new, and they show some of the militance and vigor that the other unions had in their youth.

An incident at the courthouse Tuesday afternoon illustrated how the State, County and Municipal Employes' union can command attention from the county board.

The board had been asked to fill a vacancy for a custodial worker, grade III, but the civil service commission suggested that the job be lowered one pay grade.

The motion was given routine approval, but then Supervisor William F. O'Donnell jumped to his feet and asked that the matter be sent back to committee for reconsideration. The board voted to do so, without any questions or debate.

Burke Schoemann

Harold Schmidt, a staff representative of the union who had been sitting in on the session, got up, put on his coat and walked out, a broad smile on his face.

O'Donnell is labor's best friend and chief spokesman on the county board. The following other board members are the most consistent in giving sympathetic treatment to county employe demands: Donald F. Weber, Joseph A. Greco, Lawrence W. Timmerman, Isaac N. Coggs, James G. Lippert, Earl F. Keegan, jr., Edward W. Lane, John W. Duffey, Ervin J. Ryczek, Marty Larsen, Thomas J. Duffey and Michael J. Barron.

Unionists on Boards, Commissions

Labor representatives on important public boards and commissions (no salary unless indicated):

Fire and Police—Theodore R. Kurtz, chairman; Richard Block, Peter Pavlovich. Salary $1,320 a year.

City Sewerage Commission—Jacob F. Friedrick, president; Donald La Prest. Salary $600 a year.

Metropolitan Sewerage Commission—Friedrick.

Harbor Commission—George A. Haberman.

Vocational School Board—Otto A. Jirikowic, president; Ralph E. Bowes.

Board of Standards and Appeals—Bowes, president.

Common Council's Special Committee on Organization and Methods—Clifford L. Matchey.

Election Commission—Marion L. Heaney. Salary $1,650.

Board of Assessment—Mathew Pinter. Salary $1,650.

Board of Appeals—Clayton R. Culver. Salary $1,320.

Building Code Committee—Roy Cassel.

City Plan Commission—Fred A. Erchul, Gilbert Jewell. Salary $660.

City Service Commission—Julius L. Drozewski, president; Robert E. Jordan. President's salary $1,650; members' $1,320.

Community Relations Commission—Friedrick, Jirikowic.

Housing Authority—Guy W. Boldt.

Library Board—Joseph J. Wysocki.

Parking Commission—William J. Dewsenberry.

Museum Board—Herbert N. Peterson.

Citizens' Planning and Urban Renewal Committee—Erchul, Jewell, Harry W. Green, sr.

Redevelopment Authority—Green.

County Civil Service Commission—Gerald J. Enright. Salary $1,500.

County Citizenship Commission—Fred Lindner.

Expressway Commisison—Bertram McNamara.

Park Commission—Edgar J. (Rex) Fransway.

Welfare Board—John A. Heidenreich. Salary $1,500.

War Memorial Board of Trustees—Werner J. Schaefer.

County Work and Training Advisory Board—John Zancanaro.

THE MIRACLE OF PUBLIC SERVICE

YOUR PUBLIC

Who Ar

Your public employee is the man or woman who lives down the street from you. They can be seen cutting grass, raking leaves or at the grocery. One may coach the local Little League baseball team. Another may be a den mother for the local Cub Scout pack. Their sons and daughters may be attending confirmation class with yours.

At work they will be found guarding the corner cross-walks so your children may get to school safely. Through rain or snow they direct traffic or make sure your property is safe and secure.

Your public employees maintain correctional institutions to rehabilitate those who have gone astray of society. Your public employees devote themselves to aiding and administering to the ill, the needy and the unfortunate in a variety of state, county and municipal institutions.

★ ★ ★

YOUR PUBLIC EMPLOYEES guard your health, though you can't see them. They make sure the water you drink has no harmful bacteria in it. Epidemic diseases are carefully controlled by the sanitation services they provide. Sanitation workers, inspectors, and laboratory technicians are on duty around the clock.

They can be seen repairing highways from spring until fall and in winter they wage a constant battle to keep the roads open.

Our medical centers and mental hospitals are maintained by doctors, nurses, and technicians devoted to public service.

City and county engineers often work overtime to iron out "bugs" that pop up in new public developments.

C EMPLOYEES

e They?

SOCIAL AND WELFARE workers in your community help mend broken homes and provide for those unable to provide for themselves.

Your public employees, as office workers in city, county, and state offices, keep the machinery of government running smoothly so that each citizen may be ably represented and served.

The librarian in the public library who helps you select a book from one of her well organized shelves represents another facet of public service. Your museums and zoos are maintained around the clock by public employees.

Lastly, your public employees maintain parks and recreational facilities for you and your family to enjoy. These men — from conservation officers to park maintenance workers — provide the services to relax your mind and body.

★ ★ ★

YOUR PUBLIC EMPLOYEES are devoted to their jobs of giving you service. Many men and women have made your welfare their life's work.

In private industry these same people undoubtedly would draw a larger paycheck and would receive more benefits than those afforded them by state, county, and municipal authorities.

Dollar for dollar, you get more service from that part of your tax dollar which goes for public employees than for any commodity or service on the open market.

These people are pledged to efficient governmental services. Their unions deserve your support. Their economic needs need your understanding.

MILWAUKEE COUNTY DISTRICT COUNCIL 48
OF THE
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY & MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES AFL-CIO

JOHN C. ZINOS
Executive Director

E. JOHN MURPHY
President

ROBERT SADOWSKI
Secretary

KENNETH MANDT
Vice President

DORIS MOULTON
Treasurer

City of Milwaukee Locals

No. 33 PUBLIC WORKS DEPT.
No. 40 TAX ASSESSORS
No. 47 FOREMEN, INSPECTORS & SUPERVISORS
No. 381 BUILDING INSPECTORS
No. 426 LIBRARY & MUSEUM
No. 428 CLERICAL
No. 550 WATER DEPT.
No. 952 PUMPING & FILTERATION PLANTS
No. 1091 HEALTH DEPT.
No. 1203 GARBAGE DEPT.
No. 1238 ENGINEERS & TECHNICIANS

County of Milwaukee Locals

No. 594 COURT HOUSE & WELFARE WORKERS
No. 645 PROBATION OFFICERS
No. 882 PARKS
No. 1055 INSTITUTIONS

Suburban Locals

No. 2 SHOREWOOD
No. 80 WEST ALLIS
No. 133 ST. FRANSIS
No. 305 WAUWATOSA
No. 609 GREENDALE
No. 742 CUDAHY
No. 883 SOUTH MILWAUKEE
No. 1086 WHITEFISH BAY
No. 1261 GLENDALE
No. 1303 GREENFIELD

Metropolitan Locals

No. 366 SEWERAGE COMM.
No. 587 VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS
No. 1312 HOUSING AUTHORITY
No. 1718 CEMETERIES
" ? Public School
" ? Private Hospital

THE UNION FOR PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

1012 N. 3rd St. Milwaukee 3, Wis. BR. 2-1565

AMENDMENTS

Constitution
of the Milwaukee County District Council #48

Article II
Affiliations

This Council shall be affiliated with the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employes, The Wisconsin State AFL-CIO, and the Milwaukee County Labor Council.

Article IV
Membership

Section 3: Per capita tax shall be paid to this council by member locals at the rate of not less than One Dollar ($1.00) per month per member. Changes in Per Capita Tax must be ratified by 2/3 of the affiliated Locals.

Article V
Meetings

Section 3: All sovereign power and authority of the organization shall originate in meetings of the council. Delegates to these meetings shall determine matters of policy, and may delegate such authority as they may determine to the Executive Board.

Article VI
Officers and Committees

Section 1: The officers of this council shall be a president, a vice-president, a secretary, a treasurer, and 13 (thirteen) additional members, and these 17 (seventeen) together shall constitute the executive board of the Council. Not more than two members of the executive shall be selected from any one local union in any one year. The officers shall be elected and installed at the annual meeting of the council for a full term with all rights except as provided in Section 2 of this Article.

Section 2: Nominations for officers shall be made from the floor. Only duly accredited delegates hall be eligible for nomination. In the absence of the nominee, written evidence of his acceptance must be presented at time of nominations.

Section 10: out Completely ---- Section 11----changed to section 10.
Section 10: The Executive Board shall employ an executive officer with the title of executive director.

FIRE FIGHTERS' INSTITUTE

WHY A WRITTEN AGREEMENT?

From the statement of Professor Nathan P. Feinsinger as Chairman of the "Milwaukee Fact Finding Panel".

Written Contract - Except for those matters which are required by law to be dealt with by Ordinance or Resolution*, the Panel recommends that all terms or conditions of employment finally agreed upon by the parties be incorporated into a written signed contract.

Recommendation

On the question of a written contract, it has recently been stated:

> "The applicable state statute provides that if a settlement is reached, on the completion of collective bargaining negotiations, 'The employer shall reduce the same to writing either in the form of an ordinance, resolution or agreement. Such agreement may include a term for which it shall remain in effect not to exceed one year. Such agreements shall be binding on the parties only if express language to that effect is contained therein'.
> Sec. 111.70 (4) (i), stats. (emphasis added by Panel)
>
> "Incorporation of the terms agreed upon between employer and union in a written and signed contract is practically universal, and is required by law when demanded, in unionized private employment.
>
> "Embodiment of the agreed terms with respect to wages, hours, fringe benefits and other conditions of employment in a single written and signed contract, copies of which may readily be printed and distributed to all concerned, is businesslike and has advantages in the way of convenience of reference, and it tends to give to the employees a feeling of assurance that they are recognized as equal parties to the bargain and can rely on wholehearted adherence to its terms."

The above language is quoted from the Report of E. L. Wingert, Fact Finder, In the Matter of the Petition of Shawano County Highway Employees Union, Local 1520, AFSCME, AFL-CIO, Case II, No. 9061, FF-12, dated October 1, 1963, at pages 15-16. See also H. J. Heinz Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 311 U.S. 514, 61 Sup. Ct. 320, 85 L. Ed. 303 (1941) stating:

---

* Those matters required by law to be dealt with by Ordinance or Resolution may be incorporated into the contract by reference or summary and reference.

"in support of this contention (of the Board, that a refusal to sign a contract embodying the terms agreed upon is a refusal to bargain) it (the Board) points to the history of the collective bargaining process showing that its object has long been an agreement between employer and employee as to wages, hours and working conditions evidence by a signed contract or statement in writing, which serves both as recognition of the union with which the agreement is reached and as a permanent memorial of its terms. This experience has shown that refusal to sign a written contract has been a not infrequent means of frustrating the bargaining process through the refusal to recognize the labor organization as a party to it and the refusal to provide an authentic record of its terms which could be exhibited to employees, as evidence of the good faith of the employer. Such refusals have proved fruitful sources of dissatisfaction and disagreement. Contrasted with the unilateral statement by the employer of his labor policy, the signed agreement has been regarded as the effective instrument of stabilizing labor relations and preventing, through collective bargaining, strikes and industrial strife."

See also Section 8 (d) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended in 1947 by the Taft-Hartley Act, defining collective bargaining as including "the execution of a written contract incorporating any agreement reached if requested by either party."

The University of Wisconsin
University Extension Division
School for Workers

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

GENERAL TYPES OF SENIORITY CLAUSES

1. PRIMARY ABILITY:

Example: "Promotional transfers shall be made on the basis of merit, ability to do the work, and seniority. The determining factors in making a promotional transfer shall be merit, capacity, and ability, except that, where the employees to be considered therefor have relatively equal qualifications in such respects, seniority shall be the determining factor."

Note: This type of clause puts seniority in a secondary position. Only if ability is relatively equal will seniority count.

2. EQUAL CONSIDERATION:

Example: "Promotions will be on the basis of seniority and job requirements."

Note: This type of clause is one in which the contract fails to state which factor is primary. It is often assumed that seniority and ability are given equal weight.

3. PRIMARY SENIORITY or SUFFICIENCY OF ABILITY:

Example: "When a job within a department is vacated or newly created, employees are assigned to jobs on the basis of department seniority providing they have the necessary qualifications and ability."

Note: This type of clause makes seniority the governing factor so long as the senior employee can do the job. In other words, the senior employee should always be selected unless he is not qualified.

Vocational School

	Bachelors Min.	Degree Max.	Masters min.	Degree max.
1957	4,000	6,250	4,250	6750
1965	5,540	9,440	5,840	9,740
% incr. unadj.	39%	51%	37%	44%
% change after COL adjust.	35%	46%	33%	40%

Milwaukee Public Schools

1957	4,000	6,100	4,100	6,400
1965	5,400	8,570	5,616	8,997
% incr. unadj.	38%	40.5%	37%	43.7%
% incr. after COL adjust.	34%	36%	33%	39%

Note;.....
The beginning bases are very low and therefore lead to apparently high% increases.

Past - not signed -

GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE: (Negotiated between MVTAS Board & MVTAS Teachers Union, Local 212)

I. It is agreed that a grievance is any matter which involves a violation or change of policy established by the Board, or a violation of a commitment or other legal responsibility of the Board. It is agreed that the following procedure will be followed for resolving these grievances:

Step I: The Bargaining Committee of the Union will meet with the Director and, if it involves finances, jointly with the Director and the Assistant Director, to discuss the problem.

Step 2: If it is impossible to reach agreement (Step 1), the Bargaining Committee will meet with the Personnel Committee of the Board. If agreement is reached, then the Personnel Committee of the Board refers the matter to the full Board for actipn.

Step 3: If agreement is not reached, then the Bargaining Committee meets with the full Board.

Step 4: If agreement cannot be reached between the Bargaining Committee and the full Board, then recourse may be made to other provisions of the law.

II. Complaints: A complaint is a personal dissatisfaction on the part of one or more employees for which they seek redress, but it does not imply or impute the violation of a previously established Board policy or any legal responsibility of the Board. The same procedure will be followed for complaints as i "I" above, except that the first step shall be for the employee or employee and union representative to meet with the faculty couselor of other supervisor of the teacher involved. Then, if agreement is not reached, it goes to the Director, and from then on it follows the procedure of "1" above.

****

(Negotiated between MVTAS Board & MVTAS Teachers Union Local 212 - June 1963-June, 1964)

1. Grievance procedure (see above)
2. Teacher reclassification pay adjustment ($50.00)
3. Open teacher files
4. Publication of promotional vacancies by the administration
5. Improved medical insurance coverage - $300 basic hospital costs paid after $50 deductable.
6. 15 day personal leave permitted annually
7. $200 across-the-board salary increase effective January 1, 1964
8. $300 added to the top of each salary classification, effective September, 1964

****

(Negotiated between MVTAS Board & MVTAS Teachers Union Local 212 - June 1964-June, 1965)

1. School Board policies catalogued and indexed.
2. Improved medical insurance coverage - maternity payments increased to $300.
3. Salary schedule restructured - $300 vertically & horizontally between all classifications.
4. $300 across-the-board salary increase effective January 1, 1965.
5. Adjustments of the maximum salary in each classification, effective September, 1965. This will result in an increase for those teachers at the top of their salary classification ranging from $50 to $200. (This resulted from the restructuring of the salary schedule, - # 3 above.)

The University of Wisconsin
University Extension Division
School for Workers

CHANGE IN HOURLY EARNINGS OF MANUFACTURING PRODUCTION WORKERS 1955 - 1964

Year	Money Wages (Mfg. Prod. Workers)	% Change in money wages	CPI 1955=100	Real Wages (Mfg. Prod. Workers)	% Change in Real Wages
1955	$1.86		100.00	1.860
1956	1.95	4.832	101.51	1.921	3.272
1957	2.05	5.122	105.04	1.952	1.617
1958	2.11	2.921	107.93	1.955	0.157
1959	2.19	3.793	108.79	2.013	2.961
1960	2.26	3.191	110.50	2.045	1.590
1961	2.32	2.651	111.68	2.077	1.570
1962	2.39	3.012	112.97	2.116	1.872
1963	2.46	2.922	114.36	2.151	1.659
1964	2.54	3.255	115.86	2.192	1.901

Average % Change in money wages 3.5221%

Average % Change in Real Wages 1.844%

% Increase in money wages between 1955 & 1964 (2.54 divided by 1.86) 36.559%

% Increase in real wages between 1955 & 1964 (2.192 divided by 1.860) 17.842%

min. BA 4800 5546 = 39%

57 ↓ 65

max BA 6250 9410 = 51%

MA max 6750 9740

Milwaukee Salary

	B.S Min	B.S. Max	M.A. Min.	M.A. Max
1965	5400 125 2.4%	8570 395 4.8%	5616 241 4.5%	8997 522 6.2%
1964	5275 250 5%	8175 250 3.2%	5375 250 4.9%	8475 250 3%
1963	5025 125 2.6%	7925 125 1.6%	5125 125 2.5%	8225 125 1.5%
1962	4900 250 5.4%	7800 250 3.3%	5000 250 5.2%	8100 250 3.2%
1961	4650 100 2.2%	7550 450 6.3%	4750 200 4.4%	7850 450 6.1%
1960	4550 350 8.3%	7100 500 7.6%	4550 250 5.8%	7400 500 7.2%
1959	4200 0 0%	6600 0 0%	4300 0 0%	6900 0 0%
1958	4200 200 5%	6600 500 8.2%	4300 200 4.9%	6900 500 7.8%
1957	4000 400 11.1%	6100 200 3.4%	4100 400 10.8%	6400 200 3.2%
1956	3600	5900	3700	6200
1955	?
1954	3527	5227	3627	5927

The University of Wisconsin
University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

THE PARTIES TO THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS

1. A common view:

Three parties: the union, management and the employees:

This view often reflects a lack of understanding on the part of the employees that they ARE the union. It may indicate an unwillingness on the part of management to accept the union as a regular part of the operation. It may reflect a desire to split the union leadership from the union membership. It is in line with the "labor boss" theory. This view is still very common among the managers of all government units.

2. A more realistic view:

Two parties: the union (which is the members and has no existence apart from them), and management.

Under Wisconsin law, the union can be certified or recognized as exclusive bargaining agent for all occupants of occupations noted in the certification order. However, Wisconsin law frequently makes a distinction between employees and the bargaining agent. (that is - the union).

RESPONSIBILITIES AND PROBLEMS OF UNION LEADERSHIP IN THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS

IN RELATION TO MANAGEMENT

A. Assembling facts for negotiations - a year-round process:

1. Resources:

   - settlements and patterns in labor-management relations generally
   - settlements and patterns in your craft
   - settlements and patterns in industries in your own community
   - what's been happening under your current contract or under your current practices

2. A suggestion:

   - involve as many other members and officers as possible in an examination of the existing contract or existing practices for possible changes; participation by the members in these decisions will tend to improve the quality of their support for the final proposals.

B. Preparing the actual proposals

1. The "language" approach:

   Working up clauses in exact contract language. This offers a solution without a statement of the problem. It is possible that devotion to language or an exact solution may hinder agreement. However, the language approach is common and often necessary; be alert to the problems which it presents.

2. The "problem" approach:

   Presenting the problem with a generalized suggestion for its solution - a clearcut invitation to management to acknowledge the problem and participate in a joint solution, with language secondary. This allows more freedom for bargaining with less initial bickering about language.

3. Support for proposals:

   Be ready to document requests for change; management is bound to ask the union why it wants a change (or a new proposal). Grievance procedure records are important in this respect - as well as notes on problems for which the contract or past practice offered no solution.

4. Estimating minimum requirements:

   Make a conscious effort to analyze what the minimum requirements are in relation to each proposal - what the union must have. This estimate of what is minimum may change as negotiations develop.

5. The broad, union-wide proposals:

   Be able to relate any such International Union programs to the local situation to lessen the affect of management's claim that this is strictly a national office adventure. This is also important in relation to the membership.

6. Membership action on proposals before they are submitted to the city:

   This involves the "principle of participation" and helps the members to appreciate their role in the collective bargaining process.

   A mimeographed summary of the proposals in the hands of the membership at the meeting will contribute to an orderly meeting and intelligent discussion and action.

II. Why are the problems and trends in Wisconsin state government and political life important -- significant?

--State government is more pervasive, touching our daily lives at an increasing number of points

--both as to services to individuals

--and in rules and regulations imposed upon us

--Governmental costs are increasing all along the line

--federal government taking biggest bite out of my tax $ (this didn't used to be so)

--state government fighting for financial resources

--local governments caught in squeeze

--Shifting population and economy of the state are likely to affect the state's role in the national economy and national political life.

--Duties and obligations of Wisconsin citizens are becoming more and more complex--this in turn requires a higher order to intelligence and attention in order to resolve conflicts

--The national government and national interests (largely security and defense)(due to the impact of mass communications media and our social, economic and political institutions) OVERSHADOWS state and local governmental affairs

--If the citizen neglects sufficient and purposeful attention to state and local affairs, real danger to democratic institutions

PAGINATION INCORRECT

III. Trends affecting Wisconsin government and sources of information that may give us insights into the future.

Introduction:

--Shifting population

Between 1940-50 34 counties lost population (north & west)
37 counties gained

The 34 who lost were thinly populated
The 37 which gained were the more populous

Greatest growth in southeast sector--23 counties-- from line drawn Green Bay to Green County

This is where 95% of state growth occurred.
More than half of this growth centered in Milwaukee, Waukesha,
Racine and Kenosha

--Migration out of the state in last five years 1950-55 has implications in terms of prosperity, taxation and government

Between 1950-55 269,000 more births than deaths.

BUT 130,000 more people moved out of the state than moved in.

Young people seeking economic opportunity.

Reduces number of productive people that we can tax

--Six out of every ten residents are urban; plus fact that many rural dwellers work in nearby villages or cities.

--Most rapid growth in suburbs, not central cities.

--In 1950 there were only 306,509 family and hired workers on Wisconsin farms (this includes operators, unpaid family and hired workers)-- only 8.5% of total state population. And only 20% approximately of our state's population is engaged in agriculture and allied processing industries.

--Shifting population in sense of proportions in various age brackets. Portions of population under 18 and over 64 are increasing rapidly--the oldsters increase 10% in the last five years. While taxpaying portions grows only slightly (between 18 and 65) Puts more tax burden per capita on this group to school the young and care for old. It will be 10 to 15 years hence before our babies will help share this burden.

Introduction (contd)

--Next major area of shift is in the economy -- from agricultural to industrial.

Major industries--(1) Machinery (2) food products (3) paper and paper products

Rural real and personal property values in 1950 represented only 1/3 of the total in the state, compared to business and residential holdings in urban areas --according to State Dept. of Taxation figures. If manufacturing continues at high level employment, the proportion of real and personal property values born by rural areas will decline

1. Wisconsin state government is big.

Today Wisconsin state government has 1,142 functions.
Here is a sampling--
The Legislature enacts the laws of the state--sizeable vol.

Secretary of State keeps record of official acts of the the legislature and executive departments

Attorney General --besides representing the state in court actions, investigates and prosecutes violations of the anti-trust laws, review assessments of property on complaint, gives legal service to 7 state departments

Department of Taxation supervises and advises on local assessment procedures, administers the income tax and so on

Department of Budgets and Accounts maintains separate accounts of the revenues and funds of the state and of all moneys and funds received or held by the state, and all encumbrances, expenditures, disbursements and investments

Motor Vehicle Department enforces compliance of out-of-state motorists with Wisconsin's traffic regulations under reciprocal agreements

Conservation Commission provides for the rescue of lost persons in forests and parks or persons in danger of loss of life; assign equipment and employees to cases of emergency or disaster

Crime Laboratory collaborates with law enforcement officers in the investigation of criminal conduct and equip mobile units for field investigation

Industrial Commission annually inspects boilers, refrigerating plants, elevators, power dumb waiters and moving stairs

Introduction (contd)

--Next major area of shift is in the economy -- from agricultural to industrial.

Major industries--(1) Machinery (2) food products (3) paper and paper products

Rural real and personal property values in 1950 represented only 1/3 of the total in the state, compared to business and residential holdings in urban areas --according to State Dept. of Taxation figures. If manufacturing continues at high level employment, the proportion of real and personal property values born by rural areas will decline

1. Wisconsin state government is big.

Today Wisconsin state government has 1,142 functions.
Here is a sampling--
The Legislature enacts the laws of the state--sizeable vol.

Secretary of State keeps record of official acts of the the legislature and executive departments

Attorney General --besides representing the state in court actions, investigates and prosecutes violations of the anti-trust laws, review assessments of property on complaint, gives legal service to 7 state departments

Department of Taxation supervises and advises on local assessment procedures, administers the income tax and so on

Department of Budgets and Accounts maintains separate accounts of the revenues and funds of the state and of all moneys and funds received or held by the state, and all encumbrances, expenditures, disbursements and investments

Motor Vehicle Department enforces compliance of out-of-state motorists with Wisconsin's traffic regulations under reciprocal agreements

Conservation Commission provides for the rescue of lost persons in forests and parks or persons in danger of loss of life; assign equipment and employees to cases of emergency or disaster

Crime Laboratory collaborates with law enforcement officers in the investigation of criminal conduct and equip mobile units for field investigation

Industrial Commission annually inspects boilers, refrigerating plants, elevators, power dumb waiters and moving stairs

Aeronautics Commission cooperates with the federal government in air marking system and weather information, and approves construction of airport by county, city, village or town if using federal or state aid

Department of Agriculture collects and distributes information concerning the extent, condition, and prices of farm crops, animals, weather reports and other information of interest to farmers

State Board of Health--establish and maintain with federal grant-in-aid funds a program of cancer control, including methods to facilitate the early recognition of cases, case findings, dissemination of information on cancer to the lay public and the promotion of postgraduate medical education on cancer control. Same for heart disease. Oh, yes, and issue permits to operators of funeral establishments.

Industrial Commission enforces the labeling of mattresses and upholstery

State Board of Vocational and Adult Education visits handicapped persons making application for vocational rehabilitation to determine whether rehabilitation is feasible.

Governor's Educational Advisory Committee approves and supervises schools and educational courses for the training of veterans who are receiving aid from the federal govt.

Summary: These illustrations merely suggestive of broad scope of state activity--scope changes as social, economic, and political shifts take place.

To fulfill these functions an increasing number of state employees is required.

And, naturally this all requires more income and a larger volume of expenditures.

2. Wisconsin state government is more pervasive today.

One reason is that there are more people; and more people are living closer together; and more people are urban, requiring urban type services.

The state makes many more rules and regulations and is supposed to enforce them--actually if the state enforced all the rules and regulations on the books, you and I would be over-run with inspectors.

I have here what are called the departmental rules of the State Dept. of Agriculture. These are rules beyond what appear in the statutes. The rules cover everything from goats (10.06), to narcissus bulbs (21.10) to soda water beverages (41), to raisin buns (57.04), to canned dandelion greens (60.30)

Wisconsin government is pervasive to a larger degree today because we expect it to deal with crises -- crises of unemployment, crises such as floods, tornadoes, polio, education, traffic fatalities, crime, etc.

In a sense state government, as well as the federal government, are more pervasive today because they are operating in a period of cold war. We well know this because out of the 66 2/3 ¢ that the federal government takes out of each Wisconsin tax dollar -- the major portion of that 66 2/3 ¢ goes for security and defense. The bigger bite out that tax dollar that the federal government takes, the harder it is for state and local governments to squeeze more out for themselves.

3. Wisconsin state government is shifting constantly from negative to positive programs in government.

Shift from police idea of "you can't do this" to the idea that there are basic reasons why people don't abide by the law or the rules and regulations -- so state programs tend to put more and more emphasis on the positive, the preventive, approach.

Police officers are studying ways to prevent juvenile delinquency -- they are actually going to school to improve this aspect of their jobs.

Motor Vehicle Dept. emphasizes accident prevention not only thru the device of patrolling but in the engineering and construction of highways, driver education, etc.

Health Dept. emphasizes disease prevention

Ag. Dept. emphasizes better breeding of livestock, preventing soil erosion

Division of Economic Development, most recent example, to encourage industrial development (prevent industry from going to other states)

Administrative Division in Office of Governor (being considered at this adjourned session of the legis) is designed to prevent dispersion of the housekeeping activities within state departments.

4. The number of governments with which Wisconsin State government must deal is constantly shifting.

We have the federal, the state (one of each), then 71 counties, over 560 cities and villages, 1200 town governments, 4,000 school districts and more miscellaneous districts. Wisconsin has more than many other states.

These numbers are constantly changing as is evidenced by noting the number of new cities and villages being created and incorporating. Between January 1944 through January 1955 26 built-up places incorporated as villages, and 10 places incorporated as cities.

The point to note here is that this changes the tax bases on which local governments are operated. School district reorganization good illustration of this shifting and reshaping of tax bases.

5. In Wisconsin, as elsewhere, we are constantly shifting functions from one government to another, or sharing them in different ways.

There is no sign that state government is "withering away"--rather the shift in functions has tended toward centralization at the state level.

Example: Legislature said to the counties: "You continue your traffic patrols and we will increase the state's patrol." What will be the eventual resolution? Complete state patrol? This example, of course, highlights the taking over completely of a function. The next example is in regard to sharing of a function.

Example: Before 1930 the federal government had no role, and the states a very minor role, in the financing of the social security aids. These programs were largely financed by local governments. Wisconsin has today as little state control over the administration of the social security laws as is possible under present federal laws; whereas in about 28 states there is no local financial participation in the social security aids.

Perhaps it is in the Wisconsin tradition, something in our people and institutions, which causes us to examine each shift of function very thoroughly in an effort to keep government close to home. Yet the process of shifting and sharing functions is apparent in school district reorganization, in the field of health, and in highway construction and maintenance.

6. By now you will have caught on that this is a very complicated subject, with ramifications going off in 60-11 directions.

It is very difficult for me, or you, to give fair statements of the issues involved, points of conflict, pros and cons.

What we all need is reliable sources of information so that each of us can make up his own mind about specific governmental problems as they arise daily. We are dealing with problems which are essentially abstract. So it is wise to view sources if we are to know whether the problems are over-stated or under-stated, or whether we are presented with enough alternative solutions to know when we are making wise decisions.

Fortunately in Wisconsin we have so much information, so many good sources, that we have to pick and choose. And no one, whether he is professor, teacher, or lay citizen, has time to assimilate all choices.

(see attached page 9)

Shelf of publications

1. Blue book (how to get one. Reprints)

2. Ag and Extension, Town, County, State "Know Your Governments"

3. The 30th Star, reprint Wis. Blue Book -- history

4. Wis. Statutes (definitive) (Where to find copy)

5. Legislative reports, proceedings

6. State Departments--tremendous, beyond capacity of people to keep up with it. Illustration State Bd. of Health on vital statistics

7. County Board proceedings (not recommended reading, but gives certain kinds of information--financial, list of county officers)

8. Wis. State Budget (who wants to go through this? But if you want certain kinds of facts about budget, this is where to come to)(also county budget, U.S. budget as big as Chicago telephone directory)

9. Financial information, easier source for financial information. Wis. Taxpayer's Alliance. Clear, concise, main facts, major picture. Information pretty straight. (Do not confuse with other kinds of outfits, public expenditure-tax cutting types)

10. League of Women Voters "Most for your money" state finance picture

11. Dept. of Taxation, Dept. of State Audit--taxes collected

12. Wisconsin Counties magazine

13. The Municipality

14. U.S. Census reports

15. World Almanac

16. Newspapers--John Wyngard's column about state affairs, good reporting. Not all columnists are impartial.

17. Of special interest to teachers of social studies Joint Reference Library reference list, weekly. Subscribe $6.00 per year -- library

IV. Shape of things to come in highways, welfare, and education — for these are the major functional areas if you consider number of employees involved and dollars spent.

A. Highways

1. Tremendous increase in number of automobiles; automobiles are bigger, faster. Trucks are longer and heavier. Results: traffic congestion, increasing traffic accident fatalities, obsolescense.

   This is a state and local problem mainly, tho the federal government is expressing an increasing interest in this area.

2. Increase in mileage under state arterial highway system. The 1955 law specifies that 2,200 miles of the 11,000 miles of state trunk highways are to compose the arterial system on the theory that we need this much mileage in order to serve all areas of the state if we are to serve both interstate and interregional travelers. This 2,200 miles comprises less than 20% of the total state trunk mileage, but carries nearly 40% of the total traffic on the state trunk highway system.

   (Here is another illustration of how the state takes over a function partially -- for over these 2,200 arterial miles the State Highway Commission has exclusive jurisdiction for planning and development.)

   Parenthetically, another aspect of this functional area is the licensing of motor vehicle operators. The legislature adopted a state system of licensing to be administered by the State Motor Vehicle Department -- formerly administered by county.

3. What would it cost to improve Wisconsin highways to modern standards?

   "The highways advisory committee of the legislative council has collected some information about the prospective cost of improving Wisconsin highways. The total estimate of needs computed by the various governmental units in Wisconsin and submitted to the highway advisory committee totaled $2,300,000,000. This amount does not include any estimate for town road needs."

   Question: How do the estimated needs compare with the amounts of money now being spent for highway construction in Wis.?

   Answer: The estimates were made on the basis of a construction program over the next 10 years. This would amount to spending $236,904,200 on an annual basis -- or more than double the present rate of spending for highway construction.

4. How are we going to pay for this--assuming the legislature wants a highway building program of this magnitude?

The 1955 session of the legislature increased the tax on motor fuel by 2¢ per gallon, bringing the tax to 6¢ per gallon. (Also driver's license fee raised from 50¢ to $1, renewable every 2 years instead of every 4 years.

But these highway user taxes account for 50.5¢ of the highway expenditure dollar.

Highway user	50.5¢
Property taxpayers	23.9¢
Federal aid	7.9¢
Local funds	8.2¢
Miscellaneous	9.5¢

Federal aid for highway construction was increased this year and will now approximate $20,000,000 annually. This is a drop in the bucket when we look at the $236,904,200 annual spending anticipated under the 10 year plan.

But the highway program is only one program with which the state government has to wrestle. Let's look at welfare.

A. Welfare

1. Tremendous increase in the number of individuals in need who require care: social security systems, old age and survivors insurance, widows and dependent children, totally and permanently disabled, and the blind.

Wisconsin has about 46,000 people on old age assistance, 29,000 in aid to dependent children, and another 3,000 - 4,000 in other categories -- a bill of some $50,000,000 a year. These are large numbers and sums under conditions when the state isn't even depressed. Further, this does not count those under local relief or those under various insurance programs.

How far do you think government should go in taking care of the poor and those in need????

2. Illustrate the shape of things to come in welfare by using our aging population. Though I could elaborate this shape by using care of the mentally ill, or some other aspect of welfare.

The aged population, in Wisconsin, as in other states, has followed the trend toward an increasing average age.

Wis. 1900 -- 1 in 20 was over 65
1940 -- 1 in 14
1953 -- 1 in 11
by 1970 -- 1 in 9 (estimated)

This spiralling of those over 65 has been accompanied by a corresponding increase in the size of the middle-aged group. By 1960, it is estimated that one-fourth of all the workers in the U.S. will be 50 years old or over. Wisconsin, as a state, has been consistently losing a sizeable fraction of its young people by migration to other more industrialized areas. Some prognosticators say that this state's working and producing population will be somewhat older than that of the nation as a whole.

The difficulties of the elderly are gradually creeping down the age levels until it seems inevitable that the middle-aged will soon inherit them. Their period of usefulness has already contracted to such an extent that only the stimulation of near-wartime production has enabled the middle-aged to hold their place in the labor force. In a normal peacetime economy their difficulties may approach those of today's elderly.

Add to this the fact medical science has made it possible for us to live longer -- only to be later the victims of the lingering, chronic illnesses which are so costly. Medical care costs have risen 300 percent in the last 6-8 years. This increased cost more than offsets any gains to be expected from a decrease in the number of old age assistance recipients. Moreover, Wisconsin, by reason of the fields of employment in which its population is engaged, does not benefit to the same degree as do other states. In certain industrial states, the number of Old Age and Survivors Insurance beneficiaries reaches about 400 per 1,000 aged (1951). In Wisconsin in 1951 the number was 239 per 1,000 aged, below the U.S. average of 247 per 1,000 aged.

3. What would it cost to meet the needs of our aged, to say nothing of other welfare needs?

It is so staggering to think of that no one, not even the experts, so-called, have dared to make a guess. In fact we don't know enough about the problems of the aging and aged to make an educated guess.

Some state study committees, after lengthy study, have said that it can never be possible to provide public facilities for all the aged who require institutionalization. Because no such program within the limits of practicality (and I mean the taxpayer's pocketbook) is possible, other ways of caring for the infirm and disabled aged will have to be found.

As we leave you, and state government to wrestle with this knotty welfare problem, let's move to the third major function we shall explore -- education.

C. Education

1. I will treat this lightly since you are all so close to it. You are all familiar with the school population statistics. Suffice it to say that babies are continuing to be born at a rate we had not thought likely. Nor do we know at what point in time this bulge of "young ones" is going to decline.

One important factor ought to be pointed out, however. That is that as this bulge moves through the grades it becomes more expensive to educate them -- until it reaches the colleges and universities -- then it will be really expensive. (This is the underlying explanation for the concern about integration of the institutions of higher learning.)

2. If I mention finance and taxes again -- how are we going to pay for all this? -- you will all rise in a body and go home.

The only bit of philosophy I have on this topic of how we are going to solve the problems of education is this: -- in fact serves as a summary comment on the Wisconsin situation in general --

> The state of Wisconsin has been regarded as a laboratory of governmental experimentation -- a great many national programs came from Wisconsin (income tax, unemployment insurance), but lately there has been a hardening of the arteries here. Unfortunately this spirit of experimentation has been traded for copying other state's solutions, rather than trying out new solutions.

V. Certainly these trends have meaning for you as individuals, as teachers, as leaders in the community's life and thought.

A bit of philosophy about this too, and my philosophy hinges on TIME.

Technological changes within a short space of time these days.

But it takes a long time for political institutions to adjust to technological changes. Our governments, marvelous as they are, have suffered from the successive impacts of constant technological change. These shock waves are getting more and more difficult to deal with. This requires us to run very fast indeed if government is to operate under these conditions.

Then there is the TIME that we all spend -- the 24 hours a day. My philosophy is that we as individuals do not budget our time. Besides, we hear all this talk about "the increasing amount of leisure time" we're all supposed to be enjoying. Why couldn't we budget "time" to give thought and consideration to experimenting with new solutions for tough problems?

VI. Changes in organization and structure of government to deal with all of these trends and problems.

A. Centralizing and integrating certain kinds of functions so that they may be done more economically.

1. For example: Joint Legislative Council set up in 1947 to conduct studies that were formerly conducted through numerous "interim committees". The Council makes studies for the legislature. Some 20 to 25 will be made by it before the 1957 legislature convenes. The studies made by the council give the legislators the basic facts about a problem and recommendations as to alternative solutions. Our legislature should be commended upon following the recommendations of the so-called experts.

However, state administrative organization or reorganization has nothing to do with economy or reducing taxes. You cannot, by reshuffling, save enough to show on the tax bill -- this can be done only by lopping off programs. This is not to say that administration and management are not useful; rather, administration can give best service with the dollars at your disposal. This means getting people's energies working toward the same goals, and reduce the frictions and irritations that impede progress.

B. The trend in organization is toward the strong executive with as few departments as possible. For example thru our state's chief executive the internal management (space assignment, fiscal control, etc.) has been put into management agencies. This means we have a higher degree of specialization which has permitted Wisconsin to get competent people. Moreover, to compete with industry, salaries for this kind of management personnel has been raised. As the size and complexity of state government increases, the problems of administration become more difficult -- consequently the need for better trained personnel becomes apparent.

VI. Finally, the state really has limited resources. This is not a rich state. It will continue to lack coal, iron and nickel. The state has not arrived where it has because of its resources -- rather because of the character and skill of its people.

Partially at least, the hope for meeting increasing state expenditures, is to maintain a high level of productivity. Partially it lies in the way we apportion our expenditures among education, highways, health, welfare and all our needs. In part it lies in negotiating with the federal government and with localities, for they supply the state with additional resources. When one considers that state aids and shared taxes paid to local units of government make up almost 2/3 of the total expenditures made by the state, it becomes evident that this is an area that needs investigation. The 1955 legislature has, in fact, recognized that the state and local units (as well as the federal government) are in this financial plight together. The legislature has directed the Legislative Council to make an intensive study which will include tax needs and revenue sources of the various local units of government.

Our United States Congress may come up with similar facts which may help not only our state, but the rest of them, to meet tremendously high costs of government.

The University of Wisconsin

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION
432 NORTH LAKE STREET
MADISON, WISCONSIN 53706

SCHOOL FOR WORKERS

TO: Dick Rossmiller
Emory Via
Robert Owens
Arnie Allen

FROM: James Stern

Enclosed are two copies of the revised program, and a draft of a letter that would go out with it. Please make any additions, subtractions or corrections on one of the copies and return it to me.

This note also serves as a reminder of our planning meeting scheduled for 3:30 P.M. in the 8th floor conference room of the Extension Building on Monday, June 14.

cc: Howard Wakefield
John Hunger

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION DIVISION

.
.
.

.

Thank you for sending us your registration form for the coming institute on collective bargaining in public employment.

Enclosed is a more detailed program with specific instructions for final registration.

We are looking forward to seeing you in Madison on June 28.

Sincerely yours,

Robert Osanne, Director
School for Workers

August Eckert
Professor of Law

Howard Wakefield
Professor of Education

John Hunger
Assistant Professor
Institute of Governmental Affairs

UW-M Local AFSCME

PROCEDURE FOR HANDLING EMPLOYEE PROBLEMS

Any employee in the classified service of the University who feels aggrieved or has a personnel problem, may present his problem to university authorities through the established grievance procedure and shall not be discriminated against on that account. The same procedure shall be followed by a group of employees presenting a joint grievance. Any employee, or group of employees, who are members of a union, may, if they desire, be represented by representatives of their union or representatives of any affiliated body. They may enter into the Proceedings under Step I, 1 and 2; Step II, 1, 2 and 3.

Step I

A. A personnel problem, or a charge of unfair treatment by an employee, shall not be considered a grievance until:

1. First, the matter complained of shall have been discussed by the employee with his supervisor. If they have been unable to reach a mutually satisfactory settlement within one working day after such discussion, and

2. Second, the matter complained of shall have been reviewed jointly by the employee concerned, the supervisor and the department head, and they have been unable to reach a mutually satisfactory settlement of the complaint within two working days after such discussion.

Step II

A. A personnel problem or a charge of unfair treatment which has not been settled under the procedure outlined in Step I, shall be submitted to the university authorities in writing as a grievance in the following manner:

1. First, a copy of the grievance, on forms prepared for such prupose by the university, and signed by the aggrieved employee, shall be sent to each of the following:

   The employee's supervisor
   The employee's department head
   The University Personnel Office

2. The aggrieved employee shall discuss the written grievance jointly with the employee's supervisor, department head, and the University Personnel Office.

3. Third, in the event a mutually satisfactory settlement cannot be reached within five days after such discussion, the grievance shall be promptly referred by the University Personnel Office to the University Vice President of Business and Finance, together with all papers, documents, and other information relating thereto, for settlement.

Step III

A. In the event a mutually satisfactory settlement cannot be reached within five working days after the discussion provided for in the third part of Step II, the aggrieved employee may file an appeal to the state bureau of personnel, or the personnel board, in accordance with the statutes relating to employees in the classified service and the civil service rules made pursuant thereto.

B. In order to protect the statutory appeal rights of the aggrieved employee, any employee grievance arising out of circumstances covered by section 16.24 of the statutes relating to removals, suspensions, discharges, reductions, dismissals and layoffs, which has been submitted to the university under this grievance procedure may be appealed to the personnel board by the aggrieved employee, at any time within 10 days following the effective date of the action of the employing officer.

C. In order to protect the appeal rights of an aggrieved employee, any employee grievance arising out of the reallocation of a position under Rule V, (2), Civil Service Law and Rules, Bureau of Personnel, which has been submitted to the university under this grievance Procedure, may be appealed to the personnel board at any time within 15 days from the date of notification of such reallocation.

Memo: To: Emory Via
From: Steve Clark

Our union has a three level structure. Namely, the international, the local, and the council.

The Wisconsin State Employees Association is known as Council #24 and as the name implies is strictly for state union members. All locals are affiliated.

There are two other councils for county and municipal unions. These are Wisconsin County & Municipal Employees Council 40, and Milwaukee District Council 48. The latter has jurisdiction in the city and county of Milwaukee.

Legislative efforts on matters of common interest to all public employees such as retirement, collective bargaining laws, etc. are coordinated.

As you know the state employees of necessity must depend upon the legislature for salary increases, improved fringe benefits, and other items of interest to civil service employees. The local unions have the responsibility of handling the problems of members which arise involving normal on-the-job grievances which fall within civil service rules.

We do not yet have the right under state law to negotiate working agreements, but our attorneys are drafting legislation which will be introduced in the current session of the legislature which will give state employees this right somewhat along the lines of what is now provided for city and county unions.

State employees in the classified service have appeal rights under Chapter 16, WIS. Stats. in cases of suspensions, discharges, demotions, etc. In fact, these provisions were put in the law because of the union's efforts many years ago.

On the subject of grievance handling, if a local cannot settle a problem at the local level, and it must be brought to the attention of officials at higher levels, the council is called upon to assist after proper clearance from the local or its executive board.

A good example of how one grievance was followed all the way through by the local at Mendota State Hospital can be found in the March 1953 issue of the Wisconsin State Employee (see page 19). This involved the right of female employees to wear white uniforms. They finally won out in January of 1954 after a long drawn out period of processing the grievance.

The basic constitutional membership dues in our international are $2.00 per month. However most locals now have dues above the minimum. In our state service the international union receives 65¢ per member, per month; the council (WSEA) receives 90¢ per member, per month. Each local union pays the international $1.00 per month for international relations. Locals are affilitated with state and central labor bodies unless excused from such affiliation by the international president.

See 6, p. 26

E. Vid

WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEES ASSOCIATION

STEWARD'S MANUAL

"Your Job Future Is Our Business"

Affiliated With
The American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees
AFL-CIO

8

FOREWORD

The importance of the steward has increased greatly in recent years. In our union he is in a key position, and his work of great value to the welfare of his fellow workers and to the success of the union. He is an important link in the chain of command between the organized employees and management in day to day relationships.

A conscientious and well-informed steward is the union's greatest asset. Good personnel relations don't just happen; they must be cultivated and encouraged. This is the job of the steward. He is the personnel officer in his designated employing unit for the union. Care, good judgment and discretion must be exercised by each steward to do the best job possible for his members. Each steward has a trust, and he must guard it carefully and use it well.

This manual will set out some principles with reference to WSEA locals, but is not intended to be a complete and comprehensive guide. Stewards in each department and institution will need to supplement information contained in this booklet with material pertaining to their respective employing units. Remember! Intelligent, efficient and alert stewards are the cornerstones of all union activities. They are key men and women, and are spokesmen for the union and membership.

ORANIZATION DUTIES

Strengthening the organization is of primary concern to the steward; he is the membership salesman in his department. It is his duty to see that every employee in his unit joins the local. This is a very important job, for the larger the membership, the greater our bargaining power will be with the departments of state government and the legislature.

Know the Objectives and Accomplishments . . .

Officers and stewards should prepare themselves for their membership responsibilities by becoming acquainted with the accomplishments and objectives at all levels of the organization. (The local union, the Wisconsin State Employees Association, and the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees AFL-CIO).

The union program for the future directly affects the welfare of every civil service worker. WSEA has long-range objectives designed to advance the social and economic welfare of all state employees. Specifically this program includes the following:

1. Salary increases to keep pace with economic trends.
2. Improved contributory hospital and surgical insurance.
3. Legislation to increase retirement benefits and strengthen the system.
4. Longevity pay.
5. Improved contributory life insurance.
6. Payment of time and one-half for overtime, computed on total salary.
7. Premium pay for night work.
8. Terminal pay for unused sick leave.

These and many other items are major objectives on the legislative agenda. These are organizational aims that should be stressed to potential members by stewards when efforts are being made to sign them up.

In addition, non-members should be reminded of these significant accomplishments by WSEA during the years of its existence:

- The 40-hour, 5 day work week.
- The retirement system and social security.
- 5½ million for salary increases in 1961; 15 million in 1963.
- Overtime compensation on full salary and inclusion of bonus in base pay in (1961).
- Life and health insurance with state sharing premium costs.
- Upgrading pay scales and reclassification of positions.
- Survivor's benefits under retirement system.
- Unlimited accumulation of sick leave with "bank".
- Improved vacation schedule including fourth week after twenty years.
- Overtime pay or compensatory time off.
- Hearings before the personnel board in disciplinary cases, and back pay for reinstated employees.
- Military leave protecting civil service status, salary increases, and retirement.

- 30 thousand dollars for formula pension study (1963).
- Holiday leave guaranteed (1961).
- Compensation for patient or inmate damages to employees' personal property (1959).
- Uniforms for MVD Inspectors in 1959 and for penal institution guards in 1961.
- Workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation, and special sick leave for hazardous occupations and penal and mental institution employees.

Ask People to Join . . .

Stewards should keep a constant check on the employees in their departments and keep soliciting those who have not joined the union. They should also enlist the assistance of the officers of the local in obtaining a list of the prospective members in their respective units. Card files should be maintained listing the non-members; these should periodically be passed around among the stewards and members so that more than one person is asking potential members to join.

Organizational material and pamphlets are necessary "tools" of the trade and can be used to advantage when contacting prospective members. Stewards should have an adequate supply of all available pamphlets which can be supplied to local unions by WSEA and the international union.

Introduce Yourself . . .

Officers and stewards should introduce themselves to new employees, get acquainted with them as soon as they start work, and inform them of working conditions and their rights under civil service. Most important, though, new employees should be told of the existence of the union and its accomplishments.

Recruiting new members is everyone's responsibility, and it is imperative that stewards enlist the aid of other members in this continuing process of building the union.

Annual WSEA Convention (1963).

Attend Meetings . . .

It is important that stewards attend meetings and do all they can to encourage members to do likewise. Information about the progress of the local and the exchange of views as expressed in a meeting are bound to be of mutual benefit.

HOW TO SIGN UP A MEMBER

- All new members must go on payroll deduction.
- The initiation and/or reinstatement fee is $3.00.
- Minimum monthly dues are $2.00. (Some locals have a higher rate.)
- Take the payroll deduction cards in duplicate to the local treasurer with the initiation fee as soon as possible after the new member has applied for membership.
- Officers and stewards should know payroll cut-off dates in their departments or institutions.
- Be sure to get correct addresses.

COUNSELING DUTIES

The civil service law and rules are actually the legal working agreement for state employees. It is the union's responsibility to police them. The steward should be thoroughly familiar with these rules in order that he can serve the members effectively. WSEA can obtain copies of the rules for local unions which in turn are available to stewards.

Know the Working Conditions . . .

Stewards must know working conditions. They cannot effectively represent the members unless they know fully and in detail, the regulations under which employees work. They should know the salary schedule, rules relating to hiring and discharge, and provisions of the retirement system. They should also be familiar with departmental and union grievance procedures, and see that rules are followed in processing of grievances.

Take a Personal Interest . . .

The union must be a friend and helper to every member. Their work problems are the union's problems; therefore the steward should take a personal interest in every member.

The steward who knows his department from top to bottom and is familiar with the work of the employees is more apt to have the confidence of both members and management in personnel matters. He should get both sides of the story before hasty action is taken on grievances.

Union Gives Legal Services . . .

It is important to note that a union provides its members with day-to-day individual job counseling and guidance. In special cases, attorneys who are specialists in civil service law are retained to assist in legal actions when necessary. This counseling goes with membership; and in addition members get personal representation before state boards and commissions, such as guidance in matters relating to:

- Pay scales
- Job classification

- Discharges or demotions
- Vacation and leaves without pay
- Layoffs or suspensions
- Sick leave
- Promotions
- Merit salary increases
- Workmen's compensation cases
- Retirement counseling

This representation is available to all members and is one of the important services provided by the WSEA.

When advice and counsel are needed, stewards should contact local union officers. In situations where further advice is needed, the officers will consult with representatives of WSEA.

AFFILIATIONS

Our union has a three level structure; namely, the local, the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, and the Wisconsin State Employees Association. The latter is actually a service council of state employee unions and is the organization which is responsible for legislative work and representation before state boards and commissions.

Many locals are affiliated with the Wisconsin State AFL-CIO, and with central labor unions in their respective localities. These are of value in several ways and locals should be affiliated with them.

Officers and stewards should be thoroughly familiar with the structure of the union in order to be able to explain it to their members.

GENERAL INFORMATION

- Local union officers must be notified of address changes promptly; also the names and addresses of members who may not be receiving publications.
- Each member should receive two publications. These are: "THE WISCONSIN STATE EMPLOYEE" and the "PUBLIC EMPLOYEE". In addition, periodic newsletters are sent to members, especially during legislative sessions when important action is taken on vital bills affecting civil service employees.
- Local meeting dates should be noted and stewards should assist in publicizing them.
- Local unions are governed by a constitution and by-laws; these should be studied in order that provisions are understood and followed in conducting business of the unions.
- Most locals have a Flower or Sunshine Fund with contributions or floral offerings in cases of illness and death among the members. Stewards should know the rules governing such funds and see that proper officials are notified when they learn of the sickness or death of a member.
- Officers and stewards should assist management at times when there are special projects of community-wide interest to be undertaken in their respective departments. This type of cooperation builds good public relations both within and outside the place of employment.

Marshall Field, Vice President of U.W. Employees Local 171 (left), is shown making presentation of television set to University Hospitals.

Many local unions from time to time sponsor special programs for various worthy causes; this is especially true in hospitals and institutions. At such times, stewards can be very helpful in promoting such events.

- Stewards should see that members receive their membership cards and union buttons.
- If stewards have questions or need more information they should contact officers of the local.

ADDRESSES

Wisconsin State Employees Association
713 Insurance Building
Madison, Wisconsin, 53703
Telephones: 257-1064 or 257-1065 (Area Code 608)

American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees—AFL-CIO
815 Mount Vernon Place, N.W.
Washington 1, D.C.
Telephone 393-8430

LOCAL UNION OFFICERS

President .....

Vice-President .....

Secretary .....

Treasurer .....

How to set up LOCAL GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES

How to set up local grievance procedures

Grievances in most unions take up more time than any other union activity. The right of a union member to file a grievance against management is one of the pillars of collective bargaining. No employee should hesitate to complain if he believes he has been wronged. Grievances should be taken to the steward, who initiates action with the employer.

What's a grievance?

A grievance is a complaint against management charging a violation in working rules and fixing responsibility on the employer.

The steward's job

As steward it is your job to determine whether an employee has a legitimate grievance. If he hasn't, you must tell him that he doesn't have a case. If he has a case, then you must prepare it for presentation to his supervisor.

Do your homework

Before you can process a grievance you must know your work rules. You will usually find these rules in one of three places:

1—Your contract, if applicable.

2—Department regulations.

3—City or state civil service regulations.

Grievance, or complaint?

Don't waste time trying to decide whether or not a complaint constitutes a grievance. Most complaints are entitled to some consideration.

Generally, you can tell a complaint from a grievance by asking yourself these two questions:

1—Did management violate the agreed working rules? If the answer is "Yes," the worker certainly has a grievance.

2—Has management treated the member unfairly? If the answer is "Yes," he probably has been aggrieved.

Check the contract

Most rank-and-file workers are unable to tie their grievances to the contract, or other set of regulations. This is the steward's job. If you have done your homework, you should be able to locate the specific clause that has been violated.

THE FIRST STEP

Most grievances are settled between the steward and the supervisor. When an employee comes to you charging a grievance you should quickly evaluate the situation and try to orally work out an agreement with the worker's supervisor.

Get the facts

Listen to the worker's story. Don't hesitate to break in and ask specific questions: What happened? Who is involved? Where did it happen? When? Why? Who is affected? Have the rules been broken? What kind of a settlement is wanted?

Check the facts

It is best for your presentation that you make an objective check of the case. The employee's objectivity may be clouded by his personal involvement. You can't afford to have your case riddled with loopholes.

Stop and think

Before you go to see the supervisor, stop and think. Ask yourself these questions:

1—Have I obtained all the facts from the worker?

2—Do I have all the other information I need?

3—Have I checked the working rules?

4—Have I explained the case to the member?

Take the member with you

Always take the member with you when debating his case with management. It's his problem and his union and he has the right to see how his union representative handles his case. But you should do the talking.

Be diplomatic

Enter into conversation with the supervisor as an equal. You aren't asking for a favor. If a rule has been broken it is the obligation of management to correct that error. On the other hand, it does no good to be high-handed.

Talk sensibly—and briefly. Stick to the point. If the supervisor tries to sidetrack you, bring the conversation back to the case. If you win your point, don't belabor the issue; express your satisfaction and get out. If you are not satisfied, go on to the next step in your grievance procedure.

STEP NO. 2

In most instances the second step in the grievance procedure is discussion with the department head. Submit a formal grievance in writing to management. Management then will probably instruct the department head to meet with the union—if the issue is work rules—otherwise the grievance will go directly to a higher level.

Write it out

If the grievance has not already been written out, do it at this stage. The grievance should be documented to provide all involved parties with an account of the charge. Written reports also provide the union with records of grievances and form the basis of any appeals. The fate of the case may depend on the accuracy and completeness of your report.

Filling in the form

Complete the grievance form in detail. List the time, place and specific grievance. Name the section of the agreement that has been violated. If retroactive pay or lost time is demanded, give exact dates for which pay or time is due. State clearly what action you want. Don't forget to sign the form and to have the employee endorse it.

Meeting with the department head

A union representative may be called in here. At any rate, don't forget to bring the employee. The department head will probably have the supervisor with him.

STEP NO. 3 – MANAGEMENT

The departmental level is normally the final plateau of the grievance procedure for public employees. If satisfaction has not been attained with the department chief, then you must take the issue to management. Your representative is available for assistance.

STEP NO. 4

In some states there is a court of last resort. Laws or contracts sometimes provide for arbitration or civil service review or final adjudication by a state personnel officer. Check the laws in your state and your contract for any fourth levels of grievance procedure.

LET'S REVIEW

The steward

The success of grievance operations hinges on the steward. You as steward form the backbone of your department's grievance procedure. In most cases you and the immediate supervisor will settle employee complaints.

Preparing yourself

Before any worker comes to you with a complaint you should be familiar with the operations and problems of your department. You should also have enough knowledge of the rules guiding work conditions so that you can refer to them when necessary.

Evaluating complaints

The first thing to do when an employee comes to you with a complaint is to check if there has been a violation of work rules. If you're uncertain, call on a union representative to help you. If the worker has no case, tell him so.

Steward-supervisor level

If you decide the employee has a legitimate grievance, check his story, prepare your case, and—with the worker at your side—present the case to the supervisor—orally if possible. If you fail to get satisfaction, take the case up to the next rung in the grievance ladder.

In-plant appeals

Most public employee grievance procedures provide for grievance appeal within your institution. You may wish to call in a union representative at this point. In some instances the next step is with the department head, in others, appeals go directly to top management.

Outside jurisdictions

In some municipalities and states, an aggrieved employee has recourse to final adjudication outside his place of work. Any cases which have not been satisfactorily settled and where such recourse is available should be heard at these final courts or boards of last resort.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES • AFL-CIO

815 Mt. Vernon Place N.W., Washington 1, D. C.

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

HANDBOOK

FOR CLASSIFIED SERVICE EMPLOYES

Published by THE PERSONNEL OFFICE
of
THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

TO SERVE

A Note from the President of the University to You:

Around the world The University of Wisconsin is known as the University that serves. To build that reputation took a hundred years and the dedicated work of many thousand people. For what a University is, it is because of the people associated with it, their principles and ideas, their energy and performance.

You can feel the spirit of service in Wisconsin students and alumni; you can contribute to this spirit as a member of the staff. What any one of us adds to the progress and worth of the University can be only very little. But our combined strength can move this University quickly forward toward an even greater era of service in the future.

To every contact each of us has with others we can add the dimension of helpfulness. If we can manage this, the University will advance and all mankind will benefit.

Fred Harvey Harrington

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TO SERVE i

FOREWORD iv

DOING YOUR JOB 1
- Probationary Period 1
- Performance Report 1
- Work Hours 2
- Physical Examinations 2

COMPENSATION 2
- Payday 2
- Merit Increase 2
- Social Security 3
- Retirement 3
- Group Life Insurance 3
- Hospital and Surgical Insurance 4
- U. S. Savings Bonds 4

TIME OFF 4
- Vacation 4
- Sick Leave 4
- Holidays 5
- Leave Without Pay 5
- Military Leave 6
- Jury Duty 6
- Rest Periods 6

BENEFITS 6
- Unemployment Compensation 6
- Workmen's Compensation 7
- Credit Unions 7
- Merit Awards 7
- Training and Education 8
- Staff News 8
- Athletic Events 8
- Employe Housing 9
- The University Library 9

The Wisconsin Memorial Union 9
Service Clubs 10

CHANGES IN STATUS 10
Promotions 10
Transfers 11
Layoffs 11
Resignation and Reinstatement 11

TRAFFIC AND SAFETY 11
Traffic 11
Parking 12
Fire 12
Serious Injury or Illness 12
Civil Defense 13

GENERAL 13
I. D. Cards 13
Bulletin Boards 13
Making Personal Changes 13
Employe Unions 13
Labor Management Board 14

OUR DOOR IS ALWAYS OPEN 15

FOREWORD

The University Personnel Office extends a warm welcome to you as a new member of the Civil Service Staff. The importance of the part you play as a member of this staff cannot be stressed enough, for it is only through the cooperative efforts of everyone that the University has developed from its modest beginnings into one of the greatest educational institutions in the world.

To aid you in gaining a full understanding of your employment, the Personnel Office has prepared this booklet. It must be borne in mind that this booklet is in no way intended to replace the legislation which regulates Civil Service employment, but rather, to acquaint you, in a general way, with the factors involved so that you know what you can expect from State service, and what State service expects from you.

Any questions which remain unanswered after reading this booklet should be addressed to your departmental representative or the University Personnel Office which, as a service agency to you and your department, records and administers all aspects of your employment.

Once again we welcome you to the staff and wish you well in what we hope will be a long and pleasant association with The University of Wisconsin.

DOING YOUR JOB

All employes of the University have their individual jobs to do, but they are still members of one large group. They all work together to make the University a success in its greatest function—serving the State. The best way to remember this is to think of the boundaries of the University as being the boundaries of the State.

As an employe, you will be aiding the University in attaining this goal. Thus, you must think of yourself and your job as definitely contributing to the welfare of the people of Wisconsin.

The University has a great number of students, faculty, and visitors every year. Many of them will form an opinion of the University based on how well you treat them and on your own attitude toward the work you are doing. You will be serving the University's interests if you will always go out of your way to see that they are well treated while they are here.

Proper attitude and courtesy on your part also apply to your working relationships with other University employes. If you think of yourself as a member of a team, you will be able to see that it is very important for you to "play ball" with your teammates. Keeping a pleasant, loyal attitude toward your work and your associates will mean success for you and for The University of Wisconsin.

THE PROBATIONARY PERIOD

When you begin working at The University of Wisconsin, you serve a probationary period of six months to let your employer know that you can "fill the bill" on the job. It is also an opportunity for you to decide whether or not you want to stay on the job. After the probationary period is completed, you become a permanent employe and receive a probationary increase in your salary. Some employes, who have already served a probationary period, serve another after a promotion, transfer or re-entrance into state service.

PERFORMANCE REPORT

Wisconsin State Law requires that a written report be filed each year on your performance on the job. Your supervisor will evaluate your performance on the basis of standards which have been established for your position. He will then sit down with you and discuss your progress in your job. In this way you will always know what is expected of you, and what you can expect from your job.

WORK HOURS

Most university employes work a 5-day, 40-hour week. Some departments, however, must stay open from 17 to 24 hours each day and must adjust their schedules to fit their needs. Your department will let you know exactly what your working hours will be.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION

University employes are required to submit to a chest X ray, the certification of which must be forwarded to the Personnel Office. This certification must then be renewed every three years.

COMPENSATION

PAYDAY

You are paid once a month and most of the paychecks are issued on the eighth of the month. Hourly-paid skilled shops men and those who become employed in the middle of the month or later receive checks on the tenth of the month. An especially convenient service offered by the Payroll Office is that of mailing your check to your bank. The bank then deposits the check in your account and mails you a receipt. Contact your departmental secretary to sign up for this service.

Each time you receive your check, you also get an additional card that tells you how much you earned and how much was deducted from these total earnings. Some of these deductions, such as hospitalization insurance, payroll savings and life insurance, are deductions for particular fringe benefits that will be taken off only if you join the plan and give your approval. Your departmental secretary will be happy to explain these deductions.

MERIT INCREASE

In addition to getting a probationary increase, you can also earn a merit increase on July first, if you have continued to do a good job. These merit increases can be repeated each year until you reach the maximum of your salary range.

SOCIAL SECURITY

As an employe of The University of Wisconsin, you will be required to participate in the O.A.S.I. (Social Security) immediately upon your employment with the University. Deductions will be made from your paycheck each month in accordance with the percentage prescribed by the Federal Government.

RETIREMENT

Most of us who work at the University are automatically enrolled in the retirement system for State employes, upon serving a qualifying period.

The pension program is financed by equal contributions on the part of yourself and your employer. Each month a certain percentage of your salary is deducted from your pay and deposited in your retirement account. You may make additional contributions if you wish. If you transfer to another State department or if you take employment with a county or municipal department which participates in this system, your retirement program will continue without interruption.

A minimum death benefit will be paid to your beneficiaries if you should die while in active employment. Under certain conditions a survivorship annuity will be paid. In case of total and permanent disability you will become eligible for a disability annuity.

At the time you retire, you may choose among several types of retirement benefits. You may retire as early as 55 if you have enough credits; you may be retired at the discretion of your employing department when you become 65 unless you are given a year's extension, but it is not mandatory that the department do so. Should you wish any further information concerning your retirement, do not hesitate to take the matter up with your supervisor or the Personnel Office.

GROUP LIFE INSURANCE

Group Life Insurance is available to you through two sources. The University of Wisconsin Employes Incorporated offers you a plan on a voluntary basis, whereas the State Group Life Insurance is automatic unless you sign a waiver indicating you do not want the insurance. See your departmental secretary for detailed information on both plans without delay. For any further information, call the Payroll Office.

HOSPITAL AND SURGICAL INSURANCE

The University of Wisconsin offers group hospitalization plans for your benefit at a reasonable cost. To find out what types of plans are available and the necessary details on these plans, contact your departmental secretary or call the Payroll Office. Membership is voluntary.

U. S. SAVINGS BONDS

You are also eligible to participate in the University's Payroll Savings Bond plan. If you wish to have a certain amount of your salary put toward United States Savings Bonds each month (you may buy a whole bond or only a part of one each month), tell your departmental secretary. For additional information call the Payroll Office.

TIME OFF

VACATION

As an employe of The University of Wisconsin you are entitled to two weeks vacation per calendar year for the first five years of service, three weeks per calendar year after five years of service, and four weeks per calendar year after twenty years of service. The time at which you take your vacation is a matter to be decided between you and your supervisor.

SICK LEAVE

For every month of service that you complete, you earn one day of sick leave. Unlike vacation, earned sick leave days may be used during the probationary period. Sick leave is cumulative, and whatever is not used may be saved until you have saved sixty days. Sick leave accumulated in excess of sixty days is credited to your "reserve" account, to be used in case of serious illness, after your regular sick leave has been used up. There are some important things to remember, however, about sick leave: (1) you may use it only when you or a member of your immediate family is ill, and it is necessary that you care for this person until other arrangements can be made; or when a death occurs in the immediate family; and (2) when illness develops, be sure to call you supervisor, departmental secre-

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

Campus Map

LAKE MENDOTA
TO UNIVERSITY HOUSE AND EAGLE HEIGHTS APTS.
BUS SHELTER
MARSH LANE
UNIVERSITY BAY
WILLOW DRIVE
OBSERVATORY DRIVE TO FOREST PRODUCTS LABORATORY
WALNUT STREET
UNIVERSITY AVENUE
LINDEN DRIVE
BABCOCK DRIVE
HENRY MALL
ELM DRIVE
LANGDON STREET
STATE STREET
MENDOTA COURT
CONKLIN COURT
JOHNSON STREET
DAYTON STREET
SPRING STREET
FARWELL STREET
COLLEGE COURT
REGENT STREET
SUMMIT AVE
HOLT ST.
TERRACE
CHADBOURNE AVE
BASCOM
MONROE STREET
ILLINOIS CENTRAL
RANDALL AVENUE
ORCHARD STREET
BROOKS STREET
PARK STREET
N. MIDVALE
N. SEGOE
N. TEMPLE
N. BLACKHAWK
N. HIGH
N. LAKE
N. FRANKLIN
N. HENRY
N. LAKE
N. MARYLAND
N. MARTIN
N. MARTIN
N. MARTIN

References for the Campus Map

NO.	NAME	REFERENCE
1	Adams Hall	D- 6
2	Administration Building	F-11
3	Agricultural Bulletin Building	E- 6
4	Agricultural Engineering	F- 7
5	Agricultural Hall	E- 7
6	Agronomy Seed	E- 4
7	Animal Research Laboratories	F- 4
8	Armory (Old Men's Gym)	E-11
9	Athletic Practice Building	I- 7
10	Athletic Ticket Office	I- 6
11	Audio-Visual Instruction, Bureau of	G- 8
12	Babcock Hall	F- 6
13	Bacteriology	E- 6
14	Bardeen Medical Laboratories	F- 8
15	Barnard Hall	F-10
16	Bascom Hall	E- 9
17	Baseball Field	D- 2
18	Beef Barn	E- 4
19	Biochemistry	F- 7
20	Birge Hall	F- 9
21	Boathouse	D-11
22	Bradley Hospital	F- 8
23	Breese Terrace Dining Units	G- 6
24	Carillon Tower	E- 9
25	Chadbourne Hall	F-10
26	Chemistry	F- 9
27	Chemistry Research	G- 9
28	Children's Hospital	F- 7
29	Commerce	E- 9
30	Cooperative Dorms: Zoe Bayliss and Susan Davis	H-10
31	Co-op Store: Annex	G- 8
32	Co-op Store: Main	E-12
33	Crime Lab, State	G-10
34	Dairy Barn	F- 4
35	Dairy Cattle Research Center	F- 4
36	David Schreiner House	I- 8
37	Education	E-10
38	Elizabeth Waters Dorm	D- 8
39	Elm Drive Dorms	D- 4
40	Engineering	H- 7
41	Enzyme Institutes	G- 5
42	Extension Annex	G- 8
43	Extension Building	F-12
44	Farms Manager's Office	F- 5
45	Field House	J- 6
46	Forest Products Lab	F- 1
47	Genetics	F- 7
47A	Genetics (old) (now, Dairy Science)	F- 7
48	Genetics Research	E- 4
49	Greenhouses: New	E- 2
50	Greenhouses: Old	F- 6
51	Gymnasium: New	D- 3
52	Heating Plant: New	I- 9
53	Heating Station: Old	G- 8
54	Highway Lab, State	G- 7
55	Hiram Smith Hall	E- 6
56	Historical State Library, State	E-11
57	Holt Dorms	D- 5
58	Home Economics	E- 8
59	Home Management House	E- 7
60	Horse Barn	E- 5
61	Horticulture	F- 6
62	Hospital Records Office	G- 7
63	Housing Bureau and Personnel Office	F-11
64	Hygiene Lab, State	F- 7
65	Hydraulics Lab	D-10
66	Hydrobiology: Q-14	D-10
67	Hydrobiology Lab: New (Limnology)	D-10
68	Infirmary	F- 8
69	Information Booth (Union)	E-11
70	Intern-Resident Dorm	F- 7
71	Journalism	E-10
72	King Hall	E- 7
73	Kronshage Hall	D- 5
74	Lathrop Hall	G- 9
75	Law School	F-10
76	Library School	F-11
77	Malt and Barley Research Lab	F- 1
78	McArdle Memorial Lab	F- 8
79	Meat & Animal Science: Stock Pavilion	F- 5
80	Mechanical Engineering	G- 6
81	Medical Library: New	F- 8
82	Medical Sciences	F- 8
83	Memorial Library	E-11
84	Memorial Union	E-11
85	Minerals & Metals Engineering	G- 6
86	Moore Hall (Agronomy)	F- 6
87	Music Annex #1	F-11
88	Music Annex #2	F-11
89	Music Hall	F-10
90	Naval ROTC Armory	G- 5
91	North Hall	E-10
92	Nuclear Research Lab	F- 9
93	Nursing, School of	G- 7
94	Observatory	E- 7
95	Observatory Office Building: News & Publications Services, Social Work	E- 8
96	Parking for Visitors: Lot 20	F- 7
97	Parking for Visitors: Lot 60	C- 1
98	Parking for Visitors: Lot 88	F-11
99	Pharmacy	F- 9
100	Poultry Research	E- 4
101	Pre-School Laboratory	E- 7
102	Primate Laboratory	J- 8
103	Protection and Security	I- 9
104	Psycho-Educational Clinic	G-11
105	Psychology: New	G- 8
106	Psychology: Old, 600 N. Park	E-10
107	Purchasing Department	F-11
108	Radio Hall	E-10
109	Russell Laboratories	E- 6
110	Science Hall	E-10
111	Service Building	G- 8
112	Services Building (New): Photo Lab and Duplicating	I- 9
113	Service Garage	J- 10
114	Service Memorial Institutes	F- 8
115	Short Course Dorms	D- 6
116	Sigma Chi House (now UW property)	D-12
117	Slichter Hall	D- 6
118	Social Science	E- 9
119	Soils	E- 6
120	Solar Energy Research Lab	G- 7
121	South Hall	F-10
122	Southeast Dorms: A	H-11
123	Southeast Dorms: B	H-12
124	Speech and Hearing Rehabilitation Center	F- 6
125	Squire House	F-11
126	Stadium	I- 6
127	Statistics	G-12
128	Sterling Hall	F- 9
129	Stock Pavilion	F- 5
130	Stores	J- 9
131	Student Counseling Center	G-12
132	Student Employment	F-11
133	Studio: Artist in Residence	F- 5
134	Superior Students Laboratory	F-11
135	Swine Barn	E- 4
136	T-7: Sanitary Lab Annex	D-10
137	T-12-13: Classrooms	E- 8
138	T-16: ROTC Classroom	E- 6
139	T-21-22: Food Services Buildings	G- 6
140	T-23: Surveying & Mapping	G- 6
141	T-24: Engineering Annex	G- 6
142	T-25: Internal Combustion Lab	G- 6
143	T-27: Truck Laboratory	G- 7
144	Tripp Hall	D- 7
145	TV, WHA-, Studios	E-10
146	University Club	F-11
147	University Hospitals	F- 8
148	University Press	F-11
149	Van Hise Hall	D- 6
150	Van Vleck Hall	F- 9
151	Veterinary Science: New	E- 5
152	White House (Planning and Contruction)	F-11
153	Wildlife Management	F- 6
154	Wisconsin Alumni Research Foundation	F- 1
155	Wisconsin Center	E-12
156	Wisconsin Diagnostic Center	G- 5
157	Wisconsin Improvement Association	G- 9
158	YMCA: University Branch	G-10
159	Zoology Research	H- 9

tary, or emergency number specified by your department as soon as you find it necessary to stay home. If none of these people can be reached, call the Personnel Office and the message will get to your supervisor.

HOLIDAYS

Seven and one-half legal holidays are specified by the Statutes for each year. These are January 1, May 30, July 4, Labor Day, Thanksgiving, December 25, afternoon on Good Friday, and the afternoons of December 24 and 31. If January 1, May 30, July 4 or December 25 should happen to fall on a Sunday, the day following will be given as the holiday.

LEAVE WITHOUT PAY

Permanent employes may be granted a leave without pay not to exceed one year, except in case of illness or for educational purposes when it may be extended upon recommendation. If you desire a leave of absence, ask your supervisor for the proper form, fill it in, and return it to him. If the department head thinks your case worthy, he will forward it to the State Director of Personnel for approval. Leave without pay is granted for the following reasons: education purposes, where the University will benefit either directly or indirectly; working for a limited period in other employment where your experience would directly benefit your performance in the service of the University upon your return; maternity cases; and exceptional personal reasons not mentioned above. The department head may grant a leave of absence of not more than one month without the approval of the State Director of Personnel. If you fail to return when the leave of absence is over, you are automatically released from University service unless you can show that your failure to return was unavoidable.

MILITARY LEAVE

If you, as an employe of the University, should enlist or be called into the armed forces, you will receive a leave of absence covering the period of service. Also, if you should be called into civilian work of a special nature by the Federal Government or any of its agencies, you will be granted a leave of absence. Tenure, seniority, pay increases and other rights of employment at the University are not affected by this type of leave. Also, if you are on the state payroll at a time when you are ordered to an annual encampment or the equivalent, you are entitled to leave with pay, up to fifteen days in any calendar year, excluding Sundays and holidays.

JURY DUTY

If you should be called to serve on a jury, you are entitled to a leave of absence for the period you are engaged in such duty. State law provides that you shall suffer no deduction from nor interruption of pay because of such absence.

REST PERIODS

Rest periods are not provided for by law, but are extended as a privilege by most departments. Your supervisor will explain the policy of your department on "breaks." It is easy to see why everyone cannot be out on a "break" at the same time. Someone must be available to carry on the work. The supervisors will try to work out rest periods to the satisfaction of everyone. If rest periods cannot be taken just when they are wanted, it is because the supervisor, in considering the needs of the department, is unable to meet the request. Above all, don't abuse the privilege!!

BENEFITS

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

All University employes (except students, teachers and employes engaged in agricultural labor) are eligible for unemployment compensation. In case of a layoff, report immediately to the Wisconsin State Employment Office so that benefits may be claimed.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Whenever you are on the job, you are covered by the Workmen's Compensation Law. This law provides that you shall receive compensation for time lost and payment for medical expenses for accidents or illnesses caused by your work. In order that you can be taken care of in the best possible manner, it is necessary that you report to your supervisor, at once, all accidents occurring on the job. He will make sure that immediate medical attention is received and that the proper forms are prepared and submitted to the University Personnel Office. The Personnel Office will see that the claim for compensation is submitted to State Industrial Commission in the proper manner so that full consideration will be received. In case of injury, a qualified physician, dentist, osteopath or Christian Science practitioner of your choosing should be consulted. (Note: Under the present law the cost of treatment by a masseur or a chiropractor will not be paid by the State. However, as these provisions are subject to periodic legislative review, it may be wise to check on which practitioners' services are collectable.) Whenever a request for information about an injury is received, either from the University Personnel Office or the Industrial Commission, answer the question immediately so the case will be settled as quickly as possible.

CREDIT UNIONS

You may invest your money or borrow at a reasonable rate at your credit union. These credit unions are made up of your fellow employes and are run for the benefit of all. The two credit unions available to handle various types of employes are:

(1) Service Credit Union (for all Physical Plant and Hospital nonprofessional, nonclerical employes)

(2) Faculty Credit Union (for all faculty and classified employes not mentioned in (1) above)

Visit your credit union and find out more about this financial opportunity open to you.

MERIT AWARDS

You have an opportunity to win cash awards under the Merit Award Board System. The Board was created to reward and encourage meritorious and unusual suggestions and accomplishments which promote efficiency or economy. If you have an idea for such an improvement in techniques or procedures, see your supervisor and ask about the Merit Award System.

TRAINING AND EDUCATION

The University of Wisconsin provides training and educational opportunities for its employes. These opportunities are presented both in the University Extension Division correspondence and night courses, and in the training institutes sponsored and administered by the University Personnel Office. The Extension Division offers a wide variety of interesting subjects, many of which provide high school or college credits for satisfactory work. If you are interested in supplementing your education, this is an unusually fine source.

The Personnel Office provides training for clerical workers, supervisors, secretaries, administrative personnel, and others. These training courses are held from time to time and are circularized among the various University departments. An employe may participate during working time with the permission of his supervisor and department head.

STAFF NEWS

Staff News is a lively little publication filled with news, humor, announcements, information about the University and a variety of other features. It is distributed free to all employes of the University and is prepared at the Personnel Office. If you feel that you have an item which would be of interest, please submit it to the Personnel Office.

ATHLETIC EVENTS

If you're interested in football, basketball and other sports, you will want to take advantage of the athletic activity books for which you are eligible. These activity books entitle full-time, permanent employes working on the Madison campus to attend intercollegiate athletic events. The price is reasonable and married employes may purchase a book for their husband or wife. Applications for activity books may be picked up at the Athletic Ticket Office and returned in accordance with announcements released by that office. Watch your bulletin board for announcements concerning activity books, or call the Athletic Ticket Office.

EMPLOYE HOUSING

As an employe of The University of Wisconsin, you are entitled to use the facilities of the Housing Bureau to assist you in finding a place to live. You may come to the Housing Bureau at any time and the staff will aid you by discussing your needs and by showing you what the Bureau has available.

THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

The facilities of the Memorial Library are available to employes of The University of Wisconsin. When you want to borrow a book, go to the library and submit your employe identification card. The library will then issue a special library identification card to you.

THE WISCONSIN MEMORIAL UNION

The Memorial Union, located at the corner of Langdon and Park streets, is the "living room" and "dining room" of the campus—for students, faculty, alumni, and staff. All university employes are welcome to use the following facilities:

(1) Dining rooms including the Cafeteria, overlooking the lake; the Rathskeller (for snacks and lunches); Tripp Commons on the main floor (self-service buffet); and the Inn Wisconsin (waiter service). If you work on the west side of the campus, the Breese Terrace Cafeteria, corner of Breese Terrace and University Avenue, operated by the Memorial Union, serves breakfast, noon and evening meals, and snacks between meals.

(2) Lounges, checkrooms, barber shop, and meeting rooms (for employe organizations).

(3) Theater public admission programs—plays, concerts, lectures.

(4) "Movie Time"—movies in the Play Circle.

If at any time you are asked for identification, show your employe identification card. Although the dining rooms are reserved for your personal use, you are invited to bring family or guests to theater and Play Circle admission events.

There are many more Memorial Union facilities and programs which are supported by student, alumni, and staff membership fees and which are open to you and your family and guests if you are a member of the Memorial Union. These member privileges include:

(1) The use of game rooms, hotel rooms (discount on room rates), private dining rooms, library, galleries, music rooms, and many other facilities.
(2) Free admission to many concert, lecture, movie, and theater programs.
(3) Reduction in ticket price for "Movie Time."
(4) Preference in reserving seats for the paid admission events which are sponsored by the Union in its theater.
(5) Notification by mail of all Memorial Union programs.
(6) The privilege of entertaining family and guests at the building.

All employes are cordially invited to become members of the Memorial Union. The membership fee is the same as paid by students. We welcome a visit from you to the Memorial Union Membership Office to discuss your membership.

SERVICE CLUBS

There are two Service Clubs on the University campus which have been organized for service, good fellowship and fun. The University of Wisconsin Service Club is a group of men in mechanical, maintenance, building, and other service positions. Annual dues help pay for a number of "stags" and mixed parties that are held at regular intervals throughout the year.

The Women's Service Club is made up of women employed on the campus, and they too, along with their service, have their share of parties and entertainment throughout the year.

CHANGES IN STATUS

PROMOTIONS

All promotions are competitive, which means that other employes are also competing for better jobs. Promotional examinations are usually written examinations and in order to qualify to write the examination, it is necessary to apply on or before the announced deadline for such application. Watch for announcements on your departmental bulletin boards.

TRANSFERS

Once you become a permanent employe, you are eligible to transfer from one job to another in the same classification, provided that: (1) the transfer is agreed upon by the department to which you wish to transfer; (2) the transfer serves the best interests of the University; and (3) you are able and qualified to do the work in the department to which you wish to transfer. If you feel that you would like different work, call or visit the Personnel Office for information on other job opportunities at the University.

LAYOFFS

In the event of a shortage or stoppage of work or funds, the University might find it necessary to lay off a certain number of employes until such time as they can again be placed on the working force. Layoffs are made within the classification which is affected. The order of layoffs is as follows: (1) all short-term and seasonal employes; (2) all probationary employes; (3) permanent employes with less than five years of service; (4) permanent employes with over five years of service. All employes considered for a layoff shall be ranked according to their performance and the ranking shall be based upon recent and comparable standards of performance. Layoffs shall then be made within the group under consideration according to the relative performance rankings so that the most efficient employes will be retained.

RESIGNATION AND REINSTATEMENT

If you should find it necessary to resign your position at the University try to give your department at least two weeks notice. More important, to retain your future reinstatement rights, write a letter to your department head, indicating your intention to resign, at least fifteen days prior to such resignation.

TRAFFIC AND SAFETY

TRAFFIC

The University Police division of the Department of Protection and Security enforces motor vehicle laws and campus rules. Following are some rules to guide you when you drive on the campus.

(1) The campus speed limit is 15 miles-per-hour

(2) Observe all Wisconsin Motor Vehicle laws

(3) Persons driving on the campus assume full responsibility for accidents occuring on the campus. The University cannot be responsible for care or protection of any vehicle or its contents while on University property.
(4) Motor vehicles cannot be driven on campus by or for students when classes are in session.
(5) Report all accidents to University Police
(6) Park only in the area designated on your parking permit

PARKING

A number of parking areas have been established by the University to accommodate employes, faculty, and certain students. A priority system has been established to determine who shall be allowed to use the limited space available. These people then purchase permits. If you need a place to park, check with your departmental administrative office.

FIRE

In case of fire, follow this procedure:
(1) Sound the fire alarm to alert all persons in the building
(2) Notify the Madison Fire Department. Dial Operator and she will place the call for you. Be sure you give them the NAME of the BUILDING
(3) Help disabled or confused persons out of the building

SERIOUS INJURY OR ILLNESS

One of your fellow employes may receive a serious injury or become seriously ill on the job. We hope that it never occurs but we must be prepared so that we know how to act in such a situation. Above all, do not attempt to move the person unless you are certain that he will not be harmed by such action. If the ill or injured person cannot be moved or if there is no transportation available, call an ambulance from the Department of Protection and Security. If the injured person has a preference as to where he should be taken, see that he gets there. If he has no preference, take him to the Emergency Room of University Hospitals. Call ahead no matter where the person is being taken and explain the nature of the illness or injury so that he will receive care immediately upon arrival.

GENERAL

I. D. CARDS

Your staff identification card serves to identify you as an employe of the University. Its validity continues only during your employment at the University. Be sure you have signed your card as it is your key to such services as use of the Memorial Union and Memorial Library.

BULLETIN BOARDS

Each building has a number of bulletin boards which hold a great deal of useful and interesting information. Watch the bulletin boards and know what is going on.

MAKING PERSONAL CHANGES

If you get married, move from one address to another or have an increase in the family, your departmental secretary should be notified immediately. It is very important that your personal status is known at all times as tax statements or notices must be sent out from time to time.

EMPLOYE UNIONS

Union membership is optional in University employment. Employes of the University may, if they so desire, join The University of Wisconsin Employes' Local 171. Local 171 draws its membership from employes of the University and is an associated member local of the Wisconsin State Employes' Association.

LABOR MANAGEMENT BOARD

The University of Wisconsin has realistically met the challenge of employer-employe relations by establishing a Labor-Management Board. One of the first of its kind, this Board was set up in 1946 and has become increasingly active since that time. The major function of the Labor-Management Board is to consider and discuss employer-employe problems which arise, and to iron them out satisfactorily. Conclusions and subsequent resolutions are submitted to the Vice President. The Board does not, in itself, have authoritative or administrative powers; rather, it serves as an advisory board to the Vice President.

Ten members of the Board are elected as representatives of the employe staff. The other ten members are appointed by the Vice President. Board officers consist of the chairman and secretary. Much of the investigatory work of the Board is done by committees which then report to the Board at its regular meetings.

A résumé of the Board's activities is presented in each issue of Staff News. Read this carefully since most issues considered by the Board will affect you and your employment with the University.

If at any time you feel that you have a problem (or know of one) which should be considered by the University Labor-Management Board, contact the Director of Non-Academic Personnel immediately. It is important that you watch your bulletin board and Staff News carefully for notices concerning the election of your representatives. Perhaps you, yourself, would make an excellent Board member.

OUR DOOR IS ALWAYS OPEN

Throughout this booklet it has been emphasized that we are all working together to do a big and important job. We sincerely want you to be happy in your job. We realize that you can't be happy if your mind is not at ease. Therefore, the "open door" counseling policy has been adopted to give employes a chance to air grievances and discuss problems freely.

Supervisors are important employes on the University staff who are responsible for the satisfactory accomplishment of necessary work. You have been employed by the University to assist your supervisor in doing this work. When you have a problem, take it to your supervisor. He will discuss with you all matters relating to your job. His experience qualifies him to understand your difficulties better than anyone in the University. Your supervisor may not always know the answer, but you can be assured that he will do what he can to help you find it. If your problem is a grievance, you should first attempt to work out a solution with your supervisor.

If you find yourself in need of professional help in overcoming or adjusting to vocational, social or personal problems, feel free to contact the Director of Non-Academic Personnel. Though your supervisor can assist you in many ways and it is always worthwhile to discuss such problems with him, the University recognizes that there are certain types of problems which demand professional guidance. If the Director of Non-Academic Personnel cannot help you, he will arrange for you to see someone who can. He will always be happy to discuss such a problem with you and the discussion will be kept confidential.

Here Are Some of the Advantages of AFSCME Membership

- The only union which works 100% of the time for public employees
- Chartered by the AFL-CIO for public employees
- Recognized and respected by public officials
- The union that is run by and for public employees
- The only union with the "know-how" to do the job for you.

Contact:

It's all Spelled out In our International Constitution

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE
COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES
AFL-CIO

The Union
For Public Employees

WHERE WE'RE GOING

FROM THE INTERNATIONAL CONSTITUTION OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES, AFL-CIO, Page 4:

ARTICLE II

OBJECTIVES and METHODS

SECTION 1. The objectives of this organization shall be:

a. To promote the organization of workers generally and of public employees in particular.

b. To advance the social, economic and general welfare of public employees

c. To bring into closer relationship local organizations of public employees in order to foster cooperation.

d. To foster and promote a liberal and progressive public attitude toward public administration.

e. To cooperate in giving efficient government service.

f. To establish and maintain a clearinghouse of information and a consulting and research service for affiliates.

g. To extend and uphold the principle of merit and fitness in public employment.

h. To promote civil service legislation and career service in government, and assist in the recruitment into public jobs of trained and spirited young people interested in embarking upon public service as a career.

i. To promote and establish board and comprehensive disability and retirement plans for public employees which shall assure just standards of living.

j. To promote efficiency in public service generally.

HOW WE GET THERE

SECTION 2. The attainment of the objectives of this federation is to be accomplished through the employment of the following methods:

a. Cooperation with public officials.

b. Creation and fullest development of sentiment favorable to public service through a comprehensive educational program.

c. Promotion of required desirable legislation.

d. Conduct of an educational campaign designed to enlighten the general public with respect to the problems of government employees.

e. Exercise of other lawful means.

THESE PRINCIPLES, ENUNCIATED AT OUR FOUNDING CONVENTION ARE STILL HELD HIGH BEFORE US, EVEN THOUGH MANY OF THE OBJECTIVES STATED HAVE BEEN ACCOMPLISHED.

Who Are AFSCME'S Members?

American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees represents a combined total of 200,000

Maintenance Employees

Clerical Employees

Professional Employees

Institutional Employees

Administrators

Law Enforcement Officers

In Fact

IT REPRESENTS

EVERY MAN AND WOMAN

IN PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

AMERICAN FEDERATION STATE COUNTY AFL-CIO MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES

140 I.P.E.U.

American Federation of State,
County, and Municipal Employees
815 Mt. Vernon Place, N.W.
Washington 1, D.C.

A federation of public employees established to

F oster and promote a progressive public attitude toward public administration in order to

S ecure a more efficient government service and, by

C ooperation, to uphold the highest principles of merit and fitness in public employment. By so doing, to

M aintain trained and spirited persons who will be devoted to promoting

E fficiency in public service generally.

FOR EMPLOYEE, EMPLOYER
AND BETTER PUBLIC SERVICE

What and Why is AFSCME?

Chartered in 1936 by the American Federation of Labor, AFSCME has since become the international organization for 200,000 public employees.

Its members blanket the U.S., Canada and the Panama Canal Zone.

The membership is represented by 1,500 union locals whose objectives have won for them and the parent organization the respect of

- Governors
- Mayors
- City Managers
- City Councilmen
- County Commissioners
- Public Administrators

Negotiating and legislative activity are AFSCME's basic methods for achieving its goals.

The organization is dedicated to serving not only its own needs but to improving service to the communities for which its members work.

It accomplishes this feat primarily by improving standards, to attract and retain the best qualified personnel available.

Why Recognize Locals?

It all hinges on this . . .

HAPPY WORKERS ARE EFFICIENT . . .

AND EFFICIENCY

REDUCES . . .

THE TAXPAYERS' BURDEN

The right to organize is held to be inalienable and inviolable and public employees are as much entitled to this right as employees of private industry.

Public employees organize in order to achieve a happier life for themselves and thus indirectly for their communities.

By uniting in a spirit of kinship, with the support of thousands of their kind behind them, they can feel secure and confident and thus give more freely and more enthusiastically of their energy.

This spirit of kinship can thus be taken to be the moving force behind more efficient and less costly service to the government and to the taxpayer.

How Does the International Work?

The AFSCME is organized in such a way as to guarantee democratic membership control of its affairs.

Structurally, the organization is composed of

- The International Convention
- The International Executive Board
- The International Officers
- The State and Area Councils
- The Local Unions

THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION is AFSCME's supreme governing body. It meets biennially to elect the international officers and executive board and determines policy for the next two years.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD consists of the international president, secretary-treasurer, administrative vice-president and 12 vice-presidents, all elected at the convention. This body governs the union between conventions.

THE INTERNATIONAL OFFICERS are the president, secretary-treasurer and administrative vice-president. Together, they plan and pursue policies and receive and disburse AFSCME funds.

THE COUNCILS are groups of locals which combine in order to better serve the interests of their members. They coordinate the activities of local unions and render greater service.

THE LOCAL UNION is the basic organization in AFSCME. It is immediately responsible for carrying out the mandates of its members.

How Are AFSCME Members Kept Informed of the Union's Financial Records?

In addition to quarterly reports made to the locals, international headquarters submits an annual audited report to all locals.

This is a detailed study analyzing the organization's assets and liabilities. Among other things, the report contains an analysis of how federation income is spent.

Other aspects of the International secretary-treasurer's report indicate what percentages of member's dues are used for the various functions carried on by the International office.

All officers and representatives of the International, Councils and locals are bonded for an amount determined by the Executive Board.

Monthly reports are made to the International office and statements therefrom are made to the local members.

Local treasurers are further required to keep accurate records, subject to audit, of receipts and expenditures. These records are made public in monthly operating statements.

ASK QUESTIONS!

THE MORE YOU KNOW ABOUT AFSCME THE MORE CERTAIN YOU WILL BE THAT YOU WANT TO JOIN AND TAKE AN ACTIVE PART IN BUILDING YOUR UNION.

American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees—AFL-CIO

Washington, D. C.

JERRY WURF
INTERNATIONAL PRESIDENT

GORDON W. CHAPMAN
INTERNATIONAL SECRETARY-TREASURER

21

Concerned About Your Future?

for your own best interest here are Five Facts you should know about

American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO

FACTS about the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFL-CIO)

1. What is the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees?

We are a union with a quarter of a million members who work for states, counties and cities, and social agencies, in all parts of the United States, Puerto Rico and the Panama Canal Zone.

We are the 17th largest union in the AFL-CIO, and we are the fastest growing union anywhere in the country. We are the only union that works exclusively to promote the best interest of public employees. We are the only union with nearly 30 years of experience and know-how in successfully dealing with the problems and the goals of public employees.

2. What is the purpose of AFSCME?

We are dedicated to establish the rights of public employees everywhere to collective bargaining, and through collective bargaining to advance the economic, social and general welfare of public employees at all levels of government.

AFSCME has pioneered in achieving collective bargaining rights for public employees, and has proven beyond any question that where public employees organize majority unions and use the bargaining table to promote their interest they are able to make far greater progress in securing better wages, better hours, and better working conditions.

3. How are the aims and objectives of the AFSCME achieved?

Through the active participation of the members. Our union firmly believes that you as a member of AFSCME pay your dues for the privilege of participating in making decisions for your union and taking part in carrying out those decisions.

Our union believes that every member should be an organizer for his or her local union, and that they should aspire to be a shop steward, a member of a negotiating committee, or an officer of their union.

4. What services are provided by AFSCME?

As a member of AFSCME, you pay dues for the privilege of participating—but you get service, too. Your dues help to provide you and your fellow members with a trained professional staff to assist you in:

- Organizing to build a strong and effective union;
- Leadership training and education;
- Research material for the bargaining table;
- Legislation for bargaining rights and fair grievance procedures;
- Publications and public relations to keep you informed and to keep the public informed about you.

5. What will you gain by becoming a member of AFSCME?

You will add the strength of your voice and your determination to the 250,000 public employees who are already working together—as members of AFSCME—to build a better way of life for all of us who work for state, county, and municipal governments.

The gains you and your fellow public employees will make in the years to come are going to be measured by your determination to work together. Collective bargaining—not individual begging—is the only way public employees will ever attain better wages, better benefits, and better working conditions.

EV → Public Employee Unionism

THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN — WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY
INSTITUTE OF LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Public Employment: A Neglected Area of Research and Training in Labor Relations

by RUSSELL A. SMITH and DORIS B. McLAUGHLIN

38

Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations

All Americans have a vital stake in the shaping of sound public and private industrial relations policies and in the expansion of pertinent knowledge and skills. The Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations is a joint agency of The University of Michigan (Ann Arbor) and Wayne State University (Detroit). It was established in the spring of 1957 in order to maximize the contribution of each University, in activities related to industrial relations, to the people of Michigan and to the educational and research needs of workers and management.

The Institute has three major functions: first, to facilitate regular university instruction in the disciplines and professions related to industrial relations; second, to encourage basic and applied research on industrial relations topics; and third, to organize and promote programs of community education in industrial relations designed to serve labor, management and the public.

* * *

From time to time, the Institute will publish or reprint research reports and other papers of interest to persons with a professional concern in industrial relations research, practice or policy.

CHARLES M. REHMUS
Co-Director

The University of Michigan
Ann Arbor

RONALD W. HAUGHTON
Co-Director

Wayne State University
Detroit

The Institute is grateful to the Industrial and Labor Relations Review for permission to reprint the enclosed article from its Vol. 16, No. 1, October 1962 issue. Russell A. Smith is Professor of Law at The University of Michigan and was formerly Co-director of the Institute. Doris B. McLaughlin is the Administrative Associate with the Institute.

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT: A NEGLECTED AREA OF RESEARCH AND TRAINING IN LABOR RELATIONS

RUSSELL A. SMITH and DORIS B. McLAUGHLIN

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT: A NEGLECTED AREA OF RESEARCH AND TRAINING IN LABOR RELATIONS

RUSSELL A. SMITH and DORIS B. McLAUGHLIN

THE problems presented by the labor relations of public employment are unique, and they are of increasing importance, not only to those directly concerned, but to the general public. It is the thesis of this article that these problems present a proper area of research and training at the university level, concerning which the colleges and universities of the country have neglected their full responsibilities.

We use the term "public employment" in its usual sense, as referring to direct employment by a public agency—federal, state, or local. We suggest, however, that in addition there are types of quasi-public employment, such as by contractors building or operating publicly owned facilities (for example, the missile-site installations at Cape Canaveral and the Atomic Energy Commission's production facilities) which involve difficult problems not found in purely private employment. These problems, although different in many respects from those of direct public employment, are both unique and of special public concern, and could appropriately be encompassed by our thesis.

LABOR RELATIONS IN PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

Labor-management relations as a subject of academic study obviously has come of age. The existence of this Review, and of the Cornell School, attest to this fact. Throughout the land, colleges and universities have developed undergraduate and graduate courses, extension programs, and even degree programs in "industrial relations" or "labor and industrial relations" and related subjects. Interested private groups such as the American Management Association, trade unions, and individual employers have likewise given considerable attention to this area. These efforts, however, have been directed largely toward the private employment sector except for courses, research, and other programs having generalized application (in such fields as psychology, sociology, human relations, personnel administration, and job evaluation).

One reason for this lack of concern of labor relations specialists with public employment may be the fact that until recently the percent of the labor force engaged in such employment has been relatively small, and there has been an almost instinctive tendency to regard our economy as primarily one of private rather than public enterprise and employment. Another reason doubtless is the fact that also until recently the primary impact of aggressive trade unionism has been in the area of private employment, and there is no doubt that the growth of trade unionism has been a major factor contributing to the tremendously increased interest in and emphasis upon labor relations research and training in the last twenty-five years.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

In 1930, only about 6 percent of the civilian labor force was engaged in public employment.[1] In the decade of the 1930's, labor relations developments in the private sector began to move swiftly under the impact of a rapidly expanding trade union movement, stimulated by favorable labor legislation. The educator and researcher in "industrial relations," confronted with the dynamic pace of these events, perforce had to pay heed to these developments, and his interests naturally were directed toward those developments. Both lack of interest and lack of felt need caused him to dismiss, very largely, the problems of employee relations in the public sector.

NEW DEVELOPMENTS IN PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT

Some important underlying facts have changed. The percent of the civilian labor force in direct public employment has doubled since 1930. (It is interesting that most of this increase has been at the state and local levels.) Some nine million people are now so employed.[2] The probability is that this upward trend will continue. The unionization of public employees, earlier regarded with almost universal public disfavor and suspicion, has made substantial progress[3] and has achieved some degree of acceptability. Recently, the executive branch of the federal government, through the Goldberg "Task Force" Report[4] and the resulting Executive Order,[5] has given substantial impetus to unionization of federal employees, and this should have even broader repercussions. Collective bargaining in some form exists in numerous instances and at all levels of public employment, and a number of written collectively bargained agreements are in force, some of which even include union security provisions.[6]

Thus, a great deal has been happening in recent years in the "labor relations" of public employment, while the eyes of educators and researchers in labor and industrial relations have been largely focused elsewhere. In terms of understanding, synthesis, and general standards, the situation in this area has been termed "chaotic."[7] The Goldberg Task Force speaks of "the relative lack of experience in any form of employee-management negotiations on the part of most Government officials and employees."[8]

[1]Letter of April 10, 1962 received from Harold Goldstein, chief, Division of Manpower and Employment Statistics, Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor.

[2]As of October 1961. UPI release, quoting a U.S. Census Bureau report of April 26, 1962, appearing in the Ann Arbor News, April 27, 1962, p. 24. Of general interest on this topic is a paper on "Trends in Public Employment" given in New York City before the Industrial Relations Research Association on Dec. 29, 1961 by Daniel H. Kruger. Mr. Kruger points out, at p. 1, that in actual numbers total public employment almost tripled between 1929 and 1960.

[3]See Eli Rock, "Practical Labor Relations in the Public Service," 18 Public Personnel Review 71 (1957), at p. 74. Charles C. Killingsworth estimates that in 1957 roughly 18 percent of all government employees were unionized. Killingsworth, "Grievance Adjudication in Public Employment," 13 The American Arbitration Journal 3 (1958), at p. 7.

[4]"A Policy for Employee-Management Cooperation in the Federal Service," Report of the President's Task Force on Employee-Management Relations in the Federal Service, Nov. 30, 1961.

[5]Executive Order 10988, Jan. 17, 1962.

[6]Arnold S. Zander, "A Union View of Collective Bargaining in the Public Service," 22 Public Administration Review 5 (1962), at p. 8 notes that 88 contracts containing such clauses have been negotiated by the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL–CIO.

[7]Rock, op. cit., p. 71.

[8]Op. cit., p. 35.

Administrators in government display increasing recognition, concern, and uneasiness about the lack of adequate guideposts for action.[9] Prima facie, legal standards relating to unionization of public employees are obsolete, since they have not been changed substantially for years. Eli Rock, labor relations consultant to the Mayor of Philadelphia, has summarized the plight of the public administrator this way:

> Those [administrators] who are trained professionals have usually, of course, received their training and experience in public administration. Up to now, unfortunately, the field has included little or no reference to problems of collective bargaining. Although many administrators have achieved at least a minimum modus operandi with their unions, this very lack of experience together with the lack of available adequate guidance has often resulted in solutions which are, at best, only stop-gap in nature.[10]

There is still doubt and uncertainty concerning the role of trade unionism in the area of public employment, despite the premises and conclusions of the Goldberg Task Force Report and the generally increased acceptance of this kind of unionism as a fact of American life.[11]

This state of affairs, we suggest, presents the colleges and universities of the country with an important challenge. It is clear that, however adequate the general educational background of the public administrator or the leader of a trade union representing public employees, he has to face many problems for which he is less than fully prepared, except as the by-product of experience. If, indeed, there is "chaos," the situation may well become worse unless institutions of higher learning in the country lend their resources to the resolution of the problems which exist.

DIFFERENCES IN PRIVATE AND GOVERNMENTAL SECTORS

A summary review of some of the major differences between labor relations in the private and public sectors will serve to highlight the problem. In substantial measure, these distinctive features derive from the essential differences inherent in the raison d'être of private and governmental employment. The private enterprise is established to make a profit, is in competition, derives its funds from private sources, and its managers are answerable primarily to its owners. The public agency exists to provide services, ordinarily without profit as a motive, has little or no competition, is supported [9] In general, see Arvid Anderson, "Labor Relations in the Public Service," 12 Labor Law Journal 1069 (1961).

[10] Op. cit., pp. 71–72.

[11] Concerning the positive role unions can play in the public sector, see for example Robert L. Stutz, "Employee Organizations in the Public Service," Univ. of Connecticut Labor-Management Institute, mimeo, bulletin 6 (1960); and Zander op. cit. Note, too, Mayor Robert F. Wagner's "Executive Order on the Conduct of Labor Relations Between the City of New York and Its Employees" (Executive Order 49, March 31, 1958), which states: "Experience has indicated that labor disputes between the City and its employees will be minimized, and that effective operation of the City's affairs in the public interest will be safeguarded, by permitting employees to participate, to the extent allowed by law, through their freely chosen representatives in the determination of the terms and conditions of their employment" (p. 1).

A more limited role is assigned to unionism by others. See Herbert W. Cornell, "Collective Bargaining by Public Employee Groups," 107 University of Pennsylvania Law Review 43 (1958); Charles A. Meyer, "The Detroit Story," a paper presented before the Public Pesonnel Association in Denver, Oct. 5, 1961, at pp. 13–15; Foster B. Roser, "Collective Bargaining in Government: A Case Study and Evaluation," also presented before the Denver meeting of the Public Personnel Association, pp. 7–8; and the Task Force Report's comment on the role of unions at p. 15.

(unless it is quasi-proprietary) from public funds, and its administrators are answerable to the public. The sharply contrasting milieux in which employee relations problems arise must inevitably affect their resolution in many ways.

The criteria for determination of wages and working conditions and the limitations upon these determinations, as between private and public employment, obviously differ at least in instances. In private industry, decisions concerning these matters are based upon the financial position of the employer, business forecasts, the expectations of stockholders, wages and working conditions established by competitors, and employee demands and expectations. The area within which decisions are made is bounded by overriding economic realities. Within that area, however, the employer is free to make commitments to employees and their union representative.

In some kinds of public employment, certain of the wage-determining criteria are probably identical with those used in private employment. This is likely to be true of the quasi-proprietary agencies, and of facilities involved in manufacturing and service functions which require extensive use of "blue-collar" employees who must be drawn from the labor market. In addition, it is probably true that the determinations of salary levels under civil service systems take account of rates of pay prevailing for comparative skills in private industry. On the other hand, a significant and often decisive factor in the determination of wages and working conditions for many kinds of public employment, particularly at the state and local levels, is budgetary and involves, directly or indirectly, underlying tax policies and competition among agencies for shares of the tax yield. In describing collective bargaining between the United Federation of Teachers and New York City's Board of Education, Fred M. Hechinger of the New York Times has commented:

> In industrial disputes labor confronts a management that knows what its assets are. Teachers bargain with a board of education, which lacks fiscal independence in the form of taxing powers. It is a kind of shadow boxing. At best, they can expect a promise that the board will recommend a certain amount to the city authorities.
>
> ...Realistically, it might make more sense for teachers and school board to bargain on the same side of the table against those who control the budget.[12]

A related theoretical difference between private and public employment derives from the attitude of the employee vis-à-vis the employer. The private employee is conscious of the profit motive underlying his employer's activities, and of the fact that this affects the process of decision making concerning employee wages and other emoluments. The employee tends to think he is competing with the management and the owners of the enterprise in the division of its fruits. The public employee, on the other hand, enters this type of employment realizing that he serves the public interest, not a profit motive. As stated in a document issued by the Michigan Municipal League:

> The responsibilities of government employees are not identical with those of private business. The public employee in accepting public employment accepts an obligation which is distinctly different from that of the employee in private business.[13]

This sense of obligation makes him less "competitive" with those operating the agency than is the case with private employees. These attitudinal differences may be more hypothetical than real, however, and as is suggested later, this is one of the areas which deserves investigation.

[12]Sunday, April 15, 1962, E9, col. 2.

[13]Michigan Municipal League, "Public Employer-Employee Relations," adopted by the Board of Trustees, Oct. 14, 1961.

Government, with its system of checks and balances, often blurs lines of authority, with resulting confusion and overlap as compared with decision making in private employment. A recommendation or decision made by the supervisor is often subject to revision or veto by any one of a number of additional departments through which it must pass. Foster B. Roser, personnel director of the Philadelphia Civil Service Commission, describes the situation in Philadelphia as follows:

> ...consider the confusion of responsibility for action or determination in the conduct of negotiations in Philadelphia. Any other public jurisdiction will present an almost similar picture. Involved are the Mayor, Personnel Director, Managing Director, Finance Director, City Council–and its appropriations and finance committees, and the Civil Service Commission. Each City official and every City body mentioned has prerogatives which must be recognized and considered by everyone else in the act.[14]

Because of these complexities, "negotiations," where unions are recognized, can take as long as eight months out of each year![15]

LEGAL STANDARDS AND UNIONIZATION

Differences in legal standards relating to unionization and its consequences are likewise significant in the catalog of points of contrast between the labor relations of public and private employment, and constitute one of the major areas of concern and confusion. It was suggested above that, prima facie, the legal standards applicable to public employees are obsolete. At least this question needs to be examined. The Goldberg Task Force Report notes that the "one important statute dealing with the subject [of formal policy to guide "collective dealings" in federal employment], the Lloyd-Lafollete Act of 1912, is half a century old and essentially negative in content."[16] At the state and local levels the relevant "law," for the most part judge-made, rests on hoary doctrines of the common law, and likewise is essentially negative.

In private employment, it is our national policy to recognize the right of employees to organize, to bargain collectively through their union representative, and to take "economic" coercive action (normally by means of the strike and the picket line) in support of legitimate demands upon employers. We compel employers to bargain, and we encourage the use of the "collective bargaining agreement," and grievance and arbitration procedures thereunder—all supported by appropriate legal sanctions—as basic institutions of employer-employee relations.

In public employment, on the other hand, public policy as reflected in the applicable law ("common law," statutory or constitutional law) is almost startling-

[14]Roser, op. cit., p. 7.

[15]Rock, op. cit., p. 73.

[16]Op. cit., p. 4. As the report continues, the act (37 Stat. 55) "simply declares that membership in an organization of postal employees which is not affiliated with any outside organization imposing a duty to engage or assist in a strike against the Government is not grounds for reduction in rank or removal; and that the right to petition Congress may not be denied or interfered with. By extension, it has become the common law of Federal personnel practice that any government employee has the right to join or not to join any organization which does not assert the right to strike against or advocate the overthrow of the Government" (p. 4).

Also see Wilson R. Hart, Collective Bargaining in the Federal Civil Service, (New York: Harper & Bros., 1961), pp. 33–34.

ly different.[17] The "organization" of public employees, with the exception of those (such as police) having security functions, has generally been considered lawful. Under traditional doctrine, however, courts have usually upheld, as within the area of legislative and executive authority, prohibitions upon employee membership in a labor organization. There are a few statutes and ordinances which grant a "right of organization" in very general terms, and there is some evidence of a judicial liberalization of the common law, and even toward the view that the "right to organize" has a "First Amendment" constitutional basis.[18] But, even where the "organization" of public employees has been sanctioned or tolerated, the law, except as changed by statute, has usually been regarded as precluding the recognition of trade unions and collective bargaining in the sense in which these terms are generally understood. Moreover, resort to strike action or other forms of economic force by unions which have organized public employees is almost universally considered to be illegal, and this kind of limitation on unionism appears solidly entrenched. Thus, the Taft-Hartley Act specifically prohibits strikes of federal employees,[19] and the Goldberg Task Force Report reaffirms this as an appropriate policy.[20]

The rationales for existing legal limitations on the right of public employees to organize, or to bargain collectively, or to engage in strike or other forms of concerted "economic" action need not be reviewed here. It is sufficient for present purposes to state that they derive from such concepts as the "sovereignty" of government and the doctrine that legislative and executive responsibility may not be "delegated" or relinquished. The "policy" bases for these limitations have been more specific with respect to the use of the strike than with respect to union membership or collective bargaining. One "policy," expressed in a celebrated remark of Calvin Coolidge, stresses the possible danger to public health and safety through strike action.[21] Another, articulated by Franklin D. Roosevelt among others, takes the view that the obligation of continuous and unimpeded service to the public transcends self-interest.[22]

[17]For summaries of the older case law, and of opinions by State Attorneys-General, see Rhyne, Labor Unions and Municipal Law (Washington: National Institute of Municipal Officers, 1946), pp. 21–64, 133. See also Smith, Cases and Materials on Labor Law, 2d ed. (New York: The Bobbs-Merrill Co., 1953), chap. 8.

[18]For good reviews of legal developments, see the various reports of the American Bar Association Labor Relations Section's Committee on the Law of Government Employee Relations, appearing in the Section's 1959 and 1960 Proceedings, and the Report of the Section's Committee on State Labor Legislation, appearing in the Section's 1958 Proceedings. For some of the more recent reviews of this matter, see also Anderson, op. cit., Reynolds C. Seitz, "Rights of School Teachers to Engage in Labor Organizational Activities," 44 Marquette Law Review 36 (1960); and Brice W. Rhyne, "Legal Aspects of Municipal Employe Labor Relations," 26 Missouri Municipal Review 98, 114 (1961).

[19]Section 305, Labor Management Relations Act.

[20]Op. cit., 18 et passim.

[21]In connection with the 1919 Boston police strike, then Governor of Massachusetts Coolidge stated, "There is no right to strike against the public safety by anybody, anywhere, at any time" (quoted in Rhyne, op. cit., p. 107)

[22]In a letter of August 16, 1937 to President Steward of the National Federation of Federal Employees, President Roosevelt stated: "All government employees should realize that the process of collective bargaining, as usually understood, cannot be transplanted into the public service. It has its distinct and insurmountable limitations when applied to public personnel management. The very nature and purposes of government make it impossible for administrative officials to represent fully or to bind the employer in mutual discussions with government employee organizations. The employer is the whole people, who speak by means of laws

There has been some movement in the law, as previously noted, in the direction of "liberalization" of the traditional restrictions upon public employees regarding unionism. Some of the developments have been statutory.[23] More important, perhaps, is the fact that, despite the generally negative state of the law, public agencies have exhibited a noticeable tendency to accord de facto recognition of the right of public employees to join unions, and of the propriety of some form (or forms) of collective bargaining or "dealing" with unions representing such employees.[24]

The patterns of recognition and "collective dealing," however, show wide variation, and in general some marked differences as compared with recognition and collective bargaining in the private sector of the economy.[25] It has usually been the practice to limit the scope of "recognition" of the union as representative of only those employees who have joined that union; the principle of "majority" determination and "exclusive bargaining rights" has generally been considered inappropriate.[26] Some agencies have differentiated among various classes or categories of public employees in determining the extent to which to accord rights of unionization. The most typical expression of this is with respect to policemen and firemen, who are often either forbidden to join unions, or permitted to join only "unaffiliated" unions. As a general rule, the "union shop" and the checkoff have been unacceptable. Again speaking generally, even where some form of "collective dealing" has been carried on with unions representing public employees, public agencies have refused to enter into formal agreements with such unions. While grievance procedures have frequently been established, in which employees are accorded union representation, terminal arbitration by an outside "neutral' has usually been rejected.[27]

To most of these generalizations may be cited some exceptions. Of these, the policies of New York City and certain of its subordinate agencies, the cities of Philadelphia and Cincinnati, and, at the federal level, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Government Printing Office, and the Department of Interior are among the most noteworthy. (For the experience of these municipalities and agencies, see Appendix, page 41.)

In some important respects, the subject-matter area for "collective dealing" differs as between public and private employment. The former is necessarily more restricted in many instances by virtue of legislation which is pre-emptive. The existence of a civil service system, for example, means that wage levels, classification differentials, hiring procedures, discipline and discharge, and perhaps other matters are not within the area of negotiation, at least with the agency doing the employing. A "merit system" prescribed by statute or ordinance will preclude inclusion in a collective agreement of provisions concerning promotions, at least of the kind typical in private collective bargaining. Tenure legislation concerning teachers leaves enacted by their representatives in Congress. Accordingly, administrative officials and employees alike are governed and guided, and in many cases restricted, by laws which establish policies, procedures or rules in personnel matters." Samuel I. Rosenman (comp.), The Public Papers and Addresses of Franklin D. Roosevelt, 1937 volume (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1941), p. 325.

[23]Supra, n. 18.

[24]Ibid.

[25]Ibid.

[26]Ibid.

[27]See, in general, Killingsworth, op. cit.

little room for bargaining in that area. The existence of retirement and benefit plans, established by statute or ordinance, obviously removes these matters from collective bargaining. Yet there are in most instances some potential areas of negotiation. The Task Force Report makes these observations:

> ...The employer in most parts of the Federal Government cannot negotiate on pay, hours of work, or most fringe benefits. These are established by law.
>
> Generally, negotiations may take place on policies in such areas of employee concern as working conditions, promotion standards, grievance procedures, safety, transfers, demotions, reductions in force, and other matters, consistent with merit system principles....
>
> In this matter...each department and agency...should be left to determine its own practice. As a general rule, however, it may be said that a negotiable matter must be within administrative discretion, that is, it must be within the authority of the manager who is negotiating, and permissible by applicable laws, executive orders, and Administration and agency policy. In general, it will be in the area of working conditions and personnel policies and practices. It should not include matters concerning an agency's mission, its budget, its organization and assignment of personnel, or the technology of performing its work.[28]

A significant problem in the area of public employment, where unions have been accorded some degree of recognition, may derive from the attitudes, approaches, and modes of thought of union representatives who have had their major experience and training in traditional labor-management relations in the private sector. They must feel seriously frustrated upon encountering the problems of representation of public employees. Limited in what they can accomplish through collective bargaining and the grievance procedure, and deprived of the strike weapon, they look to other resources if their representation is to be effective. The obvious direction in which to turn is to "politics." Thus, it is commonplace for unions representing employees at all levels of government to resort to political pressures either in supplementation of or in substitution for collective bargaining, often with distinct success.[29] Whether this aspect of unionism in public employment is "good" or "bad" is debatable and should be one of the areas of investigation and research. In any case, so long as substantial limitations on the opportunities for "normal" industrial-type collective bargaining prevail—and this is likely to be the case indefinitely—it can be anticipated that unions representing public employees will continue, perhaps increasingly, to attempt political solutions. As Eli Rock points out, this tactic makes it comparatively easy, particularly at the state and local levels, for the union leader and [28] Op. cit., pp. 32–33.

[29] David L. Perlman, "Government Employes and Unions," The American Federationist, September 1961, p. 7, points out: "In the federal field, the legislative successes of the AFL-CIO Government Employes' Council and its affiliates are in a class by themselves. Two dramatic examples tell the story: It is almost impossible to get a majority of the House of Representatives to sign a discharge petition to pry a bill out of an unfriendly legislative committee or past a Rules Committee bottleneck. Impossible except for the postal unions which five times in recent years accomplished this feat.

During the eight years of the Eisenhower Administration, only two presidential vetoes were overriden. One of these was a postal pay raise bill."

In the second instance, the presidential veto was overriden despite President Eisenhower's strong words concerning the "intensive and unconcealed political pressures exerted flagrantly and in concert on members of Congress by a number of...employees, particularly their leadership." President Eisenhower, Message to the House vetoing the Federal Employees Pay Raise Bill, June 30, 1960 (quoted in Hart, op. cit., p. 26).

union members to "fall prey to the whole culture of easy pre-election promises or to the risk of retaliation which comes from too close involvement with what may eventually turn out to be the losing side."[30] He adds:

"Yet staying out of politics has its problems, not the least of which is that in an atmosphere of extreme politics, particularly at the local governmental level, the ward committeeman becomes, in effect, the shop steward of his appointees. Under such circumstances the union may encounter resistance and small interest in his organizing efforts."

TEACHING INDUSTRIAL AND LABOR RELATIONS

In the light of these characteristics which differentiate public and private employment—and others which might be cataloged—we pose the question whether the colleges and universities of the country have neglected their responsibilities of research and training in the area of the labor relations of public employment. We think the evidence is that they have.

In this connection, one of the relevant points of inquiry concerns the adequacy of research and training programs conducted by the public agencies, themselves, and unions representing public employees. A number of governmental agencies, particularly at the state and federal levels, offer in-service training programs in considerable variety,[31] and issue publications designed to keep their personnel informed.[32] Illustrative is the work of the United States Civil Service Commission which, through its office of Career Development, attempts to promote and coordinate the training of governmental employees of a number of federal departments and agencies.[33] Although specific training program topics have included "supervisory training," "employee evaluation," and "human relations," it was not until the spring of this year that this program included a course dealing exclusively with "employee-management relations."[34]

We believe, however, that these efforts urgently need supplementation at the college and university level. The research resources thus made available are needed to identify more closely the problems of public labor relations, and to assist in the development of policy in relation to [30] Op. cit., p. 73.

[31] See, for example, the State Employee Training Inventory compiled by the Training Division of the Michigan Civil Service Commission (1961), and the semiannual bulletin of the Office of Career Development of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, Interagency Training Programs.

[32] Most often these are intended to keep employees up to date concerning the particular personnel policies of the agency, changes in civil service commission rules and regulations, and adjustments in pay scales. Thus the Manual of Standard Personnel Practices for the City of Detroit, first issued by the City's Civil Service Commission in November 1947 has been revised four times since. Campus Pathways, the publication for non-academic employees served by the University Civil Service System of Illinois has, since 1954, devoted its fall issue to a handbook on civil service information.

Proceedings of employee training conferences are also published and distributed. Thus, for example, the Michigan Civil Service Commission often publishes the proceedings of its annual Personnel Officers Institute, and distributes the results of the discussions, which have taken place at its management institutes.

[33] See n. 31, supra.

[34] Spring 1962 issue, p. 30. The course description states that it "is designed to meet the needs of both personnel and general managers in the Federal government. The course will cover the basic principles of employee-management relations, with special emphasis on: background on American labor movement: the role of organized employee groups: the history of Federal labor practices: current Federal labor policies: individual employee and group consultation: negotiations and agreements."

these problems. The training resources available at the universities can make a valuable contribution to the understanding of the special problems of this area and to the development of suitable skills in meeting them. In both areas—research and training—we suggest that the responsibilities of the universities and colleges are fully as great as in the labor relations of private employment. Existing programs are inadequate.

A necessarily limited review of the announced offerings of colleges and universities reveals a decided dearth of courses dealing exclusively with the problems of labor relations in public employment. Even the Cornell School's program, which is certainly one of the most extensive and specialized in the nation, fails to disclose any such course. We recognize, of course, that some specific aspects of the subject are treated in courses bearing general titles in areas such as political science and labor law, and by Institutes of Public Administration in their courses on public personnel administration. We also realize that course content varies from time to time in ways not revealed in published announcements, and in some instances may focus on problems of public employment. For example, we are aware that a course in the Economics Department at George Washington University, entitled simply "Collective Bargaining," which was offered during the spring semester, 1961–1962, was concerned primarily with "Education for Employee-Management Cooperation in the Federal Service."[35]

It may be contended, of course, that most college students do not anticipate careers in the public service, and that they therefore require no detailed exposure to the problems of public employ-

[35]A memorandum prepared by Professor Thomas W. Holland describing the course, includes the following comments:

"Economics 244 is a course in collective bargaining and over the years I have altered the content each semester in order to keep up with the times. This semester it seemed fitting and proper to focus the course on the new developments in governmental labor relations that will result from the application of the Executive Order of January 17, 1962. This is one of the biggest developments in labor relations in the United States in the past few years and is worthy of study for that reason. And another reason for interest here in Washington is that so many of our students work in the Government or will find jobs there when they leave school. A number of the students in Economics 244 are already involved in the work preparatory to putting the Executive Order into effect and others will be involved later. There is no question about the subject we are concentrating on being alive and timely specialization within the field of labor-management relations.

"Having indicated what our course will focus on, I want to hasten to add that this does not mean that we will not be concerned with the wider field. It would be most unrealistic to study only labor relations as developed and applied in the Federal Service or the other areas of public service. It is true that in several respects governmental labor relations differ substantially from what prevails in industry. But there are numerous features of the governmental systems that tie in with the larger stream. And even where there are distinctive features the student should be able to make comparisons with the larger frame of reference. I venture the prediction that anyone who doesn't have a good comprehension of the general field of American labor relations will soon get lost in trying to understand the new Executive Order and coping with the complexities that will have to be solved in the process of applying it. So, I emphasize that Economics 244 this semester is not as specialized as it might seem at first glance. In studying the new developments we will need always to keep our eye on the history and development of American labor unions, collective bargaining practices in industry and the existing system of public controls."

The memorandum further indicates that Part III of the course was devoted to: "Employee-Management cooperation in the federal service....Problems involved in launching the system established by the Executive Order of January 17, 1962. I. Interpretation of basic documents. II. Employee units and representatives. III. The process and content of consultation and negotiation. IV. The administration of agreements."

ment. We suggest that, even granting the factual premise, this represents too limited a view of the function of higher education. Ought not the student who looks forward to any kind of business or professional career, or even to the career of housewife, be sophisticated to some degree in the increasing problems of government, including those relating to the employment of people? Moreover, we suspect that an increasing number of students, especially at the graduate level, do plan to enter public service, and we would argue that for such students there should be available, and perhaps required, some organized study of the special problems of public employment. This view has the support of the Task Force recommendation that the federal government "encourage the study of the subject [employee-management relations] at colleges and universities preparing students for careers in the public service.[36]

It may well be, however, that the most important contribution which can be made by colleges and universities, in terms of actual training programs, is at the postgraduate or "extension" levels. While existing models of such programs, conducted in cooperation with or for private employer and union groups, may not be entirely suitable, the justification for such programs extends at least equally to programs concerned with public employment. There has already been some experimental work in this direction. Much more, we suggest, is desirable.

Whatever the practical or other limitations pertaining to college and university curricular or other training programs in the problems of public employment, there can be no doubt that the universities can and should make an important research contribution in this area. It takes little imagination to suggest some of the more important potential subjects of needed investigation. Certainly they would include the following:

1. The validity of the hypothesis, commonly assumed to be accurate, that there are significant attitudinal differences between public and private employees; the identification and analysis of any such differences; whether such differences, if they exist, relate to the "personnel policies" of the agency; how such differences, if they exist, affect the interest of the employees in "organizing."

2. A survey of public administrators who are charged with personnel management responsibilities to determine, among other things, to what extent they differ from private employment managers in their view of their relationship to subordinates, how they proceed to determine policies concerning wages and other conditions of employment, their views concerning areas in which they need the assistance of outside research and training programs, and their views concerning the appropriate role of unions in the representation of public employees.

3. A thorough examination and critique of the results of unionization of public employees, including of course, collective bargaining or "dealing," where it exists, "political" activities, impacts on morale in the agency, comparisons of working standards achieved through collective bargaining with those prevailing in comparable agencies which do not recognize or deal with unions—all toward the ultimate objective of attempting a critical appraisal of the role of unionism in public employment. In this connection, a problem of special interest and importance is the examination of the potentiality of the use of final and binding arbitration by "outside" neutrals to resolve some kinds of disputes.

4. A critical reappraisal of "the law" relating to the unionization of public employees; changes which have occurred by statute and otherwise; the validity of those rules which are more restrictive than those standards established generally for private employment; whether, at least for some categories of public employment (e.g., in quasi-proprietary functions) the rules of law should be equated with those prevailing for private employment.

[36] Op cit., p. 54.

5. In connection with, and contributing to the evaluation of all of the research in all the subject areas listed above, and any others which might be added, a comparative study of the policies and practices of other countries in their differentiation of private and public employment, including their policies concerning unionization.

These suggestions, and our discussion generally, have been directed toward what we have termed "direct employment by a public agency." At the outset, however, we referred also to "types of quasi-public employment," such as by contractors building or operating publicly owned facilities, which, by virtue of their importance and their unique characteristics could appropriately be included in the area of research and training undertaken at the university level. Inclusion of these categories of employment would undoubtedly mean a substantial addition to the list of research areas suggested above, and to the kinds of training programs which are needed.

In conclusion, we express the hope that the specialists in "labor and industrial relations" in the colleges and universities of the country (ideally, in collaboration with the specialists in "public administration") and particularly the various industrial relations schools, "institutes," or "centers" will expand their interest and activity in types of employment—public and quasi-public—which are clearly important to those directly concerned, as well as to the public at large, and are destined, we think, to become more so.

Appendix

New York City

Since 1954, the New York City Transit Authority has entered into written agreements according exclusive representation to unions representing a majority of employees.

"In June 1954, the Transit Authority, after consultation with the various labor organizations representing its employees, decided upon a wage scale and other conditions for its hourly paid employees and agreed to permit those labor organizations which were chosen for such purpose in a secret-ballot election by a majority of the employees in certain designated groupings to act as the exclusive representative of the employees in the presentation of grievances under a specified procedure. These and other related terms were incorporated by the Transit Authority into a document." (Report of the Committee on State Labor Legislation, Proc. Sec. of Lab. Relations Law (A.B.A.) 148 (1958)). The right of the Transit Authority to enter into such written agreement was upheld in Civil Service Forum v. New York City Transit Authority, 4 App. Div. 2d 117 (1957).

In 1954, Mayor Robert F. Wagner issued an interim order (pending formulation of long-term policy by the city's Department of Labor) guaranteeing persons working directly for the city itself the right to organize, and asking that a systematic grievance procedure be established by each department head. During the interim period, dues' checkoff privileges were instituted, and principles were laid down governing meetings with union representatives on city time. In March 1958, Executive Order 49 was promulgated, in accordance with the recommendations made by the Commissioner of Labor's report of June 1957. This order permits the city's employees to organize and bargain collectively, provides for exclusive recognition of the majority representative in appropriate units, and calls for the Commissioner of Labor to determine such units, ordinarily following an election. Such certification is to be in effect for a period of one year without challenge.

A full description of the history and operation of this order will be found in the Report of the Committee on State Labor Legislation, Proc.

Sec. of Lab. Relations Law (ABA), 153 et seq (1958), and the 1959 and 1960 Reports of the Committee on Law of Government Employee Relations, Proc. Sec. of Lab Relations Law (ABA), p. 87 et seq (1959) and p. 200 et seq (1960).

In November 1960, the New York City Board of Education granted its employees "the right of self-organization and of consultation and negotiation through their duly chosen representatives, with provision for exclusive recognition of the majority choice" (Committee on Law of Government Employee Relations, Proc. Sec. of Lab. Relations Law (ABA), 1961 mimeo, p. 3). In January 1961, the New York City Board of Higher Education announced a similar policy concerning its employees. The United Federation of Teachers, a local of the American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO, became the exclusive bargaining agent for the city's primary and secondary school teachers in December 1961.

Philadelphia

The City of Philadelphia and American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees have had some form of collective bargaining since 1939, when the city negotiated an agreement with that union covering employees in the Department of Public Works. By 1958 this relationship had been extended to a point where an agreement was signed between the city and Council 33 of the AFSCME designating that union as the exclusive bargaining agent for all non-uniformed city employees. In 1961 the city and union entered into a modified union shop agreement. "This latest agreement establishes three categories of city employees—12,000 who must join the union as a condition of employment (10,500 of these were already members of the union at the time the agreement became effective), 4,800 for whom membership is voluntary, and 1,200 for whom union membership is prohibited" (Zander, op. cit. p. 10). In general, see Report of the Committee on Law of Government Employee Relations, Proc. Sec. of Lab. Relations Law (ABA), p. 90 et seq. (1959). The 1958 Agreement between the city and the union is reprinted in Cornell, op. cit., p. 58 et seq.

Cincinnati

In 1960, following a number of years of limited collective bargaining, the Cincinnati City Council passed a resolution stating that it was their policy to " 'bargain collectively with city employees, their unions, or other authorized representatives, on all matters pertaining to wages and working conditions before any final determination is made by City Council.' The declared policy is made applicable to representatives which can establish that they represent a majority of employees 'in a classification or other bargaining unit as determined by the City Manager.'

"The resolution further authorizes the City Manager and the various independent boards and commissions to enter into 'written memoranda of understanding' for fixed periods of time upon the request of any labor organization representing a majority in an appropriate unit, provided that such memoranda expressly exclude from the unit (1) employees represented by other recognized organizations, (2) probationary employees, (3) those in the Department of Personnel and confidential secretaries to department and division heads, and (4) employees above 'the first level' of supervision, or 'any employee whose responsibilities include regularly assisting in the formulation of policies in the field of employee relations.'

"In the event of an impasse in bargaining on wages and working conditions, provision is made for the establishment of a board of review, by designation of both sides, to hear the positions of the parties and guide the negotiations 'to a satisfactory conclusion. . . .'

"The City of Cincinnati has recognized and dealt with organizations representing, respectively, police, firemen, various craft groups, and the remaining categories of employees. Of these, District Council 51 of American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, representing the vast city-wide majority of employees in the non-uniformed and non-craft categories, sought to negotiate for a written agreement under the policy enunciated in the Council resolution and the statement of the City Manager. Such an agreement, signed by representatives for both sides, was entered into between the City and the union for a period from April 13, 1960, to December 31, 1960, and thereafter from year to year unless 60 days' notice of termination is given." Report of the Committee on Law of Government Employee Relations, Proc. Sec. of Lab. Relations Law (ABA), pp. 199–200 (1960).

Also see Report of the Committee on Law of Government Employee Relations, Proc. Sec. of Lab. Relations Law (ABA), p. 89 et seq. (1959), and Zander, op. cit.

The Tennessee Valley Authority

The Tennessee Valley Authority was an early advocate of collective bargaining in the public service. In 1935, the Authority issued an Employee Relationship Policy, giving its employees the right to organize and to designate their representatives for collective bargaining purposes. The majority rule and appropriate unit principles were also enunciated. By 1940, the first written contract had been negotiated, between the Tennessee Valley Trades and Labor Council, composed of about a dozen craft unions, and the T.V.A. The grievance procedure provision provides, as a terminal step, for referral to an impartial referee. (Hart, op. cit., notes at p. 105 that "in the first thirteen years of operation under these collective agreements, only two grievances were taken to arbitration.")

"With the exception of union security (i.e., the union shop), which the Council has repeatedly demanded and which TVA has maintained with equal persistence that it is prohibited by law from granting, the subject matter of collective bargaining in TVA is even broader than that which normally prevails in private industry.

'The areas in which labor now shares responsibility with TVA management cover much ground which is customarily thought of as "management's prerogative," in addition to the ground which has traditionally come to be accepted as within the sphere of union responsibility. The latter include the determination of wages, the settlement of jurisdictional questions, and the handling of grievances. The former, in which TVA is in more of a pioneering position, includes job training, job classification, and the joint cooperative program to promote efficiency, morale, health, and safety.' " (Hart, op. cit., pp. 102–103, citing Harry L. Case, Personnel Policy in a Public Agency—The TVA Experience (New York: Harper & Bros., 1955), p. 49.)

Once a contract is approved, it is fully binding. "The directors of TVA, who constitute its governing body subordinate only to the President of the United States, do not reserve the right unilaterally to modify, cancel, or supersede any provisions of an approved agreement. Presumably only an act of Congress or an executive order of the President could have that effect. In this respect the TVA contracts have more binding effect than those authorized by the Secretary of the Interior which are binding upon all subordinate officials of the department, but not upon the Secretary himself. Whether the TVA contracts constitute an illegal delegation of legislative authority is a question which has never been submitted for judicial decision. In view of the years of mutually satisfactory operation under these contracts, moreover, that question can probably now be regarded, for all practical purposes, as moot." (Hart, op. cit., pp. 103–104.)

The Government Printing Office

"The Government Printing Office is exceptional in that it has from its inception as a government agency, pursued a non-conventional approach to employee-management relations. The Printing Office was originally established as a private enterprise and later purchased, as a going concern, by the federal government. At the time of the take-over it was being operated as a closed shop. Every employee had to belong to one of the printers' unions. When a vacancy occurred the employer called the appropriate union to obtain a replacement. The printers' unions are among the oldest, strongest, and most tightly controlled in the country. In most sections of the country the printing industry for years has operated with both closed shops and closed unions. Some printers' unions have been so tightly closed that only legitimate sons of union members were eligible to become members. Faced with this situation, the Public Printer honored the agreements which the unions had with the former owners. Incredible as it may appear today, the Government Printing Office operated for more than forty years—from 1861 to 1903—under a strict closed-shop agreement.

"In a closed shop the employer is compelled to fire any employee who is expelled by his union. When one employee of the Printing Office was removed for that reason he appealed to the Civil Service Commission. The case ultimately reached President Theodore Roosevelt, who abruptly put an end to the closed shop in the Government Printing Office. Notwithstanding this setback to the unions, the Printing Office remained unionized. In 1924 the Congress enacted the Kiess Act, a law strongly backed by the unions, which provided for a unique but very genuine form of collective bargaining between the Public Printer and the unions representing the employees of the Government Printing Office.

> " '. . . the rates of wages, including compensation for night and overtime work . . . shall be determined by a conference between the Public Printer and a committee selected by the trades affected, and the rates and compensation so agreed upon shall become effective upon approval by the Joint Committee on Printing; if the Public Printer and the committee representing any trade fail to agree as to wages, salaries, and compensation either party is hereby granted the right of appeal to the Joint Committee on Printing, and the decision of said committee shall be final. . . ' [44 USC §40 (1952)].

"Thus eleven years before the Wagner Act Congress decreed that, at least for one important federal agency, collective bargaining was proper and in no way contrary to public policy. In fact, it provided that disputes between the responsible administrator and the unions concerned would be settled by arbitration, with a Joint Committee of the Congress acting as the arbitrator!" (Hart, op. cit., pp. 85–87.)

The Department of the Interior

"There are now twenty-four collective bargaining agreements in the Department, covering workers from the Southwestern states to Alaska. Thirty-five hundred of its employees, exempted from the Classification Act of 1949 as members of 'recognized trades or crafts' or because they are employees of The Alaska Railroad (a bureau of this Department) and known as 'ungraded' employees, are covered by these agreements.

"Six bureaus in the Department are parties to collective agreements. Some of the agreements are with individual craft unions while others are with councils of unions. The same railway brotherhoods which represent employees on privately-owned railroads are signatory to similar agreements with The Alaska Railroad. The American Federation of Government Employees represents certain groups of employees on The Railroad. At the Bonneville Power Administration the AFGE and the Amalgamated Lithographers of America each represent separate groups of reproduction plant workers. The Bureau of Mines has entered into three industrial-type agreements at its helium activity with the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers covering all workers in four plants. Both the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Southwestern Power Administration, as well as several Regions and Projects in the Bureau of Reclamation, have agreements with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Four agreements in the Department have been signed by councils of craft unions—groups formed especially to deal with the Federal Government and representing all craft workers at a project. In all, twenty-three international unions are signatories to agreements with Interior" (Newell B. Terry, "Collective Bargaining in the U.S. Department of the Interior," 22 Public Administration Review 19 (1962), p. 19.)

PUBLICATIONS*

REPRINT SERIES

(Unless otherwise noted, reprints are available on a complimentary basis for single issues. There is a charge for quantity orders.)

31. Collective Bargaining—The New Trend; Richard P. McLaughlin (1964)
32. A Profile of Detroit and Michigan Economy; E. J. Forsythe. (1965)
33. The Mediation of Industrial Conflict: A Note on the Literature; Charles M. Rehmus. (1965)
34. Arbitration and the Courts; by Russell A. Smith and Dallas L. Jones. (1965)
35. Reappraisal of the Role of the States in Shaping Labor Relations Law; Russell A. Smith and R. Theodore Clark. (1965)
36. Multiemployer Bargaining; by Charles M. Rehmus. (1965)
37. Some Conceptual and Methodological Considerations in the Study of Job Dislocation; by Louis A. Ferman. (1965)

CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS

Critical Issues Affecting Labor-Management Relations. Discussions of: Public Measures to Increase Jobs and Protect Income; Impact of Job Security on Collective Bargaining; Collective Bargaining Approaches to Job Security; Work Rules and Practices; Collective Bargaining—New Approaches to the Problem of Achieving Agreement. (1962) ($1.00)

The Labor Market and Social Security. Proceedings of the Fourth Annual Social Security Conference. Available through The W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, 709 South Westnedge Avenue, Kalamazoo, Michigan. (1962) (No charge)

The Worker in the New Industrial Environment. Report of a seminar jointly sponsored by the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations and the Foundation for Research on Human Behavior. Available from the Foundation for Research on Human Behavior, 1141 East Catherine Street, Ann Arbor, Michigan. (1962) ($3.00)

RESEARCH REPORTS

Proving Your Arbitration Case; Boaz Siegel. A pamphlet on the application of rules of evidence to labor arbitration cases—available through Bureau of National Affairs, Washington, D.C. (1961) (Single copies, $1.00)

Essays on Industrial Relations Research—Problems and Prospects. A series of lectures designed to stimulate research in industrial relations. Authors include: Robert L. Aronson, Albert Rees, Joel Seidman, George Seltzer, Gerald G. Somers, and William F. Whyte. (1961) ($1.50)

Collective Bargaining in the Steel Industry: Pattern Setter or Pattern Follower? Harold M. Levinson. An evaluation of the role which has been played by collective bargaining in the steel industry in the development of the wage-fringe trends of the postwar period. (1962) ($1.00)

Death of a Newspaper: The Story of the DETROIT TIMES—A Study of Job Dislocation Among Newspaper Workers in a Depressed Labor Market; Louis A. Ferman. Available through The W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, 709 South Westnedge Avenue, Kalamazoo, Michigan. (1963) (No charge)

The Impact of Technological Change; William Haber, Louis A. Ferman, James R. Hudson. This report is designed to review what has been learned from the earlier studies of technological change and it aims to summarize and appraise the findings of specific research inquiries which have been made into the adjustment to technological change during the past 30 years. It is hoped it will provide some guide in dealing with the problems of adjustment to current technological change. Available through The W. E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research, 709 South Westnedge Avenue, Kalamazoo, Michigan. (1963) (No charge)

WRITE TO: Publications Office
Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations
Museums Annex
Ann Arbor, Michigan 48104

*A list of past publications still available can be had upon request.

TINGS.

OW TO REACH
E UNION MEMBER

HROUGH OMMITTEEMEN.

N THE JOB.

T THEIR HOMES.

How to Reach the Union Member

These suggestions on how to do a better job of reaching the individual union member and building increased participation in local union activities come from many sources. Original work was done by the Southern School for Workers and the Education Department of the United Rubber Workers Union. The pamphlet was published in the October and November, 1958 issues of EDUCATION NEWS AND VIEWS.

One of the toughest problems facing union leadership today is how to reach all the members to explain the message and program of the union, to arouse loyalty to the union and build participation in its activities.

You can try to reach the rank and file membership of your local union in four ways: at the monthly meeting of the local; through the stewards or committeemen; on the job at the plant and in their homes and communities.

Take a look at each of these four methods. See their advantages and disadvantages and think how they can be used effectively in your union.

Many local unions, of course, are already using some of the techniques described in this article. All of them are drawn from actual experiences. Resourceful union leaders will use these suggestions, adapt them to their local situations and probably come up with new—unique and effective—methods of helping the millions of local union members participate more effectively in making the decisions of the labor movement.

1 Local Union Meetings

Good, interesting, well-run local union meetings are important in keeping the membership interested in attending, and in getting more members to attend and participate.

The monthly meeting of your local union gives you a first-rate opportunity to discuss union problems and programs regularly, face to face, with the members who attend. The great disadvantage of this method is that only a handful of members attend the average meeting.

Think about your own union and all of its members from the card-carriers to the most active officers. How can you get more people to come to meetings? How can the union meeting build loyalty to the union and an understanding of the union's program for those who do attend?

Why Do People Stay Away From Meetings?

Are your meetings long and dull, often taken up with individual grievances? Is the business of the meeting poorly organized and haphazardly conducted, with no control by the chairman? Is the meeting monopolized by the Chairman and one or two officers, with little or no participation by the membership? How about your meeting night; does it conflict with other important area—community activities such as the PTA, important church functions and popular bowling leagues. How many of your members want to be sure to see the Wednesday night fights on TV?

Plan Your Meeting Carefully

Plan your meeting for speed and drama. Some or all of the suggestions that follow will help you keep the business of the meeting moving. This doesn't mean you have to use steam-roller tactics to get through the union business. Don't get bogged down in details that should be handled personally or by union committees. More members will come to union meetings, if they can expect to get information, interested discussions, and, when possible, excitement, from the meetings.

For example, if your union has just won a pension plan, have a discussion of the new plan, how it works, what the benefits are, the effect of lay-offs on benefits, members' responsibilities, etc.

Don't dodge controversy. If there's an issue that affects the union, it belongs on the union agenda. When handled properly, discussion of controversial issues can build the union.

Play down the role of chairman, letting others from the floor carry the ball. The officers should be familiar with standard rules for conducting meetings. Several unions have published easy-to-use pamphlets that will help you.

The agenda (a list of everything to be done at a meeting) should be worked out in detail before each meeting.

Write down each item of business and the name of the person who will introduce it. Include the routine matters (reading of minutes, etc.) so that you don't forget any of it. Who will read communications and where should they be referred? Who is scheduled to make reports (which committees, which delegates to conventions or other meetings)? What is coming up under old and new business? Check ahead of time with officers and committee chairmen to find out if they have items to be included on the agenda.

Talk (or send a postcard) to all persons listed on your agenda, asking them to be prepared and to be brief.

Avoid long discussions of small details. Refer details to committees or individuals. Do not discuss individual grievances on the floor.

Look over the correspondence before the meeting. Weed out unnecessary letters. Read important sections only. And read clearly. Correspondence is usually read by the secretary, but, when possible, some letters should be read by other members, such as the committee chairmen involved, in order to get more people active in the meeting and give it variety.

Set a time limit on everyone who speaks at a meeting to eliminate long-winded talkers. Try two or three minutes each, certainly not more than five minutes per person. Enforce the parliamentary rule that no one speaks twice on a subject until all others have had a chance to speak.

The Arrangement of the Meeting Room Is Important

Arrange the meeting room so that everyone sits together, not spread all over the hall. Put away extra chairs; place a desk or table in front as close to the people as possible. Avoid holding small meetings in a large hall. For a small meeting try arranging chairs in a circle or around a table. Vary the seating arrangements from meeting to meeting.

No matter how good your program is, it'll be a dud if people can't hear what's going on. Make sure everyone who speaks can be heard in every part of the hall. Rent amplifying equipment, if necessary.

The chairman should stand when conducting the meeting.

The same rule applies to the secretary when reading minutes, correspondence, etc., and to everyone who addresses the meeting, whether making reports, speaking from the floor, etc. All reports of delegates or committees should be made from the front of the room.

Take a look at your union hall. Does it need painting? Decorating? Some union posters? Better lighting? Cleaner rest rooms? How long has it been since it was swept? Are old pamphlets, paper, and dirty ashtrays scattered around?

Are new pamphlets where members can get them? Do you have a bulletin board with interesting items affecting the union? Have you tried playing union or popular records before and after the meeting?

Publicize Your Union Meeting

Do all the members know where and when meetings are held? Some of the following suggestions may help in your local. You'll be able to think of other ways to publicize your meetings, ways that will be especially suited to your union, your town. Above all, vary your publicity from meeting to meeting.

Personal contact between stewards and members is probably the most effective way to publicize your meetings. If meetings are worth attending, the steward will try to get people to be there. Make sure all the stewards know the important items on the program for each meeting.

Try an occasional letter or postcard direct to the worker's home reminding him of a meeting and the subject to be discussed. At least occasionally, send a postcard or letter to all stewards and officers, urging them to get other members out to a meeting.

An advertisement in the town paper or a few radio spots advertising an important meeting and its program will work in small towns.

Do you have shop bulletin boards? If so, work up colorful notices advertising your meetings. Use your imagination to get attention. Remember that the typewritten notice has gone the way of the horse and buggy. Some internationals have special posters for advertising union meetings.

In all publicity, play up the subject matter of a meeting, so that people will not want to miss it. But don't oversell a meeting. If you lead people to expect more than they're going to get, they won't come again.

Vary Your Program

Most meetings need more than good discussion and action on routine union business. People want to feel they have gotten something out of the meeting—new ideas, new information. Don't just tack a speech at the end of a long, dull business meeting. First follow the suggestions to streamline union business, then try some of the following suggestions:

Invite a guest speaker to talk on a subject that will

BENEFITS WON BY LOCAL UNION 000, UW, AFL-CIO

Here are the benefits that have been won by Local 000 for all workers in the _____Company since the local was organized in _____.

1. Organized method of taking up grievances and complaints.
2. Protection of a union contract with numerous guarantees and with choice of arbitration if company refuses to follow contract.
3. Six wage increases totaling 69¢ per hour.
4. Vacations with pay. 1 week for one year's service, 2 weeks for five years' service and 3 weeks for 15 years' service.
5. Six paid holidays.
6. Pension plan. Guaranteed minimum of $100 including social security.
7. Health benefits for yourself and family.
8. Thousands of individual and group grievances settled satisfactorily for the membership.

Attend regular union meetings at union hall_____ street. (4th Monday of every month) at _____p.m.

NEW MEMBERS WILL FEEL differently toward your local union if you give them a background on the history of the local and the gains which the local union has made for the membership. The leaflet to the left shows eight gains made by a local union.

DOES THE HISTORY OF your local union show equivalent gains? Have you prepared an attractive leaflet for your new members or planned an anniversary program on the "birthday" of your union in which you dramatize these gains?

Date_____

Dear Brother _____:

Welcome and congratulations on becoming a member of Local 000 of the United Workers, AFL-CIO.

We're glad to have you join us in one of the oldest (and one of the best!) unions in the AFL-CIO. Local 000 includes all the workers in the _____Company. It is dedicated to representing you and your fellow workers, to see that you get fair treatment on the job.

You are now protected by a union contract which has been developed over many years, so that it gives real protection to the workers. The benefits which your union has won for its members are listed on the attached leaflet. Read this carefully.

As you work on your job, you may have complaints about unfair treatment or mistakes that the company may make in regard to your job or pay. You are entitled to see your shop steward who is experienced in handling such cases and will take them up for you as provided by the union's contract with the company. Your steward is _____; he works in Department_____.

Fraternally yours,

John Q. Unionman
President, Local 000
United Workers, AFL-CIO

TO THE RIGHT IS A SAMPLE letter for new members which local unions could easily prepare. Many, of course, do. In this case, the letter stresses the service which the local provides for its members and indicates who the shop steward is as well as emphasizing the role this steward will play in representing the new member with management.

SOME INTERNATIONAL unions like the Building Service Employees Union and the Rubber Workers Union have prepared national leaflets which can accompany a local union letter welcoming the new member.

interest your members: something on the union, the town you live in, the possibilities are endless. When you invite a speaker, give him a realistic estimate of the number of people who'll attend and the time available to him. Explain ahead of time, so the speaker can plan his talk accordingly, that you want a short talk, with plenty of time for questions from the floor. And enforce the time limit on the talk.

Have the members themselves do the talking at some meetings. Schedule short talks on subjects such as "How Dues Are Spent," "How to Make a Motion," or a short review of a union pamphlet.

Union movies come in many sizes on many subjects. If you can get projection equipment, rent a movie from time to time. Write to the AFL-CIO Film Division for a catalogue of rental films.

You've probably already tried refreshments or entertainment and found that, alone, they don't bring many people to meetings. Don't try them at every meeting; you can't compete with TV in the living room and TV snacks in the kitchen. But now and then they vary the routine of the meeting, especially if you're opening the meeting to families or the public.

(For more details about union meetings see AFL-CIO Publication No. 81, HOW TO RUN A UNION MEETING. 20¢ a copy; 10 to 99 copies, 17¢ each.)

2 Reach the Membership through the union stewards or committeemen

"Stewards," "shop chairmen" or "committeemen" are the key to building a strong local union.

Whether your union calls them "stewards," "shop chairmen," "committeemen," or some other title, these are the people who can be most helpful in reaching the membership. There are two big advantages to this method: The stewards are a small group, relatively easy for the union to keep in touch with. They are also the key people in the union; they blanket the shop in all departments, and they are in daily touch with the members.

The problem is how to make the most effective use of the shop stewards, without working them to death.

Train Stewards to Do Their Job

Both old and new stewards should attend steward training sessions. You can hold classes once a week, have a weekend conference, or run classes in connection with your regular stewards' meetings. Help them understand the contract, teach them how to handle grievances, give them basic information about the union.

When a new steward takes over, the union officers should take time to show him the ropes and go over the contract and the grievance procedure with him. Make a special effort to help him until he can take a steward training course.

(A Teaching Guide for a six-session stewards' training course is available from the AFL-CIO Education Department. It is based on the new AFL-CIO stewards manual and sells for $1.00.)

Hold Regular Stewards' Meetings

Monthly stewards' meetings give stewards a chance to discuss grievance problems and to learn more about the union. There are many ways to run these meetings. You can plan a detailed discussion of one section of the contract at each meeting. Or invite a guest speaker on labor laws, political action, or some other union issue. At another meeting schedule an informal talk on some part of the union's program. For example, on the steward's responsibility in getting members out to meetings, first try an impromptu skit of a steward telling a worker about the next union meeting and urging him to come out. That should bring a reaction from the stewards present, who can exchange ideas on how they'd handle the same situation.

Give the Steward the Prestige He Deserves

If you're going to keep stewards on the job and get them to attend training meetings, you've got to make the job desirable, give it prestige. Have you tried these suggestions in your union?

Hold an annual banquet for stewards and their wives, free of charge, as an expression of the union's gratitude.

If your local union has a newspaper, by all means give the stewards credit by name for grievances they have successfully processed, etc. Publish feature stories on your stewards and the jobs they're doing.

Where possible, bring the steward involved in at higher grievance steps and top management meetings. Let him participate.

Send press releases to your community newspapers when stewards are elected; give their names and union responsibilities. Most papers (except in large cities) will print them.

TEN YEARS OLD

Yes, that's how old your United Workers Local 000, AFL-CIO, is.

It was ten years ago last week that we signed our first union contract. It didn't have much in it. But it was a start. It gave us protection against unjust discharge, against favoritism and speed-up. It gave us an organized procedure to settle grievances. It gave us seniority protection.

Each new contract was an improvement. We won wage increases, holidays and vacations with pay, reporting time pay, other improvements. In recent years we won pension and health insurance agreements.

Since our last contract was signed your union has settled satisfactorily the following grievances:

4 discharge cases
25 pay adjustment cases
35 seniority cases dealing with job transfers and promotions
60 miscellaneous grievances
43 cases on speed-up, work-load and rate cutting plus hundreds of other grievances settled immediately between your steward and foreman and not reported in the records.

Further improvements, benefits, grievance settlements -- a better job -- are only possible through your help and support. A strong union brings better conditions. Let's strengthen the union. Let's improve the present contract by working and sticking together!

Attend the 10th Anniversary Celebration! Sunday, at 2 p.m.

at the Union Hall.

Hear one of the Old Timers tell how we first organized.

Refreshments. You'll be out by 4 p.m. No foolin!

NOT ONLY are golden wedding anniversaries important, but so is your union's 10th Anniversary. One way to dramatize this history, and perhaps get a story in the local press and even a radio program, is to plan an anniversary meeting.

To the left is a leaflet publicizing a 10th anniversary meeting of a local union and indicating some of the accomplishments of the union since the "good old days" BU (before unions). Many of your newer members will understand the reasons for belonging to a union if they attend such a meeting and hear short, interesting presentations on what the union has accomplished. A ten-minute speech by one of the old timers still in the shop on what conditions were like before the union was organized will be quite educational.

The International Association of Machinists nationally just finished celebrating its 70th Anniversary and worked out a plan whereby all local lodges ran a meeting on the 70th Anniversary of the Union and invited community leaders into the Anniversary meeting.

3 Reach the membership on the job

Many local unions do a good job of contacting members while they are at work in the plant. Plan ways to use this opportunity intelligently.

The advantage of this method of reaching the rank and file is that everyone is there, no special trip is necessary. This is one of the cheapest ways to reach the largest number of workers. The disadvantage is that people are working and there is no chance for lengthy discussion as there is at membership meetings. Here are a few ideas; there are many others.

Distribute Leaflets at the Shop Gate

Pick an important issue for such distribution, and make a short and snappy mimeographed leaflet. Leaflets are particularly useful where the local has no regular newspaper. For example, make a leaflet to announce details of a wage increase or to keep the members up to date on contract negotiations, or to let them know how your Congressman and Senators voted on a particular bill.

Distribute Leaflets Through the Shop Stewards

Some workers are more likely to read a leaflet if their own shop steward hands it to them. This is a particularly useful method for announcing special meetings and other events.

Bull Sessions in the Plant, at Lunch Time, in the Locker Room

Raise a question of a story in the AFL-CIO News or your local's paper, or refer to some union leaflet or other piece of literature that interests you and is controversial. Talk about wage increases, new contract, prices. Tie the discussion in with your union and its program.

Use Union Bulletin Boards in the Plant Effectively

Keep your bulletin board up-to-date. Try to make it colorful and interesting as well as informative.

Use it for meeting announcements, stewards' names, anything that can be placed on the board. Clip news items and cartoons that will interest members from union or other papers, from magazines, etc.

Order bulletin board posters from the AFL-CIO which appear regularly on current topics or labor problems. (8½ by 11 inches in two colors. 5¢ each; 100 for $3.)

Special Department Meetings Right After Work

Where there is a hot issue in a department, call a quickie department meeting at the union hall. People will get involved who have never been to a meeting.

4 Reaching the membership at their homes, in the community

It is important to work with union members where they live! They are "opinion molders" on many issues which concern the welfare of the people of the community.

Every union member is also a member of the community. Sometimes he is easier to reach at home than in the plant or union hall or through the stewards. Some unions are producing television shows and radio programs to discuss controversial issues. These programs will take the AFL-CIO's position on important issues to union members who never come to the union hall. These ideas may help you:

Use the Mails

Occasional, even regular, use of the mails, if possible, will reach all members and their families right at home.

This is a sure fire way of getting into the home, although there is no guarantee that the material will be read. Also, it can be expensive, particularly for large locals which would need addressing equipment. Here are a few ideas for mailings to union members.

A must mailing is a letter to all new members welcoming them into the union (see sample letter on page 4). also a letter to workers retiring on a union pension plan.

The need to get important information to all members quickly might be the occasion for a letter, perhaps with a leaflet attached. Examples are strike information, a dues increase, a new contract, negotiations, or a special legislative drive.

A regular local union newspaper can be very effective.

One way to distribute it is to mail it to members' homes. Cover local news, local names and events; keep it easy to read, not too heavy or tightly packed. You might start with a one or two-page mimeographed paper.

Use Community News Sources

Appoint or elect an information committee with the willingness and authority to establish and maintain contacts with the newspapers, radio and TV stations. The committee must be willing and able to prepare useable news releases.

Have them get acquainted with reporters and news editors of newspapers and radio/TV stations. (For more detailed suggestions, see "Get Your UNION MESSAGE to the Public", pp. 6-7, May 1958, AFL-CIO Education News and Views.)

Normal union activity can get the name of the union in the newspapers at least twenty-five times a year. Send news releases to community newspapers to report any out of the ordinary activities. Conventions, special meetings, contract negotiations, delegates sent to meetings, conferences, and schools, the election of officers, entertainments, and other activities are all news for your home-town papers.

Send news releases about activities of your local union to your local radio and TV stations whenever you send them to the newspapers.

Make sure your members know about both radio and TV programs featuring union speakers. The AFL-CIO sponsors two nationally-known radio commentators, John W. Vandercook and Edward P. Morgan. Both are on the ABC Network. UAW commentator Guy Nunn appears on thirty-five stations on a special morning show aimed at car radios. Other radio and TV programs are available from time to time.

The AFL-CIO TV series, "Americans at Work" offers fifty-two 15-minute shows to TV stations that agree to run the series on public service time.

The AFL-CIO taped radio programs, "As We See It" or "Washington Reports" offer listeners interviews with union leaders, or members of the Congress.

If these programs are not heard or seen locally, your information committee should contact the program chairman of radio stations and the TV channels in the area.

If the program is carried locally, union members should be informed through union publications, hand-

Local 000, United Workers, AFL-CIO
1957 Main Street, Uniontown, USA. Telephone: 7777
President: John Q. Unionman
Home Phone: 0000
For Immediate Release

UNIONTOWN MAN TO ATTEND NATIONWIDE MEETING

Joe E. Contract, chief steward of Uniontown Local 000 of the United Workers, AFL-CIO, leaves today for Washington, D. C., to attend a nationwide conference of United Workers stewards at the Statler Hotel. The conference will run from (date) _____.

Contract was elected by the ten stewards of Local 000 to represent their local at the meetings called to acquaint United Workers stewards with problems of administering the union contracts under changing conditions in the industry.

While in Washington, Contract will visit Senators _____ and _____ and Representative _____ on Capitol Hill to tell them how workers in Uniontown feel about some of the bills now before Congress.

The United Workers have called this meeting of stewards because they recognize that the steward is the key man in every union. He's the man who is in daily contact with all the workers in his department. Knowing his union and its members as he does, he is especially well-equipped to discuss local problems and to use what he learns in Washington for the benefit of the union and community on his return home.

Speakers at the meeting in Washington, to be attended by Joe Contract, will be President Ralph Burns of the United Workers, AFL-CIO, who will speak on "The Challenge Confronting the Labor Movement Today" and E. E. Blough, consultant on problems of automation. Blough will discuss at the meeting some of the problems facing the United Workers Union in adapting seniority clauses to new situations created by the growth of automation.

MANY TIMES local unions fail to publicize activities which would give the general public a better understanding of unions. Many local unions, of course, send delegates to legislative conferences, to summer schools, to state legislative meetings and to city or county meetings on improving the public schools.

The sample press release to the left shows how to publicize the activity of a local union. Notice the double spaced typing which editors appreciate. Also at the top, the name of the president of the local, his office and home phone numbers, so that the newspaper reporter can follow up on the story in case he has any questions.

News stories indicating the amount of money raised by union members in a particular shop for the Community Chest will give the general public a broader understanding of union activities.

The May, 1958, issue of EDUCATION NEWS AND VIEWS contained an article entitled "Get Your Union Message to the Public," which outlined seven ways in which the union could work on this problem. Write to the AFL-CIO Department of Education for a copy.

bills, bulletin boards, and at local union meetings so that they, their families, and friends can see or listen.

Activity of union representatives in community organizations (through service on committees, through donations, through participation in various community projects) helps get the name and program of the union before non-active union members and the public. On community chest drives, etc., make sure your union gets some mention and that all the credit doesn't go to the employer or company where you work.

* * *

If you use the suggestions in this article, you will make it possible for local union members to participate in a wide variety of union programs. Many of the projects which you carry out in your local union will not only build stronger unions, but will give the general public a better understanding of the need for strong unions.

AFL-CIO Pamphlet No. 91

Reprinted from October and November 1958, AFL-CIO Education News and Views. For additional copies, write to AFL-CIO Education Department, 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Single copy, free; 2-99 copies, 5¢ each; 100 or more, 3¢ each.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

George Meany, President Wm. F. Schnitzler, Secretary-Treasurer

17 17

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

Why Should a Grievance Procedure Be Formalized?

Read the following statement carefully

One, it reduces the possibility of conflicting decision. In a large plant with many supervisors and stewards such conflicts would occur frequently if written records and regular channels of appeal were not provided.

Two, formal procedure eliminates the possibility of people making decisions without the proper authority. This sometimes happened in the past and many stewards and foremen have been embarrassed at a calling-down by their superiors for making decisions for which they had no authority. Under the formal procedure, each adjuster knows exactly how far and over how many people his authority extends. First-line supervisors and stewards know that decisions involving company or union policy must be reserved for higher officials.

Three, arguments over facts are greatly reduced by the use of the written grievance form. If a case is appealed up the ladder, many different people must handle it. Only a written statement signed by each person involved can avoid future arguments as to what actually took place. It also prevents any adjuster--either for the union or for management--from denying his action. In this way much valuable time will be saved in committee meetings and at all higher levels of appeal.

Four, formal procedure reduces the number of unfounded grievances. When the worker has to write out a complaint on a special form and sign his name to it, the number of trivial complaints turned in to the union are usually sharply reduced. It protects the steward from the kind of worker who kicks and then backs down when his grievance is actually presented to the foreman.

Relate to fear problem?

Five, orderly procedure helps to build mutual confidence in a very important way. By making all decisions open and on the record, the possibility of illegitimate understandings is largely eliminated. Charges of favoritism or dishonesty which might be made against either steward or foreman are avoided, and any grounds for suspicion, real or imaginary, are eliminated.

Six, records of all adjusted grievances are ofen kept on file at the union office and management's industrial relations office. Such a record provides both sides with an over-all picture of the day-to-day working of the contract, with special emphasis on any particular sore spots. This information may prove of great value when renewal of the contract comes up.

LABOR MONOGRAPH NO. 1

a Contemporary Analysis of a Labor Union

GLASS
BOTTLE BLOWERS ASSOCIATION of the United States and Canada

AFL-CIO

DEVELOPMENT STRUCTURE
FUNCTIONS

by

MILES E. HOFFMAN

Department of Economics and Management

TEMPLE UNIVERSITY
Philadelphia, Pa.

INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

WEST COAST TRADE UNION CHARACTERISTICS, MEMBERSHIP, AND INFLUENCE

by

IRVING BERNSTEIN

Reprint No. 84

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES 24, CALIFORNIA
1959

INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

FEW AREAS in the domestic social life of the nation are vested currently with greater public concern than the field of industrial relations. The development of better relationships between organized labor and organized employers, and the integration of these relationships with the interests of the individual citizens and the nation as a whole, constitute one of the most serious problems facing our economic and social system today.

The Legislature of the State of California expressed its desire to contribute to the solution of this problem when, in 1945, it established an Institute of Industrial Relations at the University of California. The general objective of the Institute is to facilitate a better understanding between labor and management throughout the state, and to equip persons desiring to enter the administrative field of industrial relations with the highest possible standard of qualifications.

The Institute has two headquarters, one located on the Los Angeles campus and the other located on the Berkeley campus. Each headquarters has its own director and its own program, but activities of the two sections are closely integrated through a Coordinating Committee. In addition, each section has a local Faculty Advisory Committee, to assist it in its relations to the University; and a Community Advisory Committee composed of representatives of labor, industry, and the general public, to advise the Institute on how it may best serve the community.

The program of the Institute is not directed toward the special interests of either labor or management, but rather toward the public interest. It is divided into two main activities: investigation of the facts and problems in the field of industrial relations, which includes an active research program and the collection of materials for a research and reference library; and general education on industrial relations, which includes regular University instruction for students and extension courses and conferences for the community.

EXTRACT FROM MONTHLY LABOR REVIEW, VOLUME 82, No. 5, May 1959

Trade Union Characteristics, Membership, and Influence

Organization is chiefly nonfactory and leads the country in penetrating the "difficult" areas of potential membership.

IRVING BERNSTEIN

UNIONISM on the Pacific Coast has a rich and dramatic history, with roots that dig deep into the past, despite the relative youthfulness of the region. In November 1849, during the Gold Rush, the carpenters of San Francisco struck to raise their daily wage from $12 to $16. In 1850, the typographical workers and the teamsters of San Francisco formed unions, and it is probable that the boatmen followed their lead.

Many dramatic incidents of American labor history have taken place on the Pacific Coast: the Gold Rush, the Chinese exclusion movement of the late 19th century, the bombing of the Los Angeles Times in 1910, the San Francisco Preparedness Day bombing of 1916, the Seattle General Strike of 1919, the San Francisco General Strike of 1934, the North American Aviation strike of 1941 that led President Roosevelt to send in Federal troops, the Hollywood jurisdictional strike of 1946. Coast labor has had its colorful figures—the gold miner, the Chinese coolie, the seaman, the fruit tramp, the singing bum (often a Wobbly), the wetback, the longshoreman, the logger, the over-the-road truck-driver, the motion picture star. And it has contributed its share of outstanding union men whose careers, if not always admirable, were invariably interesting: Dennis ("The Chinese Must Go") Kearney; Andrew Furuseth, who dedicated himself to the welfare of the seamen; Jim and John McNamara of the Ironworkers and the bomb; P. H. ("Pinhead") McCarthy, lord of the building trades and mayor of San Francisco; Tom Mooney of the Molders and San Quentin; Harry Bridges of the Longshoremen, the Left, and the General Strike; tough Harry Lundeberg of the Sailors Union of the Pacific; Dave Beck of the Teamsters and the fast buck.

This long history, these dramatic incidents and colorful leaders, and the economic landscape of the region have joined to produce a distinctive Pacific Coast labor movement. While these unions share many features with labor organizations in the remainder of the Nation, they also have unique regional characteristics, most of which are coastwide in extent.

Trade unionism is presently a significant force in the three Pacific Coast States. If we are to gage it by the number of union members, it is more important here than in the Nation as a whole. In California, much the most populous of these States, there were 1,689,500 members in 1956, or 38.8 percent of the 4,354,600 wage and salary workers employed in nonagricultural establishments. In the same year, there were 17,385,000 union members in the continental United States,[1] or 33.6 percent of the 51,766,000 employees in nonagricultural establishments. The extent of organization in Washington and Oregon is even higher. In 1953, according to Troy, Washington was the most unionized State in the United States, Oregon ranked fifth, and California was thirteenth.[2]

[1] Excludes members of intrastate unaffiliated unions (probably numbering 500,000 or more) as well as an unknown number of members of national or international unions who were unemployed, in the Armed Forces, etc.

[2] The source of national data is the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Its figures are published in the Directory of National and International Labor Unions in the United States, 1957 (Bull. 1222, 1957). The California series appears in the annual publication of the Division of Labor Statistics and Research of the State Department of Industrial Relations—Union Labor in California. Its series began in 1950. For a variety of reasons, the 1950 figures are not fully consistent with those that followed, and for the purpose of this paper, the series will be considered to have begun with 1951. The 1953 ranking of Washington and Oregon is from Leo Troy, Distribution of Union Membership among the States, 1939 and 1953 (New York, National Bureau of Economic Research, Inc., 1957), p. 18. For more recent estimates of union membership in these States, the author is indebted to J. H. Davis of the Washington State Labor Council and Tommy Scanlon of the Oregon State Labor Council.

527170—59

Recent Membership Trends

Union membership in California has been growing in recent years (table 1). Between 1951 and 1958, the labor movement added 263,100 persons to its ranks, a gain of 18.2 percent. Growth is also evident in the number of local unions in the State. Between 1951 and 1958, there was a net increase of 366, a rise of 11.4 percent.

The advance in membership and organization has been both persistent and undramatic. In only 2 years—1954 and 1958—has the number of members turned down and, in each case, quite modestly. The obvious cause in both 1954 and 1958 was the general recession in business activity. In no year did the unions enjoy a dramatic increase in membership, as they had in the late 1930's and early 1940's. This is because the conditions that create such breakthroughs—major wars and recovery from severe depressions—did not occur during this short period.

When the advance in membership is discounted by California's spectacular expansion in employment, however, the performance of the unions becomes less impressive. The relative number of nonagricultural wage and salary earners who belong to labor unions has actually fallen from 40.8 percent in 1951 to 38.3 percent in 1958. Put another way, between 1951 and 1958, membership advanced only 18.2 percent in contrast with an employment rise of 26.1 percent.

The reasons for the failure of California's labor movement to grow relatively are complex, and the data are insufficient to permit a comprehensive anaylsis. An important factor has been the inability of the unions to keep up with rising employment in manufacturing. It appears that the proportion of manufacturing employees who were union members declined from 52 percent in 1951 to 46 percent in 1957. Part of this drop must be laid to the marked shift, notable in the aircraft-missile industry, from blue- to white-collar employment. The remainder may perhaps be explained by the difficulty of maintaining pace with a proliferation of new small plants, especially in southern California.

Industrial Distribution. Table 2 reveals the industrial distribution of California's union members for 1951 and 1957. A most significant feature of California unionism, stemming from the nature of its economy, is its predominantly nonfactory membership. For American unions as a whole, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, only 51 percent of the membership was in nonmanufacturing industries in 1956. In California, by contrast, industries other than manufacturing accounted for 67 percent of the membership in 1957. In substantial part, this is explained by the great importance of construction in a rapidly expanding economy as well as more intensive organization by California unions. The building trades supplied 19 percent of California's membership in 1957, in comparison with less than 12 percent for all American unions in 1956. The nonfactory character of California's unions is not new; in 1951, the relationship between the two industry groupings was identical.

The most important membership gains have been in heavy manufacturing, in construction, in public utilities, in wholesale and retail trade, in hotels and restaurants and miscellaneous services, and in public employment. The union advances in metals and machinery, transportation equipment, and other manufacturing reflect the rapid industrialization of California's economy. The gains in construction stem from general economic growth. Those in the other nonmanufacturing industries represent a significant breakthrough for union organization into largely new ground.

For major industry groupings, estimates of California union membership as a percentage of employment in 1957 were as follows:

	Percent
Construction	[1] 117
Transportation and warehousing	87
Public utilities	47
Manufacturing	46
Trade and service	28
Mineral extraction	13

[1] This unusual statistic is explained by two factors: the intermittency of employment and the fact that many unionized building tradesmen work in industries other than construction.

SOURCE: See text footnote 2.

These figures provide a basis for comparing the extent of organization in California with that in the other Pacific Coast States. Table 3 presents Oregon's approximate union membership by industry in 1958. These estimates are supported by the BLS survey of 148 establishments in the Portland labor market in April 1958. Of their 51,070 employees, approximately two-thirds were plant workers [3] and the remainder office personnel. The proportion of plant workers covered by labor-management agreements was 85–89 percent in manufacturing, over 95 percent in public utilities, and 60–64 percent in retail trade. The corresponding percentages for office employees were less than 5 percent in manufacturing, 60–64 in utilities, and 35–39 in trade.[4]

Despite marked differences in the economic development of Oregon and California, the pattern of unionization is similar. In both States, construction as well as transportation and warehousing are completely or almost entirely organized, manufacturing is approximately half unionized, about three-tenths of the workers in trade and service are union members, and only a minor fraction of those in the extractive industries have joined. The only significant deviation is in public utilities. Here Oregon is almost wholly and California is not quite half organized.

Table 4 reveals Washington's approximate union membership distribution by industry in 1958. Washington is, as previously noted, the most highly unionized of the Pacific Coast States. In contrast with Oregon, the following industries show a greater concentration of membership: petroleum, chemicals, and rubber; transportation equipment; "other manufacturing"; motion pictures (chiefly theaters); and government. Only in the case of food and kindred products does Oregon take the lead.

Geographic Distribution. The geographic distribution of union membership within each of the Pacific States is related mainly to urban industrialization and to a lesser extent to natural resource location. Western Washington, which contains most of the metropolitan areas, is more highly organized than the eastern part. In Oregon, according to the Oregon State Labor Council, 80 percent of the members live west of the Cascades, mainly in the Willamette Valley and in the coastal towns. In the case of California, it is possible to deal with local areas precisely and to note several interesting recent developments. Table 5 presents the geographic distribution of California's membership in 1954 and 1957, ranked by rate of growth.[5] It reveals a dramatic relative shift from the north to the south. Of the five leading districts in rate of growth, four are southern. These four districts comprise the whole region generally referred to as southern California. The Southeast ranks first, Santa Barbara–Ventura is second, San Diego is fourth, and Los Angeles–Long Beach ranks fifth. The explanation for this growth in the south is rapid urbanization, industrialization, and population expansion.

TABLE 1. CALIFORNIA UNION MEMBERSHIP AND UNION LOCALS, 1951–58 [1]

Year [1]	Membership		Number of locals
	Number (in thousands)	Percent of employment in nonagricultural establishments
1951	1,443.1	40.8	3,218
1952	1,503.4	40.2	3,355
1953	1,577.9	40.5	3,382
1954	1,566.1	40.6	3,384
1955	1,618.5	39.3	3,430
1956	1,689.5	38.8	3,432
1957	1,736.7	38.6	3,490
1958	1,706.2	38.3	3,584

[1] Data relate to July 1 of each year.

SOURCE: See text footnote 2.

TABLE 2. CALIFORNIA UNION MEMBERSHIP BY INDUSTRY, 1951 AND 1957 [1]

Industry	1951 [1]		1957 [1]
	Number (in thousands)	Percent	Number (in thousands)	Percent
Total	1,443.1	100	1,736.7	100
Manufacturing	468.1	33	575.0	33
Food and kindred products	115.7	8	114.0	7
Textiles and apparel	25.6	2	22.5	1
Lumber and furniture	42.5	3	40.8	2
Printing and publishing	23.7	2	29.7	2
Petroleum, chemicals, and rubber	32.3	2	36.0	2
Metals and machinery	112.1	8	141.5	8
Transportation equipment	87.1	6	144.4	8
Other manufacturing	29.1	2	46.1	3
Nonmanufacturing	975.0	67	1,161.7	67
Agriculture, fishing, and mineral extraction	12.5	1	9.5	(2)
Construction	266.5	18	328.8	19
Transportation and warehousing	191.7	13	201.4	12
Public utilities	55.2	4	66.2	4
Trade, wholesale and retail	156.3	11	220.3	13
Eating and drinking places, hotels and other lodging places	87.0	6	100.4	6
Motion picture production, distribution, service, and theaters	76.9	5	73.9	4
Miscellaneous services	80.9	6	103.8	6
Government	48.0	3	57.4	3

[1] Data relate to July 1 of each year.
[2] Less than 0.5 percent.

SOURCE: See text footnote 2.

[3] Employees engaged in maintenance, powerplant, custodial, and material movement occupations, as well as those in direct production occupations, which were not surveyed.

[4] Occupational Wage Survey, Portland, Oregon, April 1958 (BLS Bull. 1224–16, 1958), p. 14.

[5] It is not possible to employ earlier data for comparative purposes because of changes in area definitions in 1954.

TABLE 3. OREGON UNION MEMBERSHIP, APPROXIMATE EXTENT BY INDUSTRY, 1958

Industry	Percent of organization
	1-20	21-40	41-60	61-80	81-100
MANUFACTURING
Food and kindred products				x
Textiles and apparel			x
Lumber and furniture				x
Printing and publishing					x
Petroleum, chemicals, and rubber				x
Metals and machinery				x
Transportation equipment	x
Other manufacturing	x
NONMANUFACTURING
Agriculture, fishing, and mineral extraction	x
Construction					x
Transportation and warehousing					x
Public utilities					x
Trade, wholesale and retail		x
Eating and drinking places, hotels and other lodging places			x
Motion picture production, distribution, service, and theaters			x
Miscellaneous services	x
Government	x

SOURCE: See text footnote 2.

Historically, San Francisco was known as a "union" town and Los Angeles as "open shop," but this has long since ceased to be the case. The probability is that the number of union members in Los Angeles first exceeded that in San Francisco at the end of World War II. By 1957, the southern city's lead had widened to 204,000. Nevertheless, unions in the Bay area have penetrated more deeply. In 1957, according to the California Division of Labor Statistics and Research, union members constituted 50 percent of employment in San Francisco–Oakland, 35 percent in Los Angeles–Long Beach, and 37 percent in San Diego. If San Diego continues to grow at the rate which it has enjoyed in the past decade, California will before long have a third major center of trade union strength.

The waning of San Francisco in relation to other cities has been accompanied by the decline of the maritime unions. The seamen and the longshoremen once played decisive roles in West Coast unionism and their main stage was San Francisco Bay. They are now supporting players. This has stemmed in part from the decline of the American merchant marine, but more importantly, from the rapid growth of other organizations. Nowadays, Los Angeles Joint Council 42 of the Teamsters alone has more members than the Sailors Union of the Pacific and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union combined.

Table 5 also demonstrates that unions have been entering new localities and small communities. This is most evident in the case of the Southeast, embracing Imperial, Riverside, and San Bernardino Counties, which has no large cities and was heretofore little unionized. Much the same may be said of Santa Barbara–Ventura and the Sacramento Valley, in which the growth of union membership has exceeded the statewide rate. If it were possible to break down the data for San Francisco Bay and Los Angeles–Long Beach, the same tendency would doubtless be in evidence. It is likely, for example, that such outlying and formerly agricultural areas as Santa Clara County, the San Fernando Valley, the Antelope Valley, and Orange County have seen a higher relative growth in membership than have the cities of San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Special Features of West Coast Unionism

Pacific Coast unionism differs from unionism in the Nation as a whole in having made a deeper, though hardly complete, penetration into those sectors which are difficult to organize. Retail workers in food markets and drugstores are generally union members, and in some communities, the same is true in the department stores. Several of the southern California aircraft companies bargain with unions representing their engineers.

TABLE 4. WASHINGTON UNION MEMBERSHIP, APPROXIMATE EXTENT BY INDUSTRY, 1958

Industry	Percent of organization
	1-20	21-40	41-60	61-80	81-100
MANUFACTURING
Food and kindred products			x
Textiles and apparel			x
Lumber and furniture				x
Printing and publishing					x
Petroleum, chemicals, and rubber					x
Metals and machinery				x
Transportation equipment				x
Other manufacturing			x
NONMANUFACTURING
Agriculture, fishing, and mineral extraction	x
Construction					x
Transportation and warehousing					x
Public utilities					x
Trade, wholesale and retail		x
Eating and drinking places, hotels and other lodging places			x
Motion picture production, distribution, service, and theaters				x
Miscellaneous services	x
Government		x

SOURCE: See text footnote 2.

TABLE 5. CALIFORNIA UNION MEMBERSHIP BY AREA, 1954 AND 1957 [1]

[Membership in thousands]

Area	1954 [1]	1957 [1]	Percent change
Total	1,566.1	1,736.7	+11
Southeast (3 counties)	46.2	62.0	+34
Santa Barbara-Ventura (2 counties)	17.1	22.8	+33
Sacramento Valley (8 counties)	57.7	68.4	+19
San Diego County	71.6	83.0	+16
Los Angeles-Long Beach (2 counties)	688.3	763.5	+11
North Coast (4 counties)	14.1	15.7	+11
San Francisco Bay (9 counties)	517.3	559.5	+8
San Joaquin Valley (8 counties)	97.2	105.1	+8
Mountain (17 counties)	31.7	33.6	+6
Central Coast (4 counties)	24.9	23.1	−7

[1] Data relate to July 1 of each year.

SOURCE: See text footnote 2.

Many small towns are well organized. Even agriculture has been breached; the packing shed workers are unionized and the dairy farm workers in the San Francisco and Los Angeles areas belong to the Teamsters. Government employees, especially in Washington and Oregon, are frequently union members.

The pattern of unionization is coastwide. The labor movement in each of the three States is predominantly nonfactory. This is especially the case in Washington, where construction, transportation and warehousing, and public utilities are highly organized and trade, restaurants and hotels, and government are relatively well organized.

The nonmanufacturing character of unionism on the Pacific Coast, as might be expected, is reflected in the international unions that lead in membership. The five ranking organizations in California, Oregon, and Washington (all AFL–CIO affiliates except the Teamsters) are the following:

Rank	California	Oregon	Washington
1	Teamsters	Carpenters	Teamsters
2	Machinists	Teamsters	Machinists
3	Carpenters	Woodworkers	Hotel Workers [1]
4	Hotel Workers [1]	Hotel Workers [1]	Carpenters
5	Retail Clerks	Machinists	Woodworkers

[1] Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union.

SOURCE: See text footnote 2.

Excepting the Machinists, a large part of whose membership is in the aircraft industry in California and Washington, these organizations are predominantly nonfactory. The coastwide pattern is apparent in the fact that four internationals—the Teamsters, Machinists, Carpenters, and Hotel and Restaurant Employees—make the "big five" in all three States. The fifth is the Woodworkers in Washington and Oregon, but it is the Retail Clerks in California, where the lumber industry is relatively less important.[6] Because of the weight of this industry in Oregon, the Teamsters drop to second behind the Carpenters.

In premerger terms, the Pacific Coast is preeminently AFL country. Of the six unions listed, five were formerly affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; only the Woodworkers were in the Congress of Industrial Organizations. Of the 15 largest unions in California in 1957, only 2 were at one time CIO; the Auto Workers ranked 8th and the Steelworkers 10th. Of California's union membership just prior to merger, according to the Division of Labor Statistics and Research, 81 percent was AFL, 12 percent CIO, and 7 percent independent. A recent estimate for Washington by its State Labor Council was 80 percent AFL, 15 percent CIO, and 5 percent unaffiliated. For Oregon, an estimate by its State Labor Council, excluding the unaffiliated, was 80 percent AFL and 20 percent CIO.

These figures may overestimate the importance of the former CIO unions in the Pacific Coast labor movement, because much of their membership was concentrated in branch plants of nationwide steel, automobile, farm equipment, rubber, electrical, and meatpacking companies. The unions that represent their employees locally, however, have looked for leadership to the centers of power in Pittsburgh, Detroit, Akron, Washington, and Chicago.

The unions that have been most influential in the region have historically organized in essentially local product-market industries and have enjoyed a large measure of autonomy in relation to their internationals. This has been the case with the building trades, the printing trades, the metal trades, and the Teamsters. Local leaders, by and large, conducted collective bargaining and ran their organizations without interference from above. Growing integration of the national economy, centralization within unions, and pooled welfare and pension funds have, however, produced changes.

[6] See the article on the lumber industry by Paul L. Kleinsorge on pp. 558–563 of this issue.

The union that best illustrates this tension between centrifugal and centripetal forces is the Teamsters. A generation ago Teamster locals on the Pacific Coast had little more than a nodding acquaintance with their international in Indianapolis or, for that matter, with each other. Since then, the rapid growth of the over-the-road trucking industry has tended to pull them together.[7] Moreover, Dave Beck's massive changes in the union's structure, first as head of the Western Conference and later as international president, spurred centralization. His successor, James R. Hoffa, has diligently pursued the same objective, thus far with only middling success in the West. Most of the industries in which the union operates there retain their local product markets, and deep-seated traditions of autonomy are not easily erased.

The nonfactory character of West Coast industry and unionism has had a marked impact upon the region's collective bargaining, notably by fostering association bargaining.[8] The region's relatively numerous small employers have found it necessary to organize themselves in self-defense against strong unions. Association bargaining predominates in northern California, in Oregon, and in Washington. Multifirm bargaining is probably more highly developed in the San Francisco Bay area than in any other labor market in the United States. Even in southern California, with its large manufacturing companies, multiemployer bargaining covers a majority of the workers under agreements.

The Circumstances of Success

The relative success of West Coast unionism arises from a variety of causes. It goes back in time to the Gold Rush, which immediately established San Francisco as an important trade union center. The history of labor on the Coast over the last 110 years reflects the gradual extension of the San Francisco pattern of organization and bargaining to the other communities, large and small, of California, Oregon, and Washington—and, for that matter, of the intermountain States. This movement from its inception was mainly nonfactory, and it organized workers, like retail clerks, who were nonunion elsewhere. The pattern included, as well, the employer association, which has spread from the Bay area throughout the region. This type of association is designed for collective bargaining and cannot function unless the workers are unionized. In many trades, therefore, the associations and unions have joined forces to organize both the employers and the workers. Another factor of importance has been the phenomenal growth of the Teamsters in Washington and California. This organization's power over transportation has been used as a lever to unionize many nontrucking workers, sometimes within the Teamsters and at other times in other international unions. With economic power has come political strength, which, in turn, has created a climate favorable for further unionization. Washington, Oregon, and California have had administrations and legislatures friendly to unions. Social legislation is advanced, and there are no laws that inhibit union growth. Voters in Washington in 1956 and in California in 1958 decisively rejected "right-to-work" legislation. Relative strength in agriculture and food and drug retailing is probably explained in part by the fact that large-scale operations in these industries emerged earlier on the Pacific Coast than elsewhere. The packing shed "factory" and the supermarket are easier to unionize than the family farm and the corner grocery store. Finally, these States have a number of large projects, like the Bonneville Dam, at which the Federal Government engages in collective bargaining with its employees.

The development of unionism on the Pacific Coast may foreshadow the future of the American labor movement. If the latter is to continue to grow, it must penetrate those industries presently poorly organized, like trade, finance, insurance, services, and government, as well as those localities now little unionized, including the smaller communities. Success might lie in following the pattern that is already emerging on the Pacific Coast.

[7] See the article on the trucking industry by R. Thayne Robson on pp. 547–551 of this issue.

[8] See the articles on association bargaining by Van Dusen Kennedy on pp. 539–542 of this issue.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS LOS ANGELES

Reprints: Complimentary copies of reprints are obtainable from the Institute of Industrial Relations, Los Angeles. Additional copies may be obtained for 20c each. (Omitted numbers are out of print.)

6. Statutory Regulation of Internal Union Affairs—I, by Benjamin Aaron and Michael I. Komaroff (1949)
8. The Manager Concept: A Rational Synthesis, by Robert Tannenbaum (1949)
9. Managerial Decision-Making, by Robert Tannenbaum (1950)
10. Statutory Regulation of Internal Union Affairs—II, by Benjamin Aaron and Michael I. Komaroff (1950)
14. Participation by Subordinates in the Managerial Decision-Making Process, by Robert Tannenbaum and Fred Massarik (1950)
15. The Arbitration Process, by Edgar L. Warren and Irving Bernstein (1950)
16. The Employment Multiplier in an Expanding Industrial Market: Los Angeles County, 1940–47, by George H. Hildebrand and Arthur Mace, Jr. (1950)
18. A Profile of Labor Arbitration, by Edgar L. Warren and Irving Bernstein (1951)
19. Labor Injunctions in Action: A Five-Year Survey in Los Angeles County, by Benjamin Aaron and William Levin (1951)
22. Thirty-Six Years of "National Emergency" Strikes, by Edgar L. Warren (1951)
25. A New Management Tool: The Multi-Relational Sociometric Survey, by Irving R. Weschler, Robert Tannenbaum, and Eugene Talbot (1952)
26. Experimenting with Federal Efficiency Ratings: A Case Study, by Irving R. Weschler, Fred Massarik, and Robert Tannenbaum (1952)
27. American Unionism, Social Stratification, and Power, by George Hildebrand (1953)
28. Statutory Regulation of Internal Union Affairs: The Control of Communism, by Benjamin Aaron (1953)
29. The Role of Public Opinion in Relation to the Mediator, by Edgar L. Warren (1953)
30. Are Coal Strikes National Emergencies? by Irving Bernstein and Hugh G. Lovell (1953)
31. Governmental Restraints on Featherbedding, by Benjamin Aaron (1953)
32. Public Opinion and the Union Shop, by Benjamin Aaron (1953)
35. Training Managers for Leadership, by Robert Tannenbaum, Verne Kallejian, and Irving R. Weschler (1954)
36. Bureaucracy in a Government Laboratory, by Paula Brown (1954)
37. Changing Legal Concepts and Industrial Conflict, by Benjamin Aaron (1954)
38. Arbitration, by Irving Bernstein (1954)
39. The Role of Supervision, by Melville Dalton (1954)
40. Mediation and Fact-Finding, by Edgar L. Warren (1954)
42. Union Procedures for Settling Jurisdictional Disputes, by Benjamin Aaron (1954)
43. The California Jurisdictional Strike Act, by Benjamin Aaron (1954)
44. The Growth of American Unions, by Irving Bernstein (1954)
45. Industrial Controls and Personal Relations, by Melville Dalton (1955)
46. Union Growth and Structural Cycles, by Irving Bernstein (1955)
47. Managers in Transition, by Verne Kallejian, Irving R. Weschler, and Robert Tannenbaum (1955)
48. A New Focus in Executive Training, by Irving R. Weschler, Marvin A. Klemes, and Clovis Shepherd (1955)
49. The Relation Between Three Interpersonal Variables, by Clovis Shepherd and Irving R. Weschler (1955)
50. The Uses of the Past in Arbitration, by Benjamin Aaron (1955)
51. The Postwar Italian Economy: Achievements, Problems, and Prospects, by George H. Hildebrand (1955)
52. The Italian Parliamentary Survey of Unemployment, by George H. Hildebrand (1955)
53. Unionism and the Wage Structure in the United States Pulp and Paper Industry, by Robert M. Macdonald (1956)
54. An Economic Definition of the National Emergency Dispute, by George H. Hildebrand (1956)
55. The Economic Impact of Strikes in Key Industries, by Irving Bernstein (1956)
56. The Bugaboo of Sovereignty and National Emergency Disputes, by Benjamin Aaron (1956)
57. An Evaluation of the National Emergency Provisions, by Frank C. Pierson (1956)
58. Rehabilitation Under Workmen's Compensation in California, by Lisbeth Bamberger (1956)
59. Managing the Managers, by Melville Dalton (1956)
60. Factionalism and Organizational Change in a Research Laboratory, by Paula Brown and Clovis Shepherd (1956)
61. State and Public Utility Laws and Mediation, by Irving Bernstein (1956)
62. The Mediation of Jurisdictional Disputes, by Benjamin Aaron (1956)
63. Status, Prestige, and Esteem in a Research Organization, by Paula Brown and Clovis Shepherd (1956)
64. Measuring With a Broken Yardstick, by Irving Bernstein (1957)
65. How Far May a University Go in an Action Program? by Richard N. Baisden (1957)
66. Yardsticks for Human Relations Training, by Irving R. Weschler, Robert Tannenbaum, and John H. Zenger (1957). (Available only from Adult Education Association, 743 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago 11, Ill., at $1 per copy)
67. Some Procedural Problems in Arbitration, by Benjamin Aaron (1957)
68. Leadership: A Frame of Reference, by Robert Tannenbaum and Fred Massarik (1958)
69. How to Choose a Leadership Pattern, by Robert Tannenbaum and Warren H. Schmidt (1958)

PUBLICATIONS OF THE INSTITUTE OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS LOS ANGELES

(Continued)

70. The Politics of the West Coast Teamsters and Truckers, by Irving Bernstein (1958)
71. Amending the Taft-Hartley Act: A Decade of Frustration, by Benjamin Aaron (1958)
72. The Impacts of National Security Expenditure upon the Stability and Growth of the American Economy, by George H. Hildebrand and Norman V. Breckner (1958)
73. The Economic Effects of Unionism, by George H. Hildebrand (1958)
74. Unions and Civil Liberties: Claims vs. Performance, by Benjamin Aaron (1958)
75. Interunion Representation Disputes and the NLRB, by Benjamin Aaron (1958)
76. Workers' Control of Industry in Europe, by Frederic Meyers (1958)
77. Empathy Revisited: The Process of Understanding People, by Fred Massarik and Irving R. Weschler (1959)
78. Varying Images of the Professional Nurse: A Case Study, by Craig MacAndrew and Jo Eleanor Elliott (1959)
79. Wage Policy and Business Activity, by George H. Hildebrand (1959)
80. Price Theory and Union Monopoly, by Frederic Meyers (1959)
81. The Situs Dimension in Occupational Structure, by Richard T. Morris and Raymond J. Murphy (1959)
82. Economics by Negotiation, by George H. Hildebrand (1959)
83. Reducing the Risks of Labor Arbitration, by Paul Prasow (1959)

Books

Obtainable from the University of California Press, Berkeley:

The New Deal Collective Bargaining Policy, by Irving Bernstein (1950). Price: cloth, $3; paper, $2

The Pacific Coast Maritime Shipping Industry, 1930–1948, by Wytze Gorter and George H. Hildebrand. Vol. I, An Economic Profile (1952). Price $2.50. Vol. II, An Analysis of Performance (1954). Price: $5

Community Wage Patterns, by Frank C. Pierson (1953). Price: $3.75

Arbitration of Wages, by Irving Bernstein (1954). Price: $3.50

Rise of the Labor Movement in Los Angeles, by Grace Heilman Stimson (1955). Price: $6

Andrew Furuseth, Emancipator of the Seamen, by Hyman Weintraub (1959). Price: $5

Obtainable from John Wiley & Sons, 440 Fourth Ave., New York 16:

Men Who Manage, by Melville Dalton (1959). Price: $6.75

Monographs: obtainable from the Institute of Industrial Relations, Los Angeles

No. 1: Due Process on the Railroads, Revised Edition, by Joseph Lazar (1958). Price: $1.25 each, 1–9 copies; $1.00, 10–99 copies; 75c, 100 or more

No. 2: Right-to-Work Laws: A Study in Conflict, by Paul Sultan (1958). Price: $1.75 each, 1–9 copies; $1.50, 10–99 copies; $1.25, 100 or more

No. 3: The Knights of Labor in Belgium, by Léon Watillon. Translated by Frederic Meyers (1959). Price: $1.50

Popular Pamphlets: obtainable from the Institute of Industrial Relations. Price: 50c, 1–9 copies; 40c, 10–99; 30c, 100 or more

Collective Bargaining, by Edgar L. Warren and Irving Bernstein

Making Grievance Procedures Work, by Abbott Kaplan

Employing the Seriously Impaired, by Robert D. Melcher

Wages: An Introduction, by H. M. Douty

Union Security, by Orme W. Phelps

Wage Structures and Administration, by H. M. Douty

Health Insurance: Group Coverage in Industry, by Richard Baisden and John Hutchinson

Personnel Management in Small Companies, by Frances Torbert

Miscellaneous: obtainable from the Institute of Industrial Relations, Los Angeles

Problems in the Use of Indirect Methods of Attitude Measurement, by Irving R. Weschler (1951)

When It's Time for a Change, by Robert Tannenbaum (1956)

The Industrial "Rate-Buster": A Characterization, by Melville Dalton (1956)

The Introduction of Change in Industrial Organizations, by Robert Tannenbaum (1957)

Postwar Italy: A Study in Economic Contrasts, by George H. Hildebrand (1957)

Evaluating Research and Development: Annotated Proceedings of a Conference of Research Administrators Held in Los Angeles, May 10, 1952. Price: $1

An Evaluative Focus on Human Relations, by Robert Tannenbaum (Mimeo). Price: 50c

Industrial Human Relations: A Selected Bibliography, by Irving R. Weschler and Robert Tannenbaum (1956) (Mimeo). Price: 35c

Research Developments in Personnel Management, Proceedings of the First Conference, UCLA, 1956. Price: $1

The Secular Outlook: Wages and Prices, by John T. Dunlop (1957). Price: $1

A descriptive brochure on the Institute of Industrial Relations, University of California, Los Angeles, is available free of charge.

Steward Training Materials
Fact Sheet 1

November
1960

University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

Requirements of a Good Grievance Procedure

1. Fairness:

A. The employee should feel free to use the procedure without fear of reprisal.

B. The union should participate at every stage of the procedure.

C. The end point of the procedure should be one in which the dispute is finally settled by an impartial third party if settlement between the union and management fails at earlier stages.

2. Speed:

A. There should be definite time limits that are enforced for each stage of the procedure.

B. It should not be possible for a grievance to drag on and on.

C. Inducements should be built in the procedure encouraging settlement at the first stage.

3. Understandability:

A. Unnecessary red tape should be eliminated.

B. Employees and supervision should understand the procedure.

C. The procedure should be uniform for every employee and every type of grievance.

D. It may be desirable however to provide for short cuts in disciplinary cases, especially those involving discharges.

4. Comprehensiveness:

A. The procedure ought to be wide enough to admit all grievances whether or not specifically related to contract or regulations.

JAN 1962

THIS IS THE

AFL-CIO

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR & CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

AFL CIO

PREAMBLE TO THE AFL-CIO CONSTITUTION

The establishment of this Federation through the merger of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations is an expression of the hopes and aspirations of the working people of America.

We seek the fulfillment of these hopes and aspirations through democratic processes within the framework of our constitutional government and consistent with our institutions and traditions.

At the collective bargaining table, in the community, in the exercise of the rights and responsibilities of citizenship, we shall responsibly serve the interests of all the American people.

We pledge ourselves to the more effective organization of working men and women; to the securing to them of full recognition and enjoyment of the rights to which they are justly entitled; to the achievement of ever higher standards of living and working conditions; to the attainment of security for all the people; to the enjoyment of the leisure which their skills make possible; and to the strengthening and extension of our way of life and the fundamental freedoms which are the basis of our democratic society.

We shall combat resolutely the forces which seek to undermine the democratic institutions of our nation and to enslave the human soul. We shall strive always to win full respect for the dignity of the human individual whom our unions serve.

With Divine guidance, grateful for the fine traditions of our past, confident of meeting the challenge of the future, we proclaim this constitution.

THE AFL-CIO
. . . What It Is

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations—usually referred to as the AFL-CIO—is a federation of 131 autonomous, democratic labor unions in the United States.

The AFL-CIO was established on December 5, 1955, when the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations merged into a single trade union center. This merger ended a 20-year split in the ranks of the American labor movement, uniting the AFL, which was founded in 1881 and the CIO, founded in 1935.

The AFL-CIO is composed of 13.5 million men and women, who have joined labor unions to bargain collectively with their employers. The unions are their representatives in negotiations with employers on wages, hours and working conditions.

Out of these negotiations come labor-management agreements or contracts, under which the workers have job security and are protected against the whims of an employer.

There are more than 60,000 local unions in the national and international unions of the AFL-CIO. In the various states and cities, several hundred AFL-CIO central bodies represent the workers of each area in connection with a host of community, legislative and political activities.

The unions of the AFL-CIO have signed more than 100,000 collective bargaining agreements with several hundred thousand American employers in every industry, craft and trade in the country.

THE AFL-CIO
. . . . Its aims and aspirations

The aims and aspirations of the AFL-CIO are clearly spelled out in its Constitution. In brief they are:

- To improve wages, hours and working conditions for workers.
- To bring the benefits of free collective bargaining to all workers.
- To achieve equality of opportunity for all workers, regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.
- To support legislation which will aid workers and to oppose harmful legislation.

- To protect and strengthen democratic institutions and to preserve America's democratic traditions.
- To aid in promoting the cause of peace and freedom in the world.
- To protect the labor movement against corruption and racketeers.
- To safeguard the labor movement from Communists, Fascists or other totalitarians.
- To encourage workers to register and vote and to exercise fully their responsibilities as citizens.
- To encourage the sale of union-made goods through the use of the union label.

THE LABOR MOVEMENT

. . . Its accomplishments

The accomplishments of the American labor movement in achieving a better standard of living for workers are unchallenged. As a result of the efforts of American trade unions, workers in this nation have a higher income, work fewer hours, enjoy more protection and benefits such as pensions and vacations, and work under healthier and safer conditions than in any other nation in the world.

Sweatshops have been almost completely eliminated. Child labor has been almost abolished. The American worker has indeed achieved a sense of human dignity never before achieved, in America or in the world.

But the efforts of the labor movement have not been confined to these fields. The trade unions of the AFL-CIO have been staunch advocates of all that benefits the community as a whole.

These are several of the fights the union movement has waged and won:

- Universal free public education.
- Laws providing for a minimum wage and maximum work week.
- Workmen's compensation to protect workers injured on the job.
- Unemployment insurance to provide an income for workers unemployed through no fault of their own. Of course, this also helps to protect the whole economy from depressions created through mass unemployment.
- Social Security, which brings dignity to workers in their twilight years.

THE AFL-CIO
. . . How it functions

The AFL-CIO is a federation of national and international unions.

Each is fully autonomous. Each carries on collective bargaining with employers; maintains its own headquarters; elects its own officers; maintains the staff needed for administration and service; sets its own dues; provides the services its members need and want.

The AFL-CIO holds biennial conventions which establish a general policy on economic, legislative and political matters. The convention also elects the officers of the AFL-CIO. The convention is the supreme governing body of the organization.

The first president of the AFL-CIO was George Meany, who was elected unanimously at the merger convention which established the AFL-CIO. Elected at the same time was the organization's first secretary-treasurer, William F. Schnitzler.

The AFL-CIO has 27 vice presidents. The president, the secretary-treasurer and the 27 vice presidents constitute the Executive Council, which is the official governing body of the organization between conventions.

The AFL-CIO has two other official bodies —the Executive Committee and the General Board. The Executive Committee is composed of the president, the secretary-treasurer and six vice presidents, elected by the Executive Council. This group meets more often than the Executive Council and serves as an advisory group to the executive officers.

The General Board is composed of the Executive Council plus one officer of each affiliated union and one officer of each of the seven constitutional departments. The General Board meets annually to act upon matters referred to it by the Executive Council.

The organizational structure of the AFL-CIO (described in chart form on the preceding pages) insures the preservation of the democratic process in the organization.

The AFL-CIO, through its headquarters staff, provides services to the affiliated unions, in the fields of research, education, legal aid, public relations and other matters. It serves as the general representative of all the affiliated unions in appearances before Congress and in dealing with the various departments of the government.

Through its field staff, the AFL-CIO aids affiliates and organizes workers into unions of their own choosing, giving recognition to the principle that both craft and industrial unions are appropriate, equal and necessary as methods of union organization.

The AFL-CIO has established, and is vigorously enforcing, a six-point program of ethical standards, designed to rid the labor movement of racketeers. These Codes of Ethical Practices, based on the unwritten law of the trade union movement, insist that union office and union funds are a public trust to be used only for the benefit of workers. Unions violating this code of honor face action on the part of the federation. Unions are expected to observe these codes, which are basic policy of the AFL-CIO.

The AFL-CIO has the following constitutionally established committees: Legislation, Civil Rights, Political Education, Ethical Practices, International Affairs, Organization, Education, Social Security, Economic Policy, Community Services, Housing, Research, Public Relations, Safety and Occupational Health, Veterans Affairs.

The AFL-CIO publishes a weekly newspaper, the AFL-CIO News, and a monthly magazine, The AFL-CIO American Federationist. Some of the departments of the AFL-CIO issue specialized publications.

THE AFL-CIO
. . . And the community

"What's good for America is good for labor."

That is the motto and the practice of the AFL-CIO. It is a belief which has led the AFL-CIO, in its constitution, to pledge itself to "responsibly serve the interests of all the American people."

One of the ways, of course, is through the exercise of the rights and responsibilities of citizenship. To aid in thus advancing the general welfare the AFL-CIO has established the Committee on Political Education.

COPE seeks to inform union members and their neighbors about the issues and the candidates and to report on the record of stewardship of public servants. It seeks to get workers registered so they can vote and to get them to the polls on Election Day.

COPE is financed through the voluntary contributions of union members. It is not a political party. In fact, the resolution adopted unanimously by the first constitutional convention of the AFL-CIO states: "We reaffirm organized labor's traditional policy of avoiding entangling alliances with any other group and of supporting worthy candidates regardless of party affiliation."

The AFL-CIO is active in the international community, too, through its membership in the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, an organization of free, democratic unions throughout the world which seeks better living standards for all people.

Through the ICFTU and its regional organizations, the AFL-CIO is playing a major role in fighting attempts by communists to subvert the trade union movement.

Another way in which the AFL-CIO supports the community is through the legislative policies it supports and advocates. It seeks legislation which will benefit the general public.

Members of the AFL-CIO, in communities everywhere in America, aid in raising funds for worthy community endeavors. They hold positions of responsibility on committees of all sorts of community organizations and give generously of their time and effort to promote worthwhile undertakings.

The AFL-CIO Committee on Community Services, through regular training programs, helps prepare union members for these posts.

Whether it is a campaign for better schools or more hospitals or a drive to eliminate slums or aid in combatting juvenile delinquents, AFL-CIO members will be found working diligently.

For they know that everything that benefits their community, and their nation, is of benefit to labor.

THE AFL-CIO

Publication No. 20

Revised, January, 1962

Issued by American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

George Meany
President

Wm. F. Schnitzler
Secretary-Treasurer

AFL-CIO Building Washington 6, D. C.

Printed in U.S.A.

LABOR MONOGRAPH NO. 2

a Contemporary Analysis of a Labor Union

AMALGAMATED ASSOCIATION OF STREET, ELECTRIC RAILWAY AND MOTOR COACH EMPLOYES OF AMERICA, AFL-CIO

DEVELOPMENT STRUCTURE FUNCTIONS

by
MILES E. HOFFMAN
Department of Economics and Management
TEMPLE UNIVERSITY
Philadelphia, Pa.

Printed in U.S.A.

LABOR MONOGRAPH NO. 3

a Contemporary Analysis of a Labor Union

GRAND INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE
ENGINEERS

DEVELOPMENT STRUCTURE FUNCTIONS

by
MILES E. HOFFMAN
Department of Economics
and Management
TEMPLE UNIVERSITY
Philadelphia, Pa.

HANDBOOK ON CENTRAL LABOR BODIES:

FUNCTIONS and ACTIVITIES

Joan G. Kilpatrick
and
Miles C. Stanley

WEST VIRGINIA UNIVERSITY BULLETIN

LABOR MONOGRAPH NO. 6

A Contemporary
Analysis of A Labor Union

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF TEAMSTERS, CHAUFFEURS, WAREHOUSEMEN AND HELPERS OF AMERICA

DEVELOPMENT — STRUCTURE — FUNCTIONS

by

MILES E. HOFFMAN
School of Business Administration
TEMPLE UNIVERSITY
Philadelphia, Penna.

Copyright 1964 PRINTED IN U.S.A.

February 8, 1965

MEMO:

To: Emory Via

From: Irving Brotslaw

Subject: Spring class,
AFSCME Local No. 82

I see by the papers that you are scheduled to teach the class in union administration and grievance handling for Local 82, AFSCME. This local is composed of employees in the various departments of the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. There is no contract, but there is a formal grievance procedure, a copy of which is enclosed.

The class is called "Union Administration," but should also include a fair amount of grievance handling and related topics, similar, I suppose, to what you did with District Council 48. If you need additional information, our local contact is Mrs. Toni Tschanz, whose address is 4396 North 27th Street, Milwaukee. Her extension at the university is ~~4786.~~ 4698

257-1064 Steve Clark is the District Representative servicing Local 82. He is located in Madison (713 Insurance Building, 119 Monona Avenue). When I met with the local to arrange the class, he indicated that he had put together a kit on union structure, etc. which might be helpful in teaching this class. You may want to contact him to get this information.

The class will begin on Wednesday, March 10 at 7:20 p.m. 7:00 on Notice It will meet on the Kenwood campus, in Bolton 84. Bolton Hall is the brand new classroom building, and is located at 3222 North Downer Avenue. No I will be glad to escort you to the building on the first night of classes, in case you have any difficulty in locating it. If you have any other questions, please let me know.

? Mrs. Tschanz has apparently recruited a sufficient number of students, and she is going to give me a list of the names and addresses of the enrollees. We, in turn, will notify each of them by mail about starting date, location, etc. It would seem, therefore, that the class will go.

Best regards.

IB

9 sessions?

How many? 24-25
Composition
Maintenance
3 or 4 affiliates

IB/sh encl.

Via See Clark — (Check staff from Chapman) re: structure
rec. grievance procedure
Stewards manual

4/7/65

Summary of points from last week

What can we do with these suggestions

Who can give performance on them

Union – Committee – as is? – need structure?

mgt –

What will it take?

info –

policy formation

organization

Specific tasks

Does "Participation ~~emerge~~ emerge as one key?"

What is participation? ~~How~~ What are the ways that members participate — dues – meetings – committees – speaking – grievances – talk on the side – reading notices and correspondence —

~~(over)~~

Beyond The Picket Line

HOW TO ORGANIZE A STRIKE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

A REPORT

to

The Fund

for the Republic

Union Constitutions

LEO BROMWICH

NAME	AFSCME Local 82 Position	Univ of Wis - Milw Job
Chrobak, John	Trustee	Supervisor - Electrical Shop
Holle, Robert		Janitor
Kohel, Loren		Plumber
Krimmer, Frank P.	Steward	Maintenance
McCabe, Alvin	Trustee	B. M. H. III
Owens, Thomas G.	Treasurer	Painter
Puchalski, Anni	Steward	B. M. H. II
Puchaslski, Emilian		Painter
Recker, Carl	Steward	Steamfitter
Sather, Allan
Sherosky, John	Vice-Pres. - Steward	Operating Engineer
Short, Mabel	Trustee	PBX Operator
Smoody, Philip	Steward
Tschanz, Toni	Secretary	Library Assistant
Wagner, Earl	Steward	Painter
Halkola, Paul	Steward	UW - Milwaukee BMH-II
Bie, George		Univ of Wis. Motor Vehicle Oper
Sutton, James	Steward	Plant Protion
Grennier, Lawrence	President

Educational Department, ILGWU
1710 Broadway,
New York 19, N. Y.

IDEAS EDUCATION COMMITTEE MIGHT CONSIDER

1. Hand out a book or a pamphlet each month.
2. Use sketches from JUSTICE to post notices of your union meeting.
3. Hold initiation meetings for new members.
4. Give "welcome new member" kit to each new member.
5. Write a welcome letter to the family of each new member.
6. Each month hold at least a very short meeting in each shop, on some subject determined by the Executive Board
7. Play union songs over the loud speaker before and after each union meeting.
8. Show a movie (from Education Department) during a period of each union meeting. Allow time for a brief discussion of the movie.
9. Attempt to get free time on local radio and TV stations to tell the union story.
10. Distribute JUSTICE to key people in the community.
11. Sponsor a contest, with a prize, for the best photograph or drawing of a shop or union activity.
12. Sponsor an essay contest for children of ILGWU members, and give a prize for the best essay on "why my mother or father belongs to the union".
13. Offer a class in family problems for union members.
14. If your local cannot afford to offer classes alone, pitch in with other ILGWU locals in the area and organize an area education council which could sponsor classes.
15. Hold an exhibit in the local union hall (or a community building of hobby activities of ILGWU members.
16. Sponsor a lecture series on community problems jointly, with the Teachers Union or other labor organization or community organization.
17. Start shop chairman training program.
18. Give each shop chairman a guide to union and basic duties, and a brief analysis of the applicable Unemployment and Workmen's Compensation laws.
19. Organize a Health and Safety Committee in your local union.

20. Require classes for local union officers after they are elected.

21. Special leaflets and bulletins for your members when important legislation is pending in Congress or the state legislature.

22. Representation from your local union on the boards or community agencies.

23. Sponsor an exhibit at the county fair.

24. Present a speaker on "what unions are about" to the graduating Class of the local high schools.

25. Joint meetings between your executive board and the ministers in your communities (teacher-service clubs), PTA's, etc.

26. Send students to ILGWU summer institutes.

27. Organize a week-end institute for shop chairmen at your local union headquarters.

28. Decorate your union hall with ILGWU posters.

29. Put up a mural (painting or photograph) in your union hall, on wage-earners' subject.

30. Sponsor a drop-in center for retired workers.

31. Cooperate with other community agencies to set up a Teenage Canteen.

32. Sponsor a Boy Scout or Brownie group.

33. Collective buying contract to get savings for union members on their purchases.

34. A locally sponsored radio and TV program.

35. Credit union.

36. Blood bank.

37. Cooperate with local health agencies to get members (and their children) immunized, X-rayed, etc.

38. Sick and Welfare Committee to visit the sick and bereaved.

39. Union Counselling program.

40. An aid fund for needy members.

41. Recreation program with activities for people of all ages.

42. Local union library, or a joint program with the community library.

43. Put posters in public places.

44. Attractive union hall, with a union banner, American flag and a supervising Union Hall Committee.

45. Method for publicizing progress on grievance appeals.

46. Union-wide discussions on contract changes before and during negotiations.

47. An effective collective program to raise voluntary funds for political action and education.

48. Use small group discussion methods at your local union meeting.

49. Assign someone to make sure every new person is welcomed and made to feel at home at union meetings. (Meeting's host).

50. Short social programs (coffee after each union meeting).

51. Exhibit of union made products especially products made by IIGWU members, at local occasions, shops and union hall.

oeiu:153
eb/7/29/59

Convincing the Non-Union Member In your Plant—Tips for Organizing

When the term organizing the unorganized is used, the "unorganized" are thought of, generally, as those workers who are outside any established collective bargaining relationship. Such workers do constitute the bulk of the unorganized in this country.

In addition, however, there are large numbers of workers, actually part of bargaining units for which unions have collective bargaining recognition, who are still in the unorganized category.

Their hours, wages, fringe benefits and general working conditions are determined by union-management negotiation. Their seniority rights are defined by union contract; they are protected against arbitrary supervisory decisions by the same instrumentality. They enjoy all the rights and benefits won by the union members with whom they work.

Yet they do not belong to the union. They are still unorganized. They are the free riders.

In these particular unorganized workers, unions have a potential large enough to warrant special attention. Indeed, in those areas where traditional union security provisions are denied by state laws, the organizing of these workers is of major importance.

It is timely that this article should be issued now. It contains excellent suggestions for internal organizing. I recommend it to every union official and member interested in the growth of his own union and the continued advance of the trade union movement.

JOHN LIVINGSTON,
Director of Organization, AFL-CIO

Sign Up the Free Riders

"Free riders" have always been a headache to union members. They're the workers in a plant who don't join the union although they enjoy the benefits of the union contract. In recent years they've been an increasingly grave problem, especially in the South, because of the combination of the Taft-Hartley Act and state "right-to-work" laws.

These laws have put unions in a vise. They force unions to represent everyone in the bargaining unit and yet outlaw the union shop. In effect, the laws tell people they can have union protection even if they don't pay for it. That just doesn't make sense. Someone has to pay for it.

Each nonmember is a stumbling block to a union. The record shows unions win better contracts where membership is high. Where membership is strong, unions can handle grievances with better results than where membership is weak. There is a definite connection between membership strength and good working conditions.

The only thing to do, as long as these anti-union laws are on the books, is to try to sign everybody up. This is a local union job. Stewards and officers of each local must develop and carry through their own organizing drive. They must create the feeling that union membership is expected of everyone in the bargaining unit.

Use the checklist on page 7 to find out how your local measures up in its organizing activities and to get ideas for signing up nonmembers.

The backbone of organizing, of course, is the day-to-day contact of stewards and workers on the job. In addition, there are a number of techniques that can be useful to create interest in a special organizing drive. These include sign-up days, gate checks, house calls, and membership contests.

The local executive board and the

This article is based on material originally developed by the Textile Workers Union of America.

PAGINATION INCORRECT

stewards should plan and carry out the organizing drive, laying out specific assignments and getting regular reports as the drive moves ahead. Set up a timetable and lay out specific and realistic goals in terms of the number of new members you are aiming for.

Timing is important. Drives should take place at the best psychological moment, such as at contract expiration or when a major grievance has everybody stirred up.

Make a Nonmember Card File

To help in planning, you need accurate information about your nonmembers. While it's possible simply to list them, a card file of all nonmembers in your shop is much better.

Use 3 x 5 cards. On each card there should be space for the name, address, telephone number, job title, hiring date, and department of the nonmember. Also allow space for listing dates of contacts during the drive, the name of the steward who makes the contact, and his remarks.

Analyze the Situation In Your Shop

When the card file is in good shape, see which departments are poorly organized. Concentrate on the weakest departments, but don't forget the nonmembers elsewhere.

Brief the "Organizers"

Call a briefing session for all stewards and others who are to work on

SAMPLE LETTER

Date

TO ALL.....PLANT WORKERS

Greetings:

On Friday, Sept. Local 000, AFL-CIO, will have a special sign-up day at the plant in an effort to increase union membership.

Union officers and stewards will be available in all rest rooms and locker rooms before and after shift change to accommodate nonmembers wishing to join the union.

If you are a member, you can help from now through sign-up day by talking to nonmembers and urging them to join when the day comes.

If you don't belong to the union, you should. You need the union and it needs your talent and support. No man is an island. What he does or does not do affects others.

Every nonmember hurts himself and his fellow workers by not being in the union with us. The record shows unions win better contracts and handle grievances with better results where union membership is high.

You can help yourself and your brothers and sisters in the plant by joining on sign-up day.

Fraternally,

President, Local 000, AFL-CIO

Above is a sample letter which might be used as a basis for a letter issued by your local in a "sign-up" campaign.

CHECK LIST FOR LOCALS

These questions are intended to suggest some of the activities your local might carry on in its internal organizing activities.

Your committee is urged to review them and to use them as a reminder.

When the majority of these questions can be answered truly in the affirmative, your local's organizing program should be on its way to success.

This list is by no means final. Add to it as you see fit. The greater your activity, the greater will be your success, provided that you have properly organized that activity.

	Yes	No
1. Does your local have a nonmember card file?	___	___
2. Has your executive board enlisted the stewards in organizing work?	___	___
3. Have all stewards been briefed on the local organizing situation, and have they been given training on how to sign the nonmembers?	___	___
4. Has your local gone over its organization situation with the representative assigned to service your local?	___	___
5. Is your local properly equipped with literature for organizing?	___	___
6. Does your local contact the new worker immediately upon his or her coming to work?	___	___
7. Do the stewards contact the nonmembers regularly on the job?	___	___
8. Is each steward equipped with literature, application cards and dues deduction cards?	___	___
9. Does your local have regular stewards' meetings to discuss and plan organizing activity?	___	___
10. Does your local have sign-up days in locker rooms and in other permissible areas on company property?	___	___
11. Has your local ever tried house-calling to sign nonmembers?	___	___
12. Has your local arranged social affairs and invited the nonmembers?	___	___
13. Has your local analyzed your nonmember situation and determined where you should concentrate your efforts?	___	___
14. Has your local broken down your nonmember card file and analyzed it?	___	___
15. Has your local tried to build teams of active members for use in recruiting the nonmembers?	___	___
16. Has your local checked to see whether any stewards need help?	___	___
17. Is organizing on the agenda of every executive committee or officer meeting?	___	___
18. Does your local need a school to train your stewards?	___	___
19. Does your executive board consult with individual stewards on their problems?	___	___
20. Has your local ever tried to get any nonmembers together to talk things over?	___	___
21. Has your local tried getting your union members in the departments together at lunch or after hours to see what they can do to help get a campaign underway?	___	___

the drive. If the local can afford it, make this an off-the-job meeting. This will show the whole plant you mean business.

Make full use of the card file. Using a blackboard, spell out the situation in each department. Discuss goals and target dates.

Urge the stewards to do most of their work right on the job. Any other work, such as housecalls, sign-up days, gatechecks, etc., should be mapped as part of the overall plan.

Give each steward application and dues deduction cards. Tell them to keep these handy so they can sign the nonmember whenever they get the chance. Arm them with literature. This should include copies of your contract, materials your international prepares for new members, and "This is the AFL-CIO," published by the National AFL-CIO.

Set up a schedule of regular reports from each steward to the local president and chairman of the organizing drive.

Training Skits

There is a right and a wrong approach to nonmembers. The right approach is to be persuasive and factual. The wrong approach is to be loud or make threats.

Training should include practice sessions or skits to give workers in your drive an opportunity to try out their organizing techniques. This is like play-acting. One person takes the part of the steward, another the part of a nonmember, and in front of the whole group they act out a discussion of why a worker should join the union.

These skits should go into the use of literature, the dues deduction card, the explanation of dues and initiation fees, and the answers to questions a nonmember might ask.

Do it like this:

1. Pick two stewards, one to play the nonmember, the other the steward.
2. Explain that the steward is to talk to the nonmember just as he would to a worker in his own department.
3. The person playing the worker should be full of questions. Make sure these are the kind nonmembers might actually ask a steward or other union officer, such as:

   "What is this union you're talking about?"

   "You say the union settles grievances. The foreman told me he'd take care of any grievances I have, so why should I join the union?"

   "The foreman said the company gives wage increases and improves working conditions whenever it's necessary, so why do we need a union, anyway?"

   "OK, maybe you think you need a union. But look at me. I get the same wages and benefits you get without joining the union. So why should I join and pay dues?"

Don't drag out the skit too long. About seven to ten minutes should be enough. After the skit, ask everyone at the meeting what they think of the answers the steward gave and how these answers could be improved. Get comment on things well done and suggestions for improving the steward's arguments.

Sign-Up Days

The law says you can organize on company property on non-work time and in non-work areas. Some contracts give similar rights.

Announce specific dates as sign-up days. Get your local talent to work on posters. Don't make them controversial; have a simple design or picture plus a minimum number of words. Just say that everybody should join and that stewards and officers will be available in the rest rooms and locker rooms before and after shift change on a specific date.

Send every worker in the plant a letter a few days in advance as a reminder of the drive. Pass out leaflets to both members and nonmembers as they come into the plant on sign-up day. This should be a simple union message asking everybody to join and take an active part in the drive. A sample letter is reproduced on page 7.

On sign-up day, man each rest room and locker room with at least two officers or stewards—three or four would be better. Have them circulate among the group, asking each person if he belongs to the union. Urge the nonmembers to sign up. Some will do so just because they were asked on sign-up day.

There should be no arguments with nonmembers. The worst thing that can happen is a loud argument, giving management an excuse to interfere.

Sign-up days should not be overdone. Twice a year is enough.

Gate Checks

Several unions use this method effectively. On gate check days these unions mobilize local officers and stewards before plant gates at the start of each shift. Workers entering are asked to show their membership cards. Where the overwhelming majority are members, this puts terrific pressure on the nonmembers to join.

Like sign-up days, gate checks should be well planned. All gates must be properly manned. The more members mobilized for the effort, the greater the success will be.

Use tables at the gates to sign them up. Sturdy card tables will do. Literature and union cards should be on hand. A short leaflet to all workers, calling on them to join and support the union, can be used. Posters, carried like picket signs by some of the members, with the simple message that everybody should belong to the union, can be used to add color.

Stewards should approach the nonmembers from their own departments. Faced with a polite but public situation, some nonmembers will sign up.

Like sign-up days, the gate check can lose its effectiveness if used too often. Three or four times a year will be enough to supplement day-to-day steward activity on the job.

House Calls

House calls are very effective, since they permit direct contact and reasoned discussion. Like all other organizing activity, they must be thoroughly planned. The card file should be broken down by area. Best way is to get a map of the town and mark out areas assigned to teams.

Expenses like gasoline should be met from the local treasury. Since the local collects dues from each new member signed, the outlay involved will be more than repaid.

Each team should have two members assigned, as far as possible, to work in their own neighborhoods. But don't give them more territory than they can cover during the campaign. House-calling is slow work.

Teams should be thoroughly briefed on arguments to be used, goals of the campaign and target dates. Housecallers should be warned against getting into name-calling arguments with nonmembers. They enter each home as guests and should, above all, observe the rules of hospitality.

For training, skits like the one outlined earlier may be used. Teams should be furnished with literature and cards. Lists of nonmembers or nonmembers cards should be distributed. (Have a duplicate card file. Don't hand out your master card file. You need this for checking progress of the drive.) Arrangements should be made for regular reports.

It is often best to make appointments in advance with nonmembers. A phone call will usually do the trick. Where appointments cannot be made, go ahead anyway, even though several visits may be needed.

Telephone Campaigns

Calling nonmembers at home and discussing the problem over the phone often helps. Like house calls, such campaigns should be planned right down through the kind of persuasion to be used. Phone campaigns should not substitute for house calls, since nothing is as good as direct personal contact.

Contests and Competition

There is no substitute for the competitive spirit. By stimulating competition and channelling it properly, much can be done to build membership.

Do this by getting the officers and stewards together for reports and comparisons. Publish the results by departments or neighborhoods.

Contests help. Set up a drive for a certain period and announce a contest with prizes—a bond, a dinner for the winners, a week at a union summer school, an all-expense weekend at a nearby resort, or some other prize within the means of the local.

Contests can be in several parts. A prize for the steward who does the best job, a prize for the member who does the best job, a prize for the most successful housecalling team, etc.

These contests should be of a definite length . . . a month, six weeks or whatever the situation requires. At least two membership meetings should be planned during the contest period, one to announce the drive and explain it in full detail, and one about midway to give detailed reports.

Social Programs

Social activity in your local can be an effective device. Here are some suggestions:

1. Small social gatherings or parties to which you can invite key nonmembers and have "man to man" talks with them.
2. A dance to which you can invite free all nonmembers who sign dues deduction cards.
3. A party or dinner for which the charge is nominal and to which you can invite the nonmembers, using this as a recruiting device.

4. A picnic or outing, in which you invite all members and non-members to participate.

Cash Incentives

You can take a cue from industry by developing an incentive plan of your own. Many locals have had good results when they paid stewards a nominal sum, say $1, for each new member signed up. Money paid as commissions is recovered with the first month's dues, so it's a good investment.

Initiate New Members

At the end of your campaign, be sure to have initiation ceremonies at a local meeting for the new members you've signed up. Many internationals prepare materials for use by new members. Write to your own international for these.

The Organizer Goes to Simpsonville, USA

An IAM Great Lakes Region organizing conference, October, 1959, devoted one session to mapping out an organizing campaign at a mythical plant.

Conference participants were divided into groups of ten, and then given the descriptive material below concerning the plant, its owners, the community, plant workers, history of past organizing endeavors, and a resume of the working conditions.

On the basis of the facts presented, the groups devised their campaigns in broad outline, suggesting points for emphasis, techniques for dealing with the problems implied, proposing subjects for organizing leaflets, blocking out areas for which additional information was needed, pinpointing pitfalls foreshadowed by the outline.

The campaigns then were described by each group chairman, the first report being given in full with successive reports being confined to differing approaches or ideas not advanced previously.

Following a spirited discussion of the reports a summary of the reports and the discussion was made by the conference leaders.

A CASE STUDY

Simpsonville, USA, is a town of 40,000, the county seat of Omer County in the middle of America's heartland. The population is made up mostly of sturdy farmers and ex-farmers, church-going and conservative. After the war, an important machine-tool plant was built, employing 800. It is called the Cornbelt Machine Tool Company and is a wholly-owned subsidiary of a larger firm in the east, the Sharp Machine Tool Company, which is unionized.

Since it is the only industry around of any size, except for a fertilizer plant and some grain-milling, its wages are higher than most rates in the area. It is considered a desirable place to work, and even has a waiting list of job applicants. The company has what would be called an "enlightened" personnel policy, and puts out a house organ that always contains the latest bowling scores and pictures of the biggest fish caught over the weekends.

Some workers from an industrial area 200 miles away have been hired into certain semi-skilled and skilled jobs which the company apparently could not fill locally. A group of these are interested in an organizing drive. The organizer, Don Drysdale, asked them to get a small group of union sympathizers together (people they were sure of) to discuss the possibilities of organization.

Eight persons showed up at the motel—two of them refugees from Autoville, an industrial city to the north, four workers who were born and raised in the area, a woman from the shipping department, and an office worker who was also a native. The first two wanted a "hard-hitting campaign to wake this sleepy burg up."

"These wages stink," one of them said. "I get $1.70 for the same job that paid $2.20 in Autoville. Let's get a copy of those rates in the east and blast them with it."

(Don didn't say so, but he already had the rates from the east. They averaged 15 cents higher than Cornbelt in most job classifications. As he was able to reconstruct them from the discussion, the rates at Cornbelt ranged from $1.30 base to $2.40 top skilled, with a concentration at the lower end of the scale.)

One of the local workers said: "The company is making a lot of changes. People are worried. They don't know what will happen next. Just last week ten people in my department were shifted out of their jobs because of new equipment. They're doing odd jobs around the plant now at the base rate."

The office worker also talked about changes the company was making. They had recently brought in some IBM equipment that had displaced a number of clerks. He said he thought they could get "quite a few" people to sign union cards.

The conversation rambled on, with each one in turn voicing the reasons for his dissatisfaction. Four of the workers came from one department, Production, where the superintendent was a bull-of-the-woods type and had never heard of the "human relations" approach. One had a brother-in-law who had been laid off recently when the company consolidated several operations. The woman commented several times about the unsanitary conditions in the "rest rooms," as she called them.

Don was able to pick up some information in the course of the discussion. The company had laid off about 200 workers in the recession two years ago, keeping the highest skilled workers who could cover most of the jobs in the plant. Most of these workers had been rehired by now, however, although the company did not take them all back. Employment had come back to the previous level and production had increased about 20%.

The first thing we'd better do, said one, is to answer this letter the company put out, brandishing a copy in the air. The organizer asked to see it. It was the usual soothing syrup of the professional industrial relations man but his trained eye picked up a sentence or two that flashed like neon signs.

"The company is reviewing its wage structure with an eye to possible upward adjustments in the interests of fairness and in accordance with our progressive policy of always being in the lead but these of course are dependent upon our having flexibility in the operation of our plants."

The final sentence also caught his eye. "We hope that our present fine relations with our employees will continue so that the expansion of our great company can take place here. Cordially yours, Emerson Spaulding, President." Apparently the word is already out, he thought.

"Well, when do we get this show on the road?" said one of the eager beavers. "Give me some cards and let's get moving."

"Not just yet," the organizer said. "I want to think about this a little bit. Meanwhile, stay under cover. The company knows something already and it's too early to show yourselves. I'll be in touch with you soon."

DISCUSSION GUIDE

Based on what you already know about this plant, and about present conditions, consider the following questions:

1. Is there anything you would not do, at least until you had further information? Give reasons in each case.
2. Specifically, what information would you want to get about this situation in the next few days and why would you want it? List it in the order of its importance to you.
3. Do you have any hunches about a theme that this campaign might have? If so, state the theme and give the evidence from the case study that supports the validity of this approach.
4. What points brought out in the case study, in your opinion, would make a poor basis for an organizational appeal? Why?
5. If you can project the campaign that far, what kind of campaign literature would you want for a start and what point would you make? Be as specific as you can.
6. What specific assignments would you give the members of this committee?

Films for Organizing

LOCAL 100. 32 min. Produced by National Film Board of Canada. Rental $3.00.

A foreman fires a man. This starts action by a group of workers to organize a union. An organizer comes out from union headquarters to assist. There are committee meetings in a worker's home. A union is organized and a contract signed.

ORGANIZING BEGINS AT HOME. Color. 16 min. Produced by AFL-CIO. Rental $2.00.

Series of slides with sound put on 16 mm sound film. Prepared for the AFL-CIO Organizing Department Conferences. Useful with local union (voluntary) organizing committees, or with full-time staff organizers as a basis for discussing house calls.

DUES AND THE UNION. 17 min. Produced by National Film Board of Canada. Rental $2.50.

A skilled tradesman, and old-timer in his local, takes a young pipe fitter in hand and shows him the importance of union dues and the services derived from them.

Educational Department, ILGWU
1710 Broadway
New York 19, New York

GETTING EDUCATION UNDER WAY

Every local union of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union should have an educational committee. It is however easier to say that a local union should have a committee than to maintain one.

There are varying kinds of locals with as many difficulties in establishing an education committee. These range all the way from local unions having no education program, and no functioning educational committee, to locals having both a functioning educational committee and a full time educational director.

You might think that each of these locals would need a separate kind of handbook, but when you think about the problems all of them are trying to solve, the basic questions that have to be answered turn out to be the same whether the local has 25,000 members or only 100 members.

Each local has the problem of:

First, what is the Education Committee supposed to do?

Second, how do you enlist people for service on the Education Committee?

Third, what is the best way of doing what it is supposed to do?

Specifically, a local Union Education Committee will find that its chief problems boil down to:

a) Making sure that the local union members are using all the facilities, resources and help that are theirs as members of the ILGWU.

b) Organizing, promoting, and sponsoring training programs to help the local union officers, executive board members and chairmen to be as effective as possible in the performance of their duties.

c) Working out ways to get information and ideas to the members of the union, so that as wage earners and as citizens they act in their own best interest.

d) Encouraging any kind of activity which takes advantage of the fact that the union enables people to work together and to supply themselves with articles or services they couldn't otherwise get, or at a lower price than would be available otherwise.

e) Encouraging and supporting information programs designed to give the people in the union an accurate picture of union activities.

Thus, good examples of helping union members make use of all the union assistance they are entitled to would be:

a) Seeing to it that all chairmen and executive board members receive all pertinent publications and information material.

b) Helping to insure that each member receives JUSTICE.

c) Supporting efforts to get a good union counselling program going.

d) Making sure that use is made of the union's research and engineering facilities when they are needed.

e) Getting everyone in the shop to understand how to deal with a grievance.

f) An Education Committee might promote the training of officers by making the shop chairmen's meeting a continuing shop chairmen's-training program.

g) Organizing a special officers' training institute after each local union election.

h) Getting the local to send a specified number of properly selected student delegates to the ILGWU summer institutes.

i) Sponsoring programs designed to train local union people in teaching methods so they can lead local union discussions and classes with the help of the Education Department.

j) Taking part in community or local union week-end institutes. Distributing pamphlets and paper-back books that deal with union problems to union officers and executive board members.

Getting information to members might be carried on in a number of ways:

1) Giving members notice of meetings by posting notices on the union bulletin boards.

2) Getting a local union newspaper started.

3) Preparing and distributing leaflets.

4) Presenting educational programs and films at membership meetings.

5) Supplying shop chairmen with notes and facts to pass along to the people in their shop.

6) Organizing an initiation program for new members.

Good examples of membership service programs which have been started (but not continued by the education committee) are:

1) Collective buying programs.

2) Sponsorship of children's and family classes and activities.

3) Blood bank, credit union, co-operatives.

The best way a local union education committee can get information about the union out into the community would be to help get a Public Relations Committee operating, under supervision of the local manager. Actually, few ILGWU local unions have advanced this far. Most typical activities of this kind are:

a) Exhibits at the county fair.

b) Distribution of JUSTICE and other union publications to key people in the community.

c) Organization of Citizens' Committees during important union campaigns.

d) Joint activities with ministers, teachers and other professional people in the community.

e) Participation in Labor Day parades, and participation in other community celebrations.

Finding people to work on an education committee seems most often to be a most baffling problem. It is a problem that can be solved, but not by any automatic formula. Working in a union successfully means that you must work among people successfully, and despite what the advertisements on how to succeed overnight say, there is no scientific technique for manipulating people.

In general, however, most organizations get things started and grow in the same way.

Originally, a small group of people assume responsibility for organizing the activity. Then these people, after they have gotten their activity moving, recruit other people to do specific jobs.

Once a person has done one successful job for the education committee he usually ends up on the committee. After a while, within the committee, responsibility moves over from the original organizers to the new people. Then the committee is on its own.

This means that if a local does not have an education committee it will be up to the Executive Board to organize a committee out of their numbers. Then the new education committee can begin to recruit additional people from among the shop chairmen and the members.

The important principle, however, is not to ask the people you are organizing to join the education committee. Rather, ask each person to do a particular job for you.

You will find that in most cases anyone who is active in the union, or who has said he wanted to be, will be happy to work with the education committee to get a specific job done.

Many unions have looked for possible candidates for the education committee by distributing questionaires in the shop or at union meetings. This is a good way to advertise the education committee's existence, but a better way to find people is by getting the co-operation of the Executive Board members, or members of the committee and the shop chairmen. Have them locate likely candidates, but the president of the local should ask them to accept the assignment. In any local the president is an important person to whom most people are reluctant to say no.

Once you have a new person working on the education committee, make sure his first assignments can be accomplished. If they need help in getting their work done, see that help is given. The surest way to discourage a person is to load him with an assignment he can't do.

The situation with most local unions is that there is an education committee which wants advice on how to begin to move more effectively. Here basic administrative principles apply. First, the education committee should devote a series of meetings to a discussion of what needs to be done. Given the goals of the local union and the responsibilities of the education committee, what projects should be undertaken? Shop chairmen program? Teacher-training program? Local union newspaper? Credit union? Classes in public speaking and parliamentary law? Clean up and paint the local union hall? Health and Safety Committee?

As a guiding rule, your education committee should attempt to have two kinds of projects going at the same time:

Start easy, simple projects that can be done and finished with. For example, a mailing of a particular pamphlet to the community. Or a distribution of a particular leaflet in the shop. Or the exhibition of a movie at the union meeting. At the same time, your committee should choose an undertaking that continues over a period of time, classes, or a radio program, or a shop chairmen or teacher or officer training program.

The idea is that the continuing project will give your committee continuity. The short projects will give you a sense of getting ~~things~~ things done.

In any event, your committee should start off by listing the projects that need to be done.

When you have produced an exhaustive list, go back over the projects and decide which ones are most important. Then go over this priority list to decide honestly which ones you really can do, given your resources, your experience, and the money available.

The most important thing a committee starting up should bear in mind is that you must not expect failure. Success on your first project gives every one the drive and encouragement needed to continue. Failure on a first project is like frost on an early crop; the bud blighted and there is no fruit.

Before the education committee can start on a project, however, it must get the approval and support of the Executive Board and the membership of the local.

Thus, as soon as the committee decides on a program it should be presented for approval to the Executive Board. With the approval, the committee will also get cooperation from the union leaders. Once projects are decided upon, assignments should be handed out with time limits on them.

Someone should be in complete charge of each job. His responsibility, among other things, will be to follow through to see that assignments are done, and to help when they are not getting done (help, not take over).

The committee itself should keep an eye on all projects, get regular reports, and come in with support when the work slows down.

Ordinarily most projects undertaken by the committee come to an end when their goals are reached. Then the sub-committee responsible for this success winds up its activities.

Some activities, however, go on as long as the local exists. A newspaper, or a credit union, for example. In these cases, the sub-committee which gets these activities started would eventually grow up and become a committee by itself. In this sense, the education committee becomes a hothouse for forcing new committees into existence.

Continuing education committees, if they are to do their work well, need to know what they have accomplished, and where they are going.

This means the education committee should always have a long-range plan (one that projects for at least six months into the future - perhaps a year).

Then, at least once a month, there should be a short discussion which is in fact an inventory. Is work progressing on the plan as you had hoped? If not, why not? Is there something you need and don't have? Is there anything you can do to begin to move on schedule?

In asking and answering these questions, you may not get to where you started out to go, but you will get somewhere you do want to go. It might turn out, for example, that your first plans were not feasible. The monthly inventory in this case will ring a warning for you and get you back on the tracks.

In summary then, to get an education committee going productively:

1) meet and list all the projects that ought to be undertaken.

2) assign priorities.

3) select projects that you know you can do.

4) be sure to include easy, quick projects along with long range projects.

5) be sure that the projects you decide on fit into a planned program you have set for yourselves.

6) clear the program you worked out with both the the Executive Board of the local and with the membership meeting.

7)once you begin to work on the project, check it; back it up with support to be sure it succeeds.

8) at least, make a monthly inventory of what you have done to see if you are making progress and to find out why not, if there has been no progress.

9) let sub-committees working on continuing projects be constituted as separate committees.

10) report back regularly on your progress to both the Executive Board and the membership meeting. In your reports be sure that everyone gets credit, and as many people as possible get a chance to report (share the credit).

ILGWU education committees do not have to work barehanded.

They can get the support and advice of the Education Department.

They can use films from the ILGWU film division.

There are discussion outlines and pamphlets available from the Education Department for their use on most union subjects.

There is a mimeographed handbook they can use to guide them in getting out leaflets and to use as a source for drawings.

They can call on the universities, the public library, the State Agricultural Extension Service, and public and non-profit agencies for help.

There are institutes such as this one which they can get training and advice, and where they can trade experiences with other union people engaged in the same undertakings.

They have their own brains, and imagination and dedication to guide them, which are their most valuable resources.

And in everything they undertake they will have the support, the sympathy and most often the active cooperation of the other people in the local union.

oeiu:153/eb
7/29/58

SCHOOL FOR WORKERS
UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN

WORKING WITH NEW MEMBERS

Today's new member is the future active member, steward or local officer - or just a card carrier, critic and problem. Even in the all-union shop, there is a problem: workers must join the union but this fact does not guarantee understanding and participation. Sometimes special problems, such as a feeling of resentment, come from the fact that the worker must join the union.

New members must be made to feel that joining the union is important to them and to the union, that the union is interested in their welfare and that their welfare depends on their own activity in the union. Officers and older members must make it evident that they welcome the new members into the organization.

ONE APPROACH:

1. A welcoming letter sent to the worker's home - such a letter could include a welcome, the fact that the union is responsible for the wages and conditions now in the shop, the information that the worker should bring his problems to the union, the name of the worker's steward, and the signature of the local president. The sending of this letter can become a routine in the case of all new members.

2. Have the steward keep an eye on the new member - introduce him to workers, find his interests, explain the grievance procedure, invite him to meetings and perhaps arrange to take him to one or two meetings. If there is no formal initiation ceremony, the steward can present the new worker with his union card and a copy of the by-laws and contract with an explanation of what they are. This type of program could be spread over a period of time and it could be developed as standard procedure in the case of each new member.

A MORE AMBITIOUS PROGRAM:

1. Follow the above suggestions with regard to the welcoming letter and supervision by the steward.

2. Give the new member a feeling of importance - and of the importance of the fact of joining - by a full-fledged initiation ceremony:

   - have the steward or older member pick up and deliver the new member to the meeting

   - make sure the new member is made welcome, and not lost in the back row

- conduct a simple but meaningful swearing-in ceremony, with perhaps the presentation of the union card, contract and by-laws

- perhaps have a short welcoming speech by a union officer or representative

- serve refreshments (this might bring out some older members too)

- such ceremonies could be held on a regular schedule, or as often as necessary, to avoid excessive conflict with the regular business of the local

3. Send union literature to the new member's home:

   - leaflets and pamphlets discussing the work of the union and the labor movement (DUES and PROGRESS leaflets)

   - include a covering letter, and don't send too much at one time

   - this can be developed as a standard procedure with some effort at follow up to give the new member the impression that he is expected to read the material

4. Send individual invitations to meetings to new members for the first three or four meetings

5. Establish some form of "buddy system" according to which each new member is assigned to an older member who is responsible for his education in union affairs and in getting him to meetings.

6. Show union films at meetings where new members are initiated.

7. Run classes for new members at regular intervals or when there are enough new members to make a class worthwhile.

Suggested outline for two session new members' class:

1st session: Introduction (welcome by local president, explanation of the sessions, stress value of questions and discussion, have each member introduce self); The Union We Belong To (the local - who belongs, when and why organized, how it works, dues and how spent; the national union - why have one, size, number of locals, how it works, history and accomplishments, main job ahead; how related to the parent federation)

2nd session: How The Union Protects You In The Shop (steward system, grievance procedure); Your Rights Under The Contract (wages, hours, transfers, seniority, vacations, holidays, insurance, etc.); The Union Outside The Shop (meetings, recreation and education program, political action, community service); There's A Place For You (how the new member can fit into the union program); Conclusion (democratic nature of the union, the need for participation)

Printed and mimeographed leaflets and summaries and be distributed as they fit in. (DUES, PROGRESS, By-Laws, Contract, diagram of grievance procedure, etc.)

A union film could be shown at each session,and discussed.

PREPARING THE CASE
Public Employee Unions

I. Questioning the Employee

- The employee's name, department, shift, job, rate, seniority, address, phone number.

- Are there other employees involved? Names?

- Name of supervisor, plus names of other management people who may be involved.

- What are the circumstances: what happened or failed to happen?

  a. What did supervision do? Are there witnesses if needed?
  b. What did management fail to do? Witnesses?
  c. What did management say, and who said it? Witnesses?

- When did it happen (shift, date and hour if needed)?

- What does the worker say about his previous record?

  a. General performances on the job?
  b. Previous discipline record (similar or different cases)?
  c. Attendance record?
  d. Attitude (has supervision made this an issue in past)?
  e. Union activity (is supervision using a pretext to "punish" a union active?)
  f. Other grievances filed in past?

II. Information from other Sources

- What rule(s), ordinances, or agreed to policies apply? What section?

- Do union records show similar cases in the past?

- Should you check with other stewards or union officers on how to proceed in this case?

- Should you check with other workers (same shift, other shifts, departments)?

- Should you take a look at the job, materials, working conditions?

- Should you ask the worker to keep records, (amount of work, down time, unavoidable delays, time spent in washroom, times late, etc.)?

- Should you ask supervision for records or statements (to see if there is a case, to add facts, to check one member of management against others)??

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

THE INFORMATION WHICH SHOULD GO INTO A GRIEVANCE OR COMPLAINT
Public Employee Unions

The Circumstances - the Facts

Who is involved: the employee(s), the steward, the supervisor

What happened to the employee - or, what failed to happen?

Where did the occurrence take place - shop, department, section, etc.?

When did it occur - date, shift, time of day?

The Union's Contention

What does the Union believe should have been done, or should not have been done under the circumstances, and in accordance with what rules, ordinances, or policies?

Note: You may not always want to cite the exact section of an ordinance or rule; when you specify, you may limit the area for argument; sometimes it is helpful to be in a position to argue the whole problem.

The Request for Settlement

What action the Union wants management to take: always remember the importance of being specific in your request for settlement, starting with what you consider to be a proper and just settlement -- and don't forget the matter of retroactivity in cases involving pay.

How much to write: a well written grievance need not be long or complicated. Simply state the situation and what you think should be done. Support for your contention can come when you discuss the case with supervision. Any effort to write a complete description may still result in something being left out, and may provide supervision with ideas it may not otherwise think of.

WHERE TO GET THE FACTS

1. From the worker or workers involved - check their facts, however.
2. From employees in the same department on same or different shifts.
3. From workers in other departments related to operation involved in complaint.
4. From agreements, rules and ordinances.
5. From past practices, settled grievances and civil service hearings.
6. From management - how accurate their information is depends upon experience and the facts of the case - check their facts too!

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

IS THERE A GRIEVANCE?

Public Employee Unions

1. To test for the presence of a grievance, ask yourself these questions:

   - Have accepted working rules or ordinances been violated?
   - Has some "past practice" or precedent been violated?
   - Has the worker been treated unfairly?

   If the answer to one or more of these questions is "yes", you probably have a grievance.

2. Does a particular rule have to be violated in order for a grievance to exist?

   - Not necessarily. Many rules or sections of ordinances have such general language in them that they lend themselves to a broad interpretation - and the steward should make every effort to interpret them broadly.
   - Past practice and precedents may cover cases not covered by a specific rule.
   - New situations not covered by a past agreement may arise and be handled through the regular grievance procedure.

3. Workers who feel abused but for whom there seems to be no relief under existing rules or past practice present a problem; these situations require a diplomatic approach so that the workers do not feel that the union can do nothing for them - the situation must be explained in a way which will keep them close to the union, and ready to bring their next problem to the steward.

   Here are some suggestions:

   - Apply the tests noted in (1) above.
   - Check for errors in facts submitted by the worker.
   - Check to determine if the problem may not be based on a dispute between workers, rather than with supervision.
   - If you are pretty sure that there is no grievance, go over the results of your investigation with the worker, point out the consequences of taking up cases without merit and if needed, take the worker with you as you consult with the chief steward, local officer, or union staff representative.

   But if there is a real doubt as to whether or not a grievance exists, THE BENEFIT OF THE DOUBT GOES TO THE WORKER.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PRESENTING THE GRIEVANCE
Public Employee Unions

THE PROBLEM OF DEALING WITH HUMAN BEINGS

1. No two people are the same; approach each person as an individual. This applies to union members and management officials alike.

2. The steward is after results that will benefit the worker and the group as a whole; he must submerge personal likes, dislikes, fears and prejudices.

SOME POINTS TO REMEMBER WHEN PRESENTING THE CASE

1. Prepare the case beforehand!

   - have your facts down in writing.

   - have notes organized to guide your presentation.

   - anticipate management's argument and have answers ready.

   - make an effort to talk to the worker or workers alone before you meet the supervisor.

   - talk the case over, if necessary, with other stewards, your committeeman, or others who might help you.

2. Avoid arguments among union people in the presence of supervision.

   - if you have a difference of opinion during a meeting, take a recess and iron the problem out in private; present a united front to management.

3. Keep to the point - avoid getting led off on side issues by supervision.

4. Get the main point of management's argument.

   - try to narrow the area of difference between union and management.

   - try to pin supervision down on why it did what it did, or failed to do what it should have done.

5. Avoid getting excited.

6. Treat those in supervision as you would like to be treated.

   - let any break in good relations come first from the other side.

   - remember that the supervisor to whom you are speaking is not always personally responsible for the complaint or grievance; therefore, you may get less cooperation from him by trying to place the blame on his shoulders.

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

7. Avoid unnecessary delays.

   - if supervision asks for more time, try to determine whether it is an attempt to stall or is based on a sincere desire for more facts needed to settle the case.

   - remember, the more time that passes, the "cooler" the grievance becomes, and the less support you will get from the worker or workers involved.

   - the longer the complaint or grievance is tied up by the company, the more difficult it will be for the union to gather and remember the facts and merits of the case.

   - the more grievances that are piled up in the procedure, the more likely that management will try to "horsetrade" settlement of a few grievances for dropping of others.

8. Settle the grievances at the lowest possible step of the grievance machinery - but make sure they are properly settled.

   - this saves time.

   - it helps build better relations in the department.

   - the steward will feel like the vital part of the union that he is.

   - don't pass the buck - if you can settle the grievance in the first step, do so.

9. Avoid bluffing - it is only a matter of time until your bluff is called; it is in the long run wiser to develop a reputation for honesty.

10. Maintain your position on a grievance until proven wrong.

11. See that your job benefits and conditions are lived up to.

   - if the union has not complained about similar violations of rules or past practices before, why should the management give in now?

   - the best rules and agreements have no value if the workers and stewards do not require supervision to live up to their terms.

13 possible

Tabulation Sheet

GRIEVANCE HANDLING QUESTIONNAIRE FOR PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

Listed below are a number of problems in handling grievances that may exist where you work or they may not. Put a check in the column that most accurately expresses the way you size up the particular problem. If the problem comes up often or frequently put a check in the column headed "frequent". If it comes up rarely check the column headed "sometimes". If it hasn't come up, check the "never" column. If you're uncertain, or you don't know, check the "no opinion" column.

PROBLEM	Frequent	Sometimes	Never	No Opinion
1. Grievances from characters, wise guys and troublemakers.	0	4	2	7
2. Members bypass the steward and go directly to a supervisor.	3	6	1	3
3. Grievances arising out of personal problems of workers in the department.	1	9	0	3
4. Employee expects too much from the steward.	1	3	4	3
5. It's difficult getting workers to file a grievance.	12	1	0	0
6. It's difficult getting the real facts about a complaint.	4	8	0	1
7. Employee is afraid to file a grievance.	10	3	0	0
8. It's difficult getting the grievance in writing.	11	2	0	0
9. Employee makes back-door deals with a supervisor.	1	0	4	8
10. Seniority grievances.	2	5	3	3
11. Work load grievances.	4	5	0	4
12. Wage rate cases.	4	2	3	4
13. Discipline grievances.	4	3	2	3

4 22

DK?

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

PROBLEM	Frequent	Sometimes	Never	No Opinion
14. Grievances involving an incentive system	0	2	3	8
15. Workers think they'll do better by dealing directly with supervisors.	2	5	3	3
✓ 16. Member doesn't know the civil service rules and grievance procedure.	12	1	0	0
✓ 17. New steward doesn't know the routine.	10	3	0	0
18. Getting people to serve as stewards.	3	5	1	4
19. The steward is too aggressive.	0	1	5	7
20. Steward is too timid.	5	4	0	4
21. Steward doesn't have the authority to settle cases with the supervisor.	3	2	3	5
✓ 22. Steward is bypassed. (to union officer?)	8	4	1	0
23. Stewards work hardest for people they like.	1	4	2	6
✓ 24. Steward has too many things to do.	2	1	2	8
25. Steward doesn't get enough credit for his work.	5	4	1	3
26. Supervisors gun for the steward.	0	3	4	6 meaning? 27. Steward goes out looking for grievances.	0	0	7	6 meaning? 28. Steward tries to keep grievances down.	0	5	2	7
29. Steward can't separate real grievances from imaginary grievances.	1	6	2	4
✓ 30. Steward doesn't know how to present his case to management.	5	4	2	2

PROBLEM	Frequent	Sometimes	Never	No Opinion
31. Steward doesn't know the grievance procedure and civil service rules.	9	4	0	0
32. Steward doesn't get a lot of the important information.	7	6	0	0
33. Steward doesn't know how to tell an employee he or she doesn't have a grievance.	3	5	1	4
34. Supervisors don't have the authority to settle grievances.	3	5	2	3
35. Supervisors are not interested in settling grievances in the first step.	5	1	1	6
36. Supervisors have a policy of stalling on settlement of grievances.	4	4	2	3
37. Supervisors deliberately try to take grievances to the last step or to the civil service commission.	1	1	4	7
38. Top supervisor interferes in the settlement of grievances in the first two steps.	0	5	3	5
39. Supervisors are inconsistent in the way they settle grievances.	4	5	0	4
40. Supervisors try to discourage workers from taking grievances to the Union.	2	7	2	1
41. Supervisors try to make a straw boss out of the steward.	0	2	3	8
42. Supervisors quickly promote a sharp steward.	0	0	5	8
43. The grievance machinery is too complicated.	1	3	5	3
44. Union politics and fights between groups interfere with handling of grievances.	2	6	2	3
45. Vague civil service rules create grievances.	3	6	2	2
46. Old-time stewards don't want to file grievances.	0	5	3	5

#1

GRIEVANCE HANDLING QUESTIONNAIRE FOR PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

Listed below are a number of problems in handling grievances that may exist where you work or they may not. Put a check in the column that most accurately expresses the way you size up the particular problem. If the problem comes up often or frequently put a check in the column headed "frequent". If it comes up rarely check the column headed "sometimes". If it hasn't come up, check the "never" column. If you're uncertain, or you don't know, check the "no opinion" column.

PROBLEM	Frequent	Sometimes	Never	No Opinion
1. Grievances from characters, wise guys and troublemakers.			X
2. Members bypass the steward and go directly to a supervisor.		X
3. Grievances arising out of personal problems of workers in the department.		X
4. Employee expects too much from the steward.		X
5. It's difficult getting workers to file a grievance.	X
6. It's difficult getting the real facts about a complaint.		X
7. Employee is afraid to file a grievance.	X
8. It's difficult getting the grievance in writing.	X
9. Employee makes back-door deals with a supervisor.				X
10. Seniority grievances.		X
11. Work load grievances.		X
12. Wage rate cases.			X
13. Discipline grievances.		X

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

PROBLEM	Frequent	Sometimes	Never	No Opinion
14. Grievances involving an incentive system			X
15. Workers think they'll do better by dealing directly with supervisors.		X
16. Member doesn't know the civil service rules and grievance procedure.	X
17. New steward doesn't know the routine.		X
18. Getting people to serve as stewards.		X
19. The steward is too aggressive.		X
20. Steward is too timid.	X
21. Steward doesn't have the authority to settle cases with the supervisor.		X
22. Steward is bypassed.		X
23. Stewards work hardest for people they like.			X
24. Steward has too many things to do.	X
25. Steward doesn't get enough credit for his work.	X
26. Supervisors gun for the steward.		X
27. Steward goes out looking for grievances.			X
28. Steward tries to keep grievances down.		X
29. Steward can't separate real grievances from imaginary grievances.		X
30. Steward doesn't know how to present his case to management.		X

PROBLEM	Frequent	Sometimes	Never	No Opinion
31. Steward doesn't know the grievance procedure and civil service rules.		X
32. Steward doesn't get a lot of the important information.	X
33. Steward doesn't know how to tell an employee he or she doesn't have a grievance.		X
34. Supervisors don't have the authority to settle grievances.	X
35. Supervisors are not interested in settling grievances in the first step.	X
36. Supervisors have a policy of stalling on settlement of grievances.	X
37. Supervisors deliberately try to take grievances to the last step or to the civil service commission.			X
38. Top supervisor interferes in the settlement of grievances in the first two steps.		X
39. Supervisors are inconsistent in the way they settle grievances.		X
40. Supervisors try to discourage workers from taking grievances to the Union.		X
41. Supervisors try to make a straw boss out of the steward.				X
42. Supervisors quickly promote a sharp steward.				X
43. The grievance machinery is too complicated.			X
44. Union politics and fights between groups interfere with handling of grievances.			X
45. Vague civil service rules create grievances.		X
46. Old-time stewards don't want to file grievances.				X

Shift priority case

Public Employees

You are working as a Clerk Typist I in a county institution on the first shift. Your supervisor says that not so many people are needed on the first shift but another person is needed on the second shift. You are told to move to that shift. This doesn't seem fair to you so you complain to your steward.

(Tell the steward the above facts in your own words. If he asks you the right questions give him the information below.)

Other employees in your group in the same classification have more seniority than you do. However, there is one temporary employee who is also a clerk typist I. The temporary person was already working in the department when you were hired. Your question now is: Shouldn't permanent workers have some preference in shift choice over temporary workers?

(Separate sheet of paper)

Disposition of shift priority case

In August of 1964 a new policy was announced giving permanent workers a shift preference over temporary workers even if temporary had been employed longer(e.g. in case of rplacement for person on armed services leave). Previously, management had argued that "employee" meant just that and there were no distinctions for such matters as shift preference

PROCEDURE FOR HANDLING EMPLOYEE PROBLEMS

Is this understood as grievance — mgt.?

Any employee in the classified service of the University who feels aggrieved or has a personnel problem, may present his problem to university authorities through the established grievance procedure and shall not be discriminated against on that account. The same procedure shall be followed by a group of employees presenting a joint grievance. Any employee, or group of employees, who are members of a union, may, if they desire, be represented by representatives of their union or representatives of any affiliated body. They may enter into the Proceedings under Step I, 1 and 2; Step II, 1, 2 and 3.

Step I

A. A personnel problem, or a charge of unfair treatment by an employee, shall not be considered a grievance until:

1. First, the matter complained of shall have been discussed by the employee with his supervisor. If they have been unable to reach a mutually satisfactory settlement within one working day after such discussion, and

2. Second, the matter complained of shall have been reviewed jointly by the employee concerned, the supervisor and the department head, and they have been unable to reach a mutually satisfactory settlement of the complaint within two working days after such discussion.

Disadvantage to employee
Role of Rep.
Definition of grievance

Step II

A. A personnel problem or a charge of unfair treatment which has not been settled under the procedure outlined in Step I, shall be submitted to the university authorities in writing as a grievance in the following manner:

1. First, a copy of the grievance, on forms prepared for such purpose by the university, and signed by the aggrieved employee, shall be sent to each of the following:

   The employee's supervisor
   The employee's department head
   The University Personnel Office

Forms?

2. The aggrieved employee shall discuss the written grievance jointly with the employee's supervisor, department head, and the University Personnel Office.

3. Third, in the event a mutually satisfactory settlement cannot be reached within five days after such discussion, the grievance shall be promptly referred by the University Personnel Office to the University Vice President of Business and Finance, together with all papers, documents, and other information relating thereto, for settlement.

Clerk
AFSCME
113 Person
Bldg
119 Mechanics are Medical

K of C
Union
Students etc.

*

Look to see how are Sense as Substance — Rules of Personnel Bd; State Statutes; 9/18.05 & P. 5 of handbook & 16.275 of State Statutes — UW Handbook — Past practices

Step III

A. In the event a mutually satisfactory settlement cannot be reached within five working days after the discussion provided for in the third part of Step II, the aggrieved employee may file an appeal to the state bureau of personnel, or the personnel board, in accordance with the statutes relating to employees in the classified service and the civil service rules made pursuant thereto.

B. In order to protect the statutory appeal rights of the aggrieved employee, any employee grievance arising out of circumstances covered by section 16.24 of the statutes relating to removals, suspensions, discharges, reductions, dismissals and layoffs, which has been submitted to the university under this grievance procedure may be appealed to the personnel board by the aggrieved employee, at any time within 10 days following the effective date of the action of the employing officer.

Special Procedure — Timing

C. In order to protect the appeal rights of an aggrieved employee, any employee grievance arising out of the reallocation of a position under Rule V, (2), Civil Service Law and Rules, Bureau of Personnel, which has been submitted to the university under this grievance Procedure, may be appealed to the personnel board at any time within 15 days from the date of notification of such reallocation.

DUTIES OF THE STEWARD

Public Employee Unions

1. KNOW THE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE AND CIVIL SERVICE RULES

- What they say, what they mean, and how they work.
- Examine them in the light of his experience with them and be ready to recommend changes, with the reasons (documented, if possible) for the proposed changes.

Too broad?

2. KNOW THE DEPARTMENT

- The various operations and how they relate to department's work.
- Seniority standings and other details pertaining to the area of the steward's jurisdiction.

3. KNOW THE WORKERS

- Relative seniority standings, wage rates, individual problems, individual abilities, family background and interests.
- Recognize the differences between workers as human beings and be prepared to deal with each worker in the way which will bring the best results.

4. KNOW THE MOST EFFECTIVE WAYS OF REPRESENTING MEMBERS BEFORE SUPERVISION.

- Remember that the steward is the representative of the workers and is not an impartial umpire, or a straw-boss on behalf of supervision.
- Be able to interview aggrieved workers, prepare notes on the case, write grievances, present the case, follow up on the results.

5. BE A UNION MEMBER IN THE FULLEST SENSE OF THE WORD

- Remember that the steward is often THE UNION to workers in the department.
- Learn about the history and methods and goals of his union and the labor movement and keep up-to-date on local and national developments.
- Introduce new members to the history, business and operation of the union.
- Sign up new workers and explain the union to them.
- Keep members informed of what is going on.
- Urge attendance at meetings and do everything possible to get the members to turn out.
- Develop full participation in the union's program among the workers under his jurisdiction.
- Help develop thought and discussion at union meetings.
- Assist in carrying out the majority decisions of the membership.
- Help to interpret the union's program to the community.

The University of Wisconsin
School for Workers

for [illegible] AFSCME Dist Council 448 one of Suburbs.

Cudahy has adopted all but ¶ "d" under part 4.

The union proposes the following grievance procedures:

In any organization, it is almost inevitable that occasional misunderstandings, difficulties and disagreements concerning conditions of employment will arise between employees and their supervisors. These situations usually are referred to as grievances, and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the City of Cudahy to assure its employees of an opportunity for orderly presentation and adjustment of their complaints. The purpose of this procedure is to maintain harmonious relationship between the City of Cudahy and its employees, to promote morale, equal rights, wellbeing and security of employees.

1. The provisions of this section shall be applicable to all employees in the bargaining unit.

2. The Employee shall have the right to present grievances, the right to be represented by his union representative or any other agent he shall select and the right to be heard; in so doing, the employee shall be assured freedom from restraint, interference, discrimination and reprisal.

3. Officials at all levels shall receive and act promptly and fairly upon employee grievances.

4. The following procedure is hereby established to handle employee grievances.

   a. Any employee expressing a grievance of any nature may individually or in company with his union representative explain the situation orally to his immediate supervisor. The supervisor will reach a decision and communicate it orally to the employee and his union representative within two (2) days after receipt of the grievance.

   b. If a grievance is not settled in step "a", the employee and/or his union representative will report the grievance orally to the Director of Public Works. The Director of Public Works shall reach a decision and communicate his decision within two (2) days orally to the employee and his union representative. (This step may also be implemented by submission of a written grievance and, in such case, will require written reply from the Director of Public Works within five (5) days.

c. If a grievance is not settled in step "b", the employee and/or his union representative will report the grievance in writing to the Civil Service Commission. The Commission shall hold hearings and notify all interested parties of its decision within ten (10) days after receipt of the grievance communication.

d. If a grievance is not settled in step "c", the employee and/or his union representative may move the grievance to arbitration either through the services of the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board or pursuant to the present rules of the voluntary labor arbitration tribunal of the American Arbitration Association, for final decision. Expenses of arbitration which are jointly incurred shall be shared equally by the parties, except that neither party sha shall be required to pay any part of the cost of a stenographic record without its consent.

5. In the event it is not possible to comply with the time limits within the procedure because of work schedules, illness, vacations, etc., these limits may be extended by mutual consent Whenever possible, grievances will be handled during the regularly scheduled working hours of the parties involved.

6. Supplies of the required grievance forms will be prepared and distributed by the Department of Public Works.

AFSCME # 82 — 4th Session

8 or 9 sessions — pro — con
Time — Mid-May

Summary

1.

2.

3.

Getting Committee members
Work of Com.

Membership Committee

1936 – Separate AFSCME Chartered
100 Locals 13,000 members

Today 2,000 Locals 225,000

AFL - CIO Structure

AFSCME Structure

Starting Time: 7:00 (?) — on Time
Inv. Brotslaw —

INTRODUCTIONS
Self — Sponsorship — Voc Sch. Local S+W
Class
Subject: Union Admin — grievance handling
Procedure: Informal — mixed media
Breaks at 8:00

Tonight — general comments — History
Union Structure
Info from groups on local structure, problems

History
Early origins

Econ growth — changing union forms

National Feds

AFSCME
1932 — Wis State Admin, Clerical, Fiscal & Technical Employees Assn.
— WSEA (1933) Zander & other
Concern that Civil Service would be attacked & substituted by spoils 1933 — attempt to abolish Civ. Serv. was made.
Worked with Unions

1935 — 32 delegates, 12 locals formed AFSCME under AFGE under AFL

IV Uncover New "Resources" to Assist you.

"Internal" ?

A. Among the members – we have discussed

B. New Techniques – discussed some e.g. Committees, planning, discussion

C. Film Catalogues

U.W. – AFL-CIO

D. Pamphlets

AFL-CIO Nat'l Union

E. Public Library

Reference librarian

F. Ed. Dept. of Nat'l Union

FF – ~~[illegible]~~

IWA – Harvey Yancy (Alex)

Pulp – (Res.) Doug Kuhns

G. STATE AFL-CIO

Com. Serv. – COPE

H. S & W.

I Indiv. prob's & teacher

Planning Groups.

Education Committee

Membership Committee

Organizing (?)

Executive Board

Grievance Committee

AFSCME

1) Advisory group to Ex. Bd & Officers on membership meetings

2) Education Committee — pamphlets

3) Membership — Organizing — Read Booklet
New Member
Visitation

#1

WHAT DO WE WANT FROM MEMBERS

Participation

1. GIVE LEADERS BACKING
2. BACK ONE ANOTHER
3. HARMONY WITHIN DEPARTMENT — Perhaps Union & Mgt.
4. STOP STARTING RUMORS
5. ~~So~~ DONT COMPLAIN TO OTHERS - COME TO MEETING
6. A LITTLE BETTER ATTENDANCE

#2

WHAT MEMBERS WANT FROM UNION

1. IMPROVED WAGES & CONDITIONS — Legis. Lab Mgt Bd.
2. GOOD REPRESENT~~ATIVES~~ATIONS ON GRIEVENCES — Union Training
3. GOOD LEADERSHIP — ~~Union Officers~~ Union — Training — Expectations
4. → INTERESTING MEETINGS - PROGRAMS — Ex. Com.
5. MONTHLY BULLETINS ABOUT ACTIVITIES — Com.
6. NOTIFICATION OF JOB ~~CLASSIFICATION~~ & OR OPENINGS — Spec. Com. (?) + Lab-Mgt Bd.

#3

WHAT CAN UNION DO FOR MEMBERS

1. DENOTE DUTIES BY JOB DESCRIPTION SETUP WITH MANAGEMENT — Spec. Com. Lab-Mgt Bd.
2. STRIVE FOR RELIEF CREW SETUP FOR VACATION, SICK LEAVE
3. FACILITIES FOR DRESSING ROOMS, LUNCH, LAV'S FOR WORKING PERSONNEL
4. EXECUTIVE BOARD MEMBERS TO ATTEND MEMBERSHIP MEETINGS
5. LEGISLATIVE REPORT - BY WISCONSIN LEGISLATOR
6. ~~So~~ FIRST AID FACILITES FOR PERSONNEL

Problems for discussion at business meeting
Special order of business
"buzz groups"

Allow for "role-playing" artificiality - differences between locals, etc.

Buzz, Planning Groups

1. One Group Act as Gen'l Ex. Bd.
2. Education Committee
3. Political Education Com.
4. Membership Committee

2 - reports as needed

Active

Less Active

Tips - for Program planning

General Aims

Why needed

To whom directed

What specific things to be tried

What Assistance is needed skills, information

Realistic for your groups

Electing Local Union Officers (Cont

Va, N.C., S.C., Ga Fla.
Ala. Tenn, Miss, La,
Ark, Tex., Ky,

Structure of Local

Offices
Ex Bd — Ex. Committee
Trustees
Committees

Size of Local — potential?

What does Union do

What should it do

Meetings

Other Activities

Stewards Problems (Questionaire?)

Programs

Topics? — relate to Union Relations special interest to members length — 15-15 (talk — discussion) resources — Union leaders, Univ., Community leaders planning

Ed Com & film.

how & when to use

prepare Speaker for groups know your speaker — preview the film etc.

Uses of Pol. Proc.

1) Why this committee

2) Kinds of activities which would help the local within jurisdiction of your town.

3) Plan — 6 mos — 12 mos.

4) What specifically will town do or cause to be done.

5) How will you recruit people to help out.

6) What kind of continuing relations with local Ex Bd, officers.

Education

Evaluate Stewards are they listening to members

Willing to talk to mgt.

Know the Admin-Code

Responsibility for organizing (work in with Com).

Periodic Stewards meeting.

Ed. member & non members — Special meetings or benefits of Union

---

Membership

Welcome all new personnel

Social events — 2/yr.

Bulletin Bds in each b/dg.

Questionnaire on transp. to meetings etc.

Phone

Personal Contact

Home Prop.

Pl. to Contact on job

Newsletter

Contact people at home

Advisory Com. on Local Meetg

Start on time

Identify nonvoices fully (already do it)

Explain motions — whoever moves

Encourage discussion on the floor

Only one person talks at a time

Time limits — but not too technical

Name tags + dept. — get to know each other

Stern & Hayglad —

Don't take route of cheap labor —
Can't beat out other sectors —

University
Social cost — human factor
U. Agricultural research

Better teachers — math — Science — relate humanities —
L to deal with Technology — to keep a larger % of youth out of work force and in education Research —
manpower & retraining studies to assist national policy, to assist Vocational School planning —

Lab. Ed — Coll. Barg.
Worker protection through Coll. Barg.

Concentration of economic power?

Summary

Historical Development } more "dem." arrangements in the work place

Public Policy

AFSCME

AFL-CIO Structure

AFSCME Structure

Local Structure

Problems

Existing Committees

Grievance (Ex. Bd.)

Lab-Mgt Bd (in process)

Good & Welfare

Entertainment.

Paperwork (?)

Main Problems

Grievance Handling

Organizing

Participation

Other Problems

Relation to Civil Service

Law & admin –

Participation in passage

Knowledge of law

Participation in policy affecting working conditions

Salary inequities rel to wage employees.

Adequate job description & mgt. abide by them

Get: 30 "Prospective Union Member File Card"
[Contact Card]

Role playing:

Signing up

Attend meeting

"Criticize" Literature from Nat'l, WSEA

And what material is needed —

Brief History?

State Insurance Bd head —

AFL-CIO Stewards Manual

Steve Clark

Membership 1/64 83 — 1/65 139 members in one year

150 (3/65)

✓ Objectivity

✓ Duties of the Steward

✓ Review Questionnaire

FEAR

Need to Understand

Procedure — Basic Rights (Civ. Serv. & Agreement)

Legal protections

Well handled grievances

Repeat "Wins"

Union leaders' manner with Supervision

You Teach Mgt.

Last Session Start here

Why Formalize Procedure: [Reduces Possibility of Conflicts in decisions]; tends to assure proper authority for Actions; Understandable; [Fairness - above board];

next step [Orderliness];

U-W-M Procedure

Is there a grievance

Mary & Jane

Record Keeping — Evaluation

Time element — early Settlement

Tends to stabilize facts.

Did this [Maternity leave — Law — Admin Code — UW Handbook

Information into a Complaint

Change of classification case

Miss Friendly — competent able — Steno II

daily administrative work program planning — } advanced work for handling teams } 2 yrs ahead

Excellent work record

Supervisor in report is glowing but fails to "grade" I, II, III, IV

Job studied by personnel office —
No doubt should be Administrative Secty
2 steps jump.

Supervisor will not recommend — grievance?

What if employee will not fill (Personal relations in small group job situation)
Should upper level union intervene with higher supervision for sensible and humane solution)

Last session

Why Formalize

Don't rely on sheets alone

Requirements of good Procedure

UW-M Procedure

What's needed Practice getting facts
Conferring Presenting
Deferring of grievance

Officers — Negotiating
"Bargaining"

Is There a Grievance
Mary - Jane

Info into grievance

Preparing the case

Presenting the grievance

Practice With grievances

Special Problems

Notes

Don't by-pass stewards develop them

11:50

14
31
45

Presentation

1. Know what you are to argue

2. Friendly (doesn't have to be glad hand)

3. Firm — but no bull

4. Simple & Direct

5. Don't get divided

6. Brief the Worker.

7. Nail down loose ends
"time" "yes or no"

Summary

What union must do — should do.

Structure of Unions

Beginnings of participation — Formal / Informal meetings - committees - grievances - dues - voting talk in plant — reading union news { Bull. Bd. / Union paper / Com. paper

Begins to get into topic for tonight: Leader Member relations

And relation of leaders & members to "Organization"

1st: Kinds of members

Leaders

Actives

Crisis Actives

Inactives

* What do we want from members? Realistic goals

Assent vs. Participation

* What do members want from Union? Satisfaction vs. participation

* Why did members join — buzz need for support — and for new goals.

2nd Kinds of Leaders

(Several ways of looking)

Charismatic personality

Ideolgical
Unch-hgt coop

Operator
12 mos. politician

Administrator functional

Collectical move away from individual

} not discrete types

Autocratic

Democratic

"Shared leadership

5th week

Committee planning

Details

Involvement

Cross checking

Review quickly one other kind of Com.

A membership Committee

1. New Members — memo sheet
2. Visitation
   Sick — general (Sheet already handed out)
3. Non-Union (organizing — understanding)
4. Increase meeting attendance general announcements — Serve but goal of "5" per month

Needed:

[And clear vision of goals (partly spelled out below)]

Process & Purpose — Authority to act

Participation — 3-5 people willing to give it a try

Mailing list

Phone list

Process — Budget for post cards

Memeographing notices expense

Travel on Visits

Interpretation & Process — Cooperation with

Program

Ed. Com.

Recreation — socials, etc.

Pres. & Ex Bd. — Program

Stewards — Notices

Clark

S-471
Retirement System -

A-486
Cross the board Salary increase
Safeguard (if S-172 fails?)

S-172 - State to pick up retirement share
4% up to 4800 (or 5600 if Soc. Sec. goes up
& then 7% over 4800

Shaffer (D) } Longevity bill
Barry (R.) } $1,200,000 cost

S-161 Health Insurance — State pick up half of premium on all K's

A-272 Night differential — one step of passage in Assembly & then went to Jt. Finance -
Not a union bill, but they joined in support -

S-59 Dept of Admin - Authority for semi-monthly pay passed both houses - awaits govt. sig.
How to implement —

Dept of Admin booklet —

1965-67 proposed Salary ~~wages~~ —
Magazine Covers including Short comings for permanent employ~~ment~~ (2 yrs or less) put at

Seniority
- Shift preference
- Upgrading (prestige - money?)

Work load
- Too big an area
- Insufficient help
  - Relief help.

Leave of absence
- Discretion of dept. heads - not by code
  - Maternity leave
  - Sick leave.

Favoritism
- Work load
- assignments (better jobs)

Working Conditions
- Physical
  - Faulty equipment - unsafe
  - Insufficient equipment

Untrained operator

Violation of job description
- BMH II
- Driving truck, shoveling, supervising, Hack tops, Lib. Acct. Documents Craftsmen - shoveling

Lack of respect by "superiors" "supervisors"
- Faculty
- Intermediate Supervision

—over—

Stewards —

Lawyer
Diplomat
Politician
Sympathizer
Honest
Analyst

Mediator
Arbitrator
Counselor Spokesman (Negotiator)

~~Compromeur~~
~~non partisan~~
Representative

Representative
1. Members to Supervision.
2. Union to Supervision.
3. Union to the members.
4. Members to the Union.

Materials
Bring Procedures
Bring Admin. Code —

Questionaire

20 copies

Importance of Bargaining in Work situation

Reference to history — earlier in class grievance handling a form of bargaining importance to conditions

importance in human terms

Role of Steward
Arb — Med — Rep

8th meeting

Objectivity — chalk & eye

Duties of Steward.

Is there a grievance

Kinds of Leaders
Principles of Leadership
Meeting

MEETING

Sum

Physical Setting — place, comfort, atmosphere
What wanted from meeting — aim it that way (A)
Summarize sheet (A)
Time — length — start on time

What do we want from meeting — see next page

"Dual loyalty" — the union edge re subordinate — employer relationship Understanding participation
To build strength & spirit
To accomplish goals of local
To provide advance warning of trouble spots.

Communication → Variety — Persistence — System
use mass and individual Techniques

(No one way succeeds — get others to help — test your ideas for effectiveness)

Stress communication
NOTICES — News Clips — etc on Bulletin Bd.
Post, Cards letters, Informational material — mail
Items in Community paper, Radio, TV.
Notices or Info by special leaflet distribution dues, pol., proc., grievance proc, vote
The Meeting itself
Informal in plant — Stewards system
— Representation

Elements of effective union communication

Idea or message
Put into clear language
Form of publication
Understanding by officers & stewards Records where needed files, etc.

Follow-up.

Evaluation of result how many came — increased understanding, etc?
What went wrong —

~~Second Attempt — & model~~ —

See Next sheet

2/11/65

Summary — The meeting

Look at the physical surroundings make pleasant, clean, attractive

Right Time — Day

Length of meeting

Orderliness — AGENDA (for all) & Planning

{ Balance between "efficiency" and participation
{ The proper use of parl. procedure.

→ Change the pace

break up lengthy reports — more than one person let executive bd. members do some of reporting instead of all by pres.

{ Evaluate communications brief them

{ Let some matters be discussed by smaller groups — in buzz sessions

Don't take the meeting for granted

Special programs —

Later * Communication — variety, persistence, system —

Use mass and individual techniques —

Further topics

Committees

planning

Community & Public Relations

Discussion techniques

(3) (A)

What do we want from meeting?

Communication — transmit info from offices build support for policies knock rumors

Affirm acts of offices

Escape valve for irritants

Socializing

building esprit de corps

Participation, per se.

Self-interest of members is served

Level of communication
Understandable — brief — interesting { of interest / interestingly presented

Participation committee reports reading of long communications crises

Small vs. large locals
(Long haul — not one-shot cures)

To improve

[Clear reports, announcements, minutes

Short —

Plan

Encourage (plan) participation — (meaningful)

Emphasize social

Special meetings [speakers, films / issues]

Departmental meetings } taking union to members sheet

Individual grievances vs. general concerns

*

Elaboration

Also See Tannenbaum's Steward's System report.

Methods of Communication

Notices — clips (from AFL-CIO News or Special Bulletin) or Int'l Paper

Local union newspaper

Community paper, radio, TV,

Union meeting

Stewards —
As representatives

See Tannenbaum study on Stewards as communication officers

Special leaflet distribution — Several per year
Info —
Sign of life —

dues — parl. proc. — grievance proc —

Register to vote —

Where responsibility is it for meeting the problems that have been raised — leaders — that who recognize the problem

Principles of democratic leadership

Union Admin. — Participation

What can we expect — Realistic
Who are the members — age, sex, interests other responsibilities

Kinds of members
Leaders
Actives
Crisis actives
Inactives

Leadership: Autocratic — Democratic — Shared!

What do we want from members?
Buzz (Group 1)

What do members want from Union?
Buzz (Group 2)

(Group 3) what can union do for members

OVER

Can we put together a program from these two?

Participation in class {50% overt in 2½ Seminar
100% in buzz groups}

Who can give performance criteria —
Union — a committee — asis? — or new structure
Mgt

What will it take?
information
policy formation
Organization
specific tasks

Introduction — Registration — Cards, Notebooks

Self — School off Wks —

Course Sponsorship — Voc. School — USWA

To the Course:

Subjects — Duties, grievance procedures, K's, handling grievances, Stewards Role in Union and Community, Understanding Unions.

Method of the Course —

Informal — Discussion —

Materials (read, fill out)

No grading or "testing"

Questionaire — ON Back (other Problems)

Number in Corner & on N.B.

Purpose — to aid in pin pointing problems

[EV — look at registrations]

~~25~~ 27

(2) Importance of Steward's Role

Background of Labor movement

Statistics — Structure — history

Meaning for industrial Society —

250 — Nat'l Unions — ? 150
2,500 — Intermediate Bodies
75,000 — Local Unions
130,000 — Collective Barg. K's.

18.5 M members

└ 13.5 M in AFL-CIO

Structure AFL-CIO

History — (How old)

Small beginnings — industrial development forms of Unions — Local, City Feds, Nat'l Federations

Movements of Protest and defense
Economic — Political — Social

Legal developments —

Pub — Gov. — Civil Service — WSEA — 1952
Wis. Law 1959, 1962

Meaning for industrial Society — individual protection in large scale economic enterprise —

Seen in 2 main ways

1) "democracy" in the work place and thereby a changed industrial system (cf. pre-union or non-union to union)

2) Protection of worker in human terms — safe conditions, restore job,

Investigator
Policeman

Role of the Steward

Arbitrator — Representative

Objectivity — a chalk

Rep. as Communicator union to members
members to Mang.
union to Mang.
Members to union

Final Return — Any Problems re Cause, See me — let's make it go.

Contact?

On Time

What is Grievance —

(?) History of Union — See notes

(?)

Unions

Procedures — check names sheet from local —

Civil Service Rules

Signing up new members — new members at mgt. orientation meetings

(?) Check grievance questionnaire for pub. employees —

Kinds of grievances —

Stewards System —

Union Administration

Structure of local officers — ex. Bd — ex. com.

Committees [Legis, Women Comp., Ed., Social, Membership, Safety]

Stewards [By-laws]

What areas, depts., how many people

Size of local — no. of members; potential members —

What does Union do —

What should it do?

Let's look at work of a Committee
Political Education

Planning
Calendar
Blocking out general areas of interest
& relate to timing
Vote Campaigns
State, National, Local elections
Legislation
General political issues

Phases of work — the possibilities
Mobilization
Education
Action
} Interrelation
How much & when

Outlining Specific jobs.
1st the possibilities
2nd what you want to do this year

Committees – 3

The Chairman

How to approach

You have to ask — not a general call for volunteers, but a personal, high-level approach.

No Negatives: e.g. "Can't get anyone else" "Not much of a job" But don't oversell

Be able to say what job is

Stress importance of committee's work to local

But show that its work is possible containable —

Be ready to offer help, suggestions, and to approach others to serve with chairman.

Expect performance

Give recognition and praise when deserved — start with committees already in operation

Explain the reach of responsibility

Budget available

To whom to "report"

Local & Committee must know that officers support it.

* [Don't automatically avoid the "quiet" member
Be willing to bring people along.

~~Show importance of Committee to local~~

Committees – 2

How to get Committees to work

First — Planning can go a long way
Pres. & Ex Bd.

Long-run — Budget as plan tool
Short run

What Committees are needed
Survey of possible chairmen
Jobs that reasonably can be expected to be accomplished.
When is committee's work needed
Can budget be provided?
Who will Coordinate? Supervise?
Possible V-P role; or split work with Pres. — Chairmen on Ex. Bd.? — "Coordinating Meetings" of Chairmen

Second — The chairman

Discuss

Desirable qualities
Knowledge of Union (but this can grow)
Interest in special work of Committee
Able to talk & work with others (Small group)
Sense of responsibility to local & to proper procedures
Willingness to read, to think
Ability to come up with ideas &/or to get them from others

Not always the guy who makes motion
Take Time — appoint later if no rush or if approval not needed Break (By subject interest Ed. Com.

Have class work one in groups what general aim.
To whom directed
What specific things would he need
What orientation needed
Skills or info.
What resources — staff, stew, members, staff, Ed, Ed. a period other com.

Back to Define goals

Where to start
Improve meetings — Improve attendance
Improve internal communication
Community relations — Bargaining goals, etc
Educate members — Train stewards

Don't over-appoint
Number of Committees
Number of people on Committees

Building block approach
Make a start
Plan
Continue

Film catalogue UW AFL-CIO
Pamphlets
AFL-CIO Ed.
Nat'l Union

Who follows through Coordination
Tell membership Com. of meeting Program

Ed. Dir.
Becky Osowald — FF
Harry Young — CWA

Pulp
Doug Kubas (Rep.)

PARTIAL CURE FOR FEAR

1. EXPLAIN GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE
   MEETINGS — BULLETIN BOARDS —
   Hand out sheet — Relate to K

2) Educate on basic rights under the Contract — your just due.

3) Describe Legal protections against discrimination, individual bargains,

4) Handle grievances well
   Train & recognize Stewards
   Dealing with member — build "Understanding"

5) Stewards & Officers "Manner" with Supervisors and Company

6) Publicity ("quiet") to Settlements

7) Apply procedures fairly

Why Formalize — Recognize differences

1) Builds "understandable" rules

2) Let's member know what the steps are
A method of telling his rights

3) AN ORDERLY WAY to settle differences
"No Knockdowns, just go to next step"

4) ALLOWS FOR RECORD KEEPING

5) PROVIDES EARLY SETTLEMENT — but removes "immediate" from "combatants", if necessary

6) "Guarantees" fairness

7) Allows for Evaluation of Grievance HANDLING

ELEMENTS —

PROCEDURE & Arbitration — CONTRACT — STEWARDS

STEWARDS ~~System~~ Meeting (~~organization~~) — Writing — Records — Files

~~ARBITRATION~~ — EDUCATION — EVALUATION

How you use System will in large measure determine How Company will use it — Fairness, Firmness, Timeliness,

Remember Notice

The Class in Stewards Training

meets on Thursday, Oct.

Discipline by withholding pay case

Public Employees

You are a clerk keeping very important records. You have made some mistakes. Your supervisor tells you after catching one error that in the future you will be docked one hour's pay for your first mistake and a whole day's pay for three or more mistakes. Do you think that you have a grievance? Should you tell your steward about it? If you think that you should, then tell him.

Tell your steward the above facts in your own words if you think he should know about it. You can also tell him the following:

The supervisor wrote out the arrangement for docking and had you sign it as a kind of an agreement.

(separate sheet)

Disposition of Discipline by withholding of pay case.

Procedure probably illegal. Certainly beyond scope of supervisors authority and contrary to civil service procedures. The memo which employee signed was retracted.

Hospital Shift problem

Public employees

~~The aggrieved employee~~

~~Hospital shift problem~~

You think you have a grievance because:

Single spaced

You had been working as a custodial worker ~~for ////~~ at the hospital. Your shift had been from 2:30 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. Your supervisor tells ~~//////~~ the custodial workers that the shift will be changed to 3:45 p.m. to 12:15 a.m. Something was said about this suited the work of other departments better. You now have to eat your lunch ~~now~~ at 4:00. ~~Now~~ So that you can't use the cafeteria where you have always eaten.

(The facts above, you tell your steward in your own words. ~~If he asks questions about the grievance which require more information you can tell him the following things if the~~ You may supply the following information to the steward if he asks you the right questions.)

Other employees are grumbling about the change in schedule. Most of them prefer to eat in the cafeteria. Some of them said something about bus schedule problems. There is no bus at that time of the night. This doesn't affect you because ~~////~~ you use the old jalopy. The housekeeper may have mentioned something about just trying the new schedule to see how it works. But everyone knows that the change took place because of complaints from the medical departments and so they don't think the housekeeper(your supervisor) can really change the schedule back.

Separate Sheet

Supervisors answer: Hospital Shift Problem

We will schedule everyone that we can to eat as late as possible during cafeteria hours. According to my neces ary schedules this means that all but one person can eat in the cafeteria. One person will have to eat at 4:00p.m.

Separate Sheet

Administrators Answer: Hospital Shift Problem (If facts are brought out that most employees can not make bus schedule) Just a trial. It fails. Other arrangements to be tried.

Procedure - elements - steps, reps, end pt.
System

~~Early [illegible]~~

The denial of annual increment case

May 8th
~~October 16~~

Steps

You thought you were going to get your annual increment on ~~November~~ 6.

It didn't come through. You go to your steward and ask if there is anything that he can do to help out.

Facts: Supervisor says increment is not automatic; denied because of excessive absences.

~~Dec~~ Feb 2nd

Employee was warned on or about ~~June 30,~~ orally(but remebers it) that if attendance record did not improve, increment would be denied.

Supervisor says acted fairly and within her authority.

5/1/64 11/1/64

During probationary period was absent 3 single days (10/15/63 - 4/15/64)

After probationary period absent 6 days -- four of these were coupled with days off (a serious problem in the department).
(~~4/16/64~~ - ~~xxxxxxxx~~ 6/30/64)
11/2/64 — 2/1/64 (warning)

But:
one absence only since warning on ~~June 30, 1964.~~ Feb 2nd, 1965

Supervisor denies: Then agrees to improvement (or second level) and says will grant increase as of day of settlement Nov. 15.

~~1st payday~~

Should union accept or go for retoractive.

Current reviews is after anniversary date

Employee — Edward ~~Early~~ Hoyt

Supervisor — Tom Jones

Deputy Dir. I. Will settle

62.13 (7) (
Cop pp 1151 - 1158 (How separate police & fire)

The University of Wisconsin
Extension Division
School for Workers

CHAPTER 111

EMPLOYMENT RELATIONS.

- - - - - - - - - - - -

SUBCHAPTER IV.

RIGHT OF PUBLIC EMPLOYES TO ORGANIZE OR JOIN LABOR

ORGANIZATIONS AND RELATING TO BARGAINING IN MUNICIPAL EMPLOYMENT.

111.70 Municipal employment.

(1) DEFINITIONS. When used in this section:

(a) "Municipal employer" means any city, county, village, town metropolitan sewerage district, school district or any other political subdivision of the state.

(b) "Municipal employe" means any employe of a municipal employer except city and village policemen, sheriff's deputies, and county traffic officers.

(c) "Board" means the Wisconsin employment relations board.

(2) RIGHTS OF MUNICIPAL EMPLOYES. Municipal employes shall have the right of self-organization, to affiliate with labor organizations of their own choosing and the right to be represented by labor organizations of their own choice in conferences and negotiations with their municipal employers or their representatives on questions of wages, hours and conditions of employment, and such employes shall have the right to refrain from any and all such activities.

(3) PROHIBITED PRACTICES. (a) Municipal employers, their officers and agents are prohibited from:

1. Interfering with, restraining or coercing any municipal employe in the exercise of the rights provided in sub. (2).

2. Encouraging or discouraging membership in any labor organization, employe agency, committee, association or representation plan by discrimination in regard to hiring, tenure or other terms or conditions of employment.

(b) Municipal employes individually or in concert with others are prohibited from:

1. Coercing, intimidating or interfering with municipal employes in the enjoyment of their legal rights including those set forth in sub. (2).

2. Attempting to induce a municipal employer to coerce, intimidate or interfere with a municipal employe in the enjoyment of his legal rights including those set forth in sub. (2).

(c) It is a prohibited practice for any person to do or cause to be done, on behalf of or in the interest of any municipal employer or employe, or in connection with or to influence the outcome of any controversy, as to employment relations, any act prohibited by pars. (a) and (b).

(4) POWERS OF THE BOARD. The board shall be governed by the following provisions relating to bargaining in municipal employment:

(a) Prevention of prohibited practices. Section 111.07 shall govern procedure in all cases involving prohibited practices under this subchapter.

(b) Mediation. The board may function as a mediator in disputes between municipal employes and their employers upon the request of both parties.

(d) Collective bargaining units. Whenever a question arises between a municipal employer and a labor union as to whether the union represents the employes of the employer, either the union or the municipality may petition the board to conduct an election among said employes to determine whether they desire to be represented by a labor organization. Proceedings in representation cases shall be in accordance with ss. 111.02 (6) and 111.05 insofar as applicable, except that where the board finds that a proposed unit includes a craft the board shall exclude such craft from the unit. The board shall not order an election among employes in a craft unit except on separate petition initiating representation proceedings in such craft unit.

(e) Fact finding. Fact finding may be initiated in the following circumstances: 1. If after a reasonable period of negotiation the parties are deadlocked, either party or the parties jointly may initiate fact finding; 2. Where an employer or union fails or refuses to meet and negotiate in good faith at reasonable times in a bona fide effort to arrive at a settlement.

(f) Same. Upon receipt of a petition to initiate fact finding, the board shall make an investigation and determine whether or not the condition set forth in par. (e) 1 or 2 has been met and shall certify the results of said investigation. If the certification requires that fact finding be initiated, the board shall appoint from a panel established by the board a qualified disinterested person to function as a fact finder.

(g) Same. The person appointed as fact finder may establish dates and place of hearings which shall be where feasible in the jurisdiction of the municipality involved. He shall conduct said hearings pursuant to rules established by the board. Upon request, the board shall issue subpoenas for hearings conducted by the fact finder. The fact finder may administer oaths. Upon completion of the hearings, he shall make written findings of fact and recommendations for solution of the dispute and shall cause the same to be served on the municipal employer and the union.

(h) Parties. 1. Proceedings to prevent prohibitive practices. Any labor organization or any individual affected by prohibited practices herein is a proper party to proceedings by the board to prevent such practice under this subchapter.

2. Fact finding cases. Only labor unions which have been certified as representative of the employes in the collective bargaining unit or which the employer has recognized as the representative of said employes shall be proper parties in initiating fact finding proceedings. Cost of fact finding proceedings shall be divided equally between said labor organization and the employer.

(i) Agreements. Upon the completion of negotiations with a labor organization representing a majority of the employes in a collective bargaining unit, if a settlement is reached, the employer shall reduce the same to writing either in the form of an ordinance, resolution or agreement. Such agreement may include a term for which it shall remain in effect not to exceed one year. Such agreements shall be binding on the parties only if express language to that effect is contained therein.

(j) Personnel relations in law enforcement. In any case in which a majority of the members of a police or sheriff or county traffic officer department shall petition the governing body for changes or improvements in the wages, hours or working conditions and designates a representative which may be one of the petitioners or otherwise, the procedures in pars. (e) to (g) shall apply. Such representative may be required by the board to post a cash bond in an amount determined by the board to guarantee payment of one-half of the costs of fact finding.

(k) Paragraphs (e) to (g) shall not apply to discipline or discharge cases under civil service provisions of a state or local ordinance.

(l) Nothing contained in this subchapter shall constitute a grant of the right to strike by any county or municipal employe and such strikes are hereby expressly prohibited.

(m) The board shall not initiate fact finding proceedings in any case when the municipal employer through ordinance or otherwise has established fact finding procedures substantially in compliance with this subchapter.

- - - - - - - -

Note: Subchapter IV, Sections (1), (2) and (3) was enacted by the 1959 Legislature; Section (1) (c) and Section (4) was enacted by the 1961 Legislature.

[Age As A Variable...]

AGE AS A VARIABLE IN CONFLICT WITHIN THE LOCAL UNION:

[The Conceptualization...]

The Conceptualization and Exploratory Study of a Research Problem

by

[Kenneth McLennan.]

Kenneth Mc Lennan.

Labor Seminar Econ. 22

Instructor J. Barbash

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

INTRODUCTION

This paper is an exploratory study of conflict within the local union. It is divided into two parts; the first part is concerned with (1) a general discussion of conflict, (2) an analysis of the current issues which are likely to give rise to conflict, (3) an examination of the major variables in a conflict situation, and (4) an attempt to isolate and focus on age as a major variable. Certain hypotheses will be advanced relating the major variables to conflict, and particular attention will be paid to age as one of the most important variables at this time.

The second part of the paper is an attempt to test the hypotheses developed from the more general discussion of the first part; the methodology used will be a combination of questionnaires and interviews administered to some of the local union leaders attending the 1962 Summer Institute Program at the School for Workers, University of Wisconsin. Without the assistance of the faculty of the School for Workers, and the cooperation of the members of the various unions participating in the Summer Institute program this part of the study would have been impossible. This assistance and cooperation is deeply appreciated.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Table of Contents

PART ONE: THEORETICAL BACKGROUND

I. General Discussion of Conflict..... 1

II. Major Issues over which Conflict is Likely to Develop..... 6

III. Major Variables in a Conflict Situation.....14

1. Ethnic and Racial Characteristics as a Variable.....15

2. Level of Skill as a Variable.....16

3. The Location of the Job.....19

4. Age as a Major Variable.....20

IV. Questions to be Examined.....22

PART TWO: EXPLORATORY STUDY

I. Methodology.....24

1. Description of the Interviews.....24

2. Questions Included in the Interview.....25

II. Expected Results of the Study.....28

1. Relationship Between Variables and Collective Bargaining Preferences.....28

2. Information Expected from Discussion of Interest Groups within the Local.....29

III. Actual Results of Study.....32
1. Relationship Between Variables and Collective Bargaining Preferences.....32
2. Information Obtained from Discussion of Interest Groups within the Local.....37
IV. Conclusions.....42
Bibliography.....45
Appendix.....47

Charts and Illustrations

Graph: Expected Variation of Preference According to Age.....30

Chart: Variation of Preference According to Age (Table 1).....33

Graph: Variation of Preference According to Age (Based on Table 1).....35

PART ONE:

THEORETICAL BACKGROUND

I. General Discussion of Conflict

The concept of conflict has been given many different meanings and interpretations depending on the actual problem being studied. If the problem concerns tensions within the individual or tensions among individuals the concept then is dealt with in a social-psychological framework. In contrast, conflict in the sphere of international relations is conceived primarily in politico-economic terms. Between these two extremes conflict frequently centers around competing power groups in society, such as the conflict between labor and management, and in this case the sociological-economic interpretation tends to be the more significant. The type of struggle being studied, whether concerned with the individual in most simple terms or with large groups of people on the international scene in its most complex form (on a kind of continuum), will determine the exact meaning of the term "conflict", and will also influence the type of methodological approach used.

Conflict within a local union is a problem which lies somewhere in the middle of the continuum, perhaps being nearer to individual conflict than to international conflict. This means that we will conceptualize conflict in sociological and economic terms. It is not intended to minimize the importance of other approaches to conflict, but merely indicates that they are not too meaningful for the purposes of this paper. The sociological approach views conflict as arising when human beings in an organization hold and are willing to strive for mutually exclusive goals.[1] Both goals may be desirable, but they cannot both prevail at the same time; if one is selected it is at the expense of the other. The economic approach views conflict as arising because a choice has to be made between competing uses of scarce resources (in the problem being considered the scarce resources may be what the employer can afford). When a choice is made this involves what is known as opportunity cost, which means that the cost of following a particular course of action is the value of the alternative which has been sacrificed.

The usefulness of the sociological-economic approach can be illustrated by the use of an example. The local union members, usually through the executive, choose to formulate demands for bargaining negotiations with management. At any one time, there is a realistic limit as to what management is able or willing to concede. It frequently happens that the local union has to decide between a wage increase and some form of fringe benefit such as a pension plan. Both are probably desirable from the union members' point of view, but they are sometimes mutually exclusive. One group may favor a wage increase while another may favor a pension plan, and the extent to which one group achieves its goals, the other loses those it seeks to attain. This situation leads to varying degrees of conflict within the organization, and this holds true even when some sort of compromise is reached by seeking a combination of both goals. The fact that it was necessary to work out a compromise, probably through a "package" consisting of a small wage increase and a modest pension plan, indicates that conflict did exist and even though agreement has been reached, it does not mean that conflict has been eliminated; it has only been restrained for the present.

---

[1] J. Bernard, "The Sociological Study of Conflict" in The Nature of Conflict, UNESCO, 1957, p. 38.

For the purposes of this paper the sociological-economic approach will be used and, more precisely, conflict will be defined as any antagonism which manifests itself in a certain type of behavior most clearly seen over specific issues. This definition has several important implications. The antagonism must be apparent; this eliminates any latent conflict within the local. An example of latent conflict would be when some group of workers does not like the business agent, perhaps due to his personality. There may be tension between the group and the business agent, but unless they are motivated to specific action the conflict remains latent. This type of conflict will not be considered because of the difficulty involved in determining whether or not it actually exists, and also because of the problem of evaluating its importance.

Antagonism within the local union is most likely to manifest itself in terms of strategy. Several kinds of strategy are possible for groups which favor different goals:[2] (a) one group may withdraw from the local union by supporting a rival union; (b) one group may impose its goals on another; (c) an equilibrium may be established in which concessions are made; (d) goals may be modified so that a unity of aims becomes possible; (e) groups may assimilate to one another. However, in most cases the strategy is likely to be flexible and equilibrium is rarely permanent. The strategy employed can be most easily observed within the organization, and for this reason issues which are likely to cause antagonism will be considered in this exploratory study.

---

[2] Ibid., p. 42.

In concluding the general discussion of conflict it should be noted that it is not the purpose of this paper to explore methods used to reduce conflict. In fact, the view is here taken that conflict performs a necessary function within the local union since it is a stimulant to integration within the organization; indeed, it gives flexibility which allows the adaptation to changing conditions.

II. Major Issues over which Conflict is Likely to Develop

It would be impossible to list every type of issue over which conflict may arise; only the probable major issues will be discussed. The issues arising from diversity within the local union have been classified by Barbash in this way: (1) internal union problems, (2) policies and attitudes toward management and collective bargaining problems, and (3) ideologies.[3] However, as Barbash himself has pointed out, such classification is not rigid; most issues will involve some aspect of all three areas, and there will be a good deal of overlapping between the first two categories.

Barbash says that internal union issues are the most penetrating:

> The most pervasive issues in controversy probably have to do with the management of internal union affairs. Local union members are likely to divide over: (a) contending job interests; (b) ethnic interests; (c) "ins" vs. "outs"; (d) control over the international or intermediary bodies; (e) the quality of union leadership performance.[4]

He sees collective bargaining issues as mainly centering around a "hard" vs. "soft" policy towards management.

---

[3] J. Barbash, Labor's Grass Roots: A Study of the Local Union (New York: Harper 1961) p. 170.

[4] Ibid., p. 170.

Ideological issues are, at least at the present time, the least significant. These issues, it is true, may be extremely important within some locals, but as the issues primarily involve the question of Communist influence or in some cases the Activist movement within the union (or a combination of both), they can be treated as rather special cases.

These issues over which conflict is likely to arise are not new; they have probably been prevalent in the union organization for several decades. The issues related to conflict are therefore not really variables, although it is true that they will change over time. For example, ideological issues are not as significant today as they were at the end of World War II, and as the issues are defined more rigorously, more variation will be evident. In this pilot study more emphasis will be placed on collective bargaining issues. There are several reasons for following this course: (1) Due to the persistence of a fairly high level of unemployment and the question of technological change, the provisions of recent collective agreements would seem to have significance for conflict within the union. This suggests that collective bargaining problems may be a more important category today than was implied by Barbash. (2) Some of the issues suggested by Barbash within the internal union problems category may arise originally from collective bargaining problems. For example, the quality of union leadership performance will be influenced by the agreement which the leaders are able to negotiate with management. (3) From a practical point of view, it is much easier to ask questions on specific bargaining issues than on internal union politics. Internal union politics will be considered, but it is difficult to structure questions on specific internal political relationships; this type of data is more likely to emerge from discussions in the field while conducting the pilot study.

What are the major issues in collective agreements at the present time? The dominant issues in collective agreements at the present time are strongly influenced by the general conditions in the economy and consequently:

> the leitmotiv of the contemporary industrial relations scene is expressed by one variation or another of technological change and its popular equivalent, automation.[5]

The problems of unemployment and technological change have not produced dramatic changes in the content of collective agreements; rather they have produced modifications in

---

[5] J. Barbash, "The Impact Of Technology on Labor-Management Relations," in Adjustments to Technological Change, forthcoming volume of the Industrial Relations Research Association.

provisions which have been basic to agreements for many years. Seniority is an example of a fundamental collective bargaining provision; its importance today is greater than ever before, as has been shown by a recent study of four hundred representative contracts in which it was found that seniority is lacking in only 10% of contracts and in manufacturing the figure drops to 2%.[6] Most contracts have layoff provisions and layoff selection is based in part on seniority.

The recent modifications in the seniority provisions refer to the introduction and extension of transfer systems.[7] Transfer systems can take several forms, the strongest being what is known as interplant bumping rights, where an employee laid off from one plant may displace a junior employee at another plant. Interplant bumping is never conditional since there is usually a provision where, for example, a man with less than three years seniority can be bumped only by a man with more than six years seniority. It is noteworthy that in the 1961 meat packing agreements, both Swift and Armour have written transfer rights into their respective contracts. Provision for moving allowances has also been made for workers who have been laid off because of "technological change."

---

[6] Union Labor Report, Bureau of National Affairs, March 1961.

[7] Transfer systems date back to 1951 in the automobile industry in Detroit, but this type of provision was rarely written into the contract. What is new is that they are now being written into contracts in several industries.

The issue over the choice between work-sharing and layoff is still prominent in such industries as the apparel industry. However, the controversy over such a choice is likely to be sharpened, for in this industry it is probable that work-sharing will not be able to completely handle the problem facing the textile industry generally.

Another provision which seems to be coming to the fore is retraining. Trade unions, particularly the craft unions, have from their early development been interested in training. They have given their support to the government in the establishment of vocational schools, and the apprenticeship training system itself was the seed bed of the modern trade union movement. Union interest in retraining is, however, a relatively recent development. The United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the plumbing and pipefitting industry and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers have had retraining schemes for several years. During the last year a number of other unions, including both craft and industrial unions have negotiated retraining provisions in contracts. For example, the following agreements all call for retraining of displaced workers: Teamsters and longshoremen, and the Distributors Association of Northern California and San Francisco Employers

Council; the department store union and R. H. Macy and Company, Inc.; the I.U.E. and Otis Elevator Company; and the I.B.E.W. and International Good Music, Inc.

Several of the Supplementary Unemployment Benefit schemes improved the benefits features during 1961. This was the case in the automobile and rubber industries.

These recent trends in collective agreements show that unions have shown a primary concern for job security during a period of rapid technological change. The extent to which the union is successful in negotiating job security provisions means that the union has chosen to sacrifice other types of provisions for the time being. It seems that straight wage increases are not likely to be as large; indeed, in some cases there may even be no increase in wages at all. What has happened is that job security provisions have become a greater portion of the package.

Where the union has been unable to protect the worker from loss of job, the emphasis seems to have shifted to an attempt to give the worker some compensation for loss of job. During 1961 severance pay provisions showed an increasing incidence. Lever Brothers, the Kraft Division of the International Paper Company, and the seven railroads operating tugboats in the port of New York are examples of companies which have adopted new severance pay plans.[8] [8] Current Wage Developments, U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, April, August, December 1961.

---

The unions' drive for pension, health, and welfare plans which started in the early 1950's has continued to date. A recent study of four hundred union contracts shows that 68% of these contracts contained pension plans.[9] There is a trend towards making many of these plans non-contributory and also incorporating vesting provisions which means that an employee's pension rights will normally follow him when he changes his employer. Unions are also pressing for the establishment of multi-employer pension plans which carry the concept of vesting a stage farther by preserving the worker's pension when he changes jobs, either voluntarily or involuntarily, within the employer group. Disability and early retirement provisions are also becoming increasingly common. Severance pay, pensions and welfare benefits tend to provide the worker with some form of financial reimbursement for loss of job rights. It is more difficult to categorize the slow trend towards profit sharing schemes; it does not seem to be connected directly with either job security or income provisions after job loss, but is perhaps merely a pragmatic approach by the unions to increase the total package won at the bargaining table.

---

[9] Op. Cit., Union Labor Report.

Returning to our concept of conflict as one which involves a cost, it can be seen that when the union decides to follow one goal (e.g. job security) another goal is sacrificed (e.g. increase in wage rates). We can therefore say that the issues currently being negotiated can affect conflict within the union. These issues are not the direct cause of conflict; the issues are relatively stable and there will always be choices where there are limited resources in terms of what employers are willing to concede. The real cause of the conflict lies within the union and can be explained in terms of the social organization of the local union. Conflict is dependent on the variables within this social organization; it is only most easily identified over these specific issues. The crux of the problem therefore lies in identifying these variables and the relationship between them.

III. Major Variables in a Conflict Situation

If a local union was a completely homogeneous group of individuals with identical interests, there would be no conflict within the organization. The choice between a wage rate increase and a pension plan would not cause any disagreement, since a homogeneous group would select the alternative which would be most beneficial for every member in the group. Benefit would be possible for everyone within the organization because of the complete harmony of interest among all the members. This is of course unrealistic; even the sisters in a sorority do not constitute a homogeneous group; disagreements, manipulation, and even conflict approaching violence are possible. The local union is made up of diverse interest groups, but these very diverse groups are not so different that general agreement on most issues would not be impossible. Otherwise the organization would fail to survive for any length of time.

What are the major variables which determine the development of interest groups within the local union? At the outset it should be noted that the variables which will be discussed are not independent, nor are the interest groups which form around these variables completely stable, for groups may dissolve and reform in different combinations each time some different issue is considered. The following variables are suggested as the most important ones; the existence of these variables constitutes an underlying cause which may make conflict within the organization arise from time to time.

1. Ethnic and Racial Characteristics as a Variable

The importance of this variable varies from union to union, local to local within a union, and according to geographic area. This variable is particularly important when the minority group is significant, and it seeks to be represented in the leadership within the local. The study of the experience of the United Packing House Workers of America[10] with their anti-discrimination program concludes that there is little discrimination within the local over business activities but some discrimination against Negroes in social activities. The methodology was such that the rank and file members were asked to give their views on the existence of prejudice within the union; it would seem likely that the members, no matter their race or ethnic origin would attempt to avoid showing their organization in an unfavorable light. The rank and file did indicate, however, that minority groups did not receive equal treatment within the plant especially with regard to initial hiring and promotion to jobs of higher skill level. As expected, there was variation in response from white and Negro members. There was a good deal of variation from local to local and especially between locals in the north and those in the south.

---

[10] J. Hope II, Equality of Opportunity, Public Affairs Press, Washington D.C., 1956.

In the textile industry interest groups tend to be formed along ethnic lines. In the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, for example, members generally belong to locals according to their ethnic origin. The situation may arise where two pressers in the same plant will belong to different locals: one to the Jewish local and the other to the Italian local. This does not mean that there is friction between the two groups, but simply that the differences in the interests of the groups (in most cases social differences) have been recognized.

2. Level of Skill as a Variable

Since the beginning of industrial unionism it has frequently proven difficult to integrate skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled workers into the same union organization.

Purcell, in discussing the reasons for the difficulty in incorporating mechanics into a local of the United Packing House Workers of America, suggests that the problem arose primarily because of a feeling of superiority by the mechanical crafts over the unskilled workers, and, in some cases, over other skilled workers. He goes on to state that:

> Quite easily the mechanics build themselves into a separate little "neighborhood" in the plant community. The rest of the plant is "across the tracks."[11]

As one craft-conscious interviewee remarked, "What would I have to do with a sausage stuffer? I don't belong to the same class."[12]

Purcell found that many of the skilled workers, mainly electricians and welders, left the union formerly affiliated to the CIO, and joined a union now affiliated to the AFL. While the level of skill is also important in the craft union, its degree of importance is not so great as the example of the industrial union cited above.

---

[11] Purcell, Theodore V.S.J., The Worker Speaks his Mind on Company and Union, Harvard University Press, 1953, p. 158.

[12] Ibid., p. 166.

The reason that this question of skill differential is so pervasive is the importance of status within the work group. A man's status amongst his own work mates in the factory is of prime importance to the industrial worker. He will seek a recognized position in a group which takes into account his personal qualities and abilities. Modern industrial technology, with the increasing size of the productive unit, is such that the social culture within the plant will be made up of a number of work groups with skill, generally, being the most important determinant of the boundaries between these groups. The division of the labor force into these various work groups in the plant will be carried over into the local union. As a result there are likely to be differences which mainly center around skill level. This important variable is at times rather complex (for example, the machinists in one department may form a different group than the machinists in another department). However, skill will usually be more influential in the formation of interest groups than either location within the plant, or shift worked. The prime importance of skill level as a variable can easily be seen in industry in any discussion of wage differentials between different groups of workers. An example of this is found in the Illini City Studies where a worker employed in processing operations said:

> The trouble between the machinist and the process man comes because sometimes the machinist gets a little higher scale. They think they ought to get a little better deal all around. A lot of times they want to ask for higher increases for themselves than for the rest of the plant. In process we don't like that.[13]

The relative position ~~of~~ within the skill hierarchy within a plant or local union may change with time, but every man will always seek to emphasize his own particular skill and to seek what he believes to be a just return for his ability.

3. The Location of the Job.

The lines of conflict are sometimes drawn along plant and departmental lines; this means that the physical location of a worker's job may determine the interest group in which he seeks identity. Similarly, the line may be drawn between day and night shift work. The location of the job within a department, and even the position on the assembly line has been found to have a significant bearing on conflict within an organization.[14] The physical nature of the job, though important in issues which directly affect a specific group of workers in the plant, is likely to be less important than skill, as a variable, in issues which affect all members of the local. On the more important collective bargaining issues, workers will show greater identity with skill

---

[13] M. Derber et al., Labor-Management Relations in Illini City, University of Illinois, 1953, Volume 1, p. 250.

[14] L. Sayles, Behavior of Industrial Work Groups, John Wiley & Son Inc., 1958.

than with the position of their job station, department, or shift.

4. Age as a Major Variable.

Most writers on union organizations point out that one of the most easily observable inter-group conflicts is between older employees and younger ones. This is usually explained in terms of differing goals desired by young and by old, especially with regard to what provisions each group is likely to want from the collective agreement. A typical example is cited in the Illini City Studies:

> Well, we just put a pension plan on it. That makes a lot of old men happy. They really wanted to see that and they took a lot of interest in it. Forty years seems like a long way away to most young men... I think most young men would just as soon have a wage increase. I know I would... The union problem when things come to a vote is with the young men against the old.[15]

Seidman describes the varying goals sought by older and younger workers:

> The younger worker, eager for new experiences and adaptive to change, is different from his elderly fellow worker, who is set in his work routines and his outlook upon life, waiting out his years until retirement, primarily concerned with security and perhaps apprehensive of change.[16]

---

[15] Op. Cit., Derber et al., Vol. 1, pp. 250.-251.

[16] J. Seidman et al., The Worker Views His Union, University of Chicago Press, 1958, p. 9.

Though the question of age has been given much attention in the literature on labor unions, the main purpose of these researches has been to explain the effect of age on participation in union affairs.[17] Little evidence has been found of any attempt to make a systematic study dealing with age as a variable in conflict within the local union. There are indications that age may be the predominant factor in explaining conflict over a great many issues within the union. The central focus of this paper will be to examine age as a variable. The difficulty of isolating this variable is not underestimated, but it appears that of all the variables involved in a conflict situation, age is probably the least complex. It is now appropriate to pose more precisely the questions we will attempt to answer.

---

[17]See A.S. Tannenbaum and R.L. Kahn, Participation in Union Locals, Row, Peterson& Co., 1958.

IV. Questions to be Examined

In the field work connected with the pilot study we will attempt to answer the following questions:

(1) Is age a major variable in conflict within the local union?

(2) How important is age relative to the other major variables?

Another purpose of the paper is to explore, in a preliminary manner, the interaction of the major variables and the effect of this interaction on the extent of conflict within the organization. The interest groups within a local union are not normally permanent groupings, but will tend to take on varying formations depending on the issues at stake (there are exceptions: the position of the cadre in the local is an example of such an exception-- a cadre is a group within the local, controlled by a force outside the organization, often the leadership of the International. It will always act as a group on all issues; if the cadre is opposed by an equally inflexible group within the local then the conflict is likely to be more intense). We may hypothesize the intensity of conflict in the following question:

(3) If the major variables tend to reinforce each other will conflict be of greater intensity and manifest itself in more issues?[18]

The major variables will reinforce each other if in the local most of the young workers are Negroes, unskilled, and of low seniority; there would be no reinforcement if many of the young workers were white and skilled. The reason for introducing this third question is that a greater understanding of conflict may be achieved by treating the variables in toto, instead of trying to isolate the variables and analyzing their impact on conflict within the union.

---

[18] R. Dahrendorf, in Class and Class Conflict in Industrial Society. (Stanford University Press, 1959), posits the idea of reinforcing variables in relation to class conflict within society when he discusses pluralism and superimposition as types of conflict.

PART TWO:

EXPLORATORY STUDY

I. Methodology

1. Description of Interviews:

As part of the exploratory study it was decided to interview a sample of about thirty local union leaders who were attending the 1962 Summer Institute Program at the School for Workers, University of Wisconsin. As the investigation was preliminary in nature the sample was not chosen in a scientific manner; the only requirement imposed was that there be a wide dispersion in age of interviewees.

The interviews were conducted by two interviewers, one asking the questions and leading the discussion with the other interviewer noting the answers and comments of the interviewees. In some cases two local union leaders were interviewed together. This method proved very satisfactory, as the interview tended to become more of an informal discussion of the local union. The presence of more than one union official did not seem to inhibit interviewees; on the contrary it seemed to stimulate discussion.

The actual distribution of the interviews among the unions taking part in the Summer Institute program was as follows:

Union	No. of Interviews
American Federation of Teachers	4
Allied Industrial Workers	18
Oil, Chemical, and Atomic Workers	1
United Automobile Workers	4
United Steelworkers of America	4
	31 Total

2. Questions Included in the Interview

The interview was divided into three main parts:[19]

(A) Personal Characteristics of Interviewee:

Questions were asked in order to give information about the variables mentioned in the first part of the paper. There were therefore questions on age, type of job, department, shift worked, race, and ethnic origin. Questions were also asked to determine size of local and approximate average age of local members.

(B) Preferences on Collective Bargaining Issues

As pointed out earlier in the paper conflict is likely to be most clearly seen over specific collective bargaining issues. Each interviewee was presented with a list of eight forced choice questions which related to the provisions the interviewee might want the executive of his

---

[19]For a sample outline of the interview see Appendix I. Note: this does not include the supplementary questions which were asked during each particular interview.

local to bargain for in the next collective agreement. The interviewee was asked to assume that he was making the choice as a rank and file union member thinking only of his own personal interest. He was also asked to assume that his union's collective agreement did not contain any of the provisions suggested.

Briefly, the choices presented were as follows:

(i) Increase in wage rate or larger pension.

(ii) Increase in wage rate or earlier pension.

(iii) S.U.B. plan or company-wide seniority.

(iv) Work sharing or layoff based on seniority.

(v) Retraining program or severance pay plan.

(vi) Increase in incentive rate or increase in hourly rate.

(vii) Increase in wage rate or profit sharing plan.

(viii) Increase in wage rate or hospital and medical plan.

The actual choices presented were selected on the basis of current issues in collective agreements which were reviewed on pages 8-12 of this paper.

(C) Existence of Interest Groups within the Local

The interviewee was asked to describe the various interest groups within his local, the characteristics of the members of each group, and the issues over which the groups were likely to disagree. This part of the interview was deliberately made open-ended as it was felt that if the interviewee was allowed to talk freely about his local, the interviewers might be able to estimate the importance of the various interest groups within the local.

II. Expected Results of Study

1. Relationship Between Variables and Collective Bargaining Preferences.

It was expected that the interviewee's age would influence the choices he would make on the list of forced choice questions on collective bargaining issues. It was also expected that the other major variables would further affect the alternative selected. For example, in the case of age as a variable it was thought that the older worker would choose the following alternatives:

(i) Larger pension.

(ii) Earlier pension.

(iii) Company-wide seniority.

(iv) Layoff based on seniority.

(v) Severance pay plan.

(vi) increase in hourly rate.

(vii) profit sharing plan.

(viii) Hospital and Medical plan.

Writers in the field continually point out that older workers will want fringe benefits rather than wages and, conversely, younger workers will want more money now, in preference to some type of deferred benefit such as a larger pension. We would therefore expect that in our study the older the interviewee, the larger number of choices he would make in accordance with the list of eight alternatives cited above. This means that a worker who is 25 years old might choose two out of the list, whereas a man of 50 may choose six out of the list of eight. This expectation is shown graphically in the figure on the following page.

It is expected that once a worker reaches his mid-thirties he will begin to think about pensions and other benefits which are likely to be of interest to the older worker. This gradually increasing interest will continue till about age 45 when there will be a sharp increase in interest in deferred benefits as the worker becomes aware of the need to think of his later life, and also when the marginal utility of cash decreases after he has established a home and his children are able to support themselves. In his late fifties and early sixties the worker's interest in pensions etc. is likely to diminish somewhat as the funds set aside for such a benefit will not have long enough to amount to a very large sum.

2. Information Expected from Discussion of Interest Groups Within the Local.

It was rather difficult to foresee the results of this part of the interview, but it was thought that this section would yield the number of times interest groups representing the older worker were mentioned, and in this way it was thought possible to estimate the importance of this type of interest group in relation to other interest groups which were mentioned as existing within the local union.

EXPECTED VARIATION OF PREFERENCE ACCORDING TO AGE

III. Actual Results of Study

1. Relationship Between Variables and Collective Bargaining Preferences.

Unfortunately, due to the fact that the sample included interviewees from different locals and different industries, it was almost impossible to define some of the major variables. It was impossible to define skill as a variable because many interviewees had jobs which were peculiar to their own industries, and the descriptions of the jobs given were not adequate to compare jobs in different industries. Race and ethnic origin were unimportant in the study since only two of the interviewees were Negro; it was felt that the data from two interviews was inadequate as a basis for comparison. Also, because none of the interviewees came from locals where ethnic origin played a significant role in the affairs of the union, it was impossible to test this variable. Lack of good job descriptions in relation to the function of the department prevented any meaningful study of location of job as a variable. However, age as a variable was easy to isolate, and it was possible to compare age with collective bargaining preferences. The variation of preference according to age is shown in Table I on the following page.

Table 1: VARIATION OF PREFERENCE ACCORDING TO AGE*

Assigned Interviewee Number	Age	Answers to Questions[x]								Total a	b	c	d	e	f	g	h
1	25	1	1	1	1	-	1	1	1	7
2	25	-	-	1	1	-	-	1	1	4
3	26	-	1	-	1	-	1	1	1	5
4	27	1	-	1	1	-	1	1	-	5
5	28	-	-	1	-	-	1	-	-	2
6	30	1	1	-	1	-	1	-	1	5
7	30	-	-	-	1	1	1	-	-	3
8	33	1	1	-	-	-	1	-	1	4
9	33	-	1	-	1	1	1	1	-	5
10[xx]	34
11	35	-	-	-	-	-	1	-	-	1
12	35	-	-	-	1	1	1	1	1	5
13	36	1	-	-	1	-	-	-	-	2
14	37	-	-	-	1	1	1	-	-	3
15	38	1	-	1	1	-	1	1	1	6
16	38	1	1	-	1	-	1	1	1	6
17	39	1	1	-	-	1	1	-	1	5
18	39	1	1	-	1	-	1	1	-	5
19	40	-	-	1	-	1	1	-	-	3
20	40	-	1	-	1	1	1	-	1	5
21	40	1	1	-	-	-	1	-	-	3
22	42	1	1	-	1	-	1	1	-	5
23	44	-	1	-	1	1	1	-	-	4
24	45
25	48
26	48
27	49	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	-	7
28	51	1	1	1	-	1	-	-	1	5
29	52	-	1	-	1	1	1	-	-	4
30	56	1	1	1	1	-	1	1	1	7
31	59	1	1	-	1	-	1	1	1	6

[x]The answers totalled are those preferences which the older worker would be expected to choose. They are: (a) larger pension, (b) earlier pension, (c) company-wide seniority, (d) layoff on seniority, (e) severance pay, (f) Hourly rate, (g) hospital and medical plan, (h) profit sharing plan.

[xx]Those interviewees whose preferences are not recorded were all members of the American Federation of Teachers. They have been omitted because of the special status of teachers with regard to fringe benefits, and they will not be included in any statistical compilation in this paper based on this table.

*Source: interviews conducted at the School for Workers, University of Wisconsin, during the 1962 Summer Session. See Appendix #1 for sample copy of outline of interview.

The data in Table I is presented graphically in the figure on page 35 where the number of preferences chosen by each interviewee is plotted against age. Interpretation of this graph shows that although there is a good deal of dispersion from the trend line, there is a general tendency for preferences in collective bargaining to change with age. We can conclude that there is evidence of at least two interest groups, namely, the young group and the old group. There was, however, some difference between what was expected and the actual results (compare the expectancy graph on p. 30 with the actual results graph on p. 35). The average of the young group was 4.0 which was 2 points higher than expected; this deviation can partially be explained by the nature of the sample. All the interviewees were local union leaders which meant that they were very much aware of the need to take into account the views of all the members of the local, old and young alike. It was felt that the younger interviewees in particular, were trying to impress the interviewers with their responsible attitude towards the older members of their local; this would explain, at least in part, the difference between the expected and actual results at the lower end of the graph.

VARIATION OF PREFERENCE ACCORDING TO AGE (SEE TABLE #1)

NOTE:
1. AGE GROUP CATEGORIES ARE ENTIRELY ARBITRARY.
2. WHERE MORE THAN ONE PERSON OF THE SAME AGE GAVE PREFERENCES, THE AVERAGE NUMBER OF PREFERENCES WAS PLOTTED.
3. TREND LINE IS THE JOINING OF MIDPOINTS OF EACH AGE GROUP'S AVERAGE LINE.

It is felt that this type of analysis (plotting the variable against the preferences indicated in the questionnaire) can be useful in studying conflict in the local union. If the preferences of the older group and the preferences of the young group do not differ very much (this would be indicated on the graph by a small gap between the young average and the old average), then we can assume that both young and old, in this particular local, have the same type of personal goals which they would like to see the union achieve. This would mean that the likelihood of conflict between young and old over the issues presented in the questionnaire would be quite small. On the other hand, in a local where the gap between the preferences of the older group and those of the young group is great, any issue indicated in the questionnaire which divides the local is likely to have age as an underlying factor making for conflict; also, there is every possibility that the conflict will increase in magnitude as the gap in preferences increases.

Great difference in preference between the two age groups will not by itself precipitate conflict; it merely indicates an underlying condition in which conflict may be latent. This means that where there is a great gap in preferences (i.e. individual goals) conflict is more likely to arise and to be more intense, than where there is a small gap in preferences among members of a union local. Certainly the difference of opinion over union goals is a more important factor making for conflict than any of the particular issues over which conflict happens to arise. In this paper we are taking the view that difference in age is one underlying factor making for difference in preference as to what union goals should be, and consequently making for conflict.

Unfortunately it was impossible to subject any of the other variables to a similar analysis, and in this way estimate the importance of age compared to these other variables.

2. Information Obtained from Discussion of Interest Groups Within the Local.

The various interest groups which were mentioned as existing within the interviewees' locals are listed below. They are listed in order of the frequency with which they were mentioned. The probable importance of each as an underlying factor in conflict is discussed.

(A) The Complainers:

This group was frequently described in rather strong terms and was, without exception, mentioned as existing within every local. As with most groups the complainers were frequently described as an antagonist toward some other group such as "the complainers vs. those in power"; the complainers were often said to be either those who had been forced "out" of leadership or those who had been attempting to get "into" power. Only in one case did the interviewee admit that the group may at times have had a legitimate complaint. The interviewees generally felt that this group caused the local leaders extra work, but they did not feel that this group caused serious friction within the union.

Since the interviewees were union leaders it seems very probable that they would rationalize opposition to themselves as nothing more than habitual complaints by gripers. It is therefore difficult to evaluate the importance of "the Complainers" as a group.

(B) The Young and Old Interest Groups

Almost every interviewee said that both a young and an old interest group existed within his local. No-one, however, attached great importance to such groups. When asked if there had ever been any friction between the groups most interviewees replied by saying that there was never any trouble and that the differences between the groups centered around the fact that the older workers were more interested in fringe benefits and pensions than were the young. However, the members of the American Federation of Teachers indicated that there were strong feelings over how wage increases should be applied to the present salary schedule. The young teachers at the lower end of the scale wanted the increase to be used to raise the minimum or at least get an equal dollar increase for all levels of the salary scale. The old teachers who were close to their maximum wanted the increase to be used to raise the maximum in each category.

The interviewers got the impression that the local union leaders tended to play down differences which might emerge over age. One cannot be certain about this, but it seemed that at least some of the interviewees were trying to give the impression that each rank and file member always thinks of his brothers, young and old alike, and young workers respect the rights of the old. There was one notable exception from one very frank and older local Vice President who said:

> Younger workers have a clique. They don't come to union meetings; they don't appreciate what unions have accomplished; they only complain about anything that goes wrong. The young don't have as much respect for age as they used to; they want different things. The young learn something about what's good about the union only after the company steps on their toes. All that most young workers think of is a raise in wage. They expect too high a raise every year and are not interested in anything else.

(C) Groups Associated with Skill

Most interviewees mentioned that each skill usually formed a group within the local and that the leadership had to deal with many problems which revolved around rivalry between semi-skilled and skilled, and often between two skills within the plant. In one local, composed of vocational school teachers, there was conflict between the trade teachers, who emphasized their manual skills, as opposed to the academic teachers who stressed their university training. All the interviewees who had mentioned groups associated with skill as existing within the local said that these groups were more likely to be involved in conflict than any other group and that they certainly caused the leadership most trouble.

(D) Other Groups Mentioned

Groups centering around departments, shifts, and social activities were mentioned, but the interviewees did not attach any great significance to them as possible factors in a conflict situation. Where incentive rates were paid the local leaders complained that minor disputes arose. However, the antagonism in this case was more often directed against the company than against other groups in the plant. Few of the locals had many Negroes, and where their numbers were significant, no conflict on the basis of race was reported. As most of the interviewees came from different locals the question of ethnic origin could not be closely examined. However, in one local the union officer interviewed indicated that Serbians in the local operated as a group and usually voted as a bloc at elections.

(E) Other Information Reported

Although not directly connected with the main purpose of this paper it was found that a number of interviewees said that when a strike occurred or when a strike vote was taken, it was usually the younger members who were most in favor of striking. However, on closer examination there proved to be some good reasons (such as location of union local in a rural area where a conservative political climate prevailed) for this rather unexpected finding.

IV. Conclusions

Most of the conclusions have already been alluded to in the discussion of the actual results of this study. It will therefore suffice to briefly discuss the specific questions posed in concluding Part I of this paper:

1. Is age a major variable in conflict within the local union?

The importance of age as a variable as expressed in the brief review of the literature contained in Part One of this paper, is borne out in the empirical investigation by (a) the relation between age and collective bargaining preference, and (b) the information obtained from the discussion of interest groups within the local union.

2. How important is age relative to the other variables?

This study failed to answer this question. The study showed that age is an important variable but it did not say how important. The discussions with the local leaders indicated that skill was a more important consideration than age, so age may not be most important. Even allowing for the fact that the union officers were probably hedging a little on the questions relating to age, the interviewers felt based on their impressions of the situation, that skill differential is more important than age differential.

3. If the major variables tend to reinforce each other, will conflict be of greater intensity and manifest itself in more issues?

This question is probably the most intellectually stimulating of the three but unfortunately a good deal more research is necessary before it can become anything more than a very interesting hypothesis. We were unable to suggest any practical method of finding a solution.

Perhaps the crucial question which a preliminary study should answer is how can the study be improved? Assuming that the general methodological approach be retained, the following improvements seem necessary:

A. The sample should consist of two union locals, one where the variables reinforce each other and the other having variables which do not reinforce each other (to act as a control group).

B. The variables should be defined more precisely, particularly skill and locality of job. This should be possible with the assistance of the local union officers and foremen in the plant.

C. At least one hundred interviews of rank and file members should be conducted in each local (in the preference part of the interview).

D. Each interviewee should be presented with a questionnaire containing at least fifty alternatives from which he is to make his choices. The questions should be more refined and include areas other than collective bargaining.[20] This would allow statistical techniques to be used in analysis, a means that could not be used to any extent in the preliminary study (due to the small number of questions and interviewees).

E. The general discussion part of the interview should be retained because too much reliance on refined questionnaires and statistical analysis could be dangerous and misleading. The "scientific" part of the methodology will not in itself answer the questions here posed; it is necessary to get first-hand information from the union member himself and find out what he thinks is going on within his local. Only then will we be able to suggest answers to the questions with any degree of confidence.

Finally, though this research report is not an unqualified success story, it is suggested that it has contributed something by conceptualizing the problem of studying conflict in the local union.

---

[20]An examination of the collective bargaining alternatives presented to the interviewee during the exploratory study shows the urgent need for refinement of the alternatives. At least two of the alternatives do not adequately discriminate according to age and some of the other collective bargaining provisions suggested are rather vague. Any refinement should take into account the union's existing collective agreement.

Bibliography

1. J. Barbash. Labor's Grass Roots: A Study of the Local Union. (New York: Harper 1961).

2. J. Barbash. "Impact of Technology on Labor-Management Relations," in Adjustments to Technological Change, forthcoming volume of IRRA.

3. Bureau of National Affairs, Union Labor Reports, 1961.

4. M. Derber et al. Labor- Management Relations in Illini City, Vol. I and II, (University of Illinois 1954).

5. R. Dahrendorf. Class and Class Conflict in Industrial Society, (Stanford University Press 1959).

6. S. Greer. Last Man In, (Glencoe: Free Press 1959).

7. J. Hope II, Equality of Opportunity, Public Affairs Press, Washington D.C., 1956.

8. A. Kornhauser ed. et al. Industrial Conflict, (New York: McGraw-Hill 1954).

9. S. M. Lipset et al. Union Democracy: The Internal Politics of the ITU, (Glencoe: Free Press 1956).

10. T.V. Purcell, S.J. The Worker Speaks his Mind on Company and Union, (Harvard University Press 1953).

11. H. Rosen and R.A. Hudson Rosen. The Union Member Speaks, (New York: Prentice-Hall Inc. 1955)

12. L. Sayles. Behavior of Industrial Work Groups, (John Wiley and Sons Inc. 1958).

13. L. R. Sayles and G. Strauss, The Local Union: It's Place in the Industrial Plant, (New York: Harper 1953).

14. Seidman et al. The Worker Views His Union, (Chicago: University of Chicago Press 1958).

15. A.S. Tannenbaum and R.L. Kahn. Participation in Local Unions, (Evanston: Row, Peterson 1958).

16. The Nature of Conflict, UNESCO, 1957.

17. US Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Current Wage Developments, 1961.

Appendix

Outline of Questions for Interview.

Name of interviewee _____. C. _____

Phone(at Sullivan Hall) _____

Name of union _____ Local No. _____

I. Some Background Information.

1. What is your date of birth? _____ Age _____
Day Month Year

2. What is your sex? Male ☐ Female ☐

3. Where were you born? _____

4. Where was your father born? _____ _____

5. How many years have you been working for your present employer? _____ YRS.

6. What is the title of the job you hold at the present time?

Title of Job _____

7. Describe briefly the kind of work you do.

8. Is there shift work in your plant? Yes ☐ No ☐

9. Are you employed in shift work? Yes ☐ No ☐

If Yes, which shift do you work? _____

10. What department do you work in?

Name of Department _____

11. Give a brief description of the seniority system operating in the company where you work.

12. How much seniority do you have on your present job classification?

_____ Years.

13. How long have you been a union member? _____years.

14. How long have you been a member of your local _____years.

15. Are you a steward or officer of this local? Yes ☐ No ☐

If yes, please list the positions you now hold.
Name of position: _____

_____

16. Most locals hold regularly scheduled meetings for all members, or for all people who work on the same shift. About how many of these regular meetings have you attended this last year?

_____ out of _____

YOUR PREFERENCE ON WHAT YOUR LOCAL SHOULD BE TRYING TO GET FOR ITS MEMBERS

If it were your choice as to what the union should bargain for at the next bargaining session, which course of action would you take in each of the following alternatives? You must make a choice in each case (a through h). Where neither course of action is exactly what you would like, choose the one which is the most acceptable of the two. Mark your choice with an X in the box provided.

(a). A 15¢ an hour increase in the wage rate, ☐

OR

The same amount of money applied to a pension fund which would increase the amount of pension received when you retire. ☐

(b). A 15¢ an hour increase in the wage rate, ☐

OR

The same amount of money applied to a pension fund which would allow older workers to retire at age 60 rather than at age 65. ☐

(c). A S.U.B. plan where the worker gets payment from a fund financed by the employer when he is laid off. The worker must be unemployed before he gets anything from the fund, ☐

OR

An extension of the seniority provisions which would allow a worker with ten years or more seniority in one plant to bump a worker with five years or less seniority in the same plant or any other plant of the company, provided the more senior worker can do the less senior worker's job. ☐

(d). In the event of a slack period in your industry the union should negotiate for a work-sharing provision, ☐

OR

The union should not negotiate for a work sharing agreement but allow the employer to lay off some workers based on seniority. ☐

(e). A severance pay plan (or an improvement in the existing plan) to help displaced workers, ☐

OR

A retraining program to help prepare displaced workers for another type of job. ☐

(f). A wage increase paid in the form of raising the price rate (or establishing the method of payment if it does not already exist), ☐

OR

A wage increase paid in the form of improving the hourly rate of pay. ☐

(g) A 15¢ an hour wage increase, ☐

OR

The same amount of money applied to a Health Insurance plan which includes hospital and medical benefits for the worker and his dependents. ☐

(h). A 15¢ an hour wage increase, ☐

OR

The same amount of money applied to a profit sharing plan. ☐

Suppose the Bargaining Committee of your local follows a course of action which is directly opposite to the one which you would have preferred in the above selection of alternatives. In other words, if in (a) you would have chosen an increase in wage rates, the Bargaining Committee would have held the view that the increase should have been applied to pensions. If in every one of the choices they would have chosen the opposite course of action from the one you would have preferred, it is likely that the final agreement would be much different from the one which you would have liked. The question is now what would you be prepared to do about it?

III. Questions About Your Local.

Please tell us about the various groups within your local. How would you describe them? How would you describe the people who usually stick together in each of the groups? What are these groups likely to disagree over?

Meet

Your Shop Steward

Welcome!

Welcome to the shop. It's a union shop, and I'm your union shop steward.

Some locals call it chairman, and some have a grievance committee, but it means the same, really. I've been chosen to represent you and I'm at your service.

Everyone in the shop belongs to the union and is covered by our union contract. This contract was negotiated for us by our union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, CIO, through collective bargaining with the company.

Through our union contract we have job security, vacations with pay, paid holidays, guaranteed minimums, life and health insurance and many other benefits.

You'll probably have lots of questions about what your rights and responsibilities are in the shop, and maybe some about working conditions or your union insurance policy or sickness and accident benefits.

Bring them right here! I'll be glad to try to answer them, and I may have a leaflet on the subject to give you, too.

Also, I'm the person who has been selected for you to come to when you have a shop complaint relating to your job, wages, or any other shop problem. Through the union we have a regular channel to settle these complaints with the company. We call this our grievance procedure.

BE SURE TO TAKE ANY SHOP COMPLAINT TO YOUR STEWARD

You Can Help the Union Too!

The union is your organization. Its success depends on how much interest you take in it.

You can help by remembering first of all that YOU ARE THE UNION. It's you and the person next to you, and the one next to her, all of you, that make the union strong.

If the employer knows that every union member in the shop is interested in seeing complaints settled fairly, and that your stewards and union representatives have your support, then complaints will get settled faster and more easily.

That's what makes the whole Amalgamated with its 375,000 members strong.

Be sure to come to UNION MEETINGS. There we keep informed on what's going on in the union, and plan our local activities. It's important for YOU to be there so your ideas and vote will count.

WATCH THE BULLETIN BOARD FOR NEWS OF YOUR NEXT UNION MEETING

If you have a Shop Complaint or Grievance:

Don't quit your job

Don't stew all day long

Don't gripe to your fellow workers and neighbors.

They can't help but your steward can!

If you have a Shop Complaint or Grievance:

Do bring it to your shop steward

Do keep cool

Do remember that your union is backing you up.

I AM YOUR STEWARD.

My name is: .....

I work in ..... department on the ..... floor.

National Education Department
AMALGAMATED CLOTHING WORKERS OF AMERICA
15 Union Square • New York 3, N. Y.

426

YOUR EDUCATIONAL COMMITTEE

CAN GET MOVING NOW!

The University of Wisconsin School for Workers has its foundation in the assumption that organized labor is, and should be, a recognized institution in American society. For many years, universities have offered research facilities, advice, counsel, and field services to farmers, representatives of industry, retail merchants, and many other community groups. The University of Wisconsin has recognized that members of Labor Unions need and deserve similar attention in meeting and solving their problems within the framework of our economic, political, and social system.

This pamphlet has been prepared by the School for Workers under a grant from the Inter-University Labor Education Committee, a nonprofit corporation set up by the Fund for Adult Education, which was established by the Ford Foundation. It represents a part of our contribution to the program undertaken by the Milwaukee Federated Trades Council - AFL to stimulate the educational activities of local Unions belonging to the Council.

It is our hope that the practical suggestions which follow will be of assistance to local educational committees in their efforts to inspire in Union members a keener, more vital interest in the affairs of their Union and their community.

Robert Ozanne
Director, School for Workers
University Extension Division
University of Wisconsin

every season is a

GOOD SEASON

to begin your educational program. Because whether it's hot or cold, winter or summer -- there is always something you can do to make your members more aware of the Union, more eager to take part in its activities.

Classes are helpful, institutes and conferences are important. But Union education is bigger than any formal program. It is the grand total of all the ways in which a Union transforms its members from passive to active, from nothing-but-dues-payers to solid-every-meeting people.

In the following pages, we're going to suggest several ways in which you can make a start on such an ambitious project. Some of the ways may seem strange or roundabout to you -- but if you stay with us, you'll see what we mean. And in the end you may agree that sometimes he educates best who "educates" least.

So here we go, with some practical suggestions to help you get your educational program rolling RIGHT NOW . . .

A SPECIAL RATE BOAT RIDE

a dip in the deep brings Union dividends

On a hot summer's day, there's nothing that will cool brows and raise spirits like drifting into the briny deep. And is it practical? You bet!

Your Union can charter a boat holding about 60 people for a two-to three-hour ride at a total cost of about a dollar per person. And if you can afford it, why not take a quarter a head from Union funds and make it a specially tempting offer?

This is an extra-popular attraction in these parts, so it might be an idea to charter a boat now -- and make sure that you have a guitar player and a couple of good tenors aboard before you weigh anchor. Everybody will have a wonderful time, and you will have a chance to get on a "Hi-Ya, Joe" basis with a lot of members you never saw before -- and their wives.

A TABLE WITH A PURPOSE CAN PICK UP YOUR PICNIC

A PICNIC WITH A DIFFERENCE

Yes, everybody has picnics, and there is supposed to be nothing new under the sun to say on the subject. But "it ain't necessarily so"!

One of the most successful educational directors we know tells us of a new wrinkle which he absolutely guarantees. Have your committee pick a choice spot -- right in the middle of the festivities -- and put up a special table.

Then nail a sign alongside so that everybody can see what's going on -- which is getting people to write to their Congressman about something urgent or to sign something important. You'll be amazed at how many people come up to chat with you, and how much of your story you can get across by just adding this new twist to an old stand-by.

A "COUNTRY CLUB" DANCE

COURTESY OF THE UNION

A PARK PAVILION AT NIGHT IS SO GLAMOROUS AND SO INEXPENSIVE...

Most people, including Union members, have a yen for a touch of glamor in their work-a-day lives. And since most people don't belong to country clubs but do belong to Unions, it's up to you to meet the challenge.

We are not suggesting you buy a country club. But we do suggest that you take a look at one of the parks in the vicinity that rents beautiful pavilions for enchanted summer evenings.

Once you get the pavilion (token fee), all you have to do is string some Japanese lanterns around it, find a good rhythm outfit and, like magic, you have as glamorous a summer dance as a young Unionist could wish.

AND JUST A WORD TO THE WISE-

IT'S NOT WHAT YOU DO
IT'S THE WAY THAT YOU DO IT

Meaning that even the most successful picnic or party is a flop from your point of view if you don't make it an opportunity to meet members you've never really met before -- the people who are just names on Union books. The first thing, of course, is that you can't be shy -- you have to be friendly. As soon as you see a new face, saunter over and introduce yourself. If you are wearing some sort of special Educational Committee armband, or other identification, that simplifies the job.

While you're talking, find out what shop or section the new friend is working in, and as soon as you can find a quiet spot, make a note of it. Don't depend too much on your memory after a hot day in the country.

In talking to an "inactive" at a big affair, it's usually a good idea to have in mind one future Union activity to which you can invite him. This gives you a chance to observe whether your prospect is at all interested in other Union activities -- whether this is a lead that can be followed up.

And if there is even the slightest ray of hope, make sure that you do follow up. A few days after the outing, before the man has a chance to forget you, drop around to see him in the shop or ring him up at home and give him the details of the meeting you were telling him about. Or just ask him to drop around to the Union office to meet some of the boys. But whatever you do, do it soon, while the memory still lingers.

So you've made good use of the summer...

NOW YOU'RE READY FOR Fall

AND SOME BASIC ACTIVITIES...

first YOU'VE GOT TO COMMUNICATE

EVEN IF IT'S A ONE-PAGE MIMEO JOB

It's better than nothing -- much better. And it doesn't have to be smooth, or professional, or anything like that. It just has to talk to your people about things that are important to them....plus as many personal items as possible -- people always go for these.

If yours is a Local with just a few shops -- try a two-page paper, with Local news on the first and last pages, and shop news in between.

And don't think you need a full-time editor, although it's a good idea if you can afford it. We at the School for Workers will be glad to help you get a paper started, and we have classes where you can learn to be your own editor.

This is something worth thinking through carefully. First, who ought to meet when? If yours is a very big shop or local, do you have occasional meetings for sections or occupational groups where they can consider their particular problems? For instance, even if there are only five maintenance men in your shop, they should get a chance to get together with the Union officers once in awhile and discuss their problems. If they always get lost in the shuffle of a big meeting, they'll just stop coming.

Also, watch that agenda. Is it as short as possible? Are you balancing the time spent on various items? Have you the meeting fairly well planned in advance, so that it runs smoothly?

And have you allowed plenty of time for discussion? Nobody enjoys being talked at for more than a few minutes at a time.

How about a good labor film once in awhile to add zest to things? Your local library (in Milwaukee, the City Museum) has a film-lending service, and so does the University of Wisconsin.* Also, you can rent a film-a-month from the Workers Education Bureau of the AFL for $18.00 per year. Are you using all the good guest speakers your area provides? They're helpful, too, in giving your program a change of pace. If you're stymied, call on us -- we know speakers galore.

*You can write to the School for Workers and tell the films you want, or you can contact the Bureau of Audio-Visual Instruction, 1312 West Johnson Street, Madison 6, Wisconsin directly.

CONCENTRATE ON YOUR SHOP STEWARDS

Day in, day out-- they are "THE UNION" to your members

Everybody knows that the shop steward is the backbone of the local Union. This being the case, the stronger (i.e., better informed, more effective) the shop steward, the stronger your Union.

Now some shop stewards are born, but more of them are made. And the job of making them is up to you. You can start your own Shop Stewards' Training Course, where the contract is studied closely, shop problems worked through thoroughly, and new ways of reaching members are developed.

Or, if it's more convenient, the School for Workers can handle such a class for you. Either way, concentrate on your shop stewards--the results will more than repay the effort.

Make a good start...

WITH

NEW MEMBERS

DON'T JUST ACCEPT 'EM..
INAUGURATE 'EM!

Do you have a special "Inauguration Meeting" for new members, or do you just take them in at the end of a regular meeting?

If you've never tried it, you may find that a special New Members Meeting can accomplish a great deal. It gives you an opportunity to explain what each member gets for his dues dollar – all of the rights and benefits he is entitled to. You can also give a short and colorful sketch of the development of your Union, so that the new man will be proud of his outfit.

Finally, you can wind up with an impressive handing out of Union books accompanied by a friendly handshake, all of which should convince the newcomer that he's in good company.

A Counseling Service IS POPULAR

Everybody has problems which aren't directly job-connected. And some of these problems can be handled by the Union -- specifically, by the Educational Committee.

For instance, with a little training (which the School for Workers can provide) your Committee can answer questions about unemployment compensation, social security, and general tax problems.

By consulting with community agencies, you can discover where aid is available for members who may be in physical, psychological, or economic distress. Often when such emergencies hit people, they find it impossible to find the information they need. If you can find it for them, you will be performing an important service.

Why not establish a regular Counseling Night at the Union office, when at least one member of your Committee is around to help people. You'll be surprised how quickly the word gets around: "Got a problem? Why don't you talk to the guys at the Union?" Try this one as a morale builder. It's one of the best.

OKAY... YOU DO THESE THINGS BUT YOUR MEMBERS STILL DON'T BATTER YOUR DOORS DOWN...

GIVE UP?

NO! GO VISIT 'EM

By this time you've made a good start on your program -- but where are the customers? Don't worry -- it happens to the best of Unions. Sometimes the customers are slow to show up. But don't get discouraged. If the members won't come to the Union, take the Union to the members -- pay them a visit.

This is not as rugged as it sounds. By dividing the city into areas, Committee members can save themselves wear and tear. And you don't have to visit every Union member. Just the ones that you have some leads on.

Since a man has to listen to you if you're his guest -- and even look halfway pleased about it -- you'll be surprised how easy it is to tell him about the Union and to give him the feeling that he's going to miss a lot if he doesn't come around. It's worked for other Unions--let it work for you.

HAVE FREQUENT...

SPECIAL EVENTS

By definition, if you're a Union leader, you're a man with a keen ear attuned to the ground. And probably every so often you hear stirrings of interest in some topic among your members. You notice, say, that there's been a lot of talk lately about health problems, Blue Cross, etc. And as a matter of fact, you're thinking about moving ahead on the health insurance front in your next contract.

That's the time to hold an Institute on Insurance Problems and Benefits. Everybody gets a chance to examine these problems more closely, and your members are in a better position to know the score during negotiations.

Same thing is true for political issues, labor legislation, and a host of other topics which, from time to time, become crucial questions to Unionists.

Since most of you have attended School for Workers Institutes, we don't have to say that you can count on us for every kind of educational assistance.

MAKE POLITICAL EDUCATION A JOINT EFFORT

We know that most of you have already made some beginnings in the field of political education. We just want to suggest that you can do more by working political education into your other Union functions -- educational and recreational -- than if your Political Education Committee has to solve all of its problems alone.

The "Political Education" table at the picnic on page 5 is an example. So is the Political Issues Conference on page 15. You can also have the Ladies Auxiliary whip up a luncheon and feature a whale of a debate on a hot political issue with the Educational Committee working up some reference materials for members to take home.

Or you can feature a "Best Letter to Your Congressman" contest in your newsletter. Or, if all the committees get together and do a real publicity job -- you can even invite a Congressman to your local meeting.

It's the working together that produces the ideas.

WHAT'S A UNION HALL WITHOUT A LIBRARY ?

How to win friends and influence members

Nothing is as bare as a Union hall without books. You know that the labor movement is a major aspect of our free society -- and that thousands of books, newspapers, and leaflets are written about it -- but do all of your members know?

They'd be a lot more impressed with Unionism as a whole, and your Union in particular -- if they could see and read the labor news, the background of the news, the books on special labor problems, etc. Your local library (particularly in Milwaukee) will cooperate with you in working out suitable rental arrangements, and the Workers Education Bureau of the AFL can send you good reading material and a special case for display without charge. Thus you can have a solid, impressive Union library at almost no cost to your Union at all.

And while you're at it, have a good selection of popular books on hand to attract the lighthearted. Sometimes you can start a conversation with a fellow who just came up to borrow Caine Mutiny and wind up with a new active member! It's one of the best tactics we know.

SHOP PROBLEMS
CONTRACT
UNION ACTIVITIES
PRESIDENT
EDUCATIONAL BUSINESS AGENT
EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

AND ABOVE ALL...

INTEGRATE YOUR EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

WITH THE LIFE OF THE UNION

After all this talking, the last point we are going to make is probably the most important: An Educational Committee can only do a job if the Union leadership includes it in, as opposed to including it out -- someplace in the outfield.

An educational program where the members are busy with this class and that conference but are caught off balance when negotiations come up -- that program is a flop. To do a job, your Educational Committee has to know what's going on in the Union.

If possible, a member of the Committee should sit in on contract negotiations and other basic discussions. In this way, your educational program will handle first things first and will genuinely bring your members closer to the Union. Otherwise the whole thing is an ornament stuck on top of the Union structure -- nice, but insignificant.

So whether your program is modest or ambitious, large or small -- keep it close to the heart of the Union.

a few ADDITIONAL IDEAS!

KEEP IN TOUCH WITH YOUR NIGHT-SHIFT MEMBERS. Have occasional Saturday morning meetings to bring them up to date on Union business -- and how about a "Saturday Social" once in awhile, to make up for all the Union celebrations they miss.

A UNION MAN SHOULD HAVE A UNION FAMILY -- and you can help. Make something lively out of the Ladies Auxiliary. Just before the Xmas Kiddie Party (a fine thing in itself), have a luncheon for the ladies, with a good Union speaker. Or how about a Father-Son picnic-plus-baseball, with a little conversation about Dad's Union, when everybody is relaxed.

A HOBBY CLASS will bring people to the Union Hall that you've never seen before. Pick something popular and not too expensive. Photography Labs, Singing Groups, Leather Craft, and Social Dancing are frequent winners, and the School for Workers can help you get started.

BRING COMMUNITY ACTIVITIES TO YOUR UNION. Many of your members, and their wives, take part in community activities. Why shouldn't they do so through the Union? For instance, you hear that several members are thinking of joining a Red Cross class. Ask the Red Cross to hold the class at the Union hall. Or if the Union is contributing to a charity, maybe that organization has a movie about its activities which will enliven a meeting. In short, the more aspects of a member's life are included in the life of the Union, the more active members the Union will have.

Union Admin.
Leadership

REPRINT SERIES NO. 167

INSTITUTE OF LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Functional Areas of Leadership in Social Movements

by JOSEPH R. GUSFIELD

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS BULLETIN

The Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations . . .

was set up at the University of Illinois in 1946 to "foster, establish, and correlate resident instruction, research, and extension work in labor relations."

Graduate study . . .

for resident students at the University leads to the degrees of Master of Arts and Ph.D. in Labor and Industrial Relations. Institute graduates are now working in management, unions, government agencies, and teaching in colleges and universities.

Research . . .

is based on the Institute's instruction from the University Board of Trustees to "inquire faithfully, honestly, and impartially into labor-management problems of all types and secure the facts which will lay the foundations for future progress." Current Institute research projects are in the areas of labor-management relations, labor and government, the union as an institution, and the public interest in labor and industrial relations.

Extension . . .

activities are designed to meet the educational needs of adult groups in labor and industrial relations. Classes, conferences, lectures, correspondence courses, and films are offered. A wide range of subjects is available — each adapted to the specific needs of labor, management, or public groups.

Information . . .

service of the Institute furnishes data and reference material to any individual or group in the state in reply to factual inquiries on any aspect of labor and industrial relations.

Martin Wagner, Director
Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations
504 East Armory Avenue
Champaign, Illinois 61820

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS BULLETIN

Volume 64, Number 66; January 16, 1967. Published twelve times each month by the University of Illinois. Entered as second-class matter December 11, 1912, at the post office at Urbana, Illinois, under the Act of August 24, 1912. Office of Publication, 114 Altgeld Hall, Urbana, Illinois 61801.

Reprinted from The Sociological Quarterly, Vol. 7, No. 3 (Summer, 1966).

Functional Areas of Leadership in Social Movements

JOSEPH R. GUSFIELD, University of Illinois

STUDIES OF social movements have devoted a great deal of attention to types of leadership and problems of leadership change. Max Weber's concept of charismatic leadership has had an immense influence upon the thinking of sociologists about the sources of authority and dominance in changing political life. The "natural history" approach of many writers has stressed the decline of enthusiastic, agitational leadership and the development of statesmanlike, bureaucratic administrators as movements have become formally organized into stable structures.[1] The approach of these studies has been on leadership changes through time as a function of different forms of structure and of different situations in which organized movements operate as they become large and institutionalized.

It is our intention, in this paper, to examine the problems of leadership from a slightly different perspective. We are concerned with the conflicting types of demands made upon persons in leadership offices in many different situations. The focus of our attention is upon the persistent demands that leaders function within and before diverse audiences. In social movements, as well as in other complex and large organizations, the incumbent leadership is the center of demands to function in both internal and external environments. He is at the head of a hierarchy of authority and decision-making within the movement. At the same time, in the effort to affect change and to prevent the detrimental damage of a hostile environment, he operates in an environment of clients, enemies, adherents and potential recruits in which he has no authority and in which he represents the movement. The tension between these two areas gives rise to some characteristic problems of movements and their leadership.

[1] Two variants of the natural history approach can be found in Herbert Blumer, "Collective Behavior," in Robert Park (ed.), Principles of Sociology (New York: Barnes and Noble, 1939); and Max Weber, The Theory of Social and Economic Organization, trans. A. M. Henderson and Talcott Parsons (New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 1947), pp. 363–86.

The empirical analysis given here is largely drawn from one organization—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It deals with leadership in two different periods—at the turn of the century and in the mid-1950's.

Role Differentiation and Leadership Types

We are often used to thinking about leadership as one role within the differentiated social system of groups and organizations. References to the leader perpetuate this tendency. In recent years, however, the idea of role set has begun to sensitize sociologists to the need to distinguish carefully between a status, or social position, and the package of roles which accompany it. By virtue of occupying a status, the person is exposed to a number of roles rather than to a single role. It is important to stress the multiplicity of the roles in each role set because "any one occupying a particular status has role-partners who are differently located in the social structure." [2] The president of a bank acts quite differently in interaction with his employees, his colleagues, fellow members of a bankers' association, or among other influential persons in his town. Each of these interactional situations is governed by his status as a bank administrator but each interactional expectation is different from the other in content.

In discussing leadership, we are dealing with it as a social status. People assume positions of leadership. Those with whom they interact both demand and allow the leader to act in defined and patterned ways we call social roles. The diversities which distinguish one role from another within a set arise because the leader, or any status-holder, interacts with persons in different statuses and, hence, is performing different functions in each component of the role-set.

This can be seen in the studies of leadership in small groups. Bales and others have demonstrated a tendency for leadership to become differentiated into two persons, each of which performs a different function.[3] The task leader sets the conditions of work

---

[2] Robert K. Merton, Social Theory and Social Structure, rev. ed. (Glencoe, Ill.: Free Press, 1957), p. 370.

[3] Several studies dealing with leadership and role differentiation are found in A. P. Hare, E. Borgatta, and R. Bales, eds., Small Groups (New York: A. A. Knopf, 1955); see Robert F. Bales, "The Equillibrium Problem in Small Groups"; Phillip performance and goal orientation. The social leader maintains the morale of the followers and the harmony of the social group. Two somewhat diverse functions of leadership are called for. The performance of these by different people suggests the development of types of leaders as distinct persons—task leaders and social leaders.

Theodorson's study of leadership and popularity roles under conditions of high and low cohesiveness demonstrates that these functions need not be performed by separate persons.[4] He found that under conditions of high social cohesion, task leadership and social leadership were united in the same person. Under conditions of low social cohesion, in small groups, the performance of these functions was separated.

These considerations provide a basis for examining leadership in social movements from the standpoint of the joint demands made upon leaders to perform different roles and serve different functions. The implications of role-set theory suggests that leadership can be conceived as a set of simultaneous roles. The empirical studies of small groups show that functions need not be performed by the same person or leader.

The Problem of Dual Environments in Social Movements

The religious cult is often indifferent to the way in which it is judged by the hostile, nonbelieving society in which the cult is nominally resident. Organized movements cannot turn their backs upon the society with as much ease. Because a movement seeks to change the norms or values of the social system, the leaders and followers are cognizant of the nonmember and his potentialities as friend or foe of the mission. A movement is drawn into the power structure of the society. Change necessitates what Selznick has referred to as the process of "the penetration of institutional targets." [5] Public opinion is an object of concern and the major institutions of the society-church, school, government are friendly

---

Slater, "Role Differentiation in Small Groups"; and Leonard Berkowitz, "Sharing Leadership in Small, Decision-Making Groups."

[4] George Theodorson, "The Relationship Between Leadership and Popularity Roles in Small Groups," American Sociological Review, 22:58–67 (Feb., 1957).

[5] "These functional organizations—are the established value-impregnated associations which fulfill enduring needs. . . . It is just because these institutions are important to society that the penetration and exploitation of them may yield significant increments of power." Phillip Selznick, The Organizational Weapon (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1952), p. 172.

or hostile or neutral. The achievement of the goals of a movement is clearly affected by the degree of influence it can bring into play in the society. The more reformist and less radical the movement, the more likely it is that adherence does not commit the member to a major break with his social system. Nevertheless, because it does seek change, the movement encounters resistance and opposition. Because it must endeavor to expand its influence and power beyond its own committed adherents, a movement must find ways of manipulating and influencing the external environment of organizations, institutions, and opinion in which it operates.

These considerations give rise to demands that the movement avoid a high degree of isolation, ridicule, and social ostracism. Members and leaders come to feel that, in the interests of wider influence or defense against hostile organizations, traditional doctrines must be tempered or additional interests added. In this way potential recruits, socially influential persons, and possible "fellow-travelers" may be attracted to the movement. It is necessary, therefore, that the movement be articulated to the major segments of the parent society. To keep the movement on a plane of liaison with the society is one of the major functions of its staff of administrators and leaders.

Movements, however, are also ways in which social discontent is expressed and channelized. They aim at the imposition of concrete objectives not yet accepted as legitimate by important and influential parts of the social structure. The commitment of the membership to the movement, its leadership, doctrines, and methods is an important aspect of the strength or weakness of a movement. In its function of mobilization, the movement develops an elan for the ideas it espouses and for the work or sacrifice that the mission of the movement entails. Because membership must be "counted on" in moments of crises, the mobilization function entails the development of the separate identity of the movement and the forging of strong ties between membership and staff.

Occupying an office of leadership, the leader is subject to two sets of role demands and to dual functions. As an articulator of the movement in the total society, he must learn the limits and possibility of actions in the light of the power and ideologies of influential persons and organizations outside of the movement. He must attempt to sway these to the uses of the movement as best as may be done. However, as the mobilizer of commitments to the movement, he is expected to express the sharp disjuncture between the values of the society and those of the movement.

Janus-like, the leader stands in one place, facing two different ways. In one direction he is the head of the movement—the major embodiment of commitment to its values and program. Here he faces inward, toward the goals and ideals of the adherents. In the other direction he functions as a negotiator and communicator between the external environment and the internal one. In one function, that of mobilization, he breathes the fire and brimstone of enthusiastic mission. In the other function, that of articulation, he pours the oil of bargaining, compromise, and the common culture.

Because the leader is the most visible member of the organization, his acts become symbolic of the entire movement. This process is affected very profoundly by the spread of mass media of communication. It is with leadership that the public identifies in describing and judging a movement. The Townsend Movement, McCarthyism, the association of Walter Reuther with the C.I.O. —these are all instances in which movements are identified with specific persons. Leaders, in this function as representatives (or articulators) appear before the public as the champions of their movements on radio, press, and television. They are major points of contact between an uncommitted or hostile public and an organized, ideological, and personally committed movement. Especially at the national level, the leader personifies the movement, in cartoon, picture, story and legend. For much of the public, the leader becomes synonymous with the movement and its adherents.

As head of the movement the leader is charged with the duties of mobilization. As representative of the movement to other organizations and to the general public, he is the chief articulator of its interests in the wider society. Because of these dual functions, mobilization and articulation, demands develop within the movement for divergent modes of leadership behavior. These frequently exist at the same time, are often inconsistent, and are produced by a situation common to many organized movements at all times. They are not products of a specific stage in the life history of the movement, although the tensions may be more critical in one period than in another.

One set of demands inheres in the expectation that the leader function as a mobilizer of the energies and commitments of the movement. The other set of demands consists in the expectation that he be the articulator between the movement and relevant aspects of the society. These two roles—articulation and mobilization—are part of the role-set of leadership.

Mobilizing and Articulating Leadership in the WCTU

Both functions of mobilization and articulation are part of the set of roles to which leadership is espoused. It follows from this consideration that leaders who perform their tasks in ways which maximize one role in the set may endanger the performance of the other role. Typologies of leaders are thus instances in which one part of the set is dominant. The leader plays a role in one of the areas to the neglect of the other. The existence of one type of leader, clearly delineated, is thus the sign of strain and imperfect role performance or indicative of the greater need for one function to be performed at the expense of another.

The role of mobilizer demands that the leader act to maintain the movement's sense of a unique mission by upholding the doctrines and convictions which differentiate it from other movements and from the behavior it is attempting to change. As mobilizer, the leader is expected to be zealous in his commitment to the movement and intransigent toward groups in the society whose views and interests are not the same. He must reject the effort to moderate the gap between his movement and the positions of potentially friendly publics. He refuses to temporize with evil, to compromise principle, or to blunt sharp controversy. The leader as mobilizer is the soul and conscience of the movement.

As articulator, the leader must be prepared to meet halfway the publics and organizations of the total society. He must be able to find points of access to the major institutions even though they are hostile to change. To get a hearing in church, or school, or government he must be able to inspire some acceptance outside of the movement. As an ambassador he must be equipped to communicate between the movement and the society—representing to each the attitudes and interests and power of the other.

Leadership succession in the WCTU in the office of President shows us the appearance of each type of leader and the way in which one is a redress of the other. The data are drawn from the transition in presidents occurring in the mid–1950's and studied at that time.

For the ten years prior to the point of study the WCTU had been led by a woman whose mode of leadership approximated the traits of the mobilizer outlined above. She played this role despite the fact that this was part of a period of organizational decline and rejection of Temperance forces in the American public. With the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment the power and influence of Temperance organizations was greatly curtailed. Total abstinence and Prohibition were less acceptable doctrines than they had been in the 1920's and earlier. Even in Protestant church circles, the WCTU member found herself an object of ridicule and disapproval. The organization of women dedicated to the cause of total abstinence operated in a distinctly hostile environment.[6]

In this situation, the out-going president, Mrs. Z., was a picture of righteous steadfastness to principle. She upheld the centrality of Prohibition as a major aim of the organization, although other Dry groups deemphasized it. In enlisting support for total abstinence and for lesser restrictions on drinking, Prohibition had come to be defined as poor tactics by many Temperance people. Under the direction of Mrs. Z., however, the WCTU avoided alliance or cooperation with Alcoholics Anonymous and other associations which failed to accept the doctrines of total abstinence and Prohibition.

The style of her public speeches, in WCTU and in non–WCTU meetings, displayed an immense rectitude and fervor in the face of adversity. The following are examples:

> The WCTU has always been viewed as fanatical. A fanatic in people's eyes means a total abstainer. We believe in Prohibition rather than Temperance. . . . If we keep still then nobody is talking about it. (From a personal interview.)
>
> In order not to be considered narrow or unable to see both sides some of the Drys have allowed themselves to be maneuvered into accepting the idea that [total abstinence and Prohibition] is an old-fashion approach. . . . Between right and wrong there is only one ground and that is a battle-ground.[7]

By the zealousness with which she flayed her critics and upheld Dry doctrine, Mrs. Z. reinforced the public image of the Temper-

---

[6] For a analysis of problems of the Temperance organization in recent decades see Joseph Gusfield, "Ideological Change and Status Conflict in the Temperance Movement," in Charles Snyder and David Pittman, Society, Culture, and Drinking Patterns (New York: John Wiley, 1962).

[7] Annual Report of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union (1952), p. 85.

ance reformer as "too rigid." This posture enhanced the ridicule which the organization found in the public. When she announced her retirement, a leading metropolitan newspaper described her as an immensely rigid and devoted partisan, unable and unwilling to make concessions to opposing views, unwilling to participate in the processes of political debate and compromise. She was ridiculed as a "one-woman drought" and her retirement described as "hanging up the hatchet." [8]

Her intransigence and its effect on public acceptance of the WCTU were objects of criticism voiced by staff members and national officers. Mrs. Z. was described by several as "die-hard." She was seen as unwilling to broaden the scope of activities in which the organization was engaged. Among local units, at both state and city levels, two criticisms were directed against her. Her policy of open support for Prohibition and her unwillingness to cooperate with other groups interested in alcoholism problems incurred much disapproval. The support of Prohibition was especially a source of bitterness in one state. Here the state officers refused to use the term "Prohibition" in speeches or other literature.

Even those who criticized Mrs. Z. described her as a woman of forceful conviction. She was praised as especially adept in a debate against opponents and as a clear speaker in statement of the Dry cause. As a committed WCTU member and a Dry adherent, she was incomparable. What her WCTU critics questioned, however, was her utility to the organization as a vehicle of influence among nonadherents.

The demand for a redress of the balance between mobilization and articulation is seen in the expectations of the national staff toward the newly elected president, as well as in the criticisms leveled at Mrs. Z. Even before her inauguration, Mrs. A., the incoming leader, was sharply differentiated from Mrs. Z. in the eyes of the national staff. They stressed the divergent backgrounds of each and the implications this would have for WCTU policy. Mrs. Z. had been active in the Prohibitionist Party since her college days. Her husband was one of the leading figures in the Party, to which he gave all his time. She had few affiliations or interests outside of the Temperance movement. In contrast, the incoming president was married to a successful farmer and businessman. She was active in a number of church and community organizations unrelated to the Temperance movement, although she had been in the WCTU since youth. She had spent a number of years as a public school teacher. It was felt that Mrs. A. could bring to the WCTU leadership the kind of contacts which were necessary to expand the influence of the organization.

[8] Chicago Daily News, October, 1953, p. 3.

The difference in the functions each woman was equipped to perform was also drawn in the stress the staff placed on the personal traits of each. Mrs. A. was described as friendlier, less jealous and less fearful of other groups than Mrs. Z. One staff member summed up the differences between the two in saying: "She [Mrs. A.] is not the fire-eating leader. . . . Mrs. Z. was a 'die-hard.' Mrs. A. is a 'club-woman.'"

In describing Mrs. A., the same newspaper that had ridiculed Mrs. Z. pictured the new president as a woman of tolerance and flexibility in the face of opposing views. She was described as "womanly and intelligent." "There's nothing militant or dominating about her. . . . Even when you talk to her about drinking she does not stiffen or drop her calm and understanding attitude," wrote the reporter.[9]

The ambassadorial qualities anticipated from Mrs. A. were those which are most useful in fulfilling the role of articulator. She was expected to be moderate in her hostility to those who did not agree with Temperance views. She was expected to find the common ground and the common goals which the WCTU might share with other organizations, within and without the Temperance movement. As an articulating leader, her role demanded that she act to improve the liaison between the WCTU and the public, "to win friends and influence people." She was to be the guardian of the acceptability of the WCTU to the parent society.

In an interview, Mrs. A. showed that she understood the nature of this role as articulator and that it was the dominant element in her concept of leadership. She saw her task as that of developing greater social acceptance, rather than as conserving the values and traditional goals of the movement:

We have been inept in selling ourselves to others who think as we do. We've sort of shelved ourselves in. We will cooperate more with other groups in the future. We must always keep in mind that we represent the WCTU. We must act like ladies and be tolerant of other people—their minds.

[9] Chicago Daily News, December 9, 1963, p. 24.

Role-Set Conflict and the Articulation Function

The materials presented above might be thought of as support for the theory of leadership stages. This natural history approach posits a succession sequence in which mobilizing leadership is supplanted by articulating leadership as a movement matures. However, the WCTU is more than 75 years old and the Temperance movement has persisted through more than a century of agitation and controversy. We are dealing with a stable and organized movement. In order to study the demands generated by the role-set of leadership office we can examine the implications of articulating leadership. Although we were unable to gather data beyond the point of incumbency of the new president of the WCTU, historical materials have made it possible to study the ways in which successful articulation produces conflict between parts of the role-set represented by the internal and external areas in which leadership operates.

Frances Willard, the second president of the WCTU (1879–1898) provides an excellent case for examination.[10] She was probably the most successful leader the WCTU has ever had in "selling" the movement among groups and with institutions that until then had been indifferent, if not hostile, to the Temperance idea. In her career we can show that, in performing the articulating function, she developed a set of dual loyalties—towards Temperance and toward other movements—which led to internal opposition and demands that her behavior be more zealous and less compromising.

Frances Willard was the national secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union from its inception in 1874 until her bid for its presidency in 1878. Her efforts succeeded in 1879 and she remained at the head of the organization until her death in 1898. She had not been deeply connected with either Temperance or church circles before her membership in the WCTU. In this [10] This account of Frances Willard is based on a number of sources including the files of the WCTU weekly journal, The Union Signal, 1878-1900; the Annual Report of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 1874-1900; The New York Tribune, 1875-1900; Mary Earhart, Frances Willard: From Prayers to Politics (Chicago: The University of Chicago Press, 1944); Rachel Strachey, Frances Willard (New York: F. L. Revell Co., 1913).

she was unlike most of the members and lesser officeholders in the organization. Although a "Johnny-come-lately" to the Temperance movement, she had a considerable reputation as a college educator, lecturer, and advocate of feminism.

The fact that she was not representative of the WCTU membership enabled Miss Willard to gain access to areas and audiences in which the movement usually found it difficult to penetrate. The type of person who is marginal to the culture of the membership is often especially equipped to perform articulating functions because he has the requisite skills, knowledge, and entree into positions and institutions in other parts of the social structure than those now occupied by the adherents of the movement.[11]

Willard performed the articulation functions with considerable success. During her years as president the WCTU achieved great growth in numbers of members and became a highly respected social welfare organization. The organization was identified with many movements, especially the woman's suffrage movement. These additional interests and movements proved an important source for recruitment of new members and subsidiary leaders. Willard was also able to present the Temperance cause in non-Temperance areas such as the People's Party convention and in labor union journals. Her manners, education, and personality opened doors for her in upper-class homes, and she was successful in gaining large financial contributions to the cause. She had a talent for influencing significant public opinion. Although the South was still quite cool to the Temperance movement, and most opposed to the entrance of women in public affairs, Frances Willard received an unusual amount of enthusiasm and organized WCTU groups throughout the South. The leading national newspaper of the late nineteenth century, The New York Tribune, was generally critical of Temperance and its leadership. Willard, however, was always given good coverage in news and warm praise in the editorial columns.

The very attributes which enabled Willard to build and maintain liaison with the total society also led to frustration of some of the major commitments of the movement. Three affiliations were especially prominent as sources for loyalties and commitments which clashed with WCTU doctrines. One of these was the welfare orientation through which Willard attracted many recruits to the WCTU. As her presidential tenure increased she became more and more involved in Populist, Labor Union, and Christian Socialist circles. Ultimately she was "captured" by these movements and came to reconsider the Temperance doctrine from the standpoint of these orientations. In 1894 she committed the deepest of doctrinal heresies by maintaining that poverty was a major cause of intemperance, rather than the other way around—that intemperance was a major source of poverty. Such an admission of institutional factors as primary is a betrayal of fundamental Temperance beliefs in the importance of character. She repeated this view on several occasions in the following year.

[11] A similar process has been observed in the early leadership of the Zionist movement. See Lester Seligman, "Theodor Herzl—The Outsider as Political Leader" Commentary (September, 1950).

A second source of dual loyalties was Willard's commitment to female suffrage and the feminist movement. Largely because Willard was involved in the feminist movement, the WCTU had utilized a female financier in building their office building in downtown Chicago. The deal was financially disastrous for the WCTU and much might have been salvaged had the WCTU withdrawn its economic support earlier, when the damage was evident. Since the financier was a woman, however, Willard felt obligated to risk more than she would have done with a male promoter.

The third source of conflict between the internal functions of mobilization and the external ones of articulation was more personal. In travels in Britain, Willard had been accepted into a circle of British Fabians and temperance reformers, largely of upper-class life styles. She spent much of two years living in the homes of these people. Although they made financial contributions to the WCTU, they opened her to a charge that she was becoming "snooty" and British. She became a close friend of Lady Henry Somerset, the British Temperance leader. This placed a distinct strain on her relations to her own WCTU members when Somerset openly supported licensed prostitution on British military outposts in colonial areas. (It should be remembered that British voluntary associations were chiefly led by titled persons. The Temperance movement in England was less middle-class in social composition than in America and consequently more permissive and welfare-oriented toward drinking and moral behavior.)

These three events occurred in the years 1893–95. The demand for a more mobilizing leadership appeared in the form of a movement within the WCTU for the ouster of Frances Willard. Although she was the most popular and powerful leader in WCTU history, she was still forced to moderate her warmth toward her non–WCTU friendships and alliances. She stopped utilizing the Socialist theory of drinking, withdrew support to the female promoter, and denounced the views of Lady Somerset. Her power was weakened in the organization and opposing factions were emerging at the time of her death.

The needs for articulation in leadership were, if anything, even greater in the 1890's than in the 1880's. The political struggle for Temperance legislation was not as intensive as that of the 1880's. The organization was well beyond its initial stage of organization. A "natural history" approach would suggest a change toward a less zealous leadership. Instead the demands arose for curbing liaison. We are maintaining that Willard's behavior in the 1890's represented a swing toward one of the components of the leader's role-set: the articulation role. In carrying out sanctioned roles as an articulator of the organization, she was subjected to the demands and loyalties of diverse movements and organizations. These brought her into conflict with the mobilization component of the leadership role-set.

The vulnerability of the role-set to conflict follows from the nature of the liaison function. Whatever the initial commitments of the leader, in order to communicate and interact with persons he must be able to communicate, to "take the role of the other" and to assume the perspectives of those with whom he interacts. If he attempts to persuade his following to accept a compromise or a change initiated by outside groups and forces, he may come to play "the devil's advocate" and transmit to the adherents the power position, ideologies, and problems of the out-groups. Diplomats must be friends to enemies. Their treason is always suspected and their loyalty must be underlined on the domestic shore.

Role-Set Control and Leadership Functions

Until this point we have conceived of leadership as a status within an organized group, manifest in an office. However, a functional appraisal of leadership leads us to recognize that the duality of functions and of role-playing areas contains the possibility of conflict over the definition of the leader. This is a conflict between the external and the internal areas when leadership is conferred in one but rejected in another. The public may accept as the leader of a movement someone whom the organized segments of the movement have rejected. The "popular hero" may perform a considerable amount of articulating or even mobilizing functions without having the imprimatur of an official position. Such a person is able to perform functions in one area without being subject to the controls of the other parts of the role set.

Carrie Nation is a vivid example of this form of role usurpation.[12] She is probably the most widely known woman who has ever been a member of the WCTU. Although she occupied a most minor position in the organization, from which she was displaced, she had a great impact both as a public symbol and as a mobilizer of Temperance enthusiasms.

In the period 1900–1903, Mrs. Nation was frequently an object of national attention. Her direct crusade against the saloons of Kansas was front-page news. In fact, she was the only one of the WCTU figures, including Frances Willard, in the period 1875–1915, whose activity was reported on the first page of the New York Tribune. At the time that she began her "hatchetations" (as she called her assaults on saloon property), Carrie Nation was WCTU county president in a small Kansas county. This was the highest office she ever held in the organization. The year after she began the attack on Kansas "joints" even this position was withdrawn from her and she stopped attending state WCTU conventions.

Nation was partially successful in usurping leadership functions. As an articulator she became the personification of the female Temperance reformer, the representative of the movement in public imagery. As such, she has affected the acceptance of the movement in the areas of public opinion. Without a definite following within the organization, and without holding major office, she performed a leadership function by representing the movement to the larger public. In this her marked intransigence, direct attack, and vituperative language were a sharp contrast to the more tolerant, feminine, and welfare approaches of both Frances Willard and Lillian Stevens, who was then president of the WCTU.

The qualities which marked Carrie Nation enabled her to perform mobilizing functions with considerable skill. She developed followers from within the WCTU and from circles generally friendly to Temperance reform. She was highly instrumental in reversing an earlier state referendum on Prohibition enforcement. Her conduct served to activate electoral support in favor of the Prohibition measures.

[12] This account of Carrie Nation is based largely on the files of the New York Tribune, 1900-1903; The Union Signal, 1900-1903; and Carrie A. Nation, The Use and Need of the Life of Carrie A. Nation (Topeka: F. M. Stevens & Co., 1905).

The usurpation of role presented a difficult problem for the incumbent WCTU leadership. Because she was successful in mobilizing an enthusiastic sense of Temperance mission, open rejection would have antagonized Mrs. Nation's followers within the WCTU and in other Temperance circles. The shifts in the WCTU "line" toward Carrie Nation show an initial outright rejection of the usurper and a later endorsement as she gained in power among Kansas Temperance followers. After Nation's first attack on a saloon, the president of the Kansas WCTU repudiated her acts and publicly disassociated the WCTU from them. The yearly listing of Kansas officers omitted her name from the county offices, although Nation, according to her autobiography, still considered herself county president at that time. The WCTU national weekly journal carried no items about her until after she had become national American news and those items gave little space or support to her. After several months, during which she had proven a powerful mobilizer of Temperance sentiment, WCTU editorials were favorable to her although her work was never specifically endorsed nor supported by WCTU action. No attempts were made to persuade her to take her old office or any other in the WCTU nor did the organization aid her work through their organizational facilities.

Mechanisms for Minimizing Role-set Conflict

We have described the divergent roles demanded of leadership which arise from the different roles in the leadership set. These roles of mobilization and articulation are performed in different areas—internal and external environments. We have seen strains in leadership behavior resulting from two different kinds of conditions. In one type, as in the case of Mrs. Z., the personality and social background functionally required for mobilization is not adapted to the functional requirements of articulation. In another case, that of Frances Willard, the divergence in role demands created a dilemma in which appropriate behavior with one group of role partners subjected the leader to negative responses from the other group of role partners.

The leader of the social movement is probably more prone to experience this strain than is the leader in other organized enterprises, such as businesses, government agencies, or universities. This is so because the movement has a sharp sense of doctrine and mission, raising the demands for mobilization, and at the same time a hostile environment whose institutions and support is needed for access to power and to the means of public persuasion. The disjuncture between ideology and the adaptive problems of the movement constantly raises the issue of too much or too little accommodation; of renunciation of the mission or overrighteous inflexibility.

From a wide range of organizations, we are aware of several mechanisms by which the tensions within leadership role-sets have been minimized. In order to minimize role-set tension in the leadership situation, functions of both mobilization and articulation must be performed at a maximum without the performance of one threatening the performance of the other. This is substantially Merton's "problem of identifying the social mechanisms through which some reasonable degree of articulation among the roles in role-sets is secured. . . ." [13]

Minimal Visibility. One of the devices often resorted to by leaders depends on preventing behavior in one area from being observed by those in another area. The leader will speak to the membership in a different tone and content than used in speaking outside of the group. Government leaders, especially in the area of foreign policy, often speak one way for domestic and another way for foreign audiences. This device is especially vulnerable to breakdown where the leader must communicate the realities of external opposition and the viewpoints of hostile groups to the membership. If he attempts to adapt organizational doctrine to the adaptive needs set by external forces he is beset by the call of "softness."

Insider Pose. A great deal of seemingly disloyal behavior is often "excused" if the observer believes that it represents only a temporary expedient in the strategy of gaining the accepted goal rather than a stable set of commitments which contradict ideological or doctrinal principles. The leader may convince the membership that his seeming disloyalty was only an essential "tactic" in maintaining the group in power. One way of doing this is the rhetorical device of "taking the other into your confidence." Thus union leaders or leaders of minorities "explain away" compromise behavior by saying that it was necessary to help maintain power within the group of non-adherents. The posture here is one of making the internal membership part of the "boys." The membership is told that while to others it looks one way, to those "in the know" it is not the case.

[13] Robert K. Merton, op. cit., p. 371.

Going one step further in this device, it is possible to play the same game in more than one area, convincing external groups that a given act was only undertaken to secure one's office and convincing internal membership that a given act was merely "tactical." Management has been known to grant favorable terms in bargaining with a union in order not to undermine the position of a union leader in his own internal factions. It is a typical posture taken by partisan adherents in presidential campaigns. Faced with acts or statements which belie the sources of commitment to a candidate, adherents are often mollified by oblique party communications suggesting that the disapproved acts are "mere campaign tactic."

Separation of Functions. The solution to the problem of dual functions developed among the small groups studied by Bales was that of dual leaders. A similar process of division of leadership labors often occurs in organizations. The different roles within the role set are allocated to different persons and the tensions between the two partly avoided by recruitment of persons highly able and adapted to the one function although ill-adapted to the other. In educational and governmental structures it is often the case that a nominal leader becomes responsible for "public relations" while mobilization of the internal resources is left to some other office. The opposite may also be found, where the nominal leader concentrates on internal mobilization, and articulation is the province of another office. Such arrangements do not eradicate the conflicts within the role-set but they do provide a mechanism to ensure greater capacities for performance of each role and to minimize visibility.

Cycles and Stages. If we view a role set as a series of patterns through which functions are performed we can describe such performance in terms of the career of an organization, as well as the behavior of individuals. The natural history approach to leadership in social movements has maintained that in the early stages of a movement the leader is most adept at mobilization. This is the function most demanded by the situation of establishing a movement in the face of apathy, fear, and hostility. At a later stage, when administrative needs and accommodative attitudes are functional, the mobilizer gives way to the articulator or the administrator.

The natural history approach does not lend itself to the stable persistent movement, such as the WCTU. We have seen leadership succession and role-set tension at historical points well beyond the inception of the movement. We have emphasized the fact that both mobilization and articulation are functions demanded of leadership in a persistent movement. A cyclical sequence of leadership types is one solution to the role-set problem over a long period of time. In this "solution," leadership is oriented toward one or another of the two functions and areas described. The effort to fulfill one function, however, generates strains within the organization which result from the failure to perform the other function adequately. Forces within the movement or organization move for a new leader who will "consolidate gains" and maximize the neglected values. Since it is difficult to recruit persons who can perform both roles at a high level of competence, the same consequence of role-starvation is apt to occur in the opposite direction. The "virtuoso leader," whether mobilizer or articulator, creates tensions and disaffections within the organization. The resultant cycle of leadership perpetuates the functions of each role within the set by a succession of leaders rather than by a combination of qualities within a single leader.

Colorless Leadership. Perhaps the more common solution is an endless compromise between the two horns of the dilemma. The holder of a leadership office may perform each of the functions at a level of minimal competence but not do either as well as the specialized virtuoso. Most Temperance leaders have not been Frances Willards or Carrie Nations. The leader, in this bureaucratic fashion, is a figure acceptable to all but not enthusiastically received by any. After all, with most typologies a large percentage of all the cases are mixtures. Mediocrity is the expected and not the unusual occurrence in life.

The Universal Dilemma of Leadership Role-Sets

Our discussion of the triangular relationship between leader, internal structure, and external environment has stressed the diversity of demands placed on leadership. The resultant behavior is not a consequence of specific situations. The components of the role set are persistent aspects of organized groups which must operate within more than one social system. This is common to many kinds of organizations, of which social movements are but one. The problem arises from a general and persistent need for internal authority, supervision, and morale at the same time as a need for control of external forces which shape and limit the organization.

Failure to understand the persistence of divergent functions within the leadership role-set leads to the familiar "surprise reaction" with which observers frequently respond to new leadership after a short period. Two usual reactions are summarized in the phrases "betrayal of leadership" and "development of responsibility." These two myths appear chronically in modern organizations. The shop-talk of academics about educational administrators suggests that the new leader disappoints and astonishes. Those who saw in him the personification of all their deeply-held values find that he has begun to change. He begins to respond favorably to pressures against which he had fought. His once eager followers now feel betrayed. On the other hand, those who saw in him the great bête noire now also find that he has changed. They discover a finer pliability and a greater tolerance to other views. They say that he has "developed into a responsible leader."

Small Group Studies and Complex Group Leadership

In discussing role-set conflict in a social movement or other highly organized group, it must be clear that we define leadership in formal terms, as an office. Studies of role differentiation in small groups have largely dealt with the development of informal rather than formal statuses. The factors which make possible a sharing of leadership in small groups are less in evidence in the large organization. The fact of formal office brings into play the power which the formal status possesses. It is the fact of power, or imputed power, which partly enables the leader to represent his movement or organization in the external environment. He appears to the world as someone who has influence with his membership.

There is also another sense in which the conclusions of small group studies are not directly pertinent to the more complex level of group life represented by the social movement. Both mobilization and articulation are adaptive functions. A movement must both maintain its mission and temper its enthusiasm. Both functions are aspects of task leadership. In this paper we have given no consideration to the multiple aspects of internal leadership. Our emphasis has been on the duality of areas and audiences in which the leader operates in carrying out the tasks of the organization. The functions discussed here are therefore not direct parallels to task needs and social-emotional needs as these have been developed in the literature of small groups.[14]

The bridge between these two levels of analysis, however, lies in the conception of leadership common to both. In our analysis of a social movement, as well as in small group studies, leadership emerges as a set of functions and corresponding roles.[15] In this way, there is a unity of conceptualization. A functional conception of leadership, we maintain, is a better tool for the analysis of the social movement than are analytical schemes which depict leadership as a specific role residing in a specific person.

---

[14] Robert F. Bales and Phillip E. Slater, "Role Differentiation in Small Decision-Making Groups," in Talcott Parsons and Robert Bales, Family, Socialization, and Interaction Process (Glencoe, Ill.: The Free Press, 1955).

[15] The application of this conception of leadership to political offices can be found in David J. Danelski, "The Influence of the Chief Justice in the Decisional Process of the Supreme Court" (unpublished manuscript).

CURRENT INSTITUTE PUBLICATIONS

Research Volumes

Labor-Management Relations in Illini City, Volume 1 The Case Studies and Volume 2 Explorations in Comparative Analysis, by W. Ellison Chalmers, Margaret K. Chandler, Louis L. McQuitty, Ross Stagner, Donald E. Wray, and Milton Derber, coordinator

Labor-Management Relations at the Plant Level Under Industry-Wide Bargaining (A Study of the Engineering Industry in Birmingham, England), by Milton Derber

Current Manpower Problems: An Introductory Survey, by Adolf Sturmthal

Plant Union-Management Relations: From Practice to Theory, by Milton Derber, W. E. Chalmers, and Milton T. Edelman

The French Labor Courts: Judgment by Peers, by William H. McPherson and Frederic Meyers

Industrial Relations in Postwar Japan, by Solomon B. Levine (An ILIR research study published by University of Illinois Press.)

Diary of a Strike, by Bernard Karsh (An ILIR research study published by University of Illinois Press.)

The Politics of Wage-Price Decisions: A Four-Country Analysis, by Murray Edelman and R. W. Fleming (Available from University of Illinois Press.)

White-Collar Trade Unions, edited by Adolf Sturmthal (An ILIR research study published by University of Illinois Press.)

Bulletins

Preparing Workers for Retirement

Assignment, Garnishment, and Consumer Credit in Illinois

Workmen's Compensation in Illinois

Motion and Time Study

Job Evaluation

List of Publications, including a complete list of Reprints, available on request to the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations, 504 East Armory Avenue, Champaign, Illinois 61820.

Labor and Industrial Relations is a new and challenging field. Its importance increases as society becomes more complex. Its problems are crucial to a growing economy and a vital democracy. Through study and teaching, the Institute seeks to contribute to knowledge and understanding in this field.

The Institute draws from other academic subjects at the University and from the practical experiences of labor, management, and public representatives in developing a realistic, objective program.

Advisory Committee

SAMUEL C. BERNSTEIN, Assistant Director, Illinois Department of Labor, Chicago

EDWIN C. BERRY, Executive Director, Chicago Urban League, Chicago

MARC A. BUETELL, President, Ideal Industries, Inc., Sycamore

FRANK H. CASSELL, Director, United States Employment Service, Washington, D.C.

LEE CHAPMAN, Grand Lodge Representative, International Association of Machinists, AFL-CIO, Springfield

BUDDY W. DAVIS, Representative, District 34, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, Alton

ROBERT G. GIBSON, Secretary-Treasurer, Illinois State Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, Chicago

WILSON KIMMELL, Vice-President and Industrial Relations Manager, LeTourneau-Westinghouse Company, Peoria

V. Q. LAPAGE, Director, Region 8, Allied Industrial Workers of America, AFL-CIO, Decatur

JOHN DAY LARKIN, Arbitrator, Chicago

WILLARD J. REID, Vice-President and General Manager of the Genoa Branch, Automatic Electric Company, Genoa

ROY L. ROLLINS, Vice-President, A. E. Staley Manufacturing Company, Decatur

GEORGE E. SMITH, Business Manager, Local 702, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, West Frankfort

Miss Ruth Warncke, Director
Library-Community Project
American Library Association

THE GROUP PROCESS

I. The Group and the individual.

II. What is a group?

A collection of people with a common problem or concern which has assembled to meet the problem or concern.

III. Types of groups.

A group falls generally into one of two categories:

1. It is a decision making body,or
2. It is seeking clarification and information without reference to decision making.
3. Its character may change with changes in purpose, size, frequency of meeting.

IV. The group process.

The group process in discussion involves, at least the following concepts, if growth of the group through discussion is to result.

1. Awareness by the group of its goals.
2. A clear definition of the problem.
3. Information on the problem.
4. Participation.
5. Interaction.
6. Direction or movement toward the goal.

V. Stages of group growth.

1. Infancy - dependence on one leader.
2. Adolescence - rebellion and growing confidence.
3. Maturity.

VI. Characteristics of mature groups.

1. It communicates.
2. It pursues organized thinking.
3. It keeps to the topic.
4. It restates the problem.
5. It evaluates ideas.
6. It summarizes progress.
7. It develops group memory.

VII. The mature group member.

1. Accepts the goal or leaves.
2. Puts group success above own interests.
3. Thinks about the problem.
4. Asks for clarification.
5. Listens to the other fellow.
6. Encourages the other fellow.
7. Questions group direction and timing.
8. Relieves tensions.
9. Differs courteously.
10. Acknowledges his own errors.

VIII. Techniques for developing group maturity.

1. Initial orientation.
2. Good leadership.
3. Observation.
4. Group analysis.

IX. Practice session with group.

Group asked to choose problem for discussion. Instructor serves as discussion leader, and analyses for group what has taken place during its discussion of the problem in terms of the principles of the group process.

ruoeu

"PROJECT UNDERSTANDING" QUESTIANNAIRE RESPONSE

The following question was sent in December, 1967 to the 400 participants in one or more of five "Project Understanding" workshops sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews in Milwaukee over a previous two and a half year period. There were 143 individual responses.

QUESTION:

As a result of your workshop experience, do you feel you behave in a different way than you did before? That is, have you engaged in any new kinds of activities, or involved your family in new experiences, or said or done anything you wouldn't have done before?

RESPONSES:

8 - No.

17 - No, because they were already involved.

67 - Because they now have the facts, they also have the courage to SPEAK UP! SPEAK OUT!
Comment: "I probably have never made so many enemies, but I like myself better."

3 - Relayed highlights of each address to husband and family.

3 - Encouraged people to attend the Workshops.

2 - Would like to work on "Project Understanding" committees, etc.

8 - Arranged a program on prejudice for one other group to which they belonged.

1 - Got Dr. Robinson (Workshop Director) to speak to Business and Professional Women to widen his sphere of influence.

1 - Called Library about books on Negro history.

1 - Brought home children's books for family.

1 - Read books on the subject.

1 - Bought "Crisis in Black and White" and gave it as Christmas gifts to all her friends and family.

1 - Follows the local situation in the news more closely to stay informed.

1 - Contributed money to NAACP.

19 - Worked for open housing ordinance - circulating petitions, etc.

8 - Wrote letters - to aldermen, state legislators, "The Editor", etc.

1 - Arranged Parish Christmas party for 150 Headstart people.

1 - Arranged three programs:
January - Family mixer at St. John's Cathedral for Catholic and Protestant interracial families.
February - Fellowship with Negro Baptist Church (second visit)
March - Dialogue at Juneau Village - Father Neuberger and Pastor Gustafson.

3 - Gave talks about the Workshop.

1 - Attended School Board meeting - plans to attend court sessions also.

2 - Attended "police brutality" meeting.

1 - Attended Village Board meeting.

2 - Joined "FRIENDS" - interracial, ecumenical group.

1 - Joined "South Side Citizens for Equality"

1 - Joined NAACP.

2 - Joined local Human Relations group.

1 - Joined Saturday afternoon group which provides activities for "inner core" children.

2 - Joined Milwaukee Council for Fair Housing Legislation and Education.

2 - Tutor at St. Elizabeth's.

1 - Teaching Aide every Wednesday at Victor Berger School.

2 - Volunteer workers in Fair Housing office.

2 - Took Laubach course - "Each One Teach One."

1 - Volunteer at "Inner City Library Project".

1 - Works once a week at Community Center at "Hell's Corner" - 20th and Walnut.

1 - Works half day a week at Center for Civic Responsibility.

1 - Will teach Vacation Bible School at church in inner core next summer. Her children will attend, as they have never had any contact with Negro children.

1 - Organized "Youth, Inc." - non-profit organization.

1 - Worked actively in School Board election.

1 - Attended NCCJ Dinner for Mr. Terry.

1 - Will continue to donate clothes to schools' Social Work Department.

1 - As Girl Scout leader, had previously signed up troops to facilitate friendships between Scouts from inner city and those from other areas. As result of Workshop, has now brought the adult leaders together.

1 - Trying to get Whitefish Bay PTA to sponsor a workshop.

1 - Trying to get a similar workshop started within AAUW.

1 - Working on getting a workshop sponsored in southeast suburb.

1 - One of the founders of Elmbrook (Elm Grove - Brookfield) affiliate of West Suburban Council of Human Relations.

5 - MARCHED!

1 - Got her HUSBAND to march on the 100th night!

4 - Have met Negroes socially for the first time; become friends.

1 - Trying to get Negroes to move into Whitefish Bay, especially into her block.

1 - Had her children play with Negro Children.

1 - Her child is the only white child in the Headstart Project she attends.

2 - Had meetings of Negro and white women in their homes.

1 - Godparent to a Negro child.

1 - "I treasure two really good friendships started at the Workshop."

1 - Sold home in suburbs and moved to integrated neighborhood in the city.

3 - "It opened my heart. Now I put myself in the other person's shoes."

2 - Applied for adoption of Negro child.

One day Inst. focus
Agnes 5 point p. 2
use these in focus on 1 day inst. — encourage sense of accomplishment

Emory Via

what level of group

INSTRUCTORS' TRAINING INSTITUTE

Instructor sees Students outline — Put them on demonstration — Stress important for Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, AFL-CIO conducted by Labor Education Division, Roosevelt University

MONDAY, APRIL 23

9:15 - 9:30	Welcome Frank McCallister Earl W. Jimerson, International President Harry Poole, International Vice-President
9:30 -10:15	Program of the Amalgamated Purpose and Goals	Helmuth Kern
10:15-11:00	Trends in Training Executive Training for Management Leadership Training for Unions	Frank McCallister
11:00-11:15	Coffee break
11:15-12:15	Face to Face Communication	Mrs. Bess Sondel
	LUNCH
1:30 - 2:30	Face to Face Communication (continued)	Mrs. Bess Sondel
2:30 - 3:30	How People Learn	Mrs. Ruby Franklin
3:30 - 3:45	Coffee break
3:45 - 5:00	Leading Group Discussions	Mrs. Agnes M. Douty
5:00 - 5:30	Workshops	Victor Gotbaum Frank McCallister

Do you ever stop a man before through with performance — if clearly unprepared, perhaps

Small groups meet with leaders to work out approaches to leading discussion for practice sessions Tuesday and Wednesday. Two in each group chosen to lead discussion Tuesday. Remainder for Wednesday.

All sessions of the conference, with the exception of Tuesday morning, will be held at Loyola Field House, 1233 W. Greenleaf (at Sheridan).

Sensitive to others faults watch for dogmatism, because patterns vary so.

How to shut up discussants
[Setting frame: all discuss]

TUESDAY, APRIL 24

 10:00-11:00	The Group Process Principles	Miss Ruth Warncke
11:00-11:15	Coffee break
11:15-12:15	The Group Process (continued) Application	Miss Ruth Warncke
	LUNCH
2:00 - 3:00	Workshops Practice session. Two students lead discussion (20 minutes). Each appraises, group appraises. Instructor appraises.	Frank McCallister Victor Gotbaum
3:00 - 3:15	Coffee break
3:15 - 5:15	Techniques and Practice of Questioning in Leading Discussion	Seymour Mandell

 Tuesday morning session will be held at Union headquarters, 2800 N. Sheridan, The Library.

Tuesday afternoon session resumes at Loyola Field House.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25

9:15 -10:45	Role Playing and Visual Aids	Frank McCallister
10:45-11:00	Coffee break
11:00-12:15	The Buzz Session	Mrs. Agnes M. Douty
	LUNCH
1:30 - 3:00	Workshops Practice sessions. Each student leading discussion for 15 minutes.	Victor Gotbaum Emory Via
3:00 - 3:15	Coffee break
3:15 - 4:30	Workshops (continued)	Victor Gotbaum Emory Via
4:30 - 5:15	Workshops Groups to meet to select subjects for practice next day, using all methods demonstrated. (Role playing, buzz sessions, panel and group discussion.)	Robert Ahrens Emory Via

1:45 = 105 mins
= 75 mins

60 mins
(80)

Panel — 20 mins

Role — 15 mins

Buzz — 20 mins

Discussion — 15

3 discussions

Ray Jackson

Ho 56800

AM 20690

THURSDAY, APRIL 26

9:15 -11:00	Workshops - Practice	Robert Ahrens Emory Via
11:00-11:15	Coffee break
11:15-12:30	Workshops	Robert Ahrens Emory Via
	LUNCH
1:45 - 3:00	Workshops Practice sessions.	Robert Ahrens Victor Gotbaum
3:00 - 3:15	Coffee break
3:15 - 4:45	Sources of Information for Institute Instructors
	Union and Governmental.	David Dolnick
	Services Available Through the Public Libraries	Miss Ruth Shapiro
4:45 - 5:30	Workshop Planning	Helmuth Kern Victor Gotbaum

Via

FRIDAY, APRIL 27

9:15 - 9:45	The Grievance Process	John I. Powderly
9:45 -10:45	Workshops	Helmuth Kern Victor Gotbaum
	Practice sessions. (15 minutes each) 1) Leading a Discussion: Is it a Grievance? 2) Role Playing: Writing up the Grievance.	Resource: John I. Powderly
10:45-11:00	Coffee break
11:00-12:00	Workshops	Mrs. Agnes Douty Victor Gotbaum
	Practice sessions. Resource: Leading a Discussion: How to get the facts. (2)	John I. Powderly
12:00-12:30	Preparation for Evaluation Session	Frank McCallister
	LUNCH
2:00 - 3:00	Workshops (A and B merged)	Mrs. Agnes Douty Victor Gotbaum
	Practice sessions. Resource: 1) Leading a Discussion: How do we get facts: for Case I (2) Case II 2) Leading a Discussion: How should a steward behave in relations with foreman on step one.	John I. Powderly
3:00 - 3:15	Coffee break
3:15 - 4:15	Workshops	Mrs. Agnes Douty Victor Gotbaum
	Practice session. Resource: Role Playing on Step Three: (Local and Management)	John I. Powderly

SATURDAY, APRIL 28

9:30 -11:30	Evaluation of Training Session	Helmuth Kern Frank McCallister Mrs. Agnes Douty Victor Gotbaum

ruoeu

LEADING GROUP DISCUSSIONS

Agnes M. Douty, Ass'st. Director,
Labor Education Division

I. Who Can Be A Discussion Leader?

A. Any intelligent person can learn to lead group discussions if:
1. He believes in the "value of taking counsel with one another".
2. He understands that "talking is not always "teaching" and "listening" is not always "learning".
3. He is more concerned with what happens to the group, than with his own status as a leader.
4. He is aware of the different purposes which group discussion can serve (exchange information, formulate or alter attitudes, formulate policies for group, release tension, etc.).
5. He is willing to learn the techniques which improve group discussion.
6. He is willing to do the advance preparation which is necessary to insure good discussion.

B. Amplification of Points 2, 4, 5, 6.

II. What are Your Responsibilities as a Leader

BEFORE THE DISCUSSION

A. Preparing
1. Selecting a meaningful subject (alone or with others).
2. To inform yourself about group (its composition, size, purpose, attitudes).
3. To inform yourself on the topic to be discussed.

B. Organizing
1. Narrowing down the area or phase of subject to be discussed.
2. Applying knowledge about the "process of reflective thinking" to planning the development of the subject when discussion takes place.
3. Preparing an outline to serve as a guide during the discussion itself.

Group exercise in organizing for discussion:
Let us say that you have been asked to lead a discussion on the "Guaranteed Annual Wage" or "Automation". We will all agree that these, as stated, are broad subjects.

What considerations would play a part in your attempt to narrow the subject down?

How would you proceed to narrow it down?
How would a knowledge of the steps in the "thinking process" help you organize yourself and your outline for the discussion to take place in the group later?
Here are the basic steps:

1. Defining the problem or subject.
2. Describing the problem (analyzing, bringing out facts and opinions).
3. Arriving at possible solutions.
4. Evaluating the solutions (accepting, rejecting, choosing).
5. Translating into an "action" program(if necessary).

Basis for critique & for one day institute focus

C. Guiding

DURING THE DISCUSSION

1. Put the group at ease.
2. Clearly define the area or problem for discussion, an introductory statement on it as a springboard for discussion by the group.
3. Start the discussion by clearly phrased question or questions.
4. Keep it going, keep it relevant.
5. Encourage widest possible participation and interchange.
6. Help clarify and relate group's ideas as it goes along.
7. Summarize from time to time as necessary.
8. Stop at its most fruitful point in terms of the group's goals.

AFTER THE DISCUSSION

A. Self-appraisal of performance.
B. Planning for improvement of the next one.

III. What Are Your Tools?

1. Yourself and your basic attitudes.
2. Your "homework".
   a. Gathering information.
   b. Preparing your outline (questions, et al.)
   c. Utilizing available teaching aids (printed, audio-visual).
   d. Securing resource people.
3. A critical approach to your own and the groups' performance and progress.

AMD:sm
ruoeu

Techniques of Questioning

S. Mandell, Assoc. Prof., Roosevelt U.

Objective: To aid the discussion leader in mastering the use of questioning for purposes of group leadership and group stimulation in discussion.

Topical Outline:

1- Introduction to the tool called "questioning"

2- Uses of Questions

3- Types of Questions and a determination of the proper question technique:

a. leading
b. factual
c. direct
d. general or overhead
e. ambiguous
f. controversial
g. provocative
h. re-directed
i. yes and no
j. why, when where and what

4- Key words in questions

5- Hints on art of questioning

6- Case studies for discussion

7- Summary of the use of questions

Procedure: Lecture and guided discussion

KEY WORDS FOR QUESTIONS

CLASSIFY	Demands the assembling, arranging, distributing, and grouping of facts according to some common characteristic.
COMPARE	Requires the detection of resemblance and difference among facts.
CRITICIZE	Exacts good judgment, and a careful analysis of a subject.
DEFINE	Necessitates the determination of boundaries or limits to a subject and the fixing of a clear meaning.
DESCRIBE	Calls for the selection and portrayal of the features or qualities which characterize a subject.
DISCUSS	Compels a minute examination of a subject presenting pro and con considerations and adducing arguments in supporting a position.
EXPLAIN	Makes necessary a clarification of any points which may obscure a subject.
ILLUSTRATE	Calls for examples that will explain or clear up the subject under consideration.
INTERPRET	Necessitates bringing out the meaning of a subject in the light of an individual's belief or judgment.
JUSTIFY	Demands showing that a thing is reasonable or warranted.
OUTLINE	Makes necessary the sketching or indicating of main points.
REVIEW	Compels going over a subject deliberately and giving it a critical examination.
SUMMARIZE	Asks for the presentation of a subject in a concise and compact manner.
TRACE	Requires following in detail the development or progress of some subject.
VERIFY	Exacts proof that a thing is true.

A CASE PROBLEM: How we can develop questions during preparation for a discussion

by Seymour I. Mandell

You as a vital force in your union's affairs believe that it would be desirable to interest members of your local in greater participation in community activity. Therefore, you have decided something must be done to accomplish this result.

Step One: PREPARATION FOR THE DISCUSSION: In preparing for a discussion it is necessary for you to raise certain QUESTIONS:

1. what is the objective for this discussion?

2. what is the value of this objective?

3. why should this problem be opened for discussion?

4. how can I best put over the idea of "participating in community affairs" to the group--by issuing an order saying everyone must participate in community affairs; by discussing this matter with the persons involved so that we can fully establish the value of such action.

5. who will be the members participating in the discussion? are any of them now involved in community affairs?

6. are there any union communications, suggestions, etc. on this matter which will be useful in developing the subject?

COMMENT: Now let's examine what has been done. We have recognized the need for information (questions 1-5-6); we have recognized the need for developing our ideas on the subject (questions 2-3-4) and we have recognized the possible ways in which the idea can be best put across (question 4).

Step two: GATHERING THE INFORMATION: Let us examine one of the points raised in step one to determine what type of information we need:

1. Our subject is "Union members participation in local community affairs".

2. Immediately we see a need for defining words: participation, community affairs.

3. We also recognize that the Union may have some information about this subject or communications on the subject so we seek such information.

4. We also recognize that we should obtain information on the personal activities of some of our members in community life.

5. We must obtain information on types of community affairs and organizations which exist.

Step Three: DEVELOPING THE PRESENTATION:

1. We weigh the advisability of "issuing an order" as opposed to "having a discussion" and determine that the whole subject would become more meaningful if we hold one or more discussions on this subject.

2. We have information on the types of community affairs and organizations which exist in our area. We now determine to make up a list of these on a chart for presentation before, during or after the discussion.

3. Now that we have decided to hold a discussion we must determine questions to use to stimulate interest in the discussion, to guide the discussion toward our objective (to show the desirability for greater union member participation in community affairs and organizations), etc.

4. QUESTIONS: Major

   a. "Is it important for our members to actively participate in community affairs and organizations?"

   b. "Should our members actively participate in community affairs and organizations?"

      NOTE: let us examine the two questions--will we get the same type of response to both (a) and (b)? The major difference seems to be in the emphasis on important in (a) and therefore the member of the discussion will be weighing important rather than the word active which is emphasized in (b).

   let us examine these questions again--what kind of an answer can we expect to either question? probably YES or NO and nothing more now if we are interested in developing a discussion, the leader would have to immediately say WHY?

   so we rephrase the question to eliminate the YES or NO response and to start thinking and active response:

   c. Why is it important to have members of our local participate actively in community affairs and organizations?

      NOTE: let's see what we have done--we have forced the person to think and give reasons; we have guided him toward "important" and "active" at the same time; we have created a good overall question which advises the group of the subject for discussion, stimulates thinking and guides the discussion.

5. QUESTIONS: Minor--or development questions

   Note: now let's examine the discussion and make note of questions that should be answered during the discussion:

a. Factual questions will be needed for an explanation of certain words and ideas in the general question:

1) what do we mean by community?

2) how would you define the term "active participation"?

3) can you give examples of community affairs?

4) can you give examples of community organizations?

(through the use of this type of questioning you as discussion leader will have developed the information necessary to guided discussion on "important to have members participate actively" and you will have developed a common basis for everyone's thinking)

b. Someone may ask: "Does the Union believe that we should participate in community affairs?" or "Is it Union policy that we do so?"

And for this type of question you might well use a re-directed question such as: "Well let's see, do we find that Union directives have suggested that our local be recognized as an important contributor to community growth?" If the answer is YES then you should follow this with "Why?"

6. QUESTIONS FOR SUMMARY:

Note: it now becomes necessary for you as discussion leader to consider how best to draw conclusions at the end of the discussion period.

a. One suggestion is: "Now let us restate the first question we have raised for this discussion: Why is it important to have members of our local participate actively in community affairs and organizations?" How can we summarize our ideas on this subject?

Let's see what we accomplish with the above: we have stated that we want to summarize; we have reminded the group of the major question so that they remember the subject, remember and understand how to direct their thinking for the summary and thereby have made the summary more meaningful.

Dead-serious Walter P. Reuther takes oath at McClellan probe.

CONGRESS INVESTIGATES THE UAW...

Reuther Request Started It

Back in January, when the Kohler investigation was first discussed, Walter P. Reuther wrote the following letter to Robert F. Kennedy, chief counsel of the McClellan committee:

Mr. Jack Conway, my administrative assistant, has advised me of his conversation with you concerning the forthcoming hearings involving the UAW and the Kohler Co. as it relates to the Kohler strike.

As we have advised Senator McClellan, we are prepared to cooperate in every possible way to facilitate a fair and objective hearing of all the facts. I have asked Mr. Conway to continue to cooperate with your office and your staff so as to make available any pertinent information or data which you may need for those hearings.

In addition to cooperating in every possible way to facilitate your work as it relates to the activities of the UAW as an organization, I have repeatedly indicated a willingness to have the committee check into my personal financial matters. To date, to my knowledge, no one from your committee has made any efforts to inquire into my personal financial affairs and I can understand the reluctance of the committee to do so in the absence of any question or allegation being raised concerning my personal affairs.

Since as president of the UAW I will undoubtedly be involved in the Kohler hearings, I would feel much more comfortable if in advance of the hearings you would find it possible to assign a member of your staff to check into my personal financial affairs. I should be most happy to cooperate with such an investigation and will make available to your staff all of my personal financial records.

"... The best methods we have seen."

Carmine Bellino, chief investigator for the McClellan comr ittee, was the last major witness in the Kohler investigation. His testimony covered his examination of the UAW's finances and the personal financial affairs of Walter P. Reuther. What follows is his report as taken from the official record, omitting only the occasional irrelevant exchanges and repetitions. Sen. John L. McClellan opened the questioning.

* * *

Q.—Mr. Bellino, Mr. Reuther has testified that he made available to you all of his personal financial records, and that he also made available to you all of the union's records that you were interested in. Have you made an examination of all these records?

A.—Yes sir.

Q.—Identify the records. What records were turned over to you first? Mr. Reuther's personal records?

A.—Mr. Reuther turned over copies of his income tax returns.

Q.—For how many years?

A.—For the period from 1942 through 1956. Also his bank statements, saving accounts and cancelled checks from 1952 through 1957 and also various details of real estate transactions and war bonds that he owned.

Q.—What did he turn over with respect to the union?

A.—With respect to the union he turned over those records which I requested, particularly relating to the expenditures involving the Kohler strike . . .

The records included the general ledger, the cash disbursements, subsidiary accounts and reports and statements that were put out containing that information, also copies of any audit reports, the manner in which the union operated in connection with their auditing staff. Those generally were the main records.

* * *

(Sen. Karl E. Mundt then asked whether AFL-CIO records were involved. Reuther explained that he did not have custody of such records, but that the UAW books showed all contributions by the UAW to all organizations. Bellino confirmed this. The questioning was then resumed by Robert F. Kennedy, committee counsel.)

Q.—You went through Mr. Reuther's personal records that he turned over to you, is that right?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And made an examination back how far on some of these records, on some of these transactions?

A.—The main was from 1952 through 1957. However, I have the income tax returns from 1942 through 1956 . . .

Q.—What were the sources of income since 1942?

A.—His only, his main source of income was salary from the UAW union, in addition, for a period of time, there were various speeches, articles that he may have written.

Q.—On his salary, what does that range from? What was his salary when the investigation began? The first year?

A.—In 1942 it was $4,900; in 1957 it was $20,900.

Q.—And now, you were talking about the other sources of income. Have there been any other sources of income?

A.—The only other sources of income, chiefly, were speeches, from time to time, and articles that he may have written.

Q.—Now, what would happen to that money?

A.—Generally, initially he retained that money, and turned it over, as I understand, for contributions for charitable purposes. When he found he was paying taxes on those contributions, he set up a Walter Reuther Foundation, and from that time on the money was paid directly by the people who would pay him these fees to the Walter Reuther Foundation, and used for scholarships for the children of members of the union, as well as other charitable purposes.

Q.—So where he made a speech on the outside, or wrote an article for which he got paid, that money would be turned over to this foundation.

A.—That is what goes on at the present time, yes sir.

Q.—And he also owned—has he had any outside ownership of stock?

Q.—He had just — around 1948 he purchased Nash-Kelvinator stock for around $1,000 and that was sold in April 1956 for almost the same price —$1,001.26.

Q.—And it was purchased for how much?

A.—$1,000.

Q.—Ah, now, he has bank accounts?

A.—Yes, he turned over all his bank accounts . . . He follows the practice of depositing all his checks, except sometimes his expense checks he might cash, but all his salary checks are deposited in his savings account, and when he needs money, his checking account is transferred from the savings account.

Q.—So the procedure we have found among some people that appear before the committee of dealing completely in cash, of keeping the money in cash in a little box at home, this procedure was not followed?

A.—In this particular case, with Mr. Reuther and also with his union, the procedure was entirely, vastly different from the other union leaders we've had before us, and which we have investigated.

Q.—What about the expenses, Mr. Bellino? Expenses from the union; what occurs?

A.—Mr. Reuther invariably would submit expense accounts to his union, at the per diem rate, usually $7.50 a day—ranged from $7.50 a day to $12 a day, and I found that in instances when he was travelling or when he was on business for the AFL, during that time if he did accept the check from the AFL, he would not submit a bill to the union. Later on his procedure was to turn in his check from the AFL to the union, and elect to receive the lesser per diem figure from the union. In other words, the union paid him from $7.50 to $12 per diem, the AFL paid him from $40 to $50 per diem, but he would elect to receive the fee from $7.50 to $12 and turn in to the union the $40 or $50 per diem from the AFL.

Q.—Now we've found in some instances before the committee, individuals went to hotels and made charges to their hotel room, personal charges, and then the union paid for those bills. Did you find that?

A.—Yes sir, we found, of course, duplicate expenses in other cases.

Q.—Did you find that as far as Mr. Reuther was concerned?

A.—Oh, no sir, if anything, his hotel bills are audited very carefully. For instance in one bill there is a valet charge of $1.50 or $1.75 —that was stricken off, it was not paid by the union — it was charged to him personally. They're very careful in the auditing division to charge the member or officer with any personal expenses. The union does not pay for any personal expenses, no matter how small the item may be.

Q.—Now Mr. Chairman, we've also gone into a number of different unions regarding the financial records that are kept by them. We went into the UAW, also, extensively. Mr. Bellino went into the international books, which we had not done as in the Teamsters. We found a different procedure was followed by the UAW than was followed by these other unions that we have examined, and I think that in view of the fact that we have brought out some derogatory information regarding other unions and the procedures they have followed, it might be well if Mr. Bellino would, for just for a minute or two tell us what procedures have been followed by the UAW in dealing with their money.

I'd like to ask you first if there are definite rules to be followed by financial officers of the union?

A.—Yes sir. They put out a booklet which is called "Duties of Local Union Financial. Officers" which explains in detail in simple layman's language with samples of entries, exactly how a union secretary-treasurer should maintain his records, what reports he should submit, how to collect the information. It is very detailed. I might say it definitely it is one of the best methods we have seen in any union. We have not seen anything like this in the Teamsters union. They have a large summary of income and a summary of expenses. We have found it necessary to spend days and days in trying to get information out of the Teamsters union. There was no difficulty whatsoever in connection with the UAW.

They also have an auditing division. The auditing division, I understand, consists of 22 men. I have samples of their reports. They are identical with what certified public accounts put out. They have a regular audit program, and they submit these reports through channels to the local union and insist that the headquarters at Detroit be advised that the report was read at the meeting, and of any comments the members have with respect to the report. I noticed various follow-up letters where they may have been dilatory in notifying Detroit and they got right after them. Their records are audited at least once a year, and the trustees are also required to audit every three months or they may elect to engage a certified public accounting firm. And I noticed their CPA's reports of these examinations.

(At this point the booklet of instructions, samples of UAW financial procedures, etc. collected by Bellino were entered into the record as an exhibit.)

• • •

Q.—Now, Mr. Bellino, in some of the other investigations we've conducted, we have found no check authorization. When there is a check written there is no authorization for it or it has been handled in an improper manner.

A.—Yes sir, we have found just the issuance of a check which would be cashed and no supporting documents whatsoever. In this union (the UAW) they have a regular check authorization and complete detailed supporting documents. Particularly with respect to organizational expenses. I don't recall seeing one check in any of the Teamsters union's locals that we have examined, where a check would be issued for $5,000 or $10,000, where there would be supporting documents whatsoever of any of those items. In this union (the UAW), you have a supporting document, showing exactly what it was spent for.

(McClellan then interposed.)

Q.—Do you find any instance where there was false entries?

A.—No sir.

Q.—It's been my observation in the course of this investigation that frequently the entries made such as—and I think this is a very common one — organizational expenses — where the money was drawn out in cash and spent and there's been no way of tracing it. Do you find anything like that?

A.—No sir. In this case, where there's organizational expenses, it shows the plant where the expenses were incurred, and it gives detailed items of the nature of the expenditures.

Q.—Okay, that's a racket that's going on in some unions as we know and I just wanted to know about this one.

(Kennedy resumed questioning.)

Q.—Also, on the weekly expense form, we have found in other unions that there has been no authorization or documentation on expense accounts. What did you find here?

A.—They have a regular statement of expenses, which is broken down by each day. It covers a period of two weeks and accounts for every expenditure, whether it's car allowance, taxi, limousine, parking, telephone, telegraph, and to whom the telephone call is made. And that would be listed. That's something we have never found in any other union.

Q.—And what about the cash receipts and disbursements? For the month? Did you find that broken down?

A.—The cash receipts have complete detailed information as to the source of the funds. Any item, you could trace it, all you'd need is the time, the information and data is there.

Q.—And you found also a bonding policy?

A.—Yes sir. They have self-bonding. They found their losses in connection with their finances were so low, while the insurance rates were so high, they decided to have a self-bonding policy. And they bond all of their employees by that method. The fund at this time amounts to $139,000, and their own auditors have found approximately four or five instances where there have been defalcations within their union.

In each instance the information was brought out and appropriate criminal action taken, or is presently pending.

Q.—Do you have any summary on it, Mr. Bellino—just generally as to what you have found?

A.—Generally, I believe it is one of the reasons why we have never received any letters in all my experience going back to the House committee on education and labor, that involve any of these UAW-CIO locals, because of the excellent way they keep their records and the auditing which is done in their organization.

Reprinted without comment . . .

"Sweetiepie, Tell Us Little Old Judges in Your Own Words What a Scoundrel That Reuther Is"

The Religion and Labor Foundation

presents its

Social Justice Award

to the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee addresses by

Rev. Cameron P. Hall
John C. Corr
Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman
Albert J. Hayes

Sheraton Park Ballroom
Washington, D.C., November 18, 1958

Foreword

The three addresses published here, together with the response of the chairman of the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee, Mr. A. J. Hayes, were given in Washington on the occasion of the Religion and Labor Foundation's 1958 Social Justice Award Dinner. By two clergymen and a layman of the three faiths, together they are an appraisal and appreciation of the contribution to American life made by the AFL-CIO's "social invention," the Ethical Practices Committee.

Besides Mr. Hayes, members of the committee were honored with the presentation of individual plaques: Joseph Curran, David Dubinsky, George M. Harrison, Jacob S. Potofsky, and the committee secretary, Arthur Goldberg.

The Religion and Labor Foundation takes pleasure in publishing these tributes to the work of a group of men acting to improve the moral and ethical leadership of American trade unionism.

CLAIR M. COOK
Executive Director

February, 1959

Ethical Concern and Social Invention

By Cameron P. Hall

That the Ethical Practices Committee of the AFL-CIO is highly significant we are all certain; but where does this significance lie? That this kind of a committee is new, is apparent; but to what trend or development in American life does it point us? These questions are to me most absorbing and, I am convinced, of high importance to all of us. And so I have been concerned with the perspective or approach from which the meaning of the Ethical Practices Committee may best be understood.

My answer is this: the Committee combines two dominant elements in American life, namely, social inventiveness and ethical concern. God can use mightily for his Divine purpose in history these two elements in joint motion. Each of these has been strikingly characteristic of us as a people; and when social inventiveness and ethical concern converge, there is a special promise of abiding strength within us.

Where Do We Get Our Goals?

For just a moment now I want to pose a profound question; but I will be profound for only a moment, since I am capable of only *un*profound answers, no matter what the character of the questions! How, then, do the people of a nation set their nation's objectives and goals? How do they redefine these in the light of changing circumstances and conditions? And, equally important, by what means do these people set about carrying out their common objectives and advancing toward their common goals?

Rev. Cameron P. Hall is executive director of the Department of the Church and Economic Life, National Council of Churches.

Certainly, where there is a dictatorship of whatever label the answer is clear and simple. The ruling group, in control of the government, sets and proclaims the goals, indoctrinates the people accordingly, and puts each individual in the position and posture where he dare not obstruct but has to abet these goals — or else! Subtly or overtly, the government, through its own power structure and compulsions, acts directly upon the people — consistently and effectively. Agreement and daily support by the people of the goals and objectives placed before them are essentially a matter of the government turning on or off its powers, refining and extending its effective sanctions.

But we here are immediately concerned with this issue in a democracy. How do our common purposes and goals become established and clarified and, importantly, carried out in the day-by-day activities of us, the people? The answer is also a simple one, although not as sharply discernible as in a dictatorship. Our nation's goals emerge out of the people, they are defined by consent of the people, and they are advanced by the essentially free activities of the people, usually working together in many voluntary forms of common endeavor.

The People and Social Invention

Now what I have been saying so far is, with all this truthfulness, within the rhetoric of traditional American oratory. You may have begun to wonder if I am not trying out on you a talk for next Fourth of July! So I hasten to press now to an analysis of how these preliminary generalizations bear upon tonight's theme: the Ethical Practices Committee.

This role of the people rather than of government in relation to this nation's objectives means that the people themselves assume the largest measure of responsibility for what their goals are and for the ways by which they move toward them. Of course, government is a decidedly important means by which this responsibility is exercised. But the primary means by which the people express and promote their national purposes is by raising up private agencies and institutions and organizations — all of which we can properly call "social inventions."

Among the most important of these are the economic ones — the corporation, the farm cooperative, the labor union, and others. These are all social inventions, just as the assembly line and the transistor and the computor are technological inventions. The multiple voluntary organizations which we have spawned in our short life as a democracy is a witness to the vitality of our social inventiveness. A peoples' ability and will to engage in social inventiveness is part of the blood stream of a democracy. Voluntary centers of power and of activity of all kinds, shapes, sizes and purposes are indispensable to this and every democracy.

Now there may be some who feel that we may have gone far enough in these social inventions. I know I am talking to men and women who almost daily feel smothered by the committees to which they belong. Perhaps you think that our social inventiveness might now be applied to halting at least the pace of the increase of these social inventions, with their subcommittees, their ad hoc committees, their steering committees and all the other names we have for our heavy involvement in organization. There may be a point here, but it is hard to be optimistic at this point!

The Juncture with Ethical Feeling

The labor unions are an inspiring example of social inventiveness itself. But much more they are an outstanding example of where social inventiveness and deep ethical feeling combine. As the Industrial Revolution developed, the owners held such power that they acted directly — that is unilaterally — upon their employees. The result? Widespread injustice. Not only were the workers exploited as persons, but such exploitation violated and undermined the very fabric of the traditional goals of this nation.

The response of the workers was in large measure the labor union. The labor union is their social invention; it manifests their social inventiveness on behalf of justice and liberty and equality that lie deep within our goals and purposes as a people. Through this kind of a social invention, the workers of this country are now able to participate effectively in both the source and the carrying out of the nation's goals and objectives.

But for some time now it has been an open secret that our economic organized groups, which are all a product of our social inventiveness, have grown and grown in size and strength and influence. And with everything else about us on the up and up, mounting from big to bigger, surely we should be surprised if the corporation did not keep on getting larger — and the labor unions too. The challenge to today's spirit of inventiveness, I am persuaded, lies not in technological but in social inventiveness, related to the threat as well as the promise in the size and complexity and power of these economic combines.

Is There a Corporate Conscience?

The need for social inventiveness to be harnessed to ethical concern in this area of our national life can be put plainly: Does the corporation, for example, have a conscience? Indeed, can it have a conscience? If so, how does it go about getting one and how does it show it has it, when it gets one? Many of us would put this issue in perhaps a different way, but there is no difficulty in agreeing that it is being put and pressed. It has engaged the minds of A. A. Berle, Benjamin Seleckman, Walter Hamilton, John K. Galbraith and others. These write on the need of the corporation for the capacity for ethical self criticism and make suggestions as to how this capacity may be helped to develop. In the series on ethics and economics in society which the Department of the Church and Economic Life of the National Council has been issuing, one of our authors throws out in this connection a social invention called the "social audit." Just as business opens its books for a financial audit, so, it is proposed, business should open itself to an independent review and evaluation of its social responsibility.

Turn now from the corporation to labor unions. Because of the size of their membership and their influence upon the nation and beyond, this question is pertinent indeed: Has the labor movement today a conscience? Can it be assumed that it can have one? If it has, how should it be expected to assert itself — and when and where?

The Roots Are in the Members' Will

By now you will have already come to see, I am sure, that I view the significance of the Ethical Practices Committee of the AFL-CIO in what it is and in what it portends. In a truly thrilling and inspiring way it contributes to American life another combination of social inventiveness and deep ethical feeling. It is an instrument or agency established by and within organized labor itself by which organized labor formally agrees to put itself under the discipline of a considered ethical judgment upon its own practices, and to accept extreme consequences of such judgment, if need be. Because it is an effort to be this and to do this, it deserves not only the award of the Religion and Labor Foundation, but the inspired gratitude of the American people.

What I have said so far would be incomplete, however, without a closing further word. What the AFL-CIO has done in setting up its Ethical Practices Committee is in itself notable; but more reassuring to people like myself is what this reveals about the AFL-CIO itself. The Committee can, to be sure, do much to further ethical practices in the labor world; but its best will not be enough by far, apart from the dedicated quality of the leadership and membership of the unions. Without that, the Committee would never have been born; without it, the Committee will wither and die.

Ultimately, the Committee is less a source of strength to the AFL-CIO than is the AFL-CIO to the Committee. There is today a Committee with its already fine record because within the AFL-CIO there are leaders like Al Hayes, its chairman, and unions like the International Machinists of which he is President, and union members like those who make that union what it is. And as long as Al Hayes and the Machinists are not isolated but representative examples of the leaders and members of the entire AFL-CIO, the committee will survive and flourish.

For the Public Good

Finally, I have been struck by a fact I observe about those unions which stand far above the need for any concern by this Committee. All generalizations are dangerous, but I believe this one is not without some meaning. With perhaps an exception here and there, the unions that are judged and are not found wanting — and these are all but the few — have programs and activities that show vision and concern beyond the narrow and immediate needs of their members solely as employees. The kind of a union I have in mind works at civil rights and civil liberties, it pushes for urban renewal and better housing, it advocates better schools and education for all children, it stoutly believes in a foreign policy that makes for world trade and that reaches into the needs of less developed countries in Africa and Asia and Latin America.

Of course there is no uniformity here, nor need there be; and I mention these issues only at random. But there is evidence both negatively, in terms of un-ethical practices, and positively, in terms of ethical practices, that when union leaders and members become fixated on only what is good for themselves, they become blind to what is good for others, and what seems equally true — they lose integrity and fair dealing among themselves.

"Where there is no vision the people perish." Of one thing I am certain: where a deep concern for righteousness and integrity continues to run strong in organized labor, it will rise to the need for the social invention to express that concern, as it has in the case of the Ethical Practices Committee. ▲

The Conscience of Labor

By John C. Cort

The story of the Ethical Practices Committee goes back more than a few years ago, when the committee was set up following the merger of the AFL and CIO in 1955. The story goes back a long way indeed to the efforts of hundreds of little people, and some big people, to rid the labor movement of leaders who would pervert its noble purpose to their own ignoble or subversive ends.

The Story Began Years Ago

That story would have to go back to the struggles of men like David Dubinsky and Sidney Hillman to save their unions in the garment trades from domination by Communist agents; to the year 1941 when my own union, the American Newspaper Guild, became the first international in the CIO to free itself from Communist leadership; to 1947 when Joe Curran led a similar movement in the National Maritime

---

John C. Cort is a well-known Catholic layman, social action editor of Commonweal, former director of the New York Association of Catholic Trade Unionists, and present director of the Greater Boston Newspaper Guild.

Union; to 1949, when Phil Murray set in motion the machinery that drove 11 hopelessly dominated internationals into exterior darkness.

It would go back to 1953, when George Meany and the AFL expelled the corrupt Longshoremen's union and served notice that they would no longer permit rapacious and greedy men to hide behind a shield of international autonomy.

It would have to go back further than any of these dates to include the struggles of a host of little men and women who fought against racketeer leadership in their own local unions. It would have to include a truckdriver I knew in New York City, a man in pursuit of honest trade unionism, who told me once what it was like to have a gun shoved in his ribs by one of the goons who controlled a West Side Teamster local. It would have to include several apartment house superintendents whom I also knew in Local 32E in the Bronx (Building Service Employees), who lost not only their jobs but their homes in the fight against racketeer control of that union, and who wandered off to be unemployed for a while, hungry for a while, and then found other jobs, unknown, unsung and almost forgotten. It would have to include others whom I did not know who were murdered in hot and cold blood on the New York docks and in back alleys in Chicago in obscure battles long ago against uneven odds.

The Committee and Its Codes

All these and more are among those whom we honor tonight. But we must also honor those who are still alive and with us — fortunately — the men at the top who took the responsibility and did the job of formulating the conscience of the American labor movement and of directing the clean-out that followed that formulation.

The Ethical Practices Committee was set up by the executive council of the AFL-CIO following the merger convention of 1955. Its chairman was Al

Hayes of the Machinists' union and its other members Joe Curran of the NMU, David Dubinsky of the Ladies Garment Workers, George Harrison of the Railway Clerks, and Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, with Arthur Goldberg as counsel and secretary. From the start the committee had the vigorous backing of President Meany, who has been a tower of strength in this whole movement.

Eventually, the committee drew up six codes of ethical conduct for affiliated unions of the AFL-CIO. The first, issued in August, 1956, has to do with rules that should govern the granting of local union charters. In January, 1957, three more followed: one prohibits the holding of union office by "crooks, racketeers, Communists and Fascists." The second prohibits union officers from having a personal financial interest in any company with which their union bargains. It also forbids kick-backs, under-the-table payments or personal gifts from employers with whom the union bargains.

Against Corruption, For Democracy

The third sets down rules for the administration of health and welfare funds, rules which would make impossible such an event as the disappearance of $900,000 which was spirited out of the fund of the Laundry Workers Union by a slight-of-hand artist known as Eugene James, then serving in the office of secretary-treasurer.

In May of 1957 the Executive Council approved two more codes recommended by this committee, one on correct financial practices for unions, and the other on basic principles of union democracy. One of these principles which impressed me particularly was this: "Each member of a union should have the right to full and free participation in union self-government. This should include the right (a) to vote periodically for his local and national officers, (b) the right to honest elections, (c) the right to stand for and hold office, subject only to fair qualifications uniformly imposed, (d) the right to voice his views as to the method in which the union's affairs should be conducted."

This is perhaps the most basic code of all, for if we have any faith at all in the democratic process we must believe that in time, if given a free and fair choice, the rank-and-file will do the ultimate housecleaning themselves, the only housecleaning that gives any promise of permanence.

The Housecleaning Task

To prove that these codes were not merely lip service, the Ethical Practices Committee took action against certain affiliated unions. Using facts brought to light by the McClellan Committee of the Senate, the AFL-CIO brought its own charges, held its own hearings and delivered its own recommendations to the executive council and to the 1957 convention of the AFL-CIO.

As a result three unions were expelled: the giant Teamsters, the Bakery and Confectionery Workers, and the Laundry Workers. Two others, the United Textile Workers (not to be confused with the Textile Workers Union) and the Distillery Workers were given temporary reprieves and placed under supervision following promises to straighten up and fly right.

More recently the committee has been responsible for clean-up actions or investigations affecting the Jewelry Workers, Operating Engineers, Hotel and Restaurant Workers, Meat Cutters, and Carpenters. Much of this is unfinished business, but taken all in all it is a sizeable piece of housecleaning.

There have been many critics of the Ethical Practices Committees, some of them from labor's own ranks, some of them from the ranks of unions that are not even under investigation. Others have not criticized; they have gone along, but they have felt uneasy at heart. They might not go as far as old John English when he told the AFL-CIO '57 convention, "Deep down in your hearts you know that there is not a union connected here that is better than the Teamsters Union."

God's Is the Ultimate Judgment

The people I speak of would not say that, or believe it. They would say something like this: "Sure, Jimmy Hoffa isn't everything he ought to be, but who is? And anyway, he's a helluva labor leader. He gets results and the rank-and-file swear by him. And besides, there's a little bit of larceny in all of us. Doesn't the Good Book say, 'Let him who is without sin among you cast the first stone?' And 'Judge not that you be not judged'? What labor leader hasn't padded an expense account somewhere along the line? So why should we all of a sudden get self-righteous about the Teamsters Union?"

This is a persuasive line in some ways. There is some truth to it, enough to be dangerous, not enough to be right. For after all, it isn't necessary or desirable that we should judge Jimmy Hoffa or Dave Beck or Eugene James or James Cross in the sense that Christ deplored. It isn't necessary for us to say how much guilt lies on their souls, or whether we are better than they are in the eyes of God. Maybe we would have been worse if we had been brought up as they were, or owned the same set of genes. Maybe they were dropped on their heads when they were kids. Maybe they are not responsible at all in the eyes of God.

All we know is that they are responsible in the eyes of men. All we know is that some men must be given authority to judge actions and to draw lines, saying, "Thus far and no farther. We may be no better than you are in our hearts, but if we are going to sit back and let you get away with that, then we might as well give the country back to the savages."

Our Cross and Our Strength

These men whom we honor tonight have been given authority by the House of Labor to judge their fellows. As far as we can see, they have used that authority with fairness and restraint, but they have used it. And the House of Labor is better for it — smaller, but better — a house now that any decent man can be proud to call home.

It is important that we keep this house clean, that we keep it swept and garnished. For let's face it — the American press and the American public do not apply the same standards to the misconduct of labor leaders as they do to the misconduct of businessmen.

It is expected in this country that a businessman should go out and connive, that he should kick and gouge and cut corners in order to make a fast buck, in order to make a lot of fast bucks. But labor leaders are supposed to be idealists. They are supposed to be self-sacrificing, unselfish servants of the laboring masses — champions of the poor and defenseless workers.

This is our cross, but it is also our strength. For it is precisely because the labor movement has been a movement that was built upon the love and hunger for justice that it has become a great movement. And it will be precisely when it loses that love and hunger for justice, when it loses that sense of idealism and dedication that it will cease to be a great movement and become just another business — which God forbid.

Great movements, like great nations, usually start dying from within before they are destroyed from without. To those men who have been entrusted with the internal health of a great movement, the American labor movement, must go out our thanks and our prayers. May the good Lord guide them and strengthen their hands, for the odds are that they hold in those hands far more than just the health of the American labor movement. ▲

Three Religious Ethical Principles

By Eugene J. Lipman

There is a statement in the Talmud: He who presents an idea in the name of its original author, it is as if he had brought redemption to the entire world.

Since in my view, the world stands in the need of a bit of redemption, I am delighted on this occasion to present the ideas of my favorite Rabbi, Morris Adler. I feel a pleasant kind of irresponsibility at this moment. After all, if the speech is bad, it's Adler's fault! Actually, if these remarks are of any value, it's because the ideas are Rabbi Adler's. If they are not, the fault will be my inadequate words of expression.

Religious Ethics Govern All

Three religious ethical principles should be applied to the purpose of this dinner and to the ethical future of the American labor movement. First, no activity of men or the institutions of men is free from God's ethical commands. Nor may any individual or institution create a private or special set of ethical laws to govern its public conduct. Religious ethics, divinely ordained, are

---

Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman, Social Action Director for Reform Judaism, spoke on behalf of Rabbi Morris Adler of Detroit, who was unable to attend as the originally scheduled speaker.

universally applicable.

Unions and organized labor come under this principle. The ethical purposes of union organization and activity cannot be limited to economic, social, or political benefits for union members. These very valid purposes of organized labor must be carried out for the benefit of society as a whole and with society consciously in mind — or the purposes and the principles behind them will have been warped and distorted. "What's good for our members is good for all of society" is as questionable an ethical proposition as "What's good for . . . my corporation is good for the country."

When we view this evening's proceedings in the light of this principle, the Ethical Practices Committee of the AFL-CIO has richly earned the thanks of religionists and of American society as a whole. Labor's codes of ethics transcend cleanly the parochial interests of the labor movement. They are written with the democratic process and our democratic society clearly in view. We of the RLF honor ourselves in hailing both the documents and their architects.

No Immunity from Law

A second ethical principle: no person or human institution is immune from society's scrutiny under law where public conduct is concerned. Organized society has the right to legislate regulatory measures for all institutions. Organized labor is no exception. If laws can be rightly passed to prohibit the practice of polygamy by the Church of Latter Day Saints — whose religious tenets permit and encourage that courageous, and to me incredible practice! — then certainly the public through its government can regulate the relationship between a union's desires and the general public welfare. If laws can properly regulate how much of my salary belongs to society for its general needs, then certainly government can have something to say about the fiscal structure of trade unions. So long as unions are led by and made up of human beings with human limitations, laws can and should be applied to them for the benefit of society as a whole.

The Positive Purpose of Law

The third ethical principle: The purpose of law is not to punish or coerce alone, but it is much more positive. Permit me to suggest that Judaism has always known this and has symbolized it in the very word we use, loosely translated as "law." A mitzvah is a Divine commandment, and mitzvot come in two varieties: positive ones to be fulfilled, negative ones to be avoided. In this context, the purpose of human laws as well is two-fold: to cure such sickness as may develop among individuals and institutions in the society; and second, to permit healthy organisms to function and grow with a maximum of freedom. To ignore this second or to relegate it to a minor position is to invite catastrophe in a free society.

The labor movement is generally a healthy movement. Rabbi Adler reports that he has been overwhelmed in his work on the United Auto Workers Public Review Board by the integrity and decency of almost all unionists. Even the cases which come before this great board are indicative of good health. Rabbi Adler says: "No case has come up which could not occur in a church or synagogue." To preserve this good health, to expand it, to permit it to operate in our economy and in our society — this is a responsibility of government as the organized public. If legislation is needed to this end — then regulatory legislation is a good thing.

Let me summarize: The ethical laws of God are universal. Human laws consistent with and consequent to such ethical principles must be validly applied to every segment of society. The purpose of laws is not only to cure and to prevent illness, but also to protect healthy organisms and to permit them maximal expression and freedom. Such an organism is American Labor. It will undoubtedly grow ever more healthy and mature, thanks to the men we honor this evening. ▲

Mr. Hayes (right) receiving one of the individual plaques presented to Committee members by Dr. Clair M. Cook, RLF Executive Director (left).

Citation

For nearly three years The Ethical Practices Committee of The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations has maintained faithfully its charge of assisting, in the language of the AFL-CIO Constitution, "to keep the Federation free from any taint of corruption or communism." Its democratic purpose and high sense of moral responsibility have brought forth six codes of ethical practices, unique in the history of private organizations, which have set the norm for a high level of conduct by the whole of responsible American trade unionism.

Vested with authority to conduct investigations and hearings and to make recommendations, the Committee has moved with rare wisdom and utmost courage. Upheld by the Executive Council and the AFL-CIO delegates in convention, it has shown in remarkable degree unique leadership and initiative in a difficult and disagreeable task, one which could be accomplished only by devotion to integrity without regard to compromising expediency.

Therefore, in public recognition of the contribution it has made to raising the level of moral integrity in the labor movement, thereby affecting for the better the whole of American life, The Ethical Practices Committee of the AFL-CIO has been granted the 1958 Social Justice Award of The Religion and Labor Foundation, which has caused to be cast in bronze its name as a permanent mark of these achievements.

On Accepting The Award

By Albert J. Hayes

Thank you, in behalf of the members and staff of the Ethical Practices Committee. I accept this award — and the honor it confers — in their name.

The task for which you honor us is not a pleasant one. Indeed, it is the most unpleasant assignment I have been given in my forty-one years in the labor movement. And I am sure that my feelings in the matter are shared by every member of the Committee. But the task is an essential one, and we in the labor movement know we must accept unpleasant assignments as well as those which lead to popularity and prestige.

The process of justice in our free society is ordinarily — and rightly — an impersonal process.

The Challenge to Be Objective

In some respects, however, the task of the labor movement in meting out justice on an impersonal basis is much more difficult than it is in agencies established by government for that purpose. It is a general practice in our courts for a judge who may be prejudiced by interest in, or friendship with, an accused to disqualify himself or to grant the accused a change of venue, in order to assure impersonal and objective justice.

A. J. Hayes, chairman of the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee, made the accompanying address in receiving the Social Justice Award on the Committee's behalf. Mr. Hayes is president of the International Association of Machinists.

However, this is not possible in the labor movement, since we believe sincerely that the first responsibility for eliminating corruption and any other activities adverse to the membership of labor unions is ours. Because of this conviction, we cannot disqualify ourselves or seek any change of venue. We have no alternative to investigating and judging persons who, in some cases, we have known closely for many years and, in other cases, with whom we have been associated for many years.

In the light of this fact, our great challenge has been to be objective in an atmosphere which does not always lend to objectivity. And, while we are not the best judges of our own fairness and objectivity under such difficult and trying circumstances, I can assure you that each one of us has made a special effort to put aside both friendship and prejudice in carrying out our unpleasant, but essential, assignment.

The Burden of Discipline

Our task is further complicated by the knowledge that in making our judgments we must, by the very nature of the Federation, recommend discipline — where discipline is necessary — which may adversely affect thousands and perhaps hundreds of thousands of members who are not guilty of any wrongdoing. And we must do this in full awareness of the fact that the overwhelming majority of those members are honest and sincere union men and women who are neither directly nor indirectly responsible for the guilt of their chosen representatives.

It is our earnest hope that the standards of conduct embodied in the Ethical Practices Codes, and the actions taken against those few organizations which have refused to abide by those standards, will produce a group of labor officials who are constantly conscious of the high standards required, and a membership which insists upon compliance with them.

It is not an easy task to insist upon high standards of ethics and morality in a single segment of society, when society at large does not always recognize such standards fully. On the other hand, the Federation cannot justly refuse or delay corrective action because other institutions or groups in our society refuse or fail to recognize their responsibilities regarding the corruption and wrongdoing that exists within their ranks.

The Desire Comes from the Members

We value this award, but we are not sure that we are really deserving of it. After all, we are merely fulfilling our duty as trade union officials in carrying out an assignment. In a way it is a strange commentary on modern society that men should be honored for doing what is right and necessary.

To the extent that we may deserve your honor, however, we must share it. We must share it with our fellow members of the Federation's Executive Council. It is they who translate our recommendations into effective action. And beyond them, we must share it with the rank and file of American labor. In the final analysis it was their insistence that wrote the high standards into the Federation's constitution; it is their determination which makes our work and the Council's actions possible; and it is they who will finally eliminate all traces of corruption and communism from the labor movement.

Thank you again. I must admit that it is pleasant to be honored by such a distinguished group for a task which very often brings criticism from colleagues and brickbats from adversaries. This evening has made our assignment a little less unpleasant. ▲

THE SOCIAL JUSTICE AWARD of the Religion and Labor Foundation is a four-sided bronze sculpture about two feet high, depicting workers in four major areas of work life — fuel, food, clothing and transportation. A miner with his cap lamp and pick; mine cars in the background; a farmer with hoe in a corn field; a woman at a loom; a dock worker beneath the prow of an ocean vessel — these form the four sides (below and first page). The open book, symbolic of the Bible, bears the names of recipients.

First presented on October 6, 1948 to Fiorello H. LaGuardia, other recipients have included Senator Robert F. Wagner; Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt; Lucy Randolph Mason; William Green and Philip Murray; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Bishop Francis J. McConnell and Most Rev. Francis J. Haas; Thurgood Marshall; George Meany and Walter Reuther; Senator Herbert V. Lehman, Rev. John LaFarge, S. J., and Dr. Martin Luther King; and the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee.

Religion and Labor Foundation

Honorary Presidents
Dr. John Haynes Holmes
Joseph Schlossberg

Co-Chairmen
Rev. Roy McCorkel
John G. Ramsay

Executive Director
Rev. Clair M. Cook, Th.D.

Field Director
Rev. Alex Dandar

Treasurer
Al Whitehouse

Financial Secretary
Catherine M. Lewis

Executive Board

Joseph Beirne
Dr. Algernon D. Black
Dr. William L. Bradley
Rev. James W. Bristah
James B. Carey
Dr. Allan K. Chalmers
Rabbi Jack J. Cohen
Dr. Jerome Davis
Rt. Rev. Msgr. C. J. Drew
Harry Fleischman
H. E. Gilbert
Arthur J. Goldberg
Patrick E. Gorman
George M. Harrison
A. J. Hayes
Francis A. Henson
Rabbi Isidor B. Hoffman
John Hope, II
Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson
Orville C. Jones
Rev. Huber F. Klemme
Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman
Dr. A. William Loos
Dr. Benjamin E. Mays
David J. McDonald
Rev. Joseph W. Merchant
Alex Miller
Dr. A. T. Mollegen
Dean Walter G. Muelder
Emanuel Muravchik
Rev. G. Paul Musselman
Jacob Potofsky
Rev. George Lyon Pratt
Dr. Theodore J. Pretzlaff
A. Philip Randolph
Walter P. Reuther
William F. Schnitzler
August Scholle
Dean Marshal L. Scott
Benjamin Segal
Rev. Emerson W. Smith
James A. Suffridge
Dr. Arthur L. Swift, Jr.
Rev. E. Harold Toye
Rev. Charles C. Webber
Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein

Prices: 25 cents per copy, 10 or more
20 cents each.
$17 per hundred, $150 per thousand.

From File – "Michigan State"

1958-59

Reprint Series

LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS CENTER

Michigan State University Publication

The Crisis in American Unionism

By Edwin E. Witte

LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS CENTER

Michigan State University
East Lansing, Michigan

Charles C. Killingsworth
Director

MICHIGAN STATE UNIVERSITY PUBLICATION, VOLUME 53, NUMBER 6, October, 1958. Published monthly in July, October, November, December, January, February, March, April, and June, and bimonthly in August, September, and May, by Michigan State University, B Wells Hall. Second Class mail privileges authorized at East Lansing, Michigan.

Chapter VII

THE CRISIS IN AMERICAN UNIONISM *

EDWIN E. WITTE **

That there is developing a crisis in labor unionism in this country is known to everyone. All that I shall attempt to do is to call attention to some aspects of this crisis and to do some speculating as to what may be ahead. I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet and make no claim to being an expert on the subject. I recognize that all of you know much more about it than I do. But I shall go ahead with my talk in the hope that something I say will induce some of you to correct me, if I am wrong, or to supplement what I present.

Some Manifestations of the Crisis in American Unionism

With this brief statement acknowledging my inadequacies, I shall proceed at once with my subject; and, first, let me direct your attention to some manifestations that all is not well in the house of labor.

This month the AFL-CIO—the national federation—has announced the layoff of 100 organizers, a reduction of more than one-third in its staff of organizers. This has been ascribed, and is no doubt in part due, to the decline in the Federation's revenues as a result of the expulsion of the Teamsters, the Bakers, and the Laundry Workers—unions which comprised about one-eighth of its total membership. Beyond that it seems to reflect a belief or fear that the present is not a propitious time for major organizing drives.

---

* Dinner Address.

 Edwin E. Witte has retired as chairman of the Department of Economics at the University of Wisconsin. He is currently a distinguished visiting professor at Michigan State University. He served as a public member of the National War Labor Board, 1944-45, and was a member of the Wisconsin Labor Relations Board, 1937-39.

Reprinted by permission from "The Arbitrator and the Parties" Copyright 1958 by BNA Incorporated, Washington 7, D. C.

The high hopes for gains in union membership that were entertained when the merger of the federations was effected have vanished. One—if not the major—expressed purpose of the merger was an intensification of union organizing. Plans were announced to organize still unorganized manufacturing industries, particularly the chemical industry. There was also talk of organizing the white collar and technical workers and of reinvigorating the stalled drive of the forties to organize the South.

Figures of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics suggest that some gains in total union membership have occurred since the merger. In these two years the total membership of American unions is reported to have increased by approximately 500,000. Interestingly, among the unions that have made the largest gains has been the Teamsters. The next largest international, the United Automobile Workers, sustained a slight loss in total membership; while the third, the Steelworkers, had only a small growth. Until the great increase in layoffs that began in October or November, 1957, organized labor, as a whole, did make modest gains—about 3 percent—in a two-year period. But these gains were far smaller than labor hoped for and many prophets forecast.

The recession has lessened the prospects for union growth. The upswing in union membership early in the Roosevelt Administration began when the American labor movement was at its lowest point in more than 15 years. But this occurred after three years of the worst depression of all time. In all other depressions since American labor first began to organize in the early nineteenth century, union membership has declined—often drastically. There are no statistics as to what has happened to union membership in these last months, but there is every reason to believe that, with declining employment, union membership has also decreased.

Factors Hindering Union Growth

There are many economic and social factors that adversely affect the prospects for union growth in the near future. Perhaps the most basic among these are the changes which have been occurring in the American labor force.

Among these is the remarkable growth in the number of women workers. At the turn of the century, about one-sixth of the labor force of the United States consisted of women, most of them in domestic service, agriculture, teaching and a limited number of manufacturing industries, such as clothing manufacture and textiles. Today the percentage of the women workers in our labor force is approaching two-fifths. Most of the earlier fields in which women found employment have declined, but there has occurred a phenomenal growth of women employees in clerical and sales positions plus sizable increases among the production workers in many lines of manufacture and most other industries. There has also occurred a pronounced change in the characteristics of women who are in industry. When I was a boy the women in industry were principally young girls, employed prior to marriage, and older immigrant or Negro women. Today as Dr. Henry David, Executive Director of the National Manpower Council of Columbia University, has put it: "It is no longer the young woman chiefly of immigrant origin or extraction, or the Negro woman, who is the characteristic woman wage earner. Nor is it the woman who has to work out of sheer economic necessity." [1] Sixty percent of present-day women workers are married and nearly half of all of them are over 40 years of age.

The remarkable increase in the number of women workers and the change in the characteristics of the typical women workers have confronted labor unions with a new problem which they have met only imperfectly. This is clearly indicated by the fact that, while women constitute above one-third of the labor force, only one-fifth of the organized workers are women. The outlook of many women workers continues to be that of short-time employees who see little need for organization. Women, moreover, are predominantly intermittent workers, only one-third of them working full time in industry throughout the year, another one-third full time for part of the year, the remaining third part time throughout the year. Even when in the labor market, their main interest is in the home. Work by married women normally means at least two wage earners in the home and a family income which is more adequate than the husband's income alone. The "little lady" can be pretty stubborn when she makes up her mind; many women workers become very determined unionists. But most unions continue to be run by men and not along lines that appeal to the women. Women workers are not unorganizable, but labor has not solved the problems which confront it by reason of the increase in womanpower in industry and the changing character of the women workers.

[1] Address published in Labor Laws and Their Administration, 1956 (Bulletin, Bureau of Labor Standards, No. 191), pp. 53-54.

Also a still largely unsolved problem has been the great growth in the white-collar, production and technical workers. Our unions have been predominantly organizations of the manual workers. The production workers in industry are not increasing, while the white-collar workers are growing phenomenally in numbers. As automation progresses further, this trend can be expected to continue. Unions have not been completely unaware of the problems confronting them in this respect. They have made attempts to organize the engineers and a few other professional or semi-professional employees. They have sought to convince the office workers that their interests lie with the production workers. Alternately, they have permitted the office workers to have their own internationals. But these remain only small organizations and the total percentage of white collar workers who have been "corralled" by the unions is disappointingly small, to the labor people. The trend toward more professional, technical, clerical and other white collar workers is one the unions are up against today and which may call for quite fundamental changes in the labor movement for its solution.

The only slightly less strong trend toward more skilled workers in industry has disturbed labor somewhat less, but also is a factor affecting its growth and development. Our unions formerly were basically organizations of skilled workers. Most skilled workers are members of unions today. Not so long ago, the skilled workers had their own unions. Today they are, mainly, in the same international unions and, often, in the same locals. There are few craft unions which do not admit semi-skilled and unskilled workers. Industrial unions, in theory at least, ignore craft lines. Many unions are historical products, being industrial unions in part of their jurisdiction and craft organizations in other fields. Craft and industrial unions are now in the same tent but not too happy with each other's company. Very troublesome jurisdictional disputes have developed between building trades unions and some of the industrial unions in the mass production industries; also, disputes over representation involving attempts to carve separate bargaining units out of industrial unions. The problem of the conflict between skilled and semi-skilled and unskilled workers still troubles organized labor, although in new forms. Although not the problem that most hinders the growth of union organization, the industrial versus craft union issue nevertheless remains a perplexing one.

Also a problem faced by organized labor today is the increasing mobility of the American workers and of our entire society. This is not merely a matter of more Americans leaving their states of origin during their lifetime than earlier in our history, but of the dispersion of the plant workers through the automobile over a vast region extending many miles in every direction. This operates to make organizing other than on the premises extremely difficult and interferes greatly with union meetings and good attendance at such meetings. A problem for the unions also has developed from the dispersion of upper and middle income people from the central region of our cities to the suburbs. This movement has been shared by our better-paid workers. Today most workers can buy homes in the suburbs or the country, if they so desire. Once a worker moves to the suburbs he tends to take on something of the complexion and mental attitude of the suburbanites—perhaps the most anti-union group of any large distinguishable element in our population.

Something of the same situation has been created by the rise in workers' incomes. Not all wants of American workers are being satisfied and there remains a good deal of discontent among them; but appeals addressed to the starving and oppressed are not very effective when the workers are not starving and do not feel oppressed. Prolonged, widespread unemployment also does not promote union membership, and business recession, such as we are now experiencing, has the same effect.

The Congressional Investigations

Besides the problems posed by the sharp business decline, organized labor at this time is up against disfavor or at least low repute with the public. Organized labor is a minority group in our society and but seldom has been approved unqualifiedly by the general public. In much of American thinking, organized labor is still associated with the people who were born on the wrong side of the tracks and with the more recent immigrants and their descendants. This is less true than at an earlier date, but remains the picture many Americans have of the labor movement. To this has been added the impression of a labor leader who is a roughneck and often a crook. Many Americans have long believed that the typical labor leader is a racketeer and not infrequently a goon. To them, labor leaders and union officers seem to be men who are interested only in the dues they can collect from members and the boodle they can exact from employers.

This impression of the labor leader held by many Americans has been confirmed and strengthened by the labor scandals that have had such large space in the daily press. There have been investigations after investigations, with several, at times, going on simultaneously. Dealing only with the investigations since World War II, I mention first the investigation of Un-American Activities by the Senate Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, popularly known as the McCarthy Investigation. This committee is still in existence, headed by Senator Eastland, and has held a few hearings within the last year. There was for a time a parallel committee in the House of Representatives, which gave the present Vice President his start to fame. The McCarthy Committee devoted some attention to communism in the ranks of labor and its proceedings made headline publicity for years. I think it is a fair statement that it discovered no Communists in labor ranks who had not previously been known to be Communists. But it gave additional publicity to the fact that Communists at one time controlled quite a few unions affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations. In 1949, well before the McCarthy Committee came into existence and before the Vice President was more than an obscure Congressman from Southern California, the CIO expelled these Communist-dominated unions. Since then, on a few occasions obscure local union officials or representatives have "pleaded the Fifth Amendment" when questioned about their Communist connections. Labor, much more than the Congressional investigators, has gotten rid of Communists in positions of power in its ranks. Unfortunately, many Americans still believe the unions or many of them to be Moscow directed.

Then followed the investigations by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the management or mismanagement of union health, welfare, and pension funds. This subcommittee was headed in the 83rd Congress by Senator Ives; in the 84th Congress by Senator Douglas; and in the present, 85th Congress, by Senator Kennedy. A parallel investigation was conducted by the House Committee on Education and Labor. The Senate Committee soon struck pay dirt and until this year has brought up a large quantity of muck. The disclosures have concerned such matters as excessive salaries paid to union officials running health and welfare funds, the splitting of commissions by insurance agents with the union trustees of such funds, the organization of brokerage businesses by trustees to increase their take, some direct stealing of trust monies, and the connection of notorious criminals with a few of the funds. Relative to the total number of union-managed health, welfare, and pension funds, proof of gross mismanagement has been presented only as to a small percentage of all such funds. No similar investigations or disclosures have been made of company-managed or jointly-managed health, welfare, and pension funds. The investigations in their entirety have confirmed the earlier impressions of many people that labor leaders are often crooks and thieves, stealing from their members and growing rich on the boodle. No legislation by Congress has resulted from the disclosures, but six states have provided for public disclosure of the financial operations of union health, welfare, and pension funds.

Most unfavorable has been the publicity organized labor has received from the investigations during the past year by the select committee of the Senate generally referred to as the "McClellan Committee," technically the "Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field." This committee consists of four Democratic and four Republican Senators, with Senator McClellan of Arkansas as Chairman. Three of the Republican members (Goldwater, Mundt, and Curtis) have anti-labor records and Chairman McClellan also was opposed by organized labor when he was last elected. One member (McNamara) is a union member; and the other three have acceptable labor records. The chief counsel, head of the Committee's staff, is Robert Kennedy, a younger brother of Senator Kennedy; but the Republican members have had their own staff, headed by John McGovern, who has been sharply criticized by Senator McNamara for statements indicating, as alleged by the Senator, anti-labor bias. The committee has conducted public hearings, intermittently, for more than a year and the Chairman has stated that they may go on for five more years.

The most extensive hearings to date have concerned the Teamsters union; others, the Bakers, the Laundry Workers, the Distillery Workers, and the Operating Engineers. There has also been one series of hearings concerning the operations of a management consultant, Nathan Shefferman, of Chicago, doing business as the Labor Relations Associates. The Committee's staff, particularly the minority staff, has also investigated the United Automobile Workers and hearings relating to the Kohler strike, encouragement of violence, and the political activities of this union have been forecast. The great majority of unions have neither been subpoenaed to appear nor have they been in any way implicated in testimony before the Committee. Other than Shefferman and the management of the Sears, Roebuck store in Boston and a few smaller clients of Labor Relations Associates, management has not, to date, been brought before the Committee, in spite of the fact that Shefferman testified to having served several of the largest of retailing companies and some sizable manufacturers. Until recently, organized labor indicated its support of the Committee's investigations, but within this month it has charged that at least some members are out to get Labor. No recommendations for legislation have come from the McClellan Committee, and none is expected in the present session.

The testimony given before the McClellan Committee has often made the headlines. Most sensational was that concerning Dave Beck, retiring President, and Jimmy Hoffa, the new President, of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. The charges against them included diversion of large amounts of union funds for personal use, autocratic control of the union, and, in the case of Hoffa, consort with notorious criminals. Both Beck and Hoffa have been tried for violation of criminal statutes, and Beck has been convicted. The charges against James Cross, President of the Bakers' Union—a socialist—are quite similar. There has also been testimony of resort to violence by the Teamsters and some of the lesser unions investigated. Little has been added to previously disclosed facts about the mismanagement of union health, welfare, and pension funds. Surprisingly, there has been little testimony of the attempted exaction of money from employers by union officers for any purpose whatsoever. Very little, also, has been disclosed as to the rigging of union elections or the lack of democracy in unions. Less than ten of the several hundred international unions have been disclosed to be, in any sense, corrupt or as having corrupt officers. Aside from the men mentioned and, recently, President Maloney of the Operating Engineers, no top-name union officials have been implicated. The operations of Nathan Shefferman have been revealed as being essenitally those of union busting by methods of corruption, and his list of clients represents a pretty good start toward a bluebook of American merchandising. But there has been no testimony as to the extent of similar practices in manufacturing or even a mention of the very largest corporations.

Labor's Reaction to the Investigations

Labor's reactions to the disclosures of corruption and other festering evils in union ranks have, to my way of thinking, been wholesome. More than a year before the McClellan Committee was organized, the AFL-CIO in its first constitution set forth as one of its principal objectives:

> "To protect the labor movement from any and all corrupt influences and from the undermining efforts of communist agencies and all others who are opposed to the basic principles of our democracy and free and democratic unionism" (Article II, Section 10).

In this same first convention (November 1955) the AFL-CIO provided for an Ethical Practices Committee, headed by Al Hayes of the Machinists' Union, to implement this constitutional provision, through investigations on complaint or on its own initiative of all suspected corruption or communism. It set forth a procedure for the suspension until the next convention of unions found, upon investigation, to be under corrupt domination, with the further power of making recommendations for the correction of the evil conditions. It also set forth that the convention, after hearing both the accuser and the accused, was to determine whether the accused union should be expelled from the federation or allowed to resume its membership, and, if so, under what conditions.

When the investigations of the subcommittee on union health, welfare, and pension funds of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare disclosed corruption in the handling of trust funds by the Allied Industrial Workers, the Distillery Workers, the United Textile Workers, and the Laundry Workers, and by scattered local unions, the Ethical Practices Committee promptly investigated and recommended suspension of these unions, setting forth the conditions which would have to be met for reinstatement. The Executive Committee, by a well-nigh unanimous vote, sustained the recommendations and the suspensions remained in effect until the recent second AFL-CIO convention. By that time the Allied Industrial Workers had gotten rid of its officers accused of corruption and the United Textile Workers had agreed to hold a special convention supervised by a monitor and to declare its two former top officers ineligible for election. Both these unions were consequently reinstated to full membership. The suspension of the Distillery Workers was continued under a monitor, with a statement of the conditions which must be met for full reinstatement. The other unions were expelled and are today outside the Federation. The two international unions not previously so labelled which were revealed through the investigations of the McClellan Committee to have corrupt officers, the Teamsters and the Bakers, were proceeded against similarly. The Ethical Practices Committee recommended their suspension to the Executive Council; the Executive Council sustained this recommendation; and the Convention (by a five to one vote in the case of the Teamsters) changed this into expulsion from the Federation. A new Bakers' Union has been chartered, which is reported to have gained the adherence of one-third of the locals of the old union. No new Teamsters' International has been organized but city centrals and state federations have been directed to expel Teamsters' locals. This is a record which seems to me to show labor's good faith in its oft-repeated expression of desire to clean its own house. On this point, note must also be taken of the creation by two international unions, the Upholsterers and the United Automobile Workers, of appeal boards composed of prominent people not connected with these unions, with authority to review and correct undemocratic actions against union members. But it remains doubtful how much the public has been impressed. Beyond question, the labor scandals have hurt the standing of organized labor in public opinion.

Prospects for the Future

What will be the final outcome is in the realm of speculation. Many see the most likely result to be legislation hostile to labor in the Congress and the state legislatures. Quite a few bills, which labor views with alarm, are pending in the Congress. These range from requirements for the registration of health, welfare, and pension funds, to vague proposals to make the unions subject to the anti-trust laws and a more definite measure for a national right-to-work law, making it unlawful for employers and unions to contract for any form of union security. In between are the recommendations which President Eisenhower transmitted to the Congress a week ago. Many of the proposals, including some of those of the President, go beyond the correction of the evils publicized through the Congressional investigations and have already drawn fire from organized labor and its supporters. What will become of them, in an election year, is pretty much anybody's guess. What seems certain is that labor this year will get nowhere in its long campaign to lighten the restrictions imposed upon it by the Taft-Hartley Act, and particularly has little chance of getting its bill enacted that would prohibit states from imposing more drastic limitations on union security agreements than those included in the national law. Further legislation placing additional restrictions upon the activities of organized labor in contests with management is more than a possibility; but I doubt whether 1958 will prove another 1947.

There is also a possibility that the labor scandals will have adverse repercussions upon labor in its contests this year over new contract provisions in many major agreements. The business recession makes 1958 a bad one for wage increases and other labor gains. The public is more than half convinced that the major cause of rising prices is the increase in wages and is in a mood to support management in resisting further increases in rates of pay or fringe benefits. There are also numerous indications that many managements this time have their backs up and seem disposed not to yield an inch. More than ever the battle is being waged in the forum of public opinion. The labor scandals have further weakened labor in this forum. At present the prospects seem to be for more and greater strikes than we have had for years, with labor in a position in which the majority of the public will regard it as a sort of "Peck's Bad Boy" or worse, a goon responsible for just about everything that is wrong. Public opinion is not always, perhaps but seldom, decisive in labor disputes, but it does count. At this time, so it seems to me, it is likely to support management in stubbornly resisting union demands. This is not predicting that labor will get nothing this year; and, of course, it will not get all that it seeks in its first demands. Only a prophet can forecast the final outcome of the 1958 contract negotiations and the strikes in which they may culminate.

On the broader question of what will be the total effects of the present crisis in labor unionism. I have little to offer that is more definite. But I call attention to the fact that this is not the first time organized labor has faced a critical situation. We now have had labor unions for more than one hundred years, in all sorts of climates of public opinion and during one crisis after the other. Many of the factors in the present situation may call for changes in union tactics and may precede such changes. What is clear is that unions do not dominate our society, but they have been and are now a part of the American way of life, although theirs is a minority role. I expect them to continue as a part of the American way of life, regardless of present difficulties.

A Conditional Forecast

What I shall say from this point on is a conditional forecast, which I believe to be warranted on the basis of experience in this and other countries. It is my expectation that the major repercussions of the labor scandals may well be in the political field. Even more do I expect such a result if Congress should enact legislation which labor interprets as an attack upon its existence or effectiveness. This may also be the result of a stinging defeat, should it occur, of labor in the contract negotiations and ensuing strikes in the spring and summer. Holding the line against wage increases, particularly if unemployment continues to mount and farm prices do not improve, may well give us the most radical Congress we have had in two decades.

Interviewed, along with other public members of the former National War Labor Board after the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, I ventured the prediction that the principal effect of this legislation, crammed down labor's throat by the Eightieth Congress, was likely to be increased political activity on the part of organized labor, rather than any pronounced change in the economic strength of the parties. As I look back upon that forecast, it seems to me that I was a very lucky prophet. The Taft-Hartley Act hurt labor less than it had feared and also benefited anti-union employers less than they had hoped. But the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act put labor into politics to an extent not known for many years preceding. The surprising reelection of President Truman in 1948 was ascribed by political commentators principally to a sizable switch in the farm vote, but the defeat of nearly a third of the members of the 80th Congress who had voted for the Taft-Hartley Act occurred almost entirely in industrial districts.

Organized labor has always been interested in what government is doing and to some extent has engaged in political activities. But it is most active politically when it believes that its operations in the economic sphere are being hampered or likely to be hampered. Dyed-in-the-wool unionists follow the advice of their leaders in politics when they believe their unions to be in danger. Workingmen generally react most violently politically when they have sustained personal loss or fear such a loss. Among situations producing such a result are unemployment, wage cuts, and defeats in strikes. It seems to me to be probable that the more the factors enumerated coincide, the more certain and the greater will be the political reaction.

There is considerable likelihood that quite a number of these factors will coincide by the elections of 1958. A heretofore little remarked concomitant of the labor scandals has been a growing belief among ardent unionists that the investigations and exposures of the McClellan Committee have gone far enough and are motivated by a desire to weaken organized labor. A majority of the Teamsters seem to be sticking with Jimmy Hoffa. As has been noted, top AFL-CIO leaders recently met with Senator McClellan and others from his Committee to warn them not to play the game of Walter Reuther's opponents. There is a distinct possibility that as the contract negotiations draw closer, investigations of the unions involved will strengthen this feeling among ardent unionists; and, if the negotiations prove disappointing, politicians will be blamed. Prolonged strikes resulting in defeats for labor would increase the political repercussions. These will be particularly strong should Congress enact legislation which labor deems to be designed to weaken its economic position. Every informed person also knows that a continued high level of unemployment and, still more, increased unemployment, will be hard on the "ins" in politics. It is my expectation, also, that the political reaction will not stop with party labels. It may well come to pass that the long conservative swing in American politics, manifest now for twenty years, may be reversed.

All this is in the realm of speculation, with many "ifs" about which no one can be certain. What seems clear is that the AFL-CIO merger, the jurisdictional disputes agreement, and the ethical practices codes have not solved all problems of the American unions or, more accurately, any of them. Organized labor is in a difficult situation today. Many of the factors in this difficult situation go beyond the present labor scandals and the contract negotiations, which are now in the stage of preliminary jousts in the public arena.

What this may lead to, I leave to you. I merely direct attention to the fact that not only recent developments but many others of the last quarter century have tended to make our unions far more political organizations than they were at an earlier date. American unions have always been interested in politics, but at most times not vitally so, especially when one labor federation was dominant and the principle was pretty well adhered to that each union had a definite jurisdiction which must be observed by employers and all other unions. At that time, labor-management disputes were fought out in the economic realm and public opinion mattered but little.

Today, the labor situation is very different. We again have one dominant federation, but a good many unions are outside the federation and within it there are bitter rivalries and controversies. The principle of defined jurisdiction has not been abandoned, but in many fields there are overlapping jurisdictions. More basic is the inherent conflict between defined jurisdictions and the workers' free choice of the union, which is incorporated in our national labor policy.

It may be that this policy of itself is operating to make our unions more like political organizations along European lines. In no free European country has the situation ever prevailed that one and only one national union has jurisdiction within a defined field, which goes along with the concept that all workers should belong to unions but that there is only one union to which a given worker may belong. With choice allowed between unions, politics or religion tend to become the only unifying forces in the labor movement. There has been no significant trend toward making religion a dominant factor in American unionism, but our policy of worker free choice inevitably,

I believe, has some tendency toward making the unions more political. It is my thesis that this is also a likely effect of the recent developments I have noted. It is futile to talk about keeping government out of labor-management relations so long as the parties are forever turning to government for help. When they do this, not only should they expect retaliation when the almost inevitable pendular swing occurs, but they should realize that they thereby tend to make the unions more political in their objectives. Being old fashioned, I prefer our traditional American type of unionism, but I can see politically-oriented unionism as a consequence of the increasing role we assign to government in labor-management relations.

LABOR AND INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS CENTER PUBLICATIONS

Books and Monographs

U. S. Industrial Relations—The Next Twenty Years, edited and introduced by Jack Stieber. Contributors: John T. Dunlop, Walter P. Reuther, John S. Bugas, David L. Cole, Edwin E. Witte, Clark Kerr. (Michigan State University Press: 1958. $5.00)

Economic and Social Implications of Automation: A Bibliographic Review, by Gloria Cheek. (Paperbound, $1.25)

Reprints

(No charge for single copies; prices for quantity orders furnished on request.)

Union Member Orientations and Patterns of Social Integration, by William H. Form and H. K. Dansereau. (1957)

Industrial Relations Directors: An Annotated Bibliography, by Dalton E. McFarland. (1957)

Automation and the White-Collar Worker, by Jack Stieber. (1957).

Grievance Adjudication in Public Employment, by Charles C. Killingsworth. (1958)

The Labor Relations Consultant as Contract Negotiator, by Dalton E. McFarland. (1958)

Automation in the Automobile Industry: Some Consequences for In-Plant Social Structure, by William A. Faunce. (1958)

The Crisis in American Unionism, by Edwin E. Witte. (1958)

The Place of Returning Migrants in a Stratification System, by William H. Form and Julius Rivera. (1958)

Proceedings of Conferences

The Grievance Process. Addresses by: William F. Whyte, Edward L. Cushman, Ken Bannon, J. Noble Braden; Panel Discussion and Demonstration Arbitration on Contracting-out Work. 1956. ($1.00)

Effective Utilization of Engineering Personnel. Addresses by: Alfred Iddles, William G. Caples, G. H. Hupman, A. F. Zander, G. S. Odiorne. (1957) (out of print)

The Emerging Environment of Industrial Relations. Addresses by: Joseph A. Loftus, Sylvester Petro, Boaz Siegel, Robert H. Guest, David G. Moore, Kenneth E. Boulding, Dugald Black, J. K. Galbraith, Walter Adams and Ewan Clague. (1958. $1.50)

Selected Papers on The Role of the Engineer-Scientist in America. Addresses by: Nicholas DeWitt, J. F. Calvert, Lewis K. Zerby, Trumbull Blake, Forest McFarland, L. J. Richards, A. R. Meacham, Howard L. Bevis. (1958. $1.00)

What Newspapers Expect of Labor Reporters, Address by Lee Hills, vice-president-executive editor, The Detroit Free Press. (1958. 15¢)

215—3M—96—SH

(Not printed at Government expense)

United States of America

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 86th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

A Point 4 Youth Corps for Young Americans to Serve in Technical Assistance Missions

REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY S. REUSS

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 14, 1960

AND

Tuesday, February 2, 1960

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, on January 14 I introduced H.R. 9638, an amendment to the Mutual Security Act, to provide for a study looking toward a Point 4 Youth Corps of young Americans willing to serve their country in public and private technical assistance missions in far-off countries, and at a soldier's pay.

SUITED FOR PRIVATE STUDY

The study of the practicability and advisability of a Point 4 Youth Corps is peculiarly one for a private university foundation or similar group. Since much of the utility of a Point 4 Youth Corps would be for private rather than public technical assistance missions, the study should not be governmentally conducted. As H.R. 9638 indicates, it should not be difficult for the President to find a private group willing to make such a study at no cost to the taxpayers.

H.R. 9638 sets forth the principal issues which such a study would need to resolve—the types of projects suited for a Point 4 Youth Corps, how they are to be carried out, the mix between public and private projects, the pay and administration of the corps, its relationship to selective service, preliminary training here and abroad, age of the participants, and many others.

The study group is directed to confer with all appropriate governmental agencies, and if it recommends the establishment of a Point 4 Youth Corps, to recommend draft legislation.

540502—73903

YOUTH CORPS OBJECTIVES

The objectives of the Point 4 Youth Corps are:

First. To make additional technical manpower available to U.S. agencies and to private agencies carrying out economic, medical, educational, and community development programs in underdeveloped friendly foreign countries.

Second. To assist in broadening the understanding by the peoples of other nations of the ideals and aspirations of Americans, through close contact with young Americans participating in the Point 4 Youth Corps.

Third. To offer our young people an opportunity to serve their country in a stimulating way, while broadening their understanding of the problems facing other peoples and nations, and thereby helping them better to understand American policies and purposes abroad.

WHAT THE BILL PROVIDES

In addition to setting forth the above objectives of the Point 4 Youth Corps, the bill provides that:

First. The President shall provide for the conduct by a nongovernmental research group, university, or foundation of a study with a view to ascertaining the advisability and practicability of the establishment by the United States of a program known as the Point 4 Youth Corps, under which young citizens will be trained and serve in programs of technical cooperation.

Second. The President shall endeavor to have such study conducted as a public service without Federal contribution; and any Federal contribution which may be required for such study shall not exceed $10,000.

Third. The group which conducts the study shall report its recommendations to the President and the Congress within 1 year. If the group recommends the establishment of the Point 4 Youth Corps, it shall also submit draft legislation for the implementation of the program.

FACTORS FOR CONSIDERATION

The study group's report is to include consideration of the following factors:

(A) The types of projects in which members of the Point 4 Youth Corps might be used, based upon investigation of existing and proposed private and governmentally sponsored projects, and how such projects should be carried out.

(B) The manner in which interested private American foundations, and groups such as service clubs, religious groups, farm organizations, labor unions, business groups, youth groups, and similar organizations, might cooperate in the operation of Point 4 Youth Corps projects.

(C) Whether or not it would be desirable to provide that service in the Point 4 Youth Corps shall be considered as satisfying the obligation of individuals to perform training and service in the Armed Forces.

(D) The optimum size of the Point 4 Youth Corps, the period of service which might be required, and the pay scales and conditions of employment which would be most desirable in the public interest.

(E) The pattern and manner of orientation and training in the United States and abroad that would be required to make young American adults effective workers in programs of technical cooperation conducted under this title or otherwise.

(F) Whether it would be practicable and advisable to recruit young American adults who have completed less than 4 years of college.

(G) Whether the Point 4 Youth Corps should be placed under the administration of a Federal agency or a private group on a contract basis, or both.

(H) The manner in which the Point 4 Youth Corps could most usefully supplement current governmental and private programs of technical cooperation.

A SENSE OF PURPOSE

The establishment of a Point 4 Youth Corps would assure an adequate supply of young Americans to man public and private technical assistance missions in the years to come. But there are two even more important things to be said for a Point 4 Youth Corps.

Young Americans in their late teens and early twenties need a sense of purpose—the excitement and stimulus of taking part in real events. The philosopher, William James, pointed this out a half century ago when he suggested in his essay, "The Moral Equivalent of War," that a season on a fishing schooner or on a cattle ranch could well provide the sense of excitement and purpose which war—at least old-fashioned war—was supposed to provide. If the evolution of the have-not nations is at once the greatest challenge and adventure of the age, young Americans are going to want to become involved in it.

SPREAD AMERICAN IDEALS

From the standpoint of a successful American foreign policy, a Point 4 Youth Corps could be equally beneficial. The peoples of the developing countries need economic assistance, but even more they can profit from exposure to the ideas of Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln. Young Americans who are willing to help with an irrigation project, with digging a village well, with setting up a rural school, could be one of our best ways for creating such a picture of America.

It is said that Napoleon once confessed his failure in these words:

> Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne, and I myself have founded empires; but upon what do these creations of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded His empire upon love; and to this very day, millions will die for Him.

Power has revealed its limitations. Why not try a little love?

YOUTH CORPS ENDORSED

Among the comments on H.R. 9638 are the following:

The Christian Science Monitor in its January 20 edition endorsed the Point 4 Youth Corps in the following editorial:

POINT 4 YOUTH CORPS

Representative HENRY REUSS, of Wisconson, is offering Congress one of the best ideas yet devised for the competitive coexistence era.

He has filed a bill authorizing a study of the feasibility of a Point 4 Youth Corps, a draft-pay, draft-duration, draft-tough alternative to selective service for qualified young Americans who choose to serve their country in foreign rice paddies instead of the drill field.

We urge Congress to unearth and pass this bill speedily.

STATESIDE TRAINING

It will commit no one finally. It will cost little or nothing, since the study would be made by a private university or foundation as a public service. But it concerns a phase of the international struggle, the future gravitation of underdeveloped nations, that never has marked time waiting for Congress.

Although the program cannot be fully spelled out until all possibilities and pitfalls are studied, it would work in roughly this manner:

John Farmer is draft exempt while completing his agricultural course at Texas A. & M. After graduation he applies for a village-level job teaching modern farming methods under the International Cooperation Administration or Ford Foundation.

If he does not meet the qualifications, he reverts to draftable status.

But if he is accepted, John gets perhaps a 3-month stateside training period for his job (as rigorous in its way as Army basic training) and then is sent to a village project in India, where he will be paid the minimal wage and allowances he might have gotten for straight draft service. His hitch, like that of his rifle-toting buddy, is for 2 years.

Let's examine possible objections to the idea:

1. It might provide a haven for draft dodgers.

Since public and private technical assistance agencies would themselves pass on quotas and qualifications, acceptance of goldbrickers seems unlikely.

2. It might siphon off top educated talent from the military draft.

10,000 TO START WITH

Under current low draft quotas only a small percentage of this talent is being called anyway. Mr. REUSS envisions a Point 4 Youth Corps of not more than 10,000 to start with.

3. Veterans groups might object to youth corps dischargees being eligible for educational, pension, and medical benefits.

To meet this objection, Mr. REUSS and his analysts incline toward dropping veterans' benefits. We would agree, with the exception of the GI bill educational provisions, which would have even greater value for the Nation if extended to youths whose further study might provide a substantial number of first-rate new diplomats, international businessmen, and foreign service officials.

We would urge, as an additional safeguard, that recruiting posters and brochures for any such program emphasize that it is not a glamor world cruise, but one likely to involve more discomfort (and certainly less PX life) than peacetime Army service.

With these precautions taken, the advantages of the proposed youth corps are enormous.

The "have-not" nations are clearly going to be the battle front for the world balance of power and for freedom in the coming generation. Money and military aid alone will not win that battle. Moscow and Peking are carefully training cadres to go out into the villages. The authoritarian control they work under puts them at a disadvantage. But only if there are in sight comparable workers who are both free and technically capable.

Mr. REUSS' plan would help show the emerging peoples in a personal way the American altruism that now is too often lost amidst dollar signs. It would strengthen language training, promote a more professional foreign service, and give enthusiastic young Americans a more mature understanding of the world they will have to face. In short, it merits bipartisan priority treatment.

SENATE BILL INTRODUCED

Senator RICHARD L. NEUBERGER, of Oregon, introduced an identical measure—S. 2908—in the Senate January 26. At that time he said the "idea is a good one, a challenge to youth and a possible aid to more effective foreign policy implementation."

Introduction of the two bills, newspaper accounts of the proposal, and editorial comment prompted a steady flow of mail on the bill. With a single exception, every letter has supported the Point 4 Youth Corps plan. Many letters have offered compelling reasons for adopting the plan, others have offered constructive suggestions for the study group's consideration.

MAIL SUPPORTS BILL

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I offer for the RECORD some excerpts from and the full text of some of the hundreds of letters already received which contain a representative sample of the comments and suggestions that have been made about the bill:

BETHESDA, MD., January 18, 1960.

Hon. HENRY S. REUSS,
Bethesda, Md.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN REUSS: During the past year I have been associated with a group of physicians who have been trying to effect a program in medicine designed to allow a few properly motivated young physicians to serve their Government draft obligations while working in some of the underdeveloped countries of the world. We have sought advice from various quarters including some officials of W.H.O., and although we always received encouragement, the point was repeatedly made that nothing could be done until interest was generated within the Government. I hope that your study will do just this.

We, like you, have reasoned that a unique and substantial contribution might be made by the young people of this country who have achieved some degree of proficiency in agriculture, engineering, teaching, medicine, etc. However, it is important that they be properly motivated and not participate solely to avoid the draft or at the other extreme with a great deal of missionary zeal. Aside from the necessary qualities of maturity and leadership, these young people should have time to acquire a reasonable knowledge of the language, customs, and problems of the area they are going to serve before embarking.

This type of program need not be considered a one-way or charity affair by this country, for foreign service such as you propose will provide a few of our young people with a unique educational experience, and I feel sure that they would return to this country with many new ideas conceived abroad. If a democratic nation such as ours is to conduct its affairs wisely in this increasingly complex world, it is in that country's own interest to provide a segment of its future responsible citizens with an experience such as this.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT E. CANFIELD, M.D.

IMAGINATIVE REEXAMINATION

INTERNATIONAL UNION, UNITED AUTOMOBILE, AIRCRAFT, AND AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENT WORKERS OF AMERICA—UAW,
Washington, D.C., January 26, 1960.

Congressman HENRY S. REUSS,
New House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN REUSS: As you may know, President Walter P. Reuther, myself, and the UAW, have been urging this kind of imaginative reexamination of our problems and this kind of creative, specific approach to the international reality for a long time.

In my view, and I should add in the view of our union, your proposal can become a most important escape route from the rut in which American foreign policy and much of American domestic policy now jog along.

I wish to convey to you immediately the hope of those of us in the UAW that you will call upon us to work with you in every way that we can to help you realize the purposes of the bill.

At the same time it has occurred to me that you might be interested in the way the UAW considered that aspects of our education and our point four programs might be dealt with.

Thus, testifying for the UAW before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on May 22, 1959, I declared: "As part of a boldly expanded economic aid and technical assistance program, and a rounded program to wipe out our shocking education deficits in terms of classrooms, teachers' salaries, and high school and college scholarship aid, we could estblish a system of scholarships which would give 100,000 of our most promising graduates opportunity, if need be in lieu of military service, of joining an enlistment for peace for a period of 1 year longer than the time required for military services. They would be trained in the fields of their choice and would be given an opportunity to use their abilities and skills taught in our educational institutions in a worldwide effort to raise the standard of living."

RICH SOURCE OF MANPOWER

"These trained and experienced young men and women would be a rich source of manpower for our State Department and other foreign service agencies."

Earlier, on February 28, 1958, before the Fifth National Conference on International Economic and Social Development, again speaking the conviction of the membership of the UAW, I pointed in the direction of the proposal you have made:

"I should also like to suggest that we direct the current interest in overcoming our education deficits toward the system of education which can meet the challenge in its present dimensions, of conflict between war and peace, freedom and communism. We must make certain that our developing human resources are adequate to the material goods which we propose to make available to a needy world. To reach the dimension of a boldly expanded economic aid and technical assistance, we should set in motion the training of at least 100,000 of our most promising youth to help assure the success of this vital program. We could establish a system of scholarship aid which would provide that 100,000 of our most promising young graduates would have the choice, if need be in lieu of military service, for enlisting for a period of 1 year longer than required for military service in an enlistment for peace. Under this scholarship aid they would train in the fields of their choice and provide an opportunity to use the abilities and skills taught in our educational institutions in a worldwide effort to raise the standards of living.

"These young volunteers for peace, trained in the language, culture and technical skills required would constitute a human reserve from which the underdeveloped areas could drawn upon in their efforts to fight poverty, hunger, ignorance and disease, which is the positive aspect of the struggle against tyranny. The more young Americans we could make available throughout the world as technical missionaries with slide rules, with medical kits, with textbooks to fight communism on a positive basis, the fewer young Americans we will need to send with guns and flamethrowers to fight communism on the battlefields of the world. The kind of education program I am thinking about would make it possible to enlist thousands of young Americans in the rewarding struggle to win the peace."

I hope that your measure gets the rapid approval our need for the prescription indicates. Given the tempo at which the world is moving now, and the highly fluid context in which we are contending with the Communist totalitatians my conviction is that the investigation should not take too long.

Sincerely yours,

VICTOR G. REUTHER,
Administrative Assistant to the President.

LETTER FROM VETERAN

Donald E. Weeden, a New York businessman and veteran, wrote:

At the time of my graduation from Stanford University in 1951 * * * I seriously considered joining such a program. None was available and the call of service prevented looking further. I would think that in a period of peace the interets in such a program by graduating college seniors would be enormous. I also think the multitude of benefits accruing to the individual youth and to both the giving and receiving countries would repay the cost of the program a hundredfold.

First Lt. G. S. L. Crowl said:

As a college graduate and career officer, I do not think such a program would seriously affect the officer procurement programs of the several services. Most of the people taking alternative service would be short timers anyway.

MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL HOSPITAL,
Boston, January 20, 1960.

The Honorable HENRY S. REUSS,
Representative from the State of Wisconsin, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE REUSS: In 1955–56 I spent a year working in Lashkergah, Afghanistan, for the State Department and ICA doing, largely, public helath work. It was obvious that one of the major problems with the American program was recruitment of personnel. Many of the technicians served abroad because (1) of some serious complication in their personal or professional life at home, or (2) they hoped to retire on a higher pension by virtue of raising their Government rank simply by service overseas. Many of the technicians were too old and set in their ways to have the resiliency and enthusiasm needed to do a good job working in a foreign country.

WOULD BE VERY BENEFICIAL

A system that would make it attractive for enthusiastic, idealistic young people to serve overseas would be very beneficial. As you have recognized, it is possible to work in many areas without extensive professional training. Certainly if they worked under the direction of someone with professional training, relatively inexperienced people could do fine work. Probably this initial exposure would lead to the recruitment of many individuals for continued overseas work. The development of a cadre of individuals interested in foreign aid work as a career, similar to the present Foreign Service and with equivalent standards is urgently needed.

I believe the institution of your program as an alternative to military service would tremendously strengthen our foreign aid program, and demonstrate to foreign countries our intention of providing them technical assistance on a long-term basis.

Sincerely yours,

LESLIE J. DEGROOT, M.D.

Prof. David G. Scanlon, professor of international education and Coordinator, ICA, projects abroad, Teachers College, Columbia University, wrote:

It certainly sounds like the kind of program we need so badly * * * an imaginative program that could accomplish so much.

Prof. William P. Marquardt, coordinator, programs in teaching English as a second language, New York University School of Education, commented:

The most important step toward international understanding and world peace I have seen taken since the creation of the Fulbright * * * program nearly 15 years ago.

TRAINING QUALIFIED PEOPLE

QUINCY HOUSE,
HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
Cambridge, Mass., January 18, 1960.

Representative HENRY S. REUSS,
House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN REUSS: I am writing you in support of the proposal for a Point 4 Youth Corps, which I understand you are studying at this point. As a teacher of international relations and someone who spent 4½ years in Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Europe, I am very much concerned that serious thought be given to a proposal such as that which you are considering.

For all its faults, the recent best-seller, "The Ugly American," did serve to dramatize the great problem which a free society has in attracting and training qualified people for service overseas. A proposal such as yours has the virtue of giving people on-the-job training in foreign areas which may attract them to careers in this field, and, let us hope, of developing linguistic and area specialists in critical countries.

I hope that the work would not be exclusively in village and rural areas, since some of the most significant needs are in cities, and I would suggest that this service be possible not only in government agencies but also with private groups.

Yours truly,

PAUL E. SIGMUND, Jr.,
Alliston Burr Senior Tutor Instructor in Government.

DESERVES PROMPT ACTION

WILMINGTON, DEL., January 18, 1960.
Representative HENRY S. REUSS,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The New York Times of January 17 reports that the Congress is considering a program of work on overseas development projects as a substitute for military service by young Americans. Your bill for a study of such a Point 4 Youth Corps deserves prompt action. This same idea occurred to me during my own military service, and I want to urge that the Congress do everything possible to create such a program.

I served 2 years as a draftee in the U.S. Army, and during that time I spent a year in Italy. I was appalled at the enormous waste of trained talent by the Army. Countless young Americans, some of them with considerable technical training, were performing no really useful function. Many of these young men had been trained by the Army at considerable cost. My own case, while not typical, was not by any means an isolated one. At the time I was inducted into the Army, I had received a doctorate in physical-organic chemistry and had had some industrial research experience. I and many of my scientifically trained military colleagues would have been overjoyed at the possibility of contributing some constructive activity in any overseas area.

My experiences in Italy led me to feel that a joint work-study program might be very fruitful. A single semester of study in a university of the host country would provide an introduction to that country's language, customs, and problems. This could be followed by an 18 month (or longer) period of service in the same nation. Aside from purely technical work, some young people could profitably be used in information agencies. In Italy, I found that USIA maintained no facilities at all at universities. USIA libraries (in Florence and Rome, for example) are situated in luxury, rather than in working-class neighborhoods; they are too formal to attract young people; and they are open at the wrong times of day. Numerous small, informal centers, staffed by young people, would certainly be more effective in conveying the living message of what our country is, and what it seeks.

Very truly yours,

GILBERT J. SLOAN.

RAPPAPORT & LAGAKOS,
Philadelphia, Pa., January 21, 1960.
Hon. HENRY S. REUSS,
New House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to commend your efforts on the possibility of a Point 4 Youth Corps.

Our son was inducted into military service after graduating from Columbia University law school. He spent almost all of the time stationed in Germany, marking time with dull minor clerical duties. The waste of young, intelligent manpower in this regard is appalling and detrimental to our best national interests.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH RAPPAPORT.

Mrs. Harold Lyke, Gibsonia, Pa., parent, wrote:

I have two sons, one doing graduate work in zoology at the University of Wisconsin and the other at Swarthmore College. * * * Both boys could contribute a great deal in a program such as you suggest.

IMMENSELY VALUABLE

Miss Jennie M. Doidge, Christian education director, Cleveland Area Church Federation, said:

I wish to express my great interest and belief in this type of program, provided * * * we utilize the experiences of other groups that have been at work * * * in this field.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY,
DEPARTMENT OF PHILOSOPHY,
Cambridge, Mass., January 20, 1960.
The Honorable HENRY S. REUSS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. REUSS: I have just finished reading the text of H.R. 9638. It seems to me that such a program would be immensely valuable, both to the nations affected, and to the United States itself. There is no better way to generate interest in the problems of underdeveloped countries than to send large numbers of intelligent and well-educated young people abroad for work and study.

May I make one suggestion which well may have occurred to you, but which was not mentioned in your remarks. It seems likely to me that a program of the sort you outline would be an ideal way to stimulate interest in Foreign Service careers. I should think that many college graduates would become so interested in the countries in which they have worked that on their return to the United States they would apply for admission to area study programs in universities, or to the Foreign Service training program. Perhaps you could interest these programs in giving study credit for the language and other training which the Youth Corps members had obtained during their 2 years. Perhaps also Members of Congress, such as Senator FULBRIGHT, who have shown interest in the development of the Foreign Service, would be prepared to join with you.

I would be grateful to you for information of any further developments in this plan. As one who had the experience of being made chief latrine cleaner in his platoon, I can attest to the current waste of education and ability in the Armed Forces.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. WOLFF,
Instructor in Philosophy.

COMPLETE TEXT OF BILL

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 307 of the Mutual Security Act of 1954 is amended by inserting "(a)" immediately after "SEC. 307. Advances and Grants; Contracts.—", and by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b)(1) The President shall provide for the conduct by a nongovernmental research group, university, or foundation of a study with a view to ascertaining the advisability and practicability of the establishment by the United States of a program, known as the 'Point Four Youth Corps', under which young citizens will be trained and serve in programs of technical cooperation. The objectives of the Point Four Youth Corps will be—

"(A) to make additional technical manpower available to United States agencies and to private agencies carrying out economic, medical, educational, and community development programs in underdeveloped friendly foreign countries;

"(B) to assist in broadening the understanding by the peoples of other nations of the ideals and aspirations of Americans, through close contact with young Americans participating in the Point Four Youth Corps; and

AN OPPORTUNITY TO SERVE

"(C) to offer our young people an opportunity to serve their country in a stimulating way, while broadening their understanding of the problems facing other peoples and nations, and thereby helping them better to understand American policies and purposes abroad.

The President shall endeavor to have such study conducted as a public service without Federal contribution toward the expenses thereof; and any Federal contribution which may be required for such study shall not exceed $10,000, to be paid out of sums appropriated pursuant to section 304 of this act.

"(2) Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this subsection, the group, university, or foundation which conducts such study shall report to the President and to the Congress its recommendations with respect to the establishment by the United States of the Point Four Youth Corps, and if the establishment of such Corps is recommended, such report shall be accompanied by draft legislation proposed for the implementation thereof. The report shall include, but not be limited to, the consideration of the following factors—

"(A) The types of projects in which members of the Point Four Youth Corps might be used, based upon investigation of existing and proposed private and governmentally sponsored projects, and how such projects should be carried out;

"(B) The manner in which interested private American foundations, and groups such as service clubs, religious groups, farm organizations, labor unions, business groups, youth groups, and similar organizations, might cooperate in the operation of Point Four Youth Corps projects;

"(C) Whether or not it would be desirable to provide that service in the Point Four Youth Corps shall be considered as satisfying the obligation of individuals to perform training and service in the Armed Forces;

"(D) The optimum size of the Point Four Youth Corps, the period of service which might be required and the pay scales and conditions of employment which would be most desirable in the public interest;

"(E) The pattern and manner of orientation and training in the United States and abroad that would be required to make young American adults effective workers in programs of technical cooperation conducted under this title or otherwise;

"(F) Whether it would be practicable and advisable to recruit young American adults who have completed less than four years of college;

"(G) Whether the Point Four Youth Corps should be placed under the administration of a Federal agency or a private group on a contract basis, or both; and

"(H) The manner in which the Point Four Youth Corps could most usefully supplement current governmental and private programs of technical cooperation.

"(3) The group, university, or foundation which conducts such study is authorized to secure directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality, information, suggestions, and statistics for the purpose of this subsection; and each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to such group, university, or foundation upon its request."

540502—73903

U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1960

Text of the

AFL-CIO INTERNAL DISPUTES PLAN adopted by the

Fourth Constitutional Convention

Miami Beach, Florida

December, 1961

ARTICLE XXI

Settlement of Internal Disputes

SECTION 1. The principles set forth in this Article shall be applicable to all affiliates of this Federation, and to their local unions and other subordinate bodies.

SECTION 2. Each affiliate shall respect the established collective bargaining relationship of every other affiliate. No affiliate shall organize or attempt to represent employes as to whom an established collective bargaining relationship exists with any other affiliate. For purposes of this Article, the term, "established collective bargaining relationship" means any situation in which an affiliate, or any local or other subordinate body thereof, has either (a) been recognized by the employer (including any governmental agency) as the collective bargaining representative for the employes involved for a period of one year or more, or (b) been certified by the National Labor Relations Board or other federal or state agency as the collective bargaining representative for the employes.

SECTION 3. Each affiliate shall respect the established work relationship of every other affiliate. For purposes of this Article, an "established work relationship" shall be deemed to exist as to any work of the kind which the members of an organization have customarily performed at a particular plant or work site, whether their employer is the plant operator, a contractor, or other employer. No affiliate shall by agreement or collusion with any employer or by the exercise of economic pressure seek to obtain work for its members as to which an established work relationship exists with any other affiliate, except with the consent of such affiliate. The foregoing sentence of this section shall not be applicable to work in the railroad industry.

SECTION 4. In the event that any affiliate believes that such special and unusual circumstances exist that it would be violative of its basic jurisdiction or contrary to basic concepts of trade union morality or to the constitutional objectives of the AFL-CIO or injurious to accepted trade union work standards to enforce the principles which would apply in the absence of such circumstances, such organization shall nevertheless observe such principles unless and until its claim is upheld in the manner prescribed in Section 17 of this Article.

SECTION 5. No affiliate shall, in connection with any organizational campaign, circulate or cause to be circulated any charge or report which is designed to bring or has the effect of bringing another affiliate into public disrepute or of otherwise adversely affecting the reputation of such affiliate or the Federation.

SECTION 6. Dispute settlements and determinations under this Article shall not determine the general work or trade jurisdiction of any affiliate but shall be limited to the settlement or determination of the specific dispute on the basis of the facts and considerations involved in that dispute.

SECTION 7. The President shall establish procedural rules for the handling of complaints under this Article so that all affiliates involved in or affected by a dispute will have notice thereof, will have an opportunity for the voluntary settlement of the dispute, and, in the event of a failure to reach a voluntary settlement, will have a full and fair hearing before an Impartial Umpire. The rules shall be such as to insure a speedy and early disposition of all complaints arising under this Article.

SECTION 8. The President shall establish a panel of mediators composed of persons from within the labor movement. The members shall serve at the pleasure of the President. Any affiliate which claims that another affiliate has violated this Article may, by its principal officer, file a complaint with the President. Upon receipt of such complaint the President shall designate a mediator or mediators, selected by him from the mediation panel, and direct that all affiliates involved or affected meet with such mediator or mediators in an effort to effect a settlement.

SECTION 9. A panel of Impartial Umpires composed of prominent and respected persons shall be established. The members of the panel shall be selected by the President with the approval of the Executive Council. If voluntary settlement of a dispute is not reached within fourteen days after the appointment of a mediator or mediators, a hearing shall be held before an Impartial Umpire selected from such panel. Impartial Umpires shall be assigned on a rotating basis, subject to their availability to conduct hearings. The terms of employment of the members of the panel shall be established by the President, with the approval of the Executive Council.

SECTION 10. The Impartial Umpire shall make a determination, after hearing, based upon the principles set forth in this Article. He shall make such determination within a time specified by the President, unless an extension of time is agreed to by the parties. The President shall transmit copies of the determination to all affiliates involved. He shall, at the same time, request any affiliate which the Impartial Umpire has found to be in violation of this Article to inform him as to what steps it intends to take to comply with such determination. Any response received, or the fact that no response has been received within a time fixed by the President, shall be communicated to the other parties to the dispute.

SECTION 11. The President may extend any time limit if, in his judgment, such extension will more readily effectuate an early settlement or determination of a dispute. Whenever, in the judgment of the President, pressing reasons require an accelerated settlement or determination, he may shorten or eliminate the mediation process or refer the dispute directly to an Impartial Umpire.

SECTION 12. If no appeal is filed from a determination of the Umpire within five days as provided below the determination shall automatically go into full force and effect. Any affiliate which is adversely affected by a determination of the Umpire, and which contends that the determination is not compatible with this Constitution, or not supported by facts, or is otherwise arbitrary or capricious, may file an appeal with the President within five days after it receives the Umpire's determination. Any such appeal shall be referred by the President to a subcommittee of the Executive Council.

SECTION 13. The subcommittee of the Executive Council may disallow the appeal, in which event the determination of the Umpire shall be final, and subject to no further appeal and shall go into full force and effect; or the subcommittee may refer the appeal to the Executive Council, in which event the determination of the Umpire shall be automatically stayed pending disposition of the appeal by the Executive Council. The determination of the Umpire shall be sustained unless it is set aside or altered by vote of a majority of all of the members of the Executive Council. The decision of the Executive Council where an appeal is granted shall be final, and shall be effective as of the date therein specified.

SECTION 14. Any affected affiliate may file a complaint with the President that another affiliate has not complied with an effective determination of the Impartial Umpire or of the Executive Council on appeal. Upon receipt of such a complaint the President shall immediately convene a meeting of the subcommittee of the Executive Council referred to above. If non-compliance with the determination is found at such meeting, notice of such non-compliance shall be issued by the President to each affiliated national or international union and department.

SECTION 15. Immediately upon the issuance of such notification, the following shall apply:

(1) The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this Article until such non-compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Section 16;

(2) The Federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be in violation of this Article;

(3) The Federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the Constitution;

(4) No affiliate shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this Article.

In addition, the Executive Council is authorized, in its discretion, to:

(1) Deny to such an affiliate the use of any or all of the services or facilities of the Federation;

(2) Deny to such an affiliate any protection under any of the provisions or policy determinations of the Federation;

(3) Apply any other authority vested in the Executive Council under this Constitution.

SECTION 16. Any affiliate which has been found to be in non-compliance and which has been deprived of its rights under this Article may apply for restoration of such rights. Notice of such application shall be given to all of the affiliates involved in the determination or determinations as to which there is non-compliance. If such affiliates consent, the President shall be authorized to restore the rights of the non-complying affiliate after it states its intention in writing to comply thenceforth with the provisions of this Article. If any affiliate involved in the cases of non-compliance opposes the application, the rights of the non-complying affiliate shall be restored only under the following conditions:

(a) The non-complying affiliate states its intention, in writing, to comply thenceforth with the provisions of this Article;

(b) The non-complying affiliate has undertaken whatever measures may be necessary and practicable to remedy the situation;

(c) The application for restoration of rights is approved by two-thirds vote of the Executive Council, or by a majority vote of the convention.

SECTION 17. Any affiliate which claims justification under Section 4, for action, which would, in the absence of such justification violate the provisions of this Article, shall process its claim, prior to taking action, under the provisions of this Section. Such claim shall set forth the basis upon which the claim is made and the action which the affiliate proposes to take. The claim shall thereafter be processed as provided in this Article except that the determination as to whether the facts justify the proposed action shall not be made by the Impartial Umpire. The Impartial Umpire shall determine whether the proposed action would violate the provisions of this Article in the absence of justification, shall find the facts with respect to the claim of the justification, and submit a report to the Executive Council. The Executive Council shall determine on the report of the Impartial Umpire whether the proposed action would violate the provisions of this Article in the absence of justification; and, if it concludes by majority vote that the proposed action would so violate it shall find such justification only by a vote of two-thirds of the membership of the Council.

SECTION 18. The President shall be authorized to delegate to such person or persons as he may designate any of his powers or functions under this Article except the authority granted by Sections 12, 14, and 16.

SECTION 19. Where a dispute between affiliates subject to resolution under this Article is also covered by a written agreement between all of the affiliates involved in or affected by the dispute, the provisions of such agreement shall be complied with prior to the invocation of the procedures provided in this Article. If such agreement provides for final and binding arbitration, and an affiliate party to such agreement claims that another such affiliate has not complied with a decision under that agreement, it may file a complaint under the provisions of Section 14 of this Article and the procedures provided in this Article in the case of noncompliance shall be applicable. Where a dispute between affiliates subject to resolution under this Article is also covered by a written agreement between affiliates but involves or affects an affiliate not a party to such an agreement, the affiliate not a party to such agreement may invoke the procedures provided in this Article for the settlement and determination of such dispute.

SECTION 20. The provisions of this Article with respect to the settlement and determination of disputes of the nature described in this Article shall constitute the sole and exclusive method for settlement and determination of such dispute and the provisions of this Article with respect to the enforcement of such settlements and determinations shall constitute the sole and exclusive method for such enforcement. No affiliate shall resort to court or other legal proceedings to settle or determine any disputes of the nature described in this Article or to enforce any settlement or determination reached hereunder.

SECTION 21. The provisions of this Article shall take effect on January 1, 1962. Upon such effective date, the provisions of Article III, Section 4, of this Constitution, except the first sentence thereof, shall be of no further force and effect. However any dispute which has become subject to a formal complaint under such provision prior to January 1, 1962, shall be disposed of under the procedures and principles theretofore applicable and not under the procedures or principles set forth in this Article, except that any recommendation of the Impartial Umpire issued subsequent to January 1, 1962, shall be subject to the provisions of Sections 14 through 16 of this Article.

SECTION 22. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution this Article shall be subject to amendment by the convention by a majority vote of those present and voting either by a show of hands, or, if a roll call is properly demanded as provided in this Constitution, by such roll call.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

815 16th Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

GEORGE MEANY
President

WM. F. SCHNITZLER
Secretary-Treasurer

Union Admin — Nat'l (1965)

LOCAL CONVENTION REPRESENTATION AND CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS IN NATIONAL UNIONS

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

W. Willard Wirtz, Secretary

LABOR-MANAGEMENT SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

Office of Labor-Management Policy Development

LOCAL CONVENTION REPRESENTATION AND CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS IN NATIONAL UNIONS

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

W. Willard Wirtz, Secretary

LABOR-MANAGEMENT SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

Office of Labor-Management Policy Development

PREFACE

At the end of 1964 the U.S. Supreme Court wrote finis to a dispute which had been going on for more than a year in the American Federation of Musicians over a constitutional amendment which increased membership dues. This union had adopted the amendment at its 1963 convention, but its opponents charged that the method of adoption violated the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 by allowing the delegates to cast votes weighted by the number of members each represented.

The Supreme Court decided that the LMRDA had not been violated by this procedure, but the litigation focused attention on the different methods provided by national unions for amending their constitutions and for allocating delegates and voting strength among their constituent local unions.

These are the areas which are explored in this study, which was prepared by Charles E. Skopic under the supervision of August F. Cantfil. The work was under the general direction of Herbert J. Lahne, Chief of the Division of Research and Analysis.

June 1965

CONTENTS

		Page
I.	Introduction	1
II.	Methods of Voting on Constitutional Amendments	4
	Delegate Vote at Convention	6
	Membership Referendum	7
	Amending Dues Provisions	9
	Size of Vote Required	10
III.	Local Union Delegate Representation at National Union Conventions	11
	Same Number of Delegates per Local	14
	Number of Delegates Based on Size of Local	14
IV.	Local Union Voting Representation at National Union Conventions	18
	Voice or Show of Hand	19
	Roll Call	23
	Requesting Roll Call Votes	27
V.	Delegate Voting at National Union Conventions	29
VI.	Summary and Conclusions	33

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

CONTENTS—Continued

Page

TABLES

1. National Union Size Characteristics and Dates of Constitutions Analyzed ---------- 3

2. Methods of Voting on Constitutional Amendments ---------- 5

3. Local Union Delegate Representation at National Union Conventions ---------- 13

4. Local Union Voting Representation at National Union Conventions ---------- 20

5. Comparative Voting Representation for the Largest and Average Size Locals in Selected National Unions ---------- 22

6. Local Union Delegate Voting at National Union Conventions ---------- 28

APPENDIX

Short and Full Names of National Unions Studied ---------- 36

I. Introduction

On December 7, 1964, the U.S. Supreme Court overruled the District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals and held that the American Federation of Musicians did not violate the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (LMRDA) when it amended its constitution to increase membership dues.

At issue was Section 101(a)(3) of the LMRDA which provides that national unions may increase dues "by majority vote of the delegates" voting at a convention. The lower courts had held that this meant "one delegate, one vote," whereas the Musicians' 1/ constitution permits each local's delegates to cast a number of votes equal to the number of members in their locals. The Supreme Court decided that the "majority" vote referred to in the statute included the concept of "a majority of the votes cast," and thus a vote "weighted according to the number of people the delegate represents" meets the requirements of the statute. 2/

The legal issue is now settled, but the Musicians' case raised questions regarding the voting methods used by national unions to amend their constitutions, the methods of allocating convention delegates to locals, and

---

1/ Shortened national union names are used throughout the study; the full names of the unions are listed in the appendix.

2/ Wittstein, et al. v. American Federation of Musicians, U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, October 1963, 223 F. Supp. 27, 54 LRRM 2393; affirmed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, December 1963, 326 F. 2d 26, 54 LRRM 2792. Petition for Writ of Certiorari granted by U.S. Supreme Court, March 9, 1964, 376 U.S. 942; lower Courts reversed by U.S. Supreme Court, December 7, 1964, 379 U.S. 171, 85 S. Ct. 300, 57 LRRM 2566.

the apportioning of convention voting strength among these delegates. The approach of this study is first to survey the voting methods by which national unions can amend their constitutions, giving special attention to methods of amending dues provisions. Then follows an examination of local union delegate and voting representation at national union conventions, as prescribed by the national union constitutions, to show the general pattern of convention representation afforded to locals of the various organizations. Finally, the convention voting formulas of these organizations are examined to determine whether or not local delegates can cast more than 1 vote when a roll call is taken.

The study is based on an analysis of the constitutions of 73 national unions. This universe includes all national unions with more than 40,000 members that have subordinate locals reporting under the LMRDA. In all, these 73 national unions represent 15.7 million members, which is almost 90 percent of the total membership of all national unions. 3/ The size characteristics of the national unions studied are presented in Table 1. The constitutions analyzed are those in effect as of June 1963.

3/ According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Directory of National and International Labor Unions in the United States, 1963, Bulletin No. 1395.

TABLE 1
National Union Size Characteristics and Dates of Constitutions Analyzed 1/

National union 2/	Date of constitution analyzed 3/	Number of local unions 4/	Number of members (000) 4/
Total	73	47,476	15,676
Actors & Artistes	3/63	-	58
Automobile Workers	5/62	1,271	1,074
Bakery & Confectionery Workers	8/62	133	75
Bakery Workers (Ind.)	1/62	-	-
Barbers	1/59	844	75
Boilermakers	5/61	425	125
Bookbinders	8/61	225	62
Brewery Workers	8/61	260	60
Bricklayers	9/62	950	151
Building Service Employees	5/60	379	294
Carpenters	1/63	2,800	739
Chemical Workers	10/62	400	82
Clothing Workers	5/62	680	376
Communications Workers	6/63	797	279
District 50-UMW (Ind.)	2/61	1,782	205
Electrical Workers-IBEW	10/62	1,735	793
Electrical Workers-IUE	1/63	551	295
Electrical Workers-UE (Ind.)	12/62	140	163
Engineers, Operating	4/60	371	297
Firemen & Oilers	5/61	648	47
Garment Workers, Ladies	7/62	453	441
Glass Bottle Blowers	3/61	246	60
Glass & Ceramic Workers	6/61	156	49
Grain Millers	5/63	350	60
Hod Carriers	10/61	930	429
Hotel, Restaurant Employees	5/61	546	445
Industrial Workers	9/61	320	68
Iron Workers	10/60	319	139
Laundry Workers (Ind.)	1/60	86	63
Locomotive Engineers (Ind.)	10/62	888	43
Locomotive Firemen	1/60	914	76
Longshoremen-ILA	12/59	397	62
Longshoremen & Warehousemen (Ind.)	4/63	77	60
Machinists	1/61	1,971	868
Maintenance of Way Employees	7/62	1,331	153
Maritime	12/60	-	48
Meat Cutters	7/60	440	333
Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers (Ind.)	10/62	175	75
Mine Workers, United (Ind.)	11/60	1,600	245
Molders	7/61	384	54
Musicians	10/62	675	282
Office Employees	6/62	223	60
Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers	8/61	558	168
Packinghouse, Food & Allied Workers	7/62	425	98
Painters	1/60	1,304	196
Papermakers & Paperworkers	9/60	793	130
Plasterers	7/62	550	68
Plumbers	1/62	727	251
Printing Pressmen	2/61	758	116
Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers	9/62	705	174
Railroad Trainmen	5/60	1,125	196
Railway Carmen	6/62	917	126
Railway & Steamship Clerks	12/59	1,670	300
Retail Clerks	7/59	307	364
Retail, Wholesale	5/62	293	159
Rubber Workers	11/62	425	158
Seafarers	3/63	-	70
Sheet Metal Workers	10/62	-	111
Shoe Workers	5/61	138	56
Stage Employes	9/62	986	61
State, County & Municipal Employees	4/60	1,644	220
Steelworkers	9/62	3,100	879
Teachers	10/62	550	71
Teamsters (Ind.)	7/61	871	1,457
Telephone Unions, Alliance (Ind.)	6/59	14	75
Textile Workers-TWUA	5/62	610	183
Textile Workers-UTW	10/60	222	41
Transit Union	1/62	393	134
Transport Workers	10/61	135	135
Typographical	1/63	769	106
Upholsterers	9/60	184	56
Utility Workers	5/62	211	69
Woodworkers	12/61	220	86

1/ The universe studied includes all national unions with subordinate locals reporting under the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA) and having more than 40,000 members according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Directory of National and International Labor Unions in the United States, 1963, Bulletin No. 1395.

2/ All national unions not identified by (Ind.) are affiliated with the AFL-CIO. The full name of each union is listed in an appendix to this study.

3/ Constitutions analyzed are those in effect as of June 1963.

4/ Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics' Directory of National and International Labor Unions in the United States, 1963, Bulletin No. 1395.

II. Methods of Voting on Constitutional Amendments

The recent litigation resulting from the dues increase amendment adopted by the Musicians' convention aroused interest in the voting procedures followed by other national unions to amend their constitution.

The 73 national unions included in this study can vote on proposed constitutional amendments by the following methods: 4/

(1)	Only by delegate vote at convention --------	32 unions
(2)	Only by membership referendum ----------	1 union
(3)	Either membership referendum or delegate vote at convention ----------	33 unions
(4)	Either membership referendum or delegate vote followed by a membership referendum ----------	7 unions
		73 unions

The unions falling into these categories can be identified from Table 2.

Procedures for enacting interim amendments, such as by action of the national executive board pending approval by convention or referendum vote, are not included in this study although some national constitutions contain such provisions. Also excluded are special or emergency amendment procedures which permit national officers or the national executive board to amend the constitution to comply with existing laws, or to cope with administrative problems relating to such matters as the union benefit plan or collective bargaining agreements. In this connection, Section 404 of the LMRDA

4/ A few unions amend certain provisions (including dues and per capita tax provisions) differently than other constitutional provisions. Different methods of voting on dues amendments are discussed later. Unions with special requirements for voting on certain constitutional amendments are noted in Table 2.

TABLE 2
Methods of Voting on Constitutional Amendments

National union 1/	Convention vote only	Membership referendum only	Membership referendum or: Convention vote	Membership referendum or: Convention vote followed by referendum
Constitutions with provisions	32	1	33	7
Number of members (millions) 2/	6.3	.1	7.7	1.6
As percent of total studied	40%	1%	49%	10%
Actors & Artistes		3/ x
Automobile Workers	x
Bakery & Confectionery Workers			x
Bakery Workers (Ind.)			x
Barbers			x
Boilermakers	x
Bookbinders				x
Brewery Workers			x
Bricklayers	x
Building Service Employees	x
Carpenters			x
Chemical Workers	x
Clothing Workers			x
Communications Workers			x
District 50-UMW (Ind.)	x
Electrical Workers-IBEW			x
Electrical Workers-IUE				4/ x
Electrical Workers-UE (Ind.)				4/ x
Engineers, Operating			5/ x
Firemen & Oilers	x
Garment Workers, Ladies	x
Glass Bottle Blowers	x
Glass & Ceramic Workers			x
Grain Millers	x
Hod Carriers			x
Hotel & Restaurant Employees			x
Industrial Workers			4/6/ x
Iron Workers	x
Laundry Workers (Ind.)	x
Locomotive Engineers (Ind.)			x
Locomotive Firemen	x
Longshoremen-ILA	x
Longshoremen & Warehousemen (Ind.)			x
Machinists				x
Maintenance of Way Employees	x
Maritime				7/ x
Meat Cutters	x
Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers (Ind.)	8/ x
Mine Workers, United (Ind.)	x
Molders			x
Musicians	x
Office Employees	x
Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers			x
Packinghouse, Food & Allied Workers	8/ x
Painters			7/ x
Papermakers & Paperworkers			x
Plasterers	x
Plumbers			x
Printing Pressmen			7/ x
Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers	x
Railroad Trainmen	x
Railway Carmen				x
Railway & Steamship Clerks			x
Retail Clerks			7/ x
Retail, Wholesale			x
Rubber Workers	x
Seafarers			x
Sheet Metal Workers			x
Shoe Workers				x
Stage Employes			9/ x
State, County & Municipal Employees	x
Steelworkers	x
Teachers			x
Teamsters (Ind.)			x
Telephone Unions, Alliance (Ind.)	x
Textile Workers-TWUA	x
Textile Workers-UTW	x
Transit Union	x
Transport Workers			x
Typographical			9/ x
Upholsterers			7/ x
Utility Workers	x
Woodworkers			5/7/ x

1/ All national unions not identified by (Ind.) are affiliated with the AFL-CIO. The full name of each union is listed in an appendix to this study.

2/ Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics' Directory of National and International Labor Unions in the United States, 1963, Bulletin No. 1395.

3/ Branches (which are considered to be intermediate bodies for this study) cast unit votes in a membership referendum; each branch, regardless of size, has one vote.

4/ Locals cast unit votes in a membership referendum; the number of unit votes a local casts is based on its membership size.

5/ A referendum is required following a delegate vote at convention if requested by a prescribed number of locals.

6/ Dues and certain other provisions can only be amended by convention vote.

7/ Certain constitutional provisions can only be amended by one of the methods indicated.

8/ Convention-passed amendments of dues and certain other provisions must be submitted to a membership referendum.

9/ The union's "constitution" can only be amended by one of the methods indicated, while the "bylaws" and other sections of the union's governing document can be amended by either of the two methods indicated.

empowered union executive boards to make such interim constitutional changes as were necessary to carry out the Act's election provisions. A number of constitutions were, in fact, amended by executive board action during the period immediately following the passage of the LMRDA.

Delegate Vote at Convention

In all, 65 of the 73 unions studied can amend their constitution by delegate vote at convention. Thirty-two of these 65 unions, including the Musicians' union, can amend their constitution only by delegate vote at convention; the other 33 unions can amend their constitution either by delegate vote at convention or by a membership referendum. Thus, only 8 organizations do not provide for constitutional changes to be decided by a vote of the convention delegates.

In a third of the 33 organizations that can amend their constitution by either delegate vote or referendum, a referendum vote on proposed amendments is specifically allowed only between conventions. The constitutions of these organizations usually are silent on precisely when a referendum may be held between conventions, but some constitutions specify time limits. For example, the Barbers allow a referendum vote on proposed amendments only during those years when there is no convention, which is normally held every 5 years in the month of September; thus, no proposed changes in the constitution may be put to a membership referendum within 9 months of an upcoming convention.

Membership Referendum

Forty-one of the 73 national unions studied can vote on proposed constitutional amendments by use of a membership referendum. Only one national, the Actors and Artistes, uses this method exclusively; the other 40 use a referendum as an alternative to, or in conjunction with, delegate voting at convention. The extent to which particular organizations have actually used one alternative method or the other in adopting constitutional amendments is a matter not within the scope of this study.

In addition to the 33 national unions mentioned above which can amend their constitutions by a membership referendum as an alternative to a vote of the convention delegates, there are 7 unions which require such convention action to be affirmed by a membership referendum before the proposed changes are adopted. These 7 unions and the Actors and Artistes are the only organizations which prescribe mandatory membership votes on proposed constitutional amendments.

The constitutions of the organizations which provide for a membership referendum usually require that proposed amendments be endorsed by a certain percentage or number of locals or members before a referendum is held. The intent of these requirements is to save the national from the expense of conducting a referendum vote on proposed amendments that have little chance of being adopted. One organization, the Railway Carmen, goes so far as to provide that if a proposed amendment is defeated in a referendum vote, the local lodges proposing the amendment must bear the expense of conducting the referendum, whereas if the amendment is adopted, the national union bears the expense.

The vast majority of the unions (37 of the 41) which may use a membership referendum to amend their constitution employ a direct referendum. Under a direct referendum the proposed amendment is submitted to all members of the national union, with the local union acting as the vehicle for conducting the voting among the members and reporting the numerical results back to the national; the acceptance or rejection of the amendment is determined by the total vote of all members.

The other 4 unions conduct a membership referendum by using a unit vote system. The Electrical Workers-IUE and Electrical Workers-UE (Ind.) both use a unit vote system that allows all locals voting representation proportionately equal to their size. 5/

The unit votes cast by Industrial Workers' locals are weighted so that large locals have proportionately less voting power than the smaller locals. This results from the following voting procedure: Each local of the Industrial Workers votes for or against a proposed amendment, depending on the consensus of the membership. The local's unit vote is then weighted according to a formula by which locals get 1 vote for the first 100 members or less, 1 additional vote for each of the next 2 increments of 200 members or major fraction thereof, and 1 additional vote for each additional 300 members or major fraction thereof. Consequently, locals with a large membership are proportionately underrepresented relative to smaller locals. The Actors and Artistes also use a unit vote system that underrepresents members of larger

---

5/ The Packinghouse, Food and Allied Workers also use a proportionate unit vote, but a referendum is only used to act on certain convention-passed amendments, including dues amendments.

"branches." 6/ Each branch casts 1 vote for or against a proposed amendment, depending on the consensus of the branch membership. Therefore, larger branches have proportionately less voting strength compared with smaller branches.

Amending Dues Provisions

Fifty-six of the 73 unions in this study, representing about 85 percent of the total members, establish a local dues level in their national constitution. This provision usually takes the form of a minimum requirement which is sufficient to cover the local's per capita financial obligation to the national. Any of the other 17 unions apparently may establish a level of dues by amending their constitutions to include such a provision, since none of the constitutions preclude the national union from taking such action. Therefore, these 17 unions have been included in the analysis.

Only 3 of the unions studied cannot vote on dues amendments by the same methods used to vote on other constitutional amendments. The Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers (Ind.) and the Packinghouse, Food and Allied Workers must submit convention-passed amendments of dues and certain other provisions to a membership referendum for final approval. These 2 unions adopt other constitutional amendments only by delegate vote at convention. On the other hand, the Industrial Workers can change dues and initiation fees only by convention action, although they can amend other constitutional provisions either by convention action or by a membership referendum. Thus, there does not 6/ The term "branches" as used in this study refers to the 8 organizations directly affiliated with the Actors and Artistes (e.g., Screen Actors Guild, Inc.).

---

seem to be any clear pattern of the way in which unions modify the normal methods of amending their constitutions to handle dues amendments. The fact that only 3 of the 73 unions studied impose special voting methods for enacting dues amendments indicates that most unions do not consider that dues amendments warrant special voting procedures. 7/

Size of Vote Required to Amend National Constitution

A simple majority vote is sufficient to carry amendments in 33 of the 65 unions which can amend their constitutions by delegate vote at convention. Some of these 33 unions do not specify that a simple majority is required but, instead, refer to either Robert's Rules of Order or Cushing's Manual of Parliamentary Practice as the authority on procedural matters where the constitution is silent. Both of these authorities specify that a simple majority vote is sufficient to amend.

Eighteen of the 65 unions which can amend their constitution by convention action require a two-thirds or greater vote to adopt amendments. Five other unions vary the majority required to amend by delegate vote at convention. For example, the Clothing Workers require only a simple majority to adopt an amendment proposed by the national executive board, but a two-thirds vote to carry an amendment proposed by a local union, and the Ladies Garment Workers require a two-thirds vote to amend per capita tax provisions, but a simple majority to amend other provisions. The 9 remaining unions of the 65 which can adopt constitutional amendments by delegate vote at the convention did not specify the size of the vote required to amend.

7/ The Chemical Workers also impose special dues amendment requirements in that they require a two-thirds vote of the convention delegates for enacting regular amendments, while dues and certain other financial amendments require only a simple majority.

A simple majority vote was sufficient to amend the constitutions of 30 of the 41 unions which can use a membership referendum to amend their constitutions. Again, some of these 30 unions specified only that Robert's Rules or Cushing's Manual was to be followed where the constitution is silent, and both of these authorities specify that a simple majority is sufficient to amend. Only 5 of the 41 unions which provide for a membership referendum require a two-thirds vote to carry amendments; the 6 remaining unions were silent on the size of the vote required.

III. Local Union Delegate Representation at National Union Conventions

The dues increase amendment adopted by the Musicians at their 1963 convention, which touched off the legal controversy that was ultimately settled by the Supreme Court, was adopted by a roll call vote margin of 44,326 votes after several voice votes on the amendment were inconclusive. The contrast in the outcome of the voice and roll call voting resulted from the difference between the delegate representation (number of delegates per local) and the voting representation (number of roll call votes per local) allowed Musicians' locals. In the Musicians' union each local is entitled to 1 delegate per 100 members or major fraction thereof, but not more than 3 delegates per local. Under this formula a 300-member local has as many delegates (and consequently, as many voice votes) as a 3,000-member local; however, on a roll call, each Musicians' local casts as many votes as there are members in the local, so that a 3,000-member local casts 10 times as many roll call votes as the 300-member local.

Many other national unions also apportion voting representation on a different basis than delegate representation. Therefore, a full understanding of local union convention representation requires an examination of both the delegate and the voting representation formulas followed by the national unions. This section of the study describes the delegate representation formulas applied by the various national unions to their local affiliates, and the following section of the study compares the proportionate voice and roll call voting representation afforded to the locals.

The national unions included in this study use 2 basic methods of determining local union convention delegate representation: (1) each local is allowed to send the same number of delegates regardless of its membership size, or (2) the number of delegates is based on the size of the local. The vast majority of organizations (60 of the 73) base the number of delegates on membership size. The unions that use each of these 2 basic methods can be identified from Table 3. Twenty-one of the 73 unions studied allow intermediate bodies to send voting delegates to the national union convention. These 21 unions are also identified in Table 3.

The constitutions of 4 independent unions, Mine Workers; District 50-UMW; Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; and Longshoremen and Warehousemen, do not specify the number of delegates which their local affiliates may send to the convention, and apparently even locals of the same size affiliated with any of these organizations may be represented by varying numbers of delegates. The constitutions of these 4 organizations do, however, specify voting representation formulas for their local affiliates, as discussed in the following section of this study.

TABLE 3
Local Union Delegate Representation at National Union Conventions

National union 1/	Same number of delegates per local (number)	Number of delegates based on size of local; larger locals are allowed proportionately: More delegates	Equal number of delegates	Fewer delegates	No provision for specific number of delegates
Constitutions with provisions	8	2	17	41	4
Number of members (millions) 2/	1.1	1.6	3.4	8.9	.6
As percent of total studied	7%	10%	22%	57%	4%
Actors & Artistes 3/ 4/	-	-	-	-	-
Automobile Workers				5/ x
Bakery & Confectionery Workers				x
Bakery Workers (Ind.)				x
Barbers			x
Boilermakers 3/	7/ 1-7
Bookbinders				x
Brewery Workers				6/ x
Bricklayers				x
Building Service Employees			x
Carpenters				x
Chemical Workers 3/				x
Clothing Workers 3/				x
Communications Workers				x
District 50-UMW (Ind.)					x
Electrical Workers-IBEW				x
Electrical Workers-IUE 3/				x
Electrical Workers-UE (Ind.) 3/				x
Engineers, Operating			x
Firemen & Oilers				5/ x
Garment Workers, Ladies 3/				x
Glass Bottle Blowers			5/ x
Glass & Ceramic Workers				x
Grain Millers			x
Hod Carriers				x
Hotel, Restaurant Employees				x
Industrial Workers				x
Iron Workers				5/ x
Laundry Workers (Ind.)				6/ x
Locomotive Engineers (Ind.)	9/ 1
Locomotive Firemen	1
Longshoremen-ILA			x
Longshoremen & Warehousemen (Ind.)					x
Machinists			x
Maintenance of Way Employees 3/	9/ 1
Maritime				10/ x
Meat Cutters 3/				x
Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers (Ind.)					x
Mine Workers, United (Ind.)					x
Molders			x
Musicians				6/ x
Office Employees				6/ x
Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers		x
Packinghouse, Food & Allied Workers 3/				6/ x
Painters				x
Papermakers & Paperworkers			x
Plasterers			x
Plumbers 3/				x
Printing Pressmen				x
Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers				x
Railroad Trainmen	1
Railway Carmen	1
Railway & Steamship Clerks 3/	11/ 1
Retail Clerks				6/ x
Retail, Wholesale				6/ x
Rubber Workers			x
Seafarers 3/				x
Sheet Metal Workers 3/			x
Shoe Workers 3/				x
Stage Employes 3/				5/ x
State, County & Municipal Employees 3/				6/ x
Steelworkers			x
Teachers 3/				x
Teamsters (Ind.)		x
Telephone Unions, Alliance (Ind.)	7/ 1-3
Textile Workers-TWUA 3/				x
Textile Workers-UTW 3/			x
Transit Union				x
Transport Workers			x
Typographical				x
Upholsterers			x
Utility Workers			x
Woodworkers 3/				x

1/ All national unions not identified by (Ind.) are affiliated with the AFL-CIO. The full name of each union is listed in an appendix to this study.

2/ Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics' Directory of National and International Labor Unions in the United States, 1953, Bulletin No. 1395.

3/ Voting delegates sent by intermediate bodies.

4/ Locals do not send delegates to national conventions; this is done by the branches which are considered to be intermediate bodies for this study.

5/ There are two classes of locals with similar, but not identical, representation formulas.

6/ Larger locals are allowed proportionately fewer delegates because the constitution limits the maximum number of delegates per local. Absent this limitation, the delegate representation formulas are such that all locals are allowed a proportionately equal number of delegates.

7/ A local, regardless of its size, apparently has the choice of sending the indicated variable number of delegates.

8/ All "divisions" (locals) with 200 or more members are entitled to one delegate; "divisions" with less than 200 members are grouped with not more than two other "divisions" to obtain a combined membership of 200.

9/ Delegate representation for certain types of locals is different from that shown.

10/ Delegate representation is based on registered crew size of vessels, with larger crews allowed proportionately fewer delegates. A minimum of one delegate is allowed from each port branch, and one delegate is allowed from each affiliated labor organization.

11/ Lodges with less than 150 members are not entitled to their own delegate; instead they participate in electing "delegates-at-large."

Same Number of Delegates per Local

Eight national unions specify that each local affiliate is entitled to the same number of delegates regardless of membership size. 8/ Six of these 8 organizations are railroad unions; these permit only 1 delegate per local. The Boilermakers and the Alliance of Telephone Unions (Ind.) allow each local the choice of sending a variable, but limited, number of delegates.

One reason why so few national unions provide for the same number of delegates from each local, regardless of size, may be that this method can grossly underrepresent larger locals. For example, if a local union consisting of 100 members has the same number of delegates as a local of 1,000 members, then each member of the smaller local would have proportionately 10 times the representation of a member of the larger local. It is not surprising, therefore, that unions generally adhere to the concept of a positive relationship between the system of representation and the size of the constituency.

Number of Delegates Based on Size of Local

In 60 of the 73 unions studied, the number of delegates each local union may send to the convention is based on the size of the local's membership. These 60 unions may be further divided into 3 categories based on the proportionate delegate representation granted to larger locals as against smaller locals: (1) larger locals are allowed a proportionately equal number of delegates per member in 17 unions, (2) larger locals are allowed proportionately

---

8/ The Actors and Artistes permit each branch to send 3 delegates to the national convention, but the branches are classified for purposes of this study as intermediate bodies rather than locals, and therefore this union is not included in the 8 nationals mentioned above.

fewer delegates per member in 41 unions, and (3) larger locals are allowed proportionately more delegates per member in 2 unions. 9/

Seventeen unions provide that the number of delegates from each local union be equally proportional to its membership. This means that larger locals have more delegates than smaller locals, but only in direct relationship to their size. The following provision from the Rubber Workers' constitution is typical: "Each local union having an average membership of one hundred (100) members or less shall be entitled to one delegate and one additional delegate for each additional one hundred (100) members or majority fraction thereof."

Forty-one of the 60 unions which base local delegate representation on local membership size allow larger locals proportionately fewer delegates. The 8 unions cited earlier which provide for the same number of delegates from each local, regardless of size, in effect also allow larger locals proportionately fewer delegates. The primary method of giving larger locals proportionately fewer delegates is by using a representation formula which increases the number of members represented by each delegate as the size of the local union membership increases. An example of this type of formula is found in the Hod Carriers' constitution, which provides that "Each Local Union in good standing shall be entitled to representation as follows: one delegate

---

9/ These classifications are based on the general pattern of delegate representation resulting from the constitutional formula. It should be understood that departures from the general representation pattern can occur. For example, in a typical representation formula where locals are allowed 1 delegate per 100 members or major fraction thereof, a local of 100 members, entitled to 1 delegate, is underrepresented relative to a local of 10 members, also entitled to 1 delegate, and to a local of 151 members, entitled to 2 delegates. However, such disparities between locals of particular sizes are inherent to all delegate representation formulas, and they have been ignored for purposes of categorizing the general pattern of delegate representation produced by the formula.

for 100 members or fewer; two delegates for 101 to 250 members; three delegates for 251 to 500 members; four delegates for 501 to 1,000 members; five delegates for 1,001 to 2,000 members; six delegates for 2,001 to 5,000 members; seven delegates for 5,001 or more members." An example of a much less regressive delegate formula is found in the Plumbers' constitution which provides for 1 delegate from locals with at least 20 members and 1 delegate for each additional 100 members.

However, in 9 of these 41 unions, larger locals are allowed proportionately fewer delegates than smaller locals because the constitution places a limit on the maximum number of delegates per local, regardless of size. Without this limitation, the delegate representation formulas are such that all locals are allowed a proportionately equal number. A typical example of this type of representation formula is contained in the Brewery Workers' constitution, which provides that "Each Local Union shall be entitled to one delegate for each 100 members or fraction thereof, up to a maximum of ten (10) delegates for any one Local Union." Consequently, locals with more than 1,000 members receive proportionately fewer delegates; the largest local, with approximately 5,800 members, is substantially underrepresented in terms of delegates. The Musicians' union, which allows local unions 1 delegate per 100 members, but not more than 3 delegates, also falls into this category.

It is interesting to note that although over one-third of the unions studied (25 of the 73) so limit the number of delegates per local, this limitation has the effect of changing from equal to less than equal the proportionate delegate representation of the larger locals in only 9 unions. The other 16 unions already allow the larger locals proportionately fewer delegates, and the effect of limiting the maximum number of delegates per local for most of these unions is to further underrepresent members of larger locals in terms of delegates.

In only 2 nationals is there the possibility of larger locals having proportionately more delegate representation. The basis of delegate representation in these 2 unions is illustrated by the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers' constitution which provides "Three (3) delegates for the first 500 members or fraction thereof" and "One (1) delegate for each additional 100 members or major fraction thereof." Under this formula, each delegate from a 500 member local represents 166-2/3 members while each delegate from a 1,000 member local represents only 125 members. The Teamsters' delegate representation formula is in principle the same as the formula illustrated above, but large Teamster's locals are even less overrepresented in delegates.

Looking at local union delegate representation in an overall sense, it is clear that most nationals limit the delegate representation of larger locals—either by means of a regressive delegate representation formula, or by means of a fixed limit on the number of delegates per local. The reason for this is fairly obvious. Considering the enormous differences in membership between the largest and smallest locals in most organizations, 10/ a national union must compromise between 2 desirable but conflicting objectives. On 10/ As an indication of these enormous size differences, recent convention proceedings disclose that the smallest local of each of the following national unions had 20 or fewer members, while the largest local had the number of members shown (rounded to the nearest 100): Brewery Workers—5,800; Communications Workers—5,900; Electrical Workers-IBEW—30,100; Ladies Garment Workers—24,700; Hotel, Restaurant Employees—26,900; Maintenance of Way Employees—1,100; and Musicians—28,400 members.

---

the one hand, the union as a democratic political institution may wish to provide proportionately equal convention representation for all of its locals; to accomplish this, it is necessary to allow even the smallest local to have at least 1 delegate and to allow larger locals to have a great number of delegates. On the other hand, the union may wish to keep the number of delegates down because of the expense and practical problems involved in holding a very large convention, and therefore limit the number of delegates from large locals. Of course, there may be other reasons why certain organizations afford large locals proportionately less delegate representation; for instance, this may be a device to check the power of a few very large locals that might otherwise dominate the convention.

IV. Local Union Voting Representation at National Union Conventions

This section examines local union voting representation under the 2 methods of convention voting, namely, (1) voting by voice or show of hand, and (2) roll call voting. Comparisons of proportional voting representation are all based on the assumption that locals send their full number of delegates to the convention.

The method of convention voting can have a significant effect on proportional voting representation, and for this reason voice or hand voting and roll call voting are treated separately. When voting by voice or show of hand, each delegate obviously casts only 1 vote. Therefore, a local's voice or hand voting representation is determined by its convention delegate representation. When delegates vote by roll call, however, they can cast more than 1 vote when permitted by the voting formula in the national constitution. Therefore, when a roll call is taken, a large local having only a few delegates may cast many votes, depending upon the voting representation formula in the national constitution.

Voice or Show of Hand

When convention delegates vote by voice or show of hand, each delegate casts only 1 vote regardless of the number of members he represents. But, while each delegate casts an equal number of voice votes, each local does not necessarily get a vote equally proportionate to its size. Proportionately equal voting representation is accorded to locals affiliated with the 17 national unions identified in the previous section of the study as having delegate representation formulas based on the membership size of the local, which provide that the number of convention delegates allowed each local is proportionately equal to its membership. The 17 unions so identified in Table 3 are the same organizations identified in Table 4 as having proportionately equal voting representation when local delegates vote by voice or show of hand.

In 51 of the 73 national unions studied, locals have disproportionate voting representation when delegates vote by voice or show of hand. See Table 4. These 51 unions account for 74 percent of the total membership of the unions studied. In all but 2 of the 51 unions, larger locals have proportionately less voice voting representation than smaller locals. This follows from the fact that these 49 national unions limit larger locals to proportionately fewer delegates and hence proportionately fewer voice votes. The other 2 nationals grant larger locals proportionately more delegates than smaller locals

TABLE 4
Local Union Voting Representation at National Union Conventions 1/

National union 2/	If delegates vote by show of hand or voice, locals cast proportionately:		If delegates vote by roll call, locals cast proportionately:
	Equal votes	Unequal votes 3/	Equal votes	Unequal votes 3/
Constitutions with provisions	17	51	44	28
Number of members (millions) 4/	3.4	11.6	8.6	7.0
As percent of total studied	22%	74%	54%	45%
Actors & Artistes 5/	-	-	-	-
Automobile Workers		L	x
Bakery & Confectionery Workers		L	x
Bakery Workers (Ind.)		L	x
Barbers	x		x
Boilermakers		L		L
Bookbinders		L	x
Brewery Workers		L	x
Bricklayers		L		L
Building Service Employees	x		x
Carpenters		L		L
Chemical Workers		L		L
Clothing Workers		L		L
Communications Workers		L	x
District 50-UMW (Ind.)	(6/)	(6/)	x
Electrical Workers-IBEW		L	x
Electrical Workers-IUE		L	x
Electrical Workers-UE (Ind.)		L	x
Engineers, Operating	x		x
Firemen & Oilers		L	x
Garment Workers, Ladies		L		L
Glass Bottle Blowers	x		x
Glass & Ceramic Workers		L		L
Grain Millers	x		x
Hod Carriers		L		L
Hotel, Restaurant Employees		L		L
Industrial Workers		L		L
Iron Workers		L		L
Laundry Workers (Ind.)		L	x
Locomotive Engineers (Ind.)		7/ L		7/ L
Locomotive Firemen		L		L
Longshoremen-ILA	x		x
Longshoremen & Warehousemen (Ind.)	(6/)	(6/)	x
Machinists	x		x
Maintenance of Way Employees		L	x
Maritime		8/ L		8/ L
Meat Cutters		L		L
Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers (Ind.)	(6/)	(6/)	x
Mine Workers, United (Ind.)	(6/)	(6/)	x
Molders	x		x
Musicians		L	x
Office Employees		L	x
Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers		M	x
Packinghouse, Food & Allied Workers		L	x
Painters		L		L
Papermakers & Paperworkers	x		x
Plasterers	x		x
Plumbers		L		L
Printing Pressmen		L		L
Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers		L	x
Railroad Trainmen		L		L
Railway Carmen		L	x
Railway & Steamship Clerks		L	x
Retail Clerks		L		L
Retail, Wholesale		L	x
Rubber Workers	x		x
Seafarers		L		L
Sheet Metal Workers	x		x
Shoe Workers		L	x
Stage Employes		L		L
State, County & Municipal Employees		L		L
Steelworkers	x		x
Teachers		L		L
Teamsters (Ind.)		M		M
Telephone Unions, Alliance (Ind.)		L	x
Textile Workers-TWUA		L		L
Textile Workers-UTW	x		x
Transit Union		L		L
Transport Workers	x		x
Typographical		L		L
Upholsterers	x		x
Utility Workers	x		x
Woodworkers		L	x

1/ In determining voting representation, each national union has been categorized according to the general pattern of representation prescribed by the national constitution. It has been assumed that each local sends the full number of delegates allowed by the constitution, and that a local's voting strength is equally divided among its delegates. It also has been assumed that each union permits a roll call vote.

2/ All national unions not identified by (Ind.) are affiliated with the AFL-CIO. The full name of each union is listed in an appendix to this study.

3/ The letters stand for the following: L stands for proportionately less than equal and M stands for proportionately more than equal voting representation for larger locals relative to smaller locals.

4/ Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics' Directory of National and International Labor Unions in the United States, 1963, Bulletin No. 1395.

5/ Locals do not send delegates to national union conventions; this is done by the branches which are considered to be intermediate bodies for this study.

6/ Local union voice voting is indeterminate because the constitution does not provide for a specific number of delegates.

7/ All "divisions" (locals) with 200 or more members are entitled to one delegate; "divisions" with less than 200 members are grouped with not more than two other "divisions" to obtain a combined membership of 200. Large "divisions" have proportionately less than equal roll call voting representation because "divisions" that are grouped together have one vote for each division while delegates from "divisions" with 200 or more members have one vote per 200 members. Most "divisions" have less than 200 members.

8/ Delegate representation (which is the same as voice voting representation) based on registered crew size of vessels, with larger crews allowed proportionately fewer delegates, and hence less voice voting representation. A minimum of one delegate is allowed from each affiliated labor organization. Each delegate is allowed one vote.

and hence proportionately more voice votes. Examples of the types of constitutional provisions which give rise to disproportionate voice voting representation are discussed in the preceding section of this study dealing with local union delegate representation.

To illustrate the degree to which the largest locals of some nationals are underrepresented in voice voting, the proportionate voice voting strength of the largest and an average size local in selected national unions were compared. This comparison is presented in Table 5. 11/

From the voice vote ratios in Table 5 it can be seen that the degree to which the largest locals of some nationals are underrepresented in voice voting is substantial. Assuming that each local sends its full number of delegates, the largest local in the Musicians' union has only 1/68 the voice voting representation (in proportion to its membership) of an average size local in that union. The largest local of the Hotel, Restaurant Employees has only 1/13 the voice voting representation of an average size local. In 6 other unions the ratios range from 1/10 to 1/4, while in 3 other unions the largest local has 1/3 the voice voting representation of an average size local. In the remaining 3 unions the largest local has about 1/2 the voting strength of an average size local.

The ratios cited above are only a general indication of proportionate voice voting representation. They are based on local membership size at a 11/ The 14 national unions included in Table 5 were selected from among the 49 organizations which underrepresent larger locals in voice voting solely because local membership data for use in making the comparisons were readily available in recent convention proceedings.

---

TABLE 5
Comparative Voting Representation for the Largest and for Average Size Locals in Selected National Unions 1/

National union 2/	Average size local 3/	Largest local 4/	Voice vote ratio 5/	Roll call vote ratio 6/
Automobile Workers	840	31,100	1/2	E
Bakery & Confectionery Workers	560	4,000	1/2	E
Brewery Workers	230	5,800	1/8	E
Communications Workers	350	5,900	1/2	E
Electrical Workers-IBEW	460	30,100	1/9	E
Electrical Workers-IUE	540	10,800	1/6	E
Garment Workers, Ladies	970	24,700	1/3	1/3
Hotel, Restaurant Employees	820	26,900	1/13	1/2
Industrial Workers	210	4,400	1/3	1/3
Maintenance of Way Employees	120	1,100	1/10	E
Musicians	420	28,400	1/68	E
Packinghouse, Food & Allied Workers	230	4,200	1/4	E
Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers	250	5,000	1/7	E
Stage Employes	60	2,500	1/3	1/3

1/ National unions for which reliable local membership size data could be obtained from recent convention proceedings were selected for analysis. The delegate and voting representation formulas followed by these 14 nationals are generally the same as the formulas followed by the other nationals that underrepresent large locals.

2/ The full name and affiliation of each national union is contained in an appendix to this study.

3/ Source: Calculated from Table 1 by dividing number of members by number of local unions. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

4/ Source: Obtained from convention proceedings, 1961 through 1963. Figures are rounded to the nearest 100.

5/ Voice vote ratios indicate the approximate proportionate voice voting representation afforded to the largest local relative to an average size local. The ratio is derived as follows:

$$\frac{\text{average local's membership}}{\text{average local's delegate representation}} \div \frac{\text{largest local's membership}}{\text{largest local's delegate representation}}$$

Local union delegate representation is used in this computation because delegate representation equals voting representation when delegates vote by voice or show of hand. A ratio of 1/3 indicates that the largest local casts proportionately about 1/3 as many voice votes as an average size local.

6/ Roll call vote ratios indicate the approximate proportionate voting representation afforded to the largest local relative to an average size local. The ratio is derived as follows:

$$\frac{\text{average local's membership}}{\text{average local's convention votes}} \div \frac{\text{largest local's membership}}{\text{largest local's convention votes}}$$

A ratio of 1/3 indicates that the largest local casts proportionately about 1/3 as many roll call votes as an average size local. The letter "E" indicates that locals have proportionately equal roll call voting representation.

particular point in time, and since these size figures are subject to substantial changes over time, the ratios are also subject to substantial change. Also, the ratio for any particular organization only compares an average size local with the largest size local. Nevertheless, it is obvious that many national unions underrepresent large locals in voice voting and that this underrepresentation is often extreme.

Voice voting by its very nature is inexact since it is often impossible to measure the precise number of delegates voting "for" or "against" a proposal. Also, some unions allow visitors and guests to be seated with the delegates at a convention, and it is obviously difficult to differentiate the voice or hand response of a visitor from that of a delegate. Therefore, minor differences in proportional voice voting representation among different size locals may be blurred, if not obscured, in actual voting. For example, at a convention where the largest local has only 1/2 the proportionate voice voting strength of an average size local as prescribed by the delegate representation formula, the difference in representation may not prove meaningful during an actual voice vote. However, in those organizations with delegate representation formulas which markedly underrepresent the larger locals, it is doubtful that these ameliorating factors are sufficient to equalize proportional voice voting representation in actual practice.

Roll Call

This section examines the voting representation formulas contained in union constitutions and the proportionate voting strength of different size locals during roll call voting. In actual practice, it is unusual for a roll call vote to be taken at a convention. Most proposals are acted on by a voice or hand vote. However, when controversial matters arise, it is important for delegates to have an opportunity to request a roll call vote—especially where roll call voting tends to equalize the proportionate voting strength of all locals. As mentioned previously, the controversial dues increase amendment to the Musicians' constitution was passed on a roll call vote, after several inconclusive voice votes.

When delegates vote by roll call they are not necessarily limited to 1 vote, but may cast a number of votes as prescribed by the voting formula contained in the national constitution. Therefore, when a roll call is taken a large local with only a few delegates, and consequently only a few voice votes, may cast a large number of votes. Thus, even though the delegate representation formula of a national union does not allow its different size locals proportionately equal delegate or voice voting representation, the voting representation formula may grant all locals proportionately equal voting strength whenever a roll call is taken. Many national unions follow this procedure, and as a result the picture of proportional local union voting representation is significantly different when roll call, rather than voice voting, is examined.

When delegates vote by voice or show of hand, only 17 national unions, containing 22 percent of the membership of the unions studied, allow all locals proportionately equal voting representation. But when delegates vote by roll call, 44 unions, with 54 percent of the members in this study, grant all locals proportionately equal voting representation. See Table 4. An example of a fairly common formula contained in national union constitutions providing all locals with proportionately equal voting representation is "one vote for 100 or fewer members, and one additional vote for each additional 100 members or majority fraction thereof." Thus, the larger locals cast a number of votes that is proportionately equal to the number of votes cast by smaller locals, i.e., a 100-member local casts 1 vote and a local 10 times that size casts 10 times that number of votes. 12/

Twenty-two of the 49 national unions which underrepresent larger locals in voice voting equalize roll call voting representation. Some equalize roll call representation according to a formula similar to that cited above, whereby a local is granted 1 vote for up to 100 members and 1 additional vote for each additional 100 members. Other unions equalize roll call voting representation more precisely by allocating to each local a number of votes equal to the local's membership. The Musicians' union follows the latter practice.

In voice voting, the largest local of the Musicians' union has only about 1/68 of the voting representation of an average size local in proportion to its membership size. In roll call voting, in contrast, all locals have proportionately equal representation because each local's vote precisely reflects the number of its members. A comparison of the voice vote and roll call vote ratios for other selected national unions is presented in Table 5. Although all of the 14 unions listed have delegate representation formulas which

---

